"Don't try to pin the blame on Orochimaru. He did what it was expected, which is more than we can say of you," Black Zetsu continued. "We've noticed that the moment that girl left the cocoon, you've become far less focused and driven. She was hindering you."

"SHE'S THE WHOLE REASON I'M DOING THIS IN THE FIRST PLACE!" Obito loudly screamed. "And now she's in danger again! Those Konoha fools will send her to die again!"

"Relax, boss. If the process worked as intended, Rin is pretty much impossible to kill now," White Zetsu assured. "You won't have to fear for her ever again."

"Besides, why would you? She chose Konoha over you. Clearly, you're not as important to her as she is to you," Black Zetsu added.

"But not everything is lost. Let's continue with the plan. When she sees the kind of just and peaceful world you plan to create, she'll soon join our side," White Zetsu added.

"I'm not convinced. I want our Konoha spies to keep an eye on her at all costs. I want to know when she's on a mission. I want to know when she's in danger of dying," Obito ordered. "I'm not going to let history repeat again."

"Of course, boss. It will be done as you say," Black Zetsu replied.

Satisfied with the answer, Obito left. Mostly to find out exactly where Zetsu brought him.

"Are we going to do that?" White Zetsu asked his Black Half.

"Of course," was the other being's reply. "How else are going to check the progress of our little test subject?"

...

Konoha Hospital, Next Morning

It was the first day of Rin's new job at the hospital. Jiraiya had offered her to return to active duty as a ninja, but she had declined, arguing that she needed some time to think and ponder what to do. And given what happened the last time she went on a mission, she was arguably not ready to go back into action as well.

Fortunately, Rin was a medic-nin, which were always needed, so of course it wasn't hard for her to get a job at the Konoha Hospital. Granted, hospitals could be rather tense and frenetic places for obvious reasons, but they couldn't compare to a battleground.

She had been assigned to tidy all the rooms that have been recently vacated. While most people would find such task bothersome and boring, Rin enjoyed the simplicity of it. It allowed the young girl much needed time to think. And she had a lot of things to think about.

"Yo," an unknown adult voice said.

Turning around, Rin saw said voice belonged to his former teammate, now an adult. It would take her some time to get used to Kakashi's much deeper adult voice. And to a lesser extent, how her former friends and partners looked now. Having to adapt to this completely new world was something that made her feel overwhelmed, but she had to persevere.

"Oh. Hello Kakashi," Rin greeted him, as she continued with her work.

"I... I came here to see how are you doing," Kakashi began.

"I'm fine. Thanks for asking," Rin replied.

"You are? I mean..." Kakashi awkwardly continued. "Well, I just wanted to say that if you have any problems adapting, or just feel bad about anything, you can talk to me."

Rin let out a sad sigh. "I'd be lying if I say everything's okay. Konoha changed so much, that when you guys brought me here, I barely recognized it. Not to mention how much you guys changed as well. Meanwhile, I'm still stuck as a little girl."

"Hey, don't say that. Didn't Tsunade-sama said that you would continue growing at a normal pace?" Kakashi asked.

"She said that. But until I become an adult... seeing you, Asuma, Kurenai and the others is going to be difficult. Maybe I should befriend your students?" Rin asked, before letting out a sad chuckle.

"They're great kids. I'm sure you'll get along with any of them just fine," Kakashi earnestly replied.

Rin was a bit surprised by such a honest answer to her quasi-rhetorical question. Then again, she did meet a few of them during her escape, and they looked like people worthy of getting to know better, at the very least.

"Anyway, remember what I said. Even if a lot of things changed, if you want to find me, I still live in the same place as when we were kids," Kakashi told her, before turning around. "Well... see ya later."

"Aren't you going to ask me about Obito?" Rin suddenly asked, freezing Kakashi on his tracks.

"I'm tempted to. But I'm afraid of the answers," Kakashi uncomfortably replied. "Your world isn't the only one who's turned upside down. While I did have a hard time accepting that both of you were still alive, it's nothing compared to having to accept that all the tragedies and disasters that happened in Konoha during the last decade and a half were orchestrated by him."

"We're on the same boat then," Rin sadly replied.

"So it seems. Well... I better get going. It's great to have you back again, Rin," Kakashi said before finally leaving.

Rin sighed once again. "I wish it was as great for me too."

After making the bed, Rin grabbed a small watering can and went to water the potted plants on the window. The plants were still small, but in a few days, they would grow up and sport beautiful flowers.

"I wish I could grow just as fast..." Rin moaned as she sprinkled the plants with water.

Then, much to her shock, the plants started to grow and bloom before her very eyes, speeding a process of days to mere seconds. An astonished Rin dropped the watering can, and stumbled back in shock.

"What... what the hell is going on?" the brown haired girl asked.

...

Senju Residence

The entire Senju family -plus Hinata- were gathered in the house's backyard. Jiraiya and Naruto were standing next to each other, carrying backpacks, while the girls (and Hagane) were in front of them, bidding them goodbye.

"Boy, I can wait to see Mount Myoboku! The toads I summoned made it look like an awesome place," Naruto gushed in anticipation.

"It's a sight to behold, kid. I'm sure you'll like it," Tsunade told him.

"You're not going to like the food much, I can guarantee you that," Jiraiya sourly replied.

"I know. That's why I packed a lot of food. Including some things Hinata made me," Naruto replied.

Hinata blushed a little. "I want you to think in me when you're so far away."

"You don't need to make me food to make me think of you, Hime," Naruto sweetly said. "But it will sure help a lot!"

"Dad, when can we train to become sages?" Hagane asked.

"When you grow up a bit more, I'm sure the toads will be more than happy to train you two as well," Jiraiya reassured him.

"Bring us something cool when you get back!" Kaida requested.

"And make sure you come back for the wedding, you hear me!? I won't forgive you if you miss it!" Shizune energetically told them.

Jiraiya chuckled. "I wouldn't let anything make me miss it. Even if we take more time than intended, I'm sure Ma and Pa will understand."

"Hey, don't take too long with the training either! Being Hokage is YOUR job, not mine!" Tsunade protested.

"I bet I can complete the training in less than a week!" Naruto boasted.

"That's a bold claim. Let's see if you back up those words once we get started," Jiraiya replied.

That moment, Fukasaku appeared before them. Upon seeing that Jiraiya and Naruto looked ready, his lips curved into a smile.

"I see you're ready to go, then," Fukasaku guessed.

"Yeah, we were saying our goodbyes," Jiraiya replied.

Before leaving, Hinata walked to Naruto and gave him a small peck on his lips.

"Good luck with your training, Naruto-kun. I already can't wait to see you back," Hinata told him.

"That's another incentive for finishing my training as soon as possible," Naruto said, laughing a bit.

"To Mount Myoboku then!" Fukasaku exclaimed, and both he, Naruto and Jiraiya disappeared in a cloud of smoke, leaving the girls and Hagane alone.

...

Mount Myoboku

"Wow, this place is amazing!" Naruto gushed, as his eyes witnessed the natural paradise around him. "The toads weren't exaggerating when they talked about this place."

"Glad you like our home, Naruto-chan," Fukasaku replied, as he nodded. "So, are you ready to begin your training to become a Sage?"

Naruto smiled confidently, as he punched the palm of his hand. "Let's do it!"

End of Part I

OMAKE: Shizune's Revenge

Shizune was giving the Senju Residence one last look before leaving for good. She had already move all her things to her and Shisui's new apartment, but she couldn't help feeling nostalgic and a bit melancholic for leaving the house that had been her home for so many years.

"I'm going to miss this place so much. It was my first permanent home after Tsunade-sama returned to Konoha for Naruto-kun," Shizune sighed.

"I know how you feel. I do miss the old Uchiha Compound as well. But live goes on and we have to move as well," Shisui told her. "But hey, it's not that you can't come back to pay Tsunade-sama and the others a visit, right?"

"Now that you mention Tsunade-sama... there's something I'd like to do before I leave," Shizune then wrapped her arms around her fiancée. "And I need your help for it."

Shisui smiled innocently. "Sure, babe, whatever you need."

Shizune smiled wickedly.

...

Hours later, Tsunade returned home from work. As she entered the house, she heard something. Moans and giggles, coming from the living room.

"What the...?" Tsunade walked towards the living room, and turned on the lights. The sight before her surprised her to say the least. "THE HELL!?"

"Oh, sorry, Tsunade-sama, we didn't think you'd come so soon," Shizune cheekily replied.

"Uhhh... hello, Tsunade-sama," Shisui nervously greeted.

Shizune and Shisui were laying on the couch, completely naked, the latter on top of the former. And while Tsunade didn't notice due the abundant nudity before her eyes, there was a blanket covering said couch. She glared at Shizune, and frowned.

"You're a petty brat, you know that?" Tsunade snarled, before stomping upstairs.

The naked couple spend a few seconds in an awkward silence before Shizune let out a happy squeal.

"Oh yes, revenge is sweet! I've been wanting to do that for years!" Shizune said.

Author's Note: So now you know how Rin came back to life. As I told to some reviewers, it wasn't either Rinnegan nor Edo Tensei. But a question remains, is that the real Rin, or is just a clone with the real one's memories? Would there be any difference between the two anyway?

And yes, the "reliving the traumatic moment that awakened the MS every time you use it" is an addition entirely made up by me. I think it's a good and fitting way from having the Uchihas abusing the MS like Sasuke did in late Part II, so instead is more like a last resort power. Though I doubt this would have stopped canon!Sasuke, given that he was pretty deranged by the time he got the MS anyway, but this Sasuke is not, and won't trade his sanity for more power.

As I said before, Shippuden won't come next. There will be another arc that will take place between parts I and II. But fear not, I'm sure all of you will like it.

And before you ask, this omake is canon ;P

Thanks a lot to gio08 for his betareading job.

So, how did you find the conclusion to Part I? Tell me in a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

A New Mission

Author's Note: I'm glad to see the overall good reception the ending of Part I got. Anyway, even if that part is over, there's still quite a lot of story left to tell! So now, before we head into Shippuden, there's an arc that could be considered Part 1.5. This chapter will mostly cover how much Naruto and his friends changed during the next year and a half, and towards the end, you'll see what this new arc will be about- Enjoy:

Chapter 42:

A New Mission

or

Let's give the neglected villages some love

Fourteen and a half years since the Nine Tails Attacked

Training Ground Nine

Today, two of Konoha's most promising young ninja were about to fight. Even if it was just a spar, the combatants' own reputation and the fact that they didn't clash since the Chunin Exams made plenty of ninja eager to see the fight.

"Let's hope that this time, things turn out different," Hinata, one of the many people among the spectators, commented a bit worried.

"Oh don't worry, I'm sure it won't be a repeat of the last time," Naruto assured her, as he held her hand.

While the year and a half following the Invasion of Konoha hadn't been as chaotic as the year preceding it, it wasn't uneventful either. All of Naruto's former classmates managed to score a promotion to Chunin during the Chunin Exams in Kumo, and many of them went beyond that. Naruto himself quickly earned a promotion to Special Jonin specialized in fuinjutsu when he mass produced his Chakra Blade for the ANBU to use as their main weapon. At first, it turned out it wouldn't work since the sword drained too much Chakra, but with Jiraiya's help, he realized that the original model wasted way more chakra than it consumed, something Naruto didn't notice thanks to his seemingly never-ending reserves. But once he fixed that design flaw, it could be used by people with average chakra pools.

In fact, Naruto himself was strong enough to be a full Jonin already, but Jiraiya thought he still needed more experience before he could grant him the rank. Hinata and Haku were also on their way to becoming Special Jonin, with specializations in tai-ninjutsu and ninjutsu, respectively.

"They're finally going to start," Naruto pointed out, as the two fighters got in position.

On one side, there was Sasuke Uchiha, no longer the youngest of his clan, who during the past year managed to get promoted to the rank of Special Jonin specialized in ninjutsu and sword fighting. Besides his usual katana, he also added a shoto to his regular arsenal, which he dual wield alongside his main weapon.

Facing Sasuke was Neji Hyuga, also a Special Jonin, though specialized in taijutsu, and the one who requested the spar to begin with, since he wanted to test a new jutsu he had developed recently.

"Boy, I don't know whom I should cheer," Karin whined. "Neji-kun is my boyfriend, but Sasuke is my teammate..."

Acting as referees were their respective Jonin-sensei, Shizune Uchiha and Maito Gai.

"Alright, combatants ready?" Shizune asked, looking at both of them, who nodded at her. "In that case let the fight... begin!"

Like it happened the first time, the first thing both fighters did was activating their ocular power. And the moment the word let out Shizune's lips, Sasuke and Neji dashed towards each other at such speed they were seen as blurs by some of the onlookers. Sasuke's left hand reached for his shoto, and unsheathed it in a circular motion against Neji, who prepared to deliver an arc strike.

However, Neji's opening move was a fake out, as Neji nimbly crouched and slid towards Sasuke, dodging his blade, and striking the Uchiha in the chest with an accurate palm hit. Sasuke heaved a little as he jumped backwards, holding the stricken area in pain with his free hand. He shot Neji an angry look, which was replied by a smug smirk.

"I believe the first strike is mine," Neji declared.

"Maybe, but victory belongs to those who deliver the last strike of the fight, not the first one," Sasuke replied, as he charged against Neji as once again.

Knowing that Sasuke would see it coming, Neji decided to let Sasuke strike this time and then counterattack. However, he didn't expect Sasuke reaching into his tool pouch, grab a handful of shuriken and toss them at him. As quickly as he could, Neji pulled out a kunai from his own pouch, and used it to deflect the incoming steel stars. And while he was doing that, Sasuke disappeared.

Thanks to his Byakugan, the Hyuga prodigy could see that Sasuke had appeared behind him -more than likely, after using the Body Flicker jutsu- and was about to strike. Even then, Neji was still in a disadvantageous position. Still, he wasn't deterred by Sasuke's tactic, and quickly sidestepped to avoid the incoming slash. While he was moving, Neji turned around and thrust his open palm forward.

"Vacuum Palm!"

Now it was Sasuke's turn to jump back and dodge. If Neji wanted to switch to ranged fighting, the Uchiha was more than happy to oblige.

He started to make hand seals with a single hand.

"Fire Release: Phoenix Sage Fire Jutsu!"

Sasuke breathed from his mouth a volley of fireballs at the Hyuga prodigy, covering an area so wide that it would be impossible to dodge. Fortunately for Neji, he didn't need to dodge, and started to spin as chakra poured from every point of his body.

"Heavenly Spin!"

The fireballs crashed against a spinning dome of blue chakra, which successfully blocked both the fiery projectiles and the explosions they made upon crashing. When the dome vanished, Neji was completely unharmed.

"You'll need to do better than that," Neji taunted Sasuke.

Sasuke sheathed his shoto, while at the same time unsheathing his katana. He also made several hand seals, again with just one hand.

"I admit that's an impressive defense. But then again, there's no barrier my sword cannot cut down," Sasuke replied, almost boasting.
"Fire Release: Burning Edge!"

The blade of Sasuke's katana was soon engulfed by a cloak of flames. His weapon now ready, the Uchiha attacked once again. Neji took a step back, and adopted a defensive position once again, seemingly trying to come up with a way to counter Sasuke's attack, given that normal weapons rarely did well against elemental-enhanced ones. And much to Sasuke's surprise, he blocked the Uchiha's flaming sword with a palm strike.

And to Sasuke's even greater surprise, the block was successful. Using his other hand, Neji tried to deliver another palm strike to the Uchiha, but Sasuke quickly grabbed his wrist before such thing could happen.

"So you focused your chakra on your fingers in order to make your hand stronger and protect it from the flames of my sword," Sasuke stated, as he inspected the Hyuga's hand with his Sharingan.

"Intelligent trick."

"Oh, it's more than a mere trick. And you haven't seen anything yet," Neji replied, as he kicked Sasuke in the chest, breaking the struggle, before quickly adopting a stance Hinata knew too well. "You're within my divination range. Eight Trigrams. Sixty Four Palms!"

"Shit!" Sasuke cursed as Neji lunged at him, ready to strike. He made a hand seal one of the onlookers was very familiar with.

"Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

Two clones of Sasuke appeared in front of him as Neji was about to attack.

"Two strikes!" one of the clone disappeared before he could ever record what was going on. "Four strikes!" the next clone soon followed his equally short lived brother's fate. "Eight Strikes!" This time, the strikes landed on the real Sasuke, who groaned in pain as his chakra points were closed. "Sixteen Strikes!"

This time, however, Sasuke managed to successfully block and dodge all of Neji's palm strikes, and force the Hyuga back by slashing his flame wreathed katana at him.

"You managed to interrupt one of the Hyuga Clan's most prized taijutsu techniques? I'm impressed," Neji genuinely praised.

"That fancy combo isn't as great as it seems once dissected through the Sharingan," Sasuke replied. "Technically, it's only a repeat of the first sixteen strikes, which I managed to see when you hit both my clones and myself, thus giving me the means to counter them. That attack won't work on me again."

"I wouldn't be so confident in your abilities, Sasuke. Just because you see a hit aimed at you, it doesn't mean you'll be able to prevent it in time," Neji countered, as his position relaxed. "I believe that was enough of a warm up, don't you think so?"

"I couldn't agree more," Sasuke replied, as his lips curved into a smirk. "I can't wait to see that technique you bragged about so much a few moments ago."

"Then I won't keep you waiting any longer," Neji then crossed his arms in front of him, a position the other members of the Close Combat Squad knew too well. He then quickly spread his arms as a burst of chakra pulsed from his body.

"Gate of Opening: Open!"

The resulting burst of chakra blew a powerful wind in every direction, as a green aura started to slowly appear around his body. Even those who weren't sensors could feel the resulting power boost.

"Whoa!" Naruto said in awe. He turned at the remaining members of Team Gai. "Didn't know that Neji could use the Gates too!"

"Well, it's only fitting, given that he was the only one of use that didn't learn to use them yet," Tenten replied, as she shrugged.

"Neji saw them as the invaluable tools they are, and requested me to teach him how to use them," Gai proudly added. "Now, my team is the first ninja squad in Konoha, probably in the world, that knows how to use the Celestial Gates."

"Since Gai-sensei and Lee use the Gates for their enhanced taijutsu moves, and I use them with armed combat, Neji thought he could create a new school of Gentle Fist by combining it."

"Nii-san said he was inspired by seeing me combining Gentle Fist with elemental manipulation," Hinata chimed in, with a slight and uncharacteristic edge of pride.

"Well, this certainly looks like something worth seeing!" an excited Naruto said as his eyes returned to the combat.

While this wasn't the first time he opened the Celestial Gates, Neji would never stop enjoying the rush of power result of the larger amounts of chakra surging through his body. Feeling more confident than ever, the Hyuga prodigy rushed towards Sasuke, ready to strike.

For his part, the Uchiha could barely dodge the much faster Neji's palm strike -and would have been unable to if it wasn't for his Sharingan- while Neji continued to launch a flurry of palm strikes, some of which were blocked or dodged, while others found its mark.

"Damn it, so this is what he meant with my Sharingan won't be able to keep it up!" Sasuke thought, as he tried as best as he could to dodge the wave of soft but painful strikes. "I need to put up some distance!"

Sasuke made a hand seal, and Body Flickered a few meters back. However, in less than a second, he saw a green flash, and Neji was in front of him already, continuing his onslaught.

"What do you think of my speed? And that's just with one Gate opened," Neji boasted as he reengaged Sasuke.

"I admit is impressive," Sasuke conceded, as he started to make hand seals with one hand while using the other to defend. "But let's see how your Gentle Fist does against an opponent you can't touch! Fire Release: Burning Man!"

Sasuke burst into flames, before they stabilized, forming a fiery cloak around the Uchiha. Naturally, Neji stopped attacking, and his confident expression morphed into a thoughtful one, as his brain tried to come up with a way to harm his opponent. It was Sasuke's turn to sport a confident and even smug grin.

"I can't believe I didn't do this earlier," Sasuke admitted. "Guess my pride didn't allow me to use my best moves from the very beginning."

"While withholding your true power is a valid tactic sometimes, doing so due to a sense of pride is something I'd call 'beyond stupid'," Neji replied, prompting Sasuke back into his usual frowning expression.

"You didn't show me your true power from the start as well," Sasuke retorted.

"Because I wanted to assess my opponent's abilities and capabilities first. And now, I have an approximate measure of what I'm going against," Neji explained.

"Measure THIS then!" Sasuke replied as he shot forward towards Neji, leaving a trail of fire behind.

Using his enhanced speed, Neji dodged Sasuke's charge, and moved to the side. However, the cloak of fire somehow increased Sasuke's speed as well, and the Uchiha was now able to match the Hyuga in that department. They spent a few seconds engaged in a game of cat and mouse, with Sasuke chasing and attacking Neji, and the latter evading and dodging him. That's it, until the Hyuga managed to find a window of opportunity long enough to prepare his next move. He slipped once again into the stance used for the Eight Trigrams Combo.

"Let's see how well you do against this," Neji announced, as he prepared to attack. "Eight Trigrams: Sixteen Exploding Strikes!"

While some people in Sasuke's situation would have believed that there's no way taijutsu, even the Gentle Fist, could bypass a shield of fire, most people didn't have a Sharingan. Thanks to his ocular power, the Uchiha could see, much to his worry, that Neji was gathering an inordinate amount of chakra into his hands.

"This is bad!" Sasuke thought as he moved to dodge the strike.

"Two Strikes!" Neji delivered two palm hits that, as the name implied, created two small chakra concussive blasts upon hitting the target, effectively bypassing Sasuke's fire cloak, but leaving Neji unharmed. "Four Strikes!" two more strikes were delivered, to the same effect. "Eight Strikes!"

"His palm strikes aren't closing my chakra points, but those blasts are making a number on my body!" Sasuke noted, trying to contain the pain caused by the hits. "Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

A clone of Sasuke appeared before the original.

"Sixteen Strikes!" Neji finished the short but devastating combo, though it was wasted on the clone Sasuke summoned in the nick of time.

Sasuke put some distance, panting heavily. He wasn't expecting that Neji would aside the subtle damage usually caused by the Gentle Fist and replace it with brutish explosions. Then again, that was probably the idea.

"Pity I was unable to finish the combo properly," Neji lamented, shaking his head in disappointment. "Then again, you're not Naruto. Using Shadow Clones so lightly will hinder you in the long term. Your chakra levels decreased substantially."

"That might be true, but never underestimate me. I still have plenty of chakra to spare," Sasuke replied.

"After what happened the last time, I would never even dream about underestimating you," Neji sincerely admitted. "In fact, I think it's about time to step up my game even further. Gate of Healing, open!"

Meanwhile, to the onlookers, the match had become even more interesting now.

"How many Gates can Neji open?" Naruto asked.

"Neji can open up to three Gates right now, just like myself," Tenten replied. "We're working on the fourth one, but so far we've been unable to handle the strain caused by the withdrawal backlash."

"Don't worry, Tenten, just keep training! That's how both Gai-sensei and I managed to surpass our limits!" Lee chimed in, with his usual optimist demeanor.

"Some limits can't be overcome by mere training, Lee," Tenten replied.

"Nonsense! That's just unyouthful talk from a quitter!" an indignant Lee replied.

"So are you telling me that, if you train a lot, you'd be able to use ninjutsu?" Tenten sharply asked. This managed to shut Lee into a stunned silence, as he wordlessly accepted Tenten's previous statement. "Thought so."

Meanwhile, Hinata was watching the fight with her Byakugan activated, in order to get a better assessment of the situation.

"Neji-niisan was right, Sasuke-san wasted a lot of chakra using Shadow Clones so carelessly," Hinata confirmed. "But the Gates is consuming niisan's chakra at a fast rate. The match won't last much longer."

"My money's on Sasuke. We've fought quite a lot of times this past year, and he got really strong," Naruto stated.

"And you just saw Neji-niisan also spent a lot of time growing stronger," Hinata replied, almost with a hint of animosity.

Back to the match, Neji and Sasuke continued trading blows, producing a strong gust of wind every time they clashed. Neji's blows created shockwaves upon impacting, while Sasuke's fire aura shot fireballs with every move the Uchiha made. However, he deactivated it after a few moments in order to save chakra.

"Smart move," Neji told Sasuke.

"I'm not the only one whose chakra is quickly burning," Sasuke said as he stabbed his katana into the ground and made several hand seals, this time with both hands, before grabbing his katana and unsheathing his shoto once again. "Fire Release: Burning Edge! Lightning Release: Thunder Blade!"

Once again, Sasuke's katana was wreathed in flames, while his shoto started to crackle with electricity. Lastly, he crossed both blades, casting a beam of fire surrounded by electricity from the intersection point at Neji.

"Double Elemental Release: Plasma Beam!"

Neji turned into a green blur as he outran the destructive beam aimed at him. Sasuke moved his crossed weapons in his efforts to hit Neji, leaving a trail of burned earth behind. In no time, Neji managed to reach mid distance, and prepared for his next attack.

"Eight Trigrams, Invisible Palm!"

Neji started to thrust both palms back and forth, generating spectral arms made of chakra that flew at Sasuke. The Uchiha parried all the hits with his elemental-enhanced weapons, but the strikes packed so much power they pushed the Uchiha back with each blow. Neji finished the combo with a double palm strike that blew Sasuke's weapons out of his hands and pushed him so hard, he fell on his back.

"This is over!" Neji proclaimed as he prepared for the finishing move.

Sasuke saw Neji gathering chakra on the tip of his fingers, and knew whatever he was preparing, it couldn't be good. Thankfully, he rolled on his back in time to avoid the strike -which created a small crater on the ground-, got on his feet, and managed to retrieve his shoto.

"Don't underestimate me!" Sasuke indignantly shouted.

"This IS over," Neji insisted. "Gate of Life open!"

Another burst of chakra, this one even more intense than the previous two, shook the battleground. Neji's green aura became more intense, as his pale skin started to take a reddish tint. A powerful wind started to blow. Sasuke made a hand seal.

"Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

A single clone appeared besides Sasuke, and both he and his clone continued making hand seals, a different sequence each.

"Fire Release: Great Fireball Jutsu!"

The clone blew a massive fireball at Neji, as the real Sasuke prepared his next attack.

"Lightning Release: Thunderbolt!"

Sasuke released an array of lightning bolts at his fireball, coating it with electricity. Neji, however, didn't look impressed.

"I've been looking for an opportunity to use this," the Hyuga prodigy stated, as he started to spin. "Heavenly Spinning Lotus!"

Neji turned into a green spinning chakra dome that successfully deflected Sasuke's bi-elemental attack. The Uchiha, however, wasn't impressed.

"So, a beefed up Heavenly Spin. It won't help you any-what!?" he asked in shock.

Much to his surprise, Neji started to move -rather fast- while still spinning.

"The hell!? How can he move?" Sasuke asked, visibly taken aback.

The Uchiha tossed a few shuriken at Neji, but as expected, they failed to slow him down. Sasuke leaped above the spinning Hyuga and landed besides him, but Neji merely moved in the opposite direction. Sasuke sheathed his shoto before retrieving his katana from the ground.

"Thanks to the additional power provided by the Gates, I can now use some chakra to propel myself while I'm still spinning," Neji thought. "The Hyuga's Ultimate Defense can now be used as a weapon to attack!"

Sasuke's hands flew through hand seals as he prepared his last attack. "Let's hope this can be enough to counter that technique!" he worriedly thought.

Sasuke gripped his sword with both hands, and the blade was quickly covered in both fire and electricity, before dashing at Neji.

"Double Elemental Release: Plasma Blade!"

Sasuke's elemental sword struck Neji's spinning chakra dome. The two forces clashing resulted in a powerful wind blowing outwards as flames, lightning sparks and chakra bursts flew everywhere. Both forces struggled against each other, neither of them bulging one bit. And finally, like it happened all the time Sasuke used that jutsu, when the energy gathered reached a critical point, it was released at once in the form of a large explosion, which hurled both combatants up in the air, before they both landed in the floor with a loud thud.

Shizune and Gai quickly went to check their respective students. They both were bruised and badly beaten, but they didn't have any serious injury. They would be fine after being healing.

The onlookers started to murmur among themselves, until somebody, namely Lee, voiced what most of them were thinking.

"So... who wins?" the green clad ninja asked.

"Since both Neji and Sasuke are unable to continue fighting on their own, then it's a tie," Gai declared. "But even if none of you won, it was a fight to remember! You showed everybody the height of your passion and your flames of youth!"

"Karin, go and heal Neji-kun! Sakura, help me treat Sasuke-kun!" Shizune instructed.

"Right!" Karin obediently said as she rushed towards her boyfriend, kneeling before his fallen body, and started to heal his injuries, not with her innate ability, but with the Mystical Palm Jutsu. It seemed that, despite the intensity of the match, Sasuke made sure not to make any irreparable damage.

Neji himself didn't deal any crippling blow to Sasuke either. Gai was a bit worried that, even after all this time, the Hyuga prodigy would be hungry for payback.

"So... how was I?" Neji asked Karin.

"You were impressive, honey," Karin earnestly told him as she treated his wounds. "I wish you could have seen yourself."

"I couldn't be that impressive, given that I still lost," Neji bemoaned.

"You didn't lose, it was a tie," Karin pointed out.

"I didn't win, hence I lost," Neji insisted.

"Sasuke didn't win either," Karin countered, sounding a bit annoyed now.

"Well, in that case-AW!" Neji yelped after Karin pressed one of his wounds.

"You didn't lose, end of discussion!" Karin sternly stated. "Now shut up while I heal you!"

Neji let out a sigh, but smiled as well. "Of course, Karin."

Meanwhile, Sakura and Shizune were having a similar conversation with Sasuke.

"You did great, Sasuke-kun. Truly an amazing display," Sakura sincerely praised.

"I didn't so great if I was unable to win," Sasuke replied.

"You were holding back," Sakura justified.

"While I was with-holding my most powerful moves, I was still giving it my all," Sasuke insisted.

"You simply weren't fighting with the intent to kill, despite the magnitude of your attacks. You kept the fight to a level your opponent was able to follow, which is what we should do when sparring," Shizune interceded. "Hence, you should feel proud of your fight. Just as I am."

Like Neji before, Sasuke decided not to press the issue. So far, no Uchiha had ever won an argument against Shizune, and he didn't have any hopes of being the first one.

Realizing that there was nothing else to see, most of the onlookers - with the exception of Sasuke and Neji's respective teammates and sensei - quickly dispersed and went their separate ways to do their daily tasks and jobs.

...

It would be lunchtime soon, and thus, Naruto and Hinata were heading towards the latter's house. They had some free time during the afternoon, and Hinata wanted to spend it training alongside Hanabi, and asked Naruto if he wanted to tag along, and naturally, he agreed. She also asked him to have lunch with her family.

"Hanabi's finally starting to get the hang of elemental manipulation," Hinata commented. "In less time than I did, might I add. Not that surprising, since she has far more talent than I."

"Come on, don't sell yourself short. You also had the inventiveness of combining the Gentle Fist with Lightning Release," Naruto reminded her. "If it wasn't for you, Neji wouldn't have had the idea of combining it with the Celestial Gates."

"But I did it because of my inability to master the proper Gentle Fist," Hinata replied.

"So? That just meant that your talents laid elsewhere. You turned a weakness into a strength," Naruto insisted.

Hinata couldn't help but giggle. She loved when Naruto praised her like that, even if she felt sometimes it was undeserved.

"Speaking of which, Hinata, I know you want to focus on Hanabi, but I'd also like to continue with my training on Lightning Release," Naruto told her.

"I don't know why you're so insistent about it. You already have mastered wind and water. Isn't that enough for a Jonin promotion?" Hinata asked.

During the past year, Naruto asked Haku to teach him how to use Water Release jutsu, given that wind's weakness was fire. After he mastered Water Release to an acceptable level, he then went to Hinata with the same request. And while Hinata was happy to oblige, she always thought such thing wasn't necessary.

"For a promotion, yes, but for me? Not in the slightest," Naruto sharply replied. "The Old Man mastered all five elements, and I'm not going to be any less. But don't think I'm doing this out of pride, having all five elements at my disposal will make me a force to be reckoned with."

"With that Sage Mode of yours, I think you already qualify as that," Hinata pointed out, giggling a bit.

"What about you, Hinata? You're pretty good with lightning already. Don't you plan on learning a second element?" Naruto asked.

Hinata put her finger on her lips, as she started to think. "Mmmmm... I didn't think about that until you mentioned that. So far, I've been good with what I already have."

"Remember that if you want that Jonin promotion, you'll need two elements," Naruto reminded her. He left the part about having an outstanding mastery of another discipline unsaid, since he felt it wouldn't be nice to point out his girlfriend's shortcomings.

"Well, first I want to focus on being promoted to Special Jonin. I mean, we're still young, there's no hurry, right?" Hinata asked him.

"Kakashi-sensei was a Jonin when he was twelve," Naruto stated.

"Naruto-kun, this isn't a competition. While your desire to surpass yourself is admirable, you shouldn't be concerned about what Kakashi-sensei or other people did. Other people's accomplishments don't diminish your own," Hinata sagely said.

"Guess so. Still, can't help to feel like that," Naruto replied. "By the way, you didn't answer my question."

"I believe I can afford learning a second element now. Besides, with how much I've been helping Hanabi-chan with her training in Fire Release, I believe I have a good base to start with that," Hinata stated.

"Besides, fire is wind's weakness, which is lightning's weakness," Naruto pointed out.

...

Memorial Stone

"You know Kakashi, after all what happened, I thought I'd stop seeing you here."

Kakashi turned around, and saw his friend and rival Gai, standing there with his arms crossed, shooting him a mildly disapproving stare.

"I know it makes no sense, but what can I say, some habits are hard to break," the silver haired Jonin replied. "I just... I can't believe that the two of them are still alive."

"Yes. People don't come back from the dead like that. Even the Impure World resurrection doesn't work that way," Gai continued. "While what happened to Obito is indeed tragic, I'd expect you to be a bit happier to have Rin back."

"I am happy," Kakashi pointed out.

Skeptical, Gai raised an eyebrow. "You don't look all that happier to me."

"You know Gai, people have different ways of expressing happiness. Not all of us go around screaming about youth at the top of our lungs," Kakashi softly but mockingly said.

"WHOA! Don't say anything you might regret! You may be my rival, but there are lines that are never meant to be crossed!" Gai angrily shouted, pointing an accusatory finger at the Copy Ninja. Kakashi merely chuckled. "I think you should spend some time with Rin. She needs you more than ever."

"I know. I do spend time with her whenever I can. We all do," Kakashi replied. "Kurenai took her to eat out today," Kakashi told him.

"How is she doing?" Gai asked.

"Good, I think, but I couldn't really tell," Kakashi replied, sighing. "She looks like she's getting used to her new life and how everything changed since the day she died. But there's something that disturbs her, I know that. But when I ask her, she tells me everything's fine."

"Rin was -is- a very selfless girl, she probably doesn't want to worry you, or anybody," Gai concluded. "Then again, it's obvious that what bothers her is Obito. It's what bothers you as well these days, am I right?"

"Guess that there's no point in denying it," Kakashi conceded, and sighed. "I just can't imagine what did he go through in order to end up part of Akatsuki. And not just that, but the fact that he was behind so many tragedies, starting with the Nine Tails' attack..."

"You know what this means, Kakashi?" Gai asked, now in his usual boisterous tone. "We need to train even more now! No doubt we will meet Obito again in combat, and when that day comes, we need to be ready in order to protect our village, and make sure to knock some sense into that empty head of his!"

...

Meanwhile, in Konoha's downtown, just as Kakashi said, Kurenai and Rin were having lunch together. Even if Rin didn't really need to eat, she liked to do so, since it made her feel more human and less... whatever she was now. So far, they two of them had remained silent, but the red eyed Jonin decided to break the ice.

"So, how was your day at work?" Kurenai asked.

"Good, I guess. Nothing worth mentioning happened. And quite frankly, I'm starting to enjoy the monotony," Rin admitted, as she took a bite of the hake she was eating. "It's relaxing, and leaves me time to think."

"So you're not planning to return to active duty anytime soon," Kurenai concluded.

"I don't think I'm ready yet," Rin replied.

Kurenai smiled emphatically. "It's okay, just take all the time you need. All of us we'll be here to support you."

Rin smiled back at her. "Thanks. I don't think I could have done this alone."

"You came back from the death, girl. I'm sure there's little to nothing impossible to you now," Kurenai said.

That made Rin chuckle. "If only that were true. You know, you became quite the motivational."

"What do you mean 'I became'?" Kurenai asked, mildly indignant. "I have always been like this! But I admit that being a Jonin-sensei allowed me to hone my skills in that area."

"You know, I always wanted to become a Jonin-sensei. I think I'd make a good teacher. Minato-sensei was a very good reference," Rin mentioned. "And you got to teach his son."

"Naruto's a hard worker, and quite eager to learn. The dream of any teacher. But he sometimes can exhaust me," Kurenai said, chuckling lightly. "Not to say my other two pupils aren't great either."

"I always wanted to meet Naruto. But whenever I plan to do so... I don't know what I can tell him," Rin confessed.

"I can introduce you to him if you want. To my whole team, really. I'm sure you'll like all of them," Kurenai suggested.

"I think I already met one of them, if briefly. The girly looking boy with the Ice Release. Haku was it, right?" Rin asked. Kurenai nodded affirmatively. "He seemed nice."

"He is. Like you, he also went through a lot. In fact, all of them had their own share of past tragedies, yet they didn't let them to define who they are," Kurenai replied. "So, how about if you come with us the next time we have a training session? I'm sure it'd be good for you. You should make a few friends your age." That last comment made Rin to lower her head in sadness, and Kurenai realized too late what she just said. Her hands flew to her mouth. "Oh, sorry! I didn't mean to-"

"No, it's okay. It has to be just as weird for the both of us, you and the others being adults, and me still being a teenager," Rin replied.

"At least, you won't stay like that forever. I notice you're getting taller," Kurenai pointed out.

"Obito said that he did something similar to whatever they did to him in order to save his life. I was expecting to grow up into an adult, given that he did. But truth be told, I was a bit scared to be stuck like this forever," Rin told her.

"Look at the bright side. Eternal youth!" Kurenai pointed out.

Rin chuckled, and rolled her eyes. "Eternal life isn't all that great if you can't enjoy it to its fullest. For example, you wouldn't be able to drink."

That comment made the Genjutsu Mistress to rethink what she said. While she wasn't a drunk, she did enjoy alcohol regularly, and she wouldn't be so eager to give up such a pleasure.

"And I wouldn't be able to marry and start a family. Speaking of which, when do you plan to marry Asuma?" Rin cheekily asked.

Kurenai was a bit taken aback by the question. But then again, he had to admit that she and Asuma weren't exactly subtle.

"There's still time for that," Kurenai hand waved. "What about you? Did you meet any boy worth pursuing?"

"I don't think I'm ready for a relationship just now," Rin admitted. "But I think you're right in that I should try to get to know some people my age."

"Good! My students would love to meet you!"

...

Senju Residence

That afternoon, Hagane and Kaida were in the house's backyard, entertaining a small, few months old baby boy with both black hair and black eyes. They were using small scale ninjutsu to create spectacular visuals that the baby would enjoy. The baby would giggle and clap whenever he saw something he liked, which was often.

The house's back door opened from the inside, revealing a smiling Shizune. The baby smiled and tried to stand up upon seeing the medic-nin.

"Aw, there you are!" Shizune happily cooed as she held the baby in her arms. "Did you miss mommy, Shiro-kun? Because mommy misses you a lot when she's at work,"

Six months after her wedding, Shizune gave birth to a baby boy, which they named Shiro. This caused a lot of people to groan and roll their eyes, but neither Shizune nor Shisui paid them any attention.

"So, did he gave you much trouble?" Shizune asked.

Both twins shook her head in unison.

"Not at all. Thankfully he didn't cry today," Hagane mentioned.

"Because he's a good boy, isn't he?" Shizune cooed again, making Shiro giggle. "Anyway, now that I'm done for the day, I can take him out of your hands."

"Will you bring him tomorrow?" Kaida asked, almost pleading.

"Probably, yeah," Shizune replied. "I didn't see Tsunade-sama, is she still at work?"

"Nope, she is home. I think she's upstairs taking a nap. Let me check," Kaida took a deep breath.

[illegible]

A second later, a window in the second floor opened, revealing a very angry Tsunade.

"Goddamn it Kaida, what the hell did I say about yelling like that!?" Tsunade angrily shouted back. Then she noticed Shizune and Shiro, and her murderous expression changed into a happy one. "Oh, Shizune, didn't see you! And you brought Shiro-kun! Wait a second!"

Not wanting to waste a moment, Tsunade jumped out of the window, shattering the earth upon landing, leaving a small crater with spreading cracks.

"Kaida, honey, fix that, please," Tsunade told her.

Kaida groaned and rolled her eyes, but complied. Making a few hand seals, she used her powers to repair the damage to the grass and the ground.

"I'm the closest thing Konoha has to a princess, yet I always find myself doing gardening jobs..." the white haired girl angrily groaned.

Tsunade ignored her daughter's complaints and took Shiro from Shizune's arms. Shiro giggled as he started to pull Tsunade's bangs.

"Ow!" Tsunade cried.

"Come on Shiro-kun, don't do that to grandma," Shizune said, grabbing the baby's hand.

Tsunade's eyes narrowed, as she shot her former apprentice a murderous look. "Shizune, what did we say about the G-word?"

"Awww, it isn't cute, Shiro-kun? Grandma hates being reminded she's not young anymore," Shizune cooed in an incredibly mocking way.

Tsunade rolled her eyes, but she didn't do anything else. Of course, Shizune was more than aware that, if any other person sassed Tsunade the way she did, the Slug Princess would shatter every bone in their bodies without mercy. Even then, Shizune still knew not to push her luck.

"Any progress on the investigation regarding the cursed seal?" Shizune asked.

Tsunade shook her head. "Some, but not as much as we would want. There are elements in the seal we are unaware of its nature, though one of my researchers think there's a key component based on an unknown Bloodline Limit."

"And the investigation regarding Orochimaru's possible hideouts?" Shizune asked again.

"We did locate some of them, but they were mere laboratories and glorified storage warehouses, nothing big so far," Tsunade replied.

"Orochimaru uses a ninja village to gather funds, we should be able to track that," Shizune pointed out.

Once again, Tsunade shook her head. "Jiraiya and I thought the same, but Orochimaru already thought of that. Rather than having the customers come to his village, if it ever exists, he sends his ninjas to offer their service to potential customers. And those ninjas more often than not never come from the same place. Basically, just like how his Akatsuki friends operate."

"Drats. At this pace, we will never find again until he decides to stop hiding. And by the time he does that, he might have a whole slew of nasty surprises prepared for us," Shizune lamented.

Tsunade sighed. "If he succeeded in kidnapping my children, we may had never seen them again. We were lucky Naruto and his friends tracked them in time."

"I prefer not to think what would have happened," Shizune then looked at the blissfully unaware Shiro in Tsunade's arms. "Shisui and I are constantly afraid that somebody might want to target our son as well, given he's the first Uchiha born after the insurrection."

"You know what happens to people who target out family. I'm sure Obito will never forget the beating she got from us that night," Tsunade stated.

...

Hokage's Office

"Well, this is the last meeting of the day," Jiraiya told his predecessor turned advisor. "I can't wait to get back home with my wife and kids."

"A feeling I'm familiar with, much to my distaste," Hiruzen agreed. "Then again, today hasn't been a particularly busy day."

"If only all days could been like this one," Jiraiya mentioned.

The office's door opened, revealing Shisui Uchiha. He was holding a folder in one of his hands.

"Hokage-sama. Sarutobi-sama," the black haired man respectfully greeted.

"Look at that, my son-in-law!" Jiraiya heartily said. "So, what bring you here, Shisui?"

"I've been working on a project for this past year, and I believe it's ready to be implemented. Said project would benefit Konoha immensely," Shisui explained as he handled the folder to Jiraiya.

"Let's see it then," the Toad Sage replied, as he opened the folder and took a look at its contents, an action Hiruzen mimicked.

However, as they read Shisui's proposal, their cheerful and relaxed expressions morphed into tense and disapproving ones, much to the Uchiha's discomfort.

"So you want to... revive the Military Police?" Jiraiya asked, shooting an skeptical look at the young man.

"I know the implications, but listen to me on this one. There are a lot of ninja, mostly people with families and small kids to take care such as myself that would love to have a job that doesn't require them to leave the village for long periods of time. Not to mention that it would release most Chunin from doing the job the Police used to do in the past," Shisui explained.

"I understand your concerns, Shisui, but even with the benefits you exposed, the matter is far more complex than it appears," Jiraiya replied.

"The Military Police was strongly associated with the Uchiha, to the point that it incorporated the clan's crest into its logo. Many people may see this as a ruse for your clan to recover their lost power and influence," Sarutobi explained, trying to sound as reassuring as he could.

"I know about that, but here's the thing: everybody will be able to join the Police, not just the Uchiha. Which was kind of a given, since even if we count Shizune-chan as an Uchiha, there's only four of us to man it," Shisui added with an awkward laugh.

"You raise good points. And I do agree that Konoha would become more efficient with the Police back," Jiraiya agreed, much to Shisui's joy. "The hard part is how are going to implement it without reopening the old wounds of the Uchiha Insurrection."

"I think I may have an idea," Sarutobi interceded. "We can do a survey, asking both the ninja civilian population about it, but trying to push into the forefront the benefits of having the Police back in force in order to gain support."

"Good idea. However, in order to placate those who distrusts the Uchiha, I think it should be run by somebody other than you or your clansmen. I mean, you planned to become its new chief, am I right?" Jiraiya asked.

Shisui nodded. "Indeed, but trust me, I don't mind giving up that if the Police can be reinstated."

"Very well then, tomorrow I'll get the survey started. I'm sure we can make this project into reality," Jiraiya stated as he closed the folder, and handed it to Hiruzen, who placed it inside one of the shelves.

"Thank you, Hokage-sama! You won't regret this!" an enthusiastic Shisui stated.

"I'm sure I won't. Now everybody, let's get the hell out of here! It's closing time!" Jiraiya eagerly said as he got up from his chair.

...

Next morning appeared to be just another uneventful day like those in the past few months. The night shift guards on the north gate were finally able to leave their posts as their replacements for the morning shift, Shikamaru, Ino and Choji, appeared to take their place.

"Boy, I hate gate duty," Ino said with a yawn. "It's even worse than the worst of Asuma-sensei's training."

"Eh, it's not so bad," Shikamaru replied. "I mean, after all the deadly missions we got as Genin, I learned to appreciate the joys of a monotonous chore."

"Of course you'd say that. I can't believe you find checking passports and interrogating merchants who come into the village enjoyable," Ino said as she rolled her eyes.

Choji, who had been silently eating from a bag of chips, spoke for the first time. "Somebody is coming,"

"This soon? We barely opened the gates," Ino groaned.

Shikamaru narrowed his eyes as he focused his eyesight on the newcomers. It was a rather large group, much larger than usual, composed of a dozen people at least. Upon getting closer, they noticed they were ninja.

"They're ninja," Shikamaru warned his friends. "Mist ninja, if their forehead protectors are any indicators."

Worry spread among the trio, as they thought what they should do. Having a group of ninja from a non-allied village were never good news.

"Should we warn anybody?" Choji asked.

"Let's wait a bit. If they were enemies, they wouldn't be walking towards the gate like that," Shikamaru replied.

"Maybe they're a distraction," Ino conjectured.

"I'll deal with this, you two stay behind. In case it's a ruse, run back into the village and alert everybody," Shikamaru instructed. Ino and Choji nodded.

Minutes turned into hours as the group of Kiri ninja got closer. Shikamaru now could see that it was being led by a very tall and attractive redheaded woman. Upon getting closer, the woman noticed the Nara, and shot him a smile that could melt any man, regardless of his sexual orientation.

"Halt," Shikamaru told the group, trying to sound commanding, who promptly stopped in front of him. "State your name and purpose."

"Of course, handsome," the redheaded woman said with a tender smile, making Shikamaru blush. "My name is Mei Terumi, leader of the Kirigakure Liberation Movement. As for why I'm here, I wish to have an audience with your Hokage, if it's not asking much."

Author's Note: Yep, this new arc will cover the Kirigakure Civil War! Props to... well, nobody in particular, since nobody guessed it. Then again, I didn't leave any kind of clue as for what this arc would be about. And as you can expect, this arc will focus on Zabuza and to a lesser extent Haku.

I hope you liked the Sasuke vs Neji fight during the first half. It's my delayed apology for the admittedly lackluster match they had in the Chunin Exams preliminaries. I hope I made Neji justice with his new abilities. I mean, in canon we only saw the Celestial Gates applied to normal taijutsu, so I wondered how other arts, such as the Gentle Fist or Ninjutsu would benefit from the boost granted by the gates.

Like I said in the secondary title, I want to flesh out the other villages before the Five Kage Summit/Fourth Ninja War begins. I'll flesh out Suna way more during the Gaara Rescue Arc, and I have other arcs that will focus on Taki and Kumo. I'm still planning how to bring Iwa into the forefront without disrupting the flow of the story too much. The hardest part is that Iwa is the village with the least amount of canon characters to use, and I'm very reticent to add even more OCs.

Thanks a lot to gio08 for betareading this chapter.

Anyway, hope you liked this chapter, as well as the arc that is to come, and don't forget to review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Mists of the Past

Author's Note: I'm quite happy to see how eager most readers are about this arc. Truth be told, I was afraid that most people would react negatively and prefer if I went directly with Part II. Not that this arc is filler by any stretch of the imagination, since the events that are going to take place will affect future arcs in rather meaningful ways, but still.

Also, after more than a year of silence, "True Potential" is updating again! I think I recommended this story before, but I'm going to do it again, since it's one of the best and overall better written Naruhina fanfics out there.

Now, enjoy the chapter:

Chapter 43:

Mists of the Past

or

Zabuza can't catch a break

...

Training Ground 21

When they traveled together, Zabuza had Haku wake up before sunrise so the two of them could have a good training session before they moved onto other matters. Such habit didn't change since they were forced to live in Konoha.

They were practicing some water jutsu at the edge of a lake before the Jonin decided to stop and rest for some time. Zabuza also decided to ask his protégé a few questions.

"You've been Chunin for quite some time now. How do you find the higher rank missions you're getting?" Zabuza asked.

Haku simply shrugged. "Not that difficult from the missions I did as a Genin, truth be told. Many missions ended up being way more dangerous than we believed. But in the end, I think it was for the better. I wouldn't be as strong as I am now if it wasn't for that."

"Indeed. You survived, and that meant that you were strong enough to deserve to continue living," Zabuza stated. "All you need is a little more experience before you can be of real help in my endeavor."

"How long until we can leave Konoha?" Haku asked.

"Given how long I've been here, I'd say it can't be longer than a couple years," Zabuza wondered, as he thought about it. "My track record is pretty much flawless. So flawless that I think Jiraiya doesn't want to let me go. But so far, he has proven to be a man of his word, and I trust he'll honor his end of our bargain."

"If Naruto-kun is anything to go by, I can say that the Hokage is the same as him," Haku agreed.

There was something about Haku, however, that didn't go unnoticed by Zabuza.

"You surprise me, Haku. I wasn't expecting you to be so eager to leave Konoha. You have friends and even a girlfriend here. Would you ditch them for me?" the swordsman skeptically asked.

"You know my answer. My loyalty will always lay with you, Zabuza-sama. If you didn't take me in, I would be dead right now. I have a debt I will never be able to repay," Haku replied.

While such a statement would make Zabuza feel proud and satisfied in the past, it made him feel rather conflicted. On one side, he didn't want to lose Haku, since he was a useful asset. On the other hand, he did care for the boy, regardless how much he wanted to deny it, and the idea of forcing Haku to abandon the life he had built here made him feel uneasy.

However, before the former Kiri ninja had more time to ponder on his conflicted feelings, a lizard-masked ANBU appeared behind them.

"Zabuza, Haku. Your immediate presence is required by the Hokage. He's waiting for you in the Hokage Tower's Council Room," the ANBU stated in a cold and neutral tone before vanishing.

"Alright then, let's see why he wants to see us," Zabuza said as he and Haku headed back to the village.

...

Upon arriving to the Hokage Tower, the two Land of Water natives were greeted by an unsettling sight. Several Kiri ninja were in front of the Tower, being watched over by several Konoha ninja. Needless to say, this didn't bode well for the duo.

"Zabuza-sama, I have a bad feeling about this," Haku whispered to his master. "What should we do?"

"For the time being, let's play nice, and do what we're told to do. I don't think Jiraiya plans to hand us to Yagura like that," Zabuza reassured him.

"And if you're wrong?"

"Then prepare to fight like you never did," Zabuza grimly replied.

While they were restless on the inside, Zabuza and Haku entered the tower as if nothing weird happened. They reached the Council Room, where two ANBU stood guard, and opened the doors for them. What awaited for them there was certainly surprising.

"Well, here they are," Jiraiya stated, pleased, as he saw the duo enter the room. "Now that we're all here, we can finally begin."

The Council Room was a large room where most meetings were held. There was a long and large table in the middle, surrounded by several cushy chairs and cushions, with several drawers full of scrolls and thick folders resting against the walls. Jiraiya, Tsunade, and their sensei and former Hokage, Hirzuen Sarutobi, were the only Konoha ninja present.

There were other three ninja, two women and a boy, sitting around the table. The youngest two were a nervous looking young man with light blue hair who wore glasses, and an angry looking short girl with dark red hair. Zabuza didn't know who those two were -but the fact that they were carrying two of the seven swords didn't go unnoticed- he did recognize the third one, a woman in her late twenties with long, spiky dark red hair with a bang covering half her face, given that she was almost like a celebrity in Kirigakure.

"Mei Terumi," Zabuza dourly stated. "I must admit seeing you here is a surprise."

"Am I a good surprise, or a bad one?" Mei asked in her trademark sultry voice.

"That would depend on your reason to be here," Zabuza replied, before staring at Jiraiya. "Hokage-sama, I think I deserve an explanation for this."

"And you'll have it, Zabuza. But first, take a seat and let's hear what Miss Terumi has to say," Jiraiya replied.

Begrudgingly, Zabuza did as he was told, with Haku doing the same.

"And given that you two know each other, we can skip the introductions. Now, let's begin," Jiraiya said.

Mei cleared her throat before beginning. "Like all of you probably know, Kirigakure has been involved in a civil war these past few years. The war was a result of our village's increasingly bloodthirsty customs, which reached such point that civilians grew to hate us ninja as if we were demons. After our original leader died, I took the duty to continue the fight," Mei recounted.

"And let me guess," Zabuza interrupted. "You want me to help you with your rebellion?"

"Yes, that's why I came here," Mei confirmed. "I'm aware of your current predicament, and want to negotiate with Hokage-dono the terms so you can be released from your probation and go back with us to liberate our home."

"You can't do that!" an outraged Zabuza shouted at Jiraiya. "I might have a debt with Konoha, but you can't sell me as if I was a slave!"

"Nobody's a slave here, Zabuza," Mei told him in a reassuring tone. "You'd work for me as any other ninja of Kirigakure. I don't plan to put you in chains and whip your back. Unless you're into that kind of stuff," she added with a giggle.

Zabuza didn't find that funny.

"What if I refuse?" Zabuza tentatively asked.

Mei looked slightly surprised, but overall unimpressed. "Well, I don't know why you should. We have common goals, wouldn't be for the best if we joined forces? You started a coup against Yagura years ago, the same coup that inspired this rebellion. However, we managed to amass way more resources than you did. Now you have a chance to finish what you started all those years ago."

"And once Yagura is deposed, who'll take his place? You?" Zabuza asked.

Mei looked as if the swordsman asked something glaringly obvious. "Well, yes. I'm leading the rebellion, and so far all my followers support me as the next Mizukage."

"That's where the problem lies. I threw that coup so I could be the next Mizukage, not somebody else! I fight to see my ambitions become a reality, not yours !" Zabuza angrily shouted.

"It isn't tradition for the strongest ninja to be the leader of a village?" Mei asked in a faux-innocent tone.

Zabuza's eye twitched upon catching the implication of that question.

"Are you implying that you're stronger than me?" Zabuza asked in a threatening tone.

Once again, Mei looked as if he said something obvious. "Well, yes. I mean, I know the extent of your capabilities, and they're impressive," Mei shoot him a condescending smile. "But compared to me, you don't even reach the sole of my boots."

Zabuza slammed his fist on the table. "Enough! I won't allow you to keep me insulting like that! You think that having two Bloodline Limits already makes you that strong? You have no idea of what true strength means!"

"Is that a challenge?" Mei asked, raising her visible eyebrow. "You want to fight me?"

"You can bet it is," Zabuza seethed.

"Okay then, let's make this more interesting. If you manage to defeat me, once I negotiate the terms of your release, I'll step down and appoint you the leader of the rebellion. All my resources and assets will be yours. But if I win, you'll join my forces and fight for me against Yagura and his minions. Deal?" Mei asked, showing a conciliating smile.

"You have no idea what you got yourself into, miss," Zabuza said as he stood up.

"Whoa there, calm down everybody!" Jiraiya asked, raising his voice. "Miss Terumi, you said the matter at hand was urgent. Can't this wait?"

"Don't worry, Hokage-dono. It won't take more than ten minutes," Mei replied as she stood up.

"Let them fight," Tsunade told Jiraiya, repressing a small giggle. "Seeing them argue and bicker is way funnier than any of the soap operas I watch."

"Zabuza-sama, is this really necessary?" Haku asked as he followed his master outside.

"Yes. We have to make clear who's in command here," Zabuza stated.

...

Outside the Tower, Five Minutes Later

Zabuza laid in the ground, trembling. His trusty Executioner's Blade was stabbed into the ground a few meters from him. His clothes were charred and had several burns across his body.

Mei, on the other hand, didn't look any worse for the wear. To make her obvious victory even more evident, she planted a foot on Zabuza's chest.

"Well, that was a fun spar, Zabuza-chan, but now we have a village to liberate," Mei then looked at the staring Jiraiya. "Once somebody heals Zabuza-chan, we can continue the meeting."

"Zabuza-sama," Haku called. "Now that it's clear who's in command here, what do we do?"

...

Ten minutes later, after Tsunade healed Zabuza and the swordsman was given new clothes to wear after the ones he was wearing were damaged, the Konoha and Kiri parties resumed their meeting inside the tower. And after a few minutes of bargaining, Zabuza's probation was finally over and he was free to leave Konoha if he chose to.

"Is Zabuza that important to you? I admit that he's a good ninja, but I doubt that a single man will be able to give you such an edge over your enemies," Jiraiya questioned. "Given how much you're willing to pay to have him back."

"Is not about him, but what he represents," Mei replied. "The Seven Swordsmen are the pride and joy of the Hidden Mist, and keeping their loyalty is a must for any Mizukage. Of the current wielders of the seven swords, three of them still serve Yagura, while other two are loyal to the rebellion. Of the two remaining, Kisame Hoshigaki joined the mercenary group Akatsuki, while Zabuza became an independent mercenary. At least, until a few years ago. After taking part in the Uchiha Insurrection, he vanished. Rumors said that he was now working for Konoha, but they were just that, rumors."

"And you decided to check if those rumors were true?" Hiruzen inquired.

"Oh, no. If I came here with such unreliable information, you could have claimed that Zabuza wasn't here. I came here once I had irrefutable evidence about Zabuza's change of allegiances," Mei replied.

"And that would be...?" Zabuza asked.

"It's a long and really funny story, but I guess I can tell," Mei replied, as she began. "You see, our main tactic to win this war is to target the ships that supply Kirigakure and steal them for us. Tracking the ships, however, was the hardest part, since they're manned by the best sailors money can buy, and often changed their sea routes in order to avoid us. About a year ago, this changed. The ships weren't so careful, and we were able to plunder plenty of them. Not just that, but we also found out the business who owned those ships: The Gato Corporation."

All of them were aware of who Gato was and how he met his end. That was a very good lead that would take her to Zabuza.

"We decided to track and kill Gato in order to disable Yagura's main supply lines. My spies eventually tracked him in the small island nation of the Land of the Waves. But when we got there, it turns out that somebody beat us to the punch: Gato was already dead, and the company's board members have been trying to cover his demise, while they all fought to become the next CEO, which explained the company's poor state.

"The locals told my ninja everything: turns out, Gato wanted to take over the small country, and to do so bought all the ports and harbors. However, a man named Tazuna challenged Gato and started building a bridge to connect the island nation with the continent. Of course, Gato wasn't going to have any of that, and sent a squad of assassins to kill him. Tazuna managed to avoid them and escape to the continent. A month later, he returned with a Konoha ninja escort, who by all means fit Zabuza's description, who kept Gato's assassins at bay while the bridge was being built. When the bridge was close to being finished, Gato himself showed up, leading an army of thugs, in order to kill Tazuna and his ninja. None of them got out of there alive. The bridge was complete, and his job done, the ninja left."

Mei smiled widely as she leaned back on her chair as she put both hands behind her head. This was going to be really good. "My spies decided to follow this lead and go to Konoha. So imagine their surprise when they were about to cross the bridge, and saw 'The Great Zabuza Bridge' written in big, capital letters on it."

Zabuza's eyes opened so wide, they looked they would pop out of their sockets. "WHAT!?"

"You made such an impression there, that the villagers decided to name a bridge after you. So cute," Mei cooed.

"I'm going to kill that old man and his whole family!" Zabuza growled as his hands violently strangled an imaginary victim.

"Save all that killing intent for when we go back to fight Yagura's ninja," Mei calmly told him, as she stood up from her chair. "When the news of Zabuza joining my ranks spreads, not only it will provide a morale boost for my troops, but it will encourage others to join us as well. With three swordsmen supporting the rebellion, people will see we have more chances at winning this than what they initially thought. But let's not dwell in the past anymore. As the most experienced member of my swordsmen, you shall be their captain. Now I believe you should meet your kohai."

Mei made a hand motion, and the two young swordsmen walked towards Zabuza. The bespectacled boy introduced himself first.

"It's an h-honor to finally m-meet you, Zabuza-sempai. My name is Chojuro," the boy stammered as he made a polite bow.

"You have the Hiramekarei? What the hell happened to Mangetsu?" Zabuza asked in disbelief.

"Mangentsu-senpai sadly-"

"Shut up, it was a rhetorical question. If you have his preferred sword, I can figure out what happened to him," an irritated Zabuza growled. He then stared at the intimidated young man a bit more. "You're a kid. How old are you, ten?"

"A-Actually, I'm seventeen," Chojuro meekly said before returning to Mei's side.

The other swordsman, the redheaded girl, walked to Zabuza, ready to introduce herself.

"Another little kid? You've turned the Seven Swordsmen into a nursery!" Zabuza said, before the girl could introduce herself.

"I'm eighteen, you moron! And what I lack in height, I make up for in sheer deadliness! I bet killed more people than you!" the kunoichi protested.

"I find that unlikely, brat," Zabuza scoffed.

"Now, now, Zabuza-chan, don't be like that. Ameyuri Ringo proved to be worthy of the blades she carries, and so did Chojuro. Don't let their youth make you underestimate them," Mei interceded.

"Will you stop call me Zabuza-chan!?" Zabuza shouted indignantly.

"Absolutely not, Zabuza-chan," Mei replied with the most condescending and mocking smile she could.

Deciding the discussion was over, Mei then walked towards Haku, who so far had remained silent for the whole meeting.

"Reports said Zabuza had an apprentice of the Yuki clan. Is that you?" Mei asked.

Haku looked at both Zabuza and Jiraiya. The two of them nodded at him.

"Yes, Mei-sama, it's me. My name is Haku Yuki. A pleasure to meet you," Haku said, as he made a slight bow.

Mei smiled tenderly. "Such polite boy. Can I see a demonstration of your powers?"

Haku nodded and placed his hands in front of each other, as if grabbing an invisible object. Suddenly, a small ball of ice appeared between his hands, rotating around itself.

"Impressive. Good to see that at least one clan survived the Bloodline Purges," Mei stated in satisfaction.

"Do you want to hire Haku too for your campaign?" Jiraiya asked, a bit uneasy. While he was okay with letting Zabuza go, he wasn't so eager to lose the chance to give Konoha a new Bloodline Limit-bearing clan.

"Yes, but not just him," Mei replied, much to Jiraiya's confusion. "So far, we've been fighting a guerrilla war due not having enough numbers for a proper assault, but that's going to change soon. You see, my pirate fleet is very lucrative, and has amassed quite amount of wealth during the past years. Now is the moment to put that wealth to good use, and use it to expand our forces. Konoha made quite a display of power during the last few Chunin exams, especially the one that took place here. I'm very interested in the ninja of that generation that Haku-kun here belongs to. But I know that Konoha has a lot more to offer than that as well."

"Why us? Konoha and Kiri have always been enemies. Why do you think we should help you?" Hiruzen asked.

"You answered yourself: none of Kirigakure's allies would help me oust Yagura, so of course going to their enemies would be the best option," Mei explained. "Besides, given the way you stopped both the Uchiha Insurrection and Orochimaru's invasion, I'd say Konoha's ninja have a lot experience when it comes to warfare."

"I think I'll take that as a compliment," Jiraiya unsurely replied. "Anyway, how much money are you willing to spend, Miss Terumi?"

Mei's smile curved even more. "I was expecting you to ask that, Hokage-dono, and I'm sure that the answer won't disappoint you."

Turns out Mei was right. She was willing to spend A LOT of money. The money she spent to have Zabuza released from probation was nothing compared to all the money she brought with her. And while all that money could allow her to hire literally hundreds of Konoha ninja, the Mizukage hopeful decided that she preferred quality over quantity.

Her first choices were the squads formed by the generation known as the "Konoha 15", of which Naruto and Haku were part of, as well as their respective sensei. Her next choice were Jiraiya and Tsunade themselves. Jiraiya had to decline the offer, since he was a Kage, he didn't do missions and was needed at the village. Tsunade also disagreed, not just because her responsibilities at the Konoha Hospital, but because she was no longer a ninja. Still, she ensured Mei that the medics of the Medical Squad were the next best thing after her.

Mei wanted to recruit Itachi Uchiha as well, but unfortunately he was out of the village doing a long term intelligence gathering mission. Fortunately, Shisui was available to go -the fact that his wife was going was a big boon-. That means that little Shiro would be left under Jiraiya and Tsunade's care until the two of them returned.

By the time Mei ran out of money, she had hired one hundred and twenty two Konoha ninja, forty seven Jonin and Special Jonin and seventy five Chunin. Many people might think it was an insignificant number, given the scale of the campaign the rebel leader was embarked on, but if Jiraiya's word that those ninja were the best Konoha had to offer at the moment, she had high hopes they would be enough to tip the balance in her favor.

Lastly, Mei also asked for Zabuza's other two accomplices, Goizu and Meizu, the so called "Demon Brothers". Given that they weren't as big of a threat or an asset as Zabuza, Jiraiya agreed to hand them to Mei.

"Well, it was a pleasure doing business with you, Miss Terumi," Jiraiya stated once the contract forms had been filled and signed. "When do you plan to go back to the Land of Water?"

"As soon as possible. Tomorrow morning we shall return to the ships, so make sure your ninja are ready to go by then," Mei replied.

"They will, I can assure you that. Now, is there anything else you'd want to discuss before you go?" Jiraiya asked.

"As a matter of fact yes. There's an important fact about Yagura that you and your ninja need to know," Mei began.

"If you're going to tell me that he's a Jinchuriki, I already know that," Jiraiya replied, as he crossed his arms.

Mei was taken aback. Her visible eye was wide open in shock, her mouth agape. "How... how did you know?"

Jiraiya smirked. Despite being a married man, he loved whenever he managed to impress or surprise beautiful young women .

"Before being Hokage, I used to run Konoha's spy and intelligence network. Due a certain... series of events, I had to conduct an extensive research on Tailed Beasts and their Jinchuriki. Said research was rather fruitful. Konoha knows the identity of all nine Jinchuriki, as well as what Tailed Beast they hold," Jiraiya explained, though it was more of a boast.

"Really impressive," Mei conceded. "And do you know the level of control said Jinchuriki have over their beasts?"

"In some cases. I know that one of Kumo's Jinchuriki, the Raikage's brother, has perfect control over his Tailed Beast. The rest all have a varied range of control, though they aren't that big of a threat by themselves," Jiraiya replied.

"Well, in that case, let me provide you with some additional intel: Yagura also has perfect control over his Tailed Beast," Mei stated.

This time, it was Jiraiya, Tsunade and Hiruzen's turn to be surprised.

"What?" Hiruzen asked in surprise.

"That is troubling news," Tsunade interceded. "If the enemy has a perfect Jinchuriki, then your war has become much harder to win."

"I know. That's why I was banking on your son the Jinchuriki to balance things out," Mei replied, and before the others could have any chance to ask, she added: "Yes, I know your son is a Jinchuriki. Of the Nine Tails, no less. Is not that hard to guess if one connects the dots, starting from the eponymous beast's attack on Konoha almost fifteen years ago."

"Sadly, while I did train Naruto to the best of my ability, and he has grown into a fine and powerful ninja, we've made little progress when it comes to control the Nine Tails' chakra," Jiraiya sadly admitted. Mei visibly deflated.

"Then we don't have any means to match Yagura's power. Still, we have to keep trying-"

"Actually, Naruto might be of help. He might not be able to use the Nine Tails' chakra on his whim, but he is a master of Senjutsu," Tsunade interceded.

That piece of information caught Mei's attention, who seemed to grow hopeful once again. "Senjutsu? Your son is a Sage? How? He's so young!" Mei asked, clearly surprised. "But if what you say is true... then we might still have a chance!"

"By the way, Miss Terumi, I noticed something. If you were interested in Naruto-kun, then that means that there are no jinchuriki among your ranks," Hiruzen deduced. "Does that mean the jinchuriki of the Six Tails is also loyal to Kirigakure?"

Mei shook her head. "Utakata is loyal to no one. He refused to serve Yagura, and thus he left the village, becoming a missing-nin. My spies managed to locate him before Yagura did, and I personally tried to persuade him to join us, but he refused to get involved in the war."

"Well, that's one thing less to worry about," Jiraiya stated. "Are you sure he will remain neutral?"

"That's the impression I got the time I spoke to him. In fact, he was planning to leave the Land of Water altogether," Mei replied.

"Alright then, if there's nothing left to discuss, then we're finished here," Jiraiya stated.

"I agree. I'll go to prepare for the journey back," Mei replied.

...

Konoha Hospital, that afternoon

Rin had just finished to check the last patient for the morning, and decided to go to the hospital's cafeteria in order to have some light snack before resuming her shift. However, before she could get there, an old friend of hers made himself known.

"Yo."

Rin turned around and saw Kakashi perched on an open window.

"Oh, hello, Kakashi," Rin greeted, showing a hint of a smile. "What can I do for you?"

"I just wanted to tell you that I'm going to leave for a long term mission. I don't know how long it will last, but it can be weeks, even months," the Copy Ninja gravely said.

"Oh..." Rin held her hands a bit worried. "What is this mission about?"

"My team and I, as well as many other Konoha ninja, have been hired to take part in the Kirigakure Civil War," Kakashi announced.

The mere mention of Kirigakure made her heart stop for a second. The Hidden Mist. It was the ninja of that village who started everything. The ones who turned her into a jinchuriki, forcing her to commit suicide, which was unfortunately witnessed by the still living Obito, which in turn pushed him to join a terrorist organization that eventually resurrected her.

She still had nightmares in which Kiri ninja returned to take her back and do unspeakable things to her.

She did learn about the still ongoing civil war when she was catching up on all the events she missed the years she was inside that cocoon. Truth be told, she didn't care much which side won, and hoped that conflict wouldn't splat Konoha. Her hopes had been cruelly crushed.

"Well, I wanted to tell you that if you see that time passes and we don't return... so you don't think the worst has happened," Kakashi tried to reassure her.

Rin looked pensive, but still worried. She bit her lip while trying to figure out what to say, but Kakashi beat her to the punch

"So... how have you been?" Kakashi asked, even if he knew what her answer would be.

"Okay, I guess. I think I'm finally getting used to this new future Konoha, even if it took me some time," Rin replied. "Thankfully, I don't need to go to any of those seminars to update my medical knowledge anymore. I can't believe how much our medicine has advanced since I was... absent."

"Well, you can thank Tsunade-sama for coming back to the village. Thanks to her, we now have the best medic-nin of the whole Elemental Nations," Kakashi stated, then he added: "Of which you are part now."

"I may be a medic, but I'm not a ninja anymore," Rin sadly said, her statement being followed by an awkward silence.

Feeling the mood was way too somber, the Copy Ninja decided to change the topic. "I see you're getting taller. Whatever Obito did you, it didn't hamper your natural growth."

Rin chuckled, as her body visibly relaxed. "Yeah. I've never been so happy to see that my clothes didn't fit anymore."

"It's a good thing, because otherwise you would never be able to go out to drink at night with me and the others," Kakashi replied awkwardly, placing his hand behind his head.

Rin giggled a bit as well. "Well, I can still hang out with you guys, even if I can't drink yet. And even if it's kind of weird for a teen to hang out with grown men and women."

"Hopefully in the future, we'll look back at this moment, and we'll all laugh. Anyway, I better get going. Wish me luck," the silver haired Jonin said before leaving.

"Actually..." Rin said too late. She groaned, and resumed her way to the cafeteria.

Once there, she sat in one of the tables, and tried to push what Kakashi had told her out of her mind. However, it wasn't possible. She wouldn't have given any thought if it was any other village, but Kiri? The memories were too strong, and too painful. It was partially thanks to what happened during her final mission that she has been unable to return to active duty.

And now, Kiri came back to her doorstep, to finish what it started so many years ago.

"It's okay. I don't need to get myself involved in this," she said aloud. "Kakashi and the others will come back safe and sound. There's no need to worry."

But she was worried. Very worried. It couldn't be a coincidence that Konoha was once again involved with that accursed village. Then again, it may have never stopped being involved, since there was one of the infamous Seven Swordsmen working for the village for a couple years now.

And she had the dreadful sensation that something horrible was going to happen.

Pushing her fears aside, she stood up, and took a decision.

...

Hokage's Office

"Come in!" Jiraiya said after somebody knocked on his door.

The door opened, revealing Rin Nohara, better known as the girl who came back from the dead. So far, she had kept a low profile while working at the hospital. Kakashi hoped that, by giving her space, maybe one day she'll feel ready to return to active duty. According to the silver haired man, she had the potential to be almost as good as Tsunade-hime when it comes to medicine.

"Ah, good afternoon, Rin," Jiraiya greeted the girl with a sincere grin. "What can I do for you."

"Hokage-sama. I came here to ask you for a favor," Rin politely asked.

"Well, I'm all ears."

Rin took a deep breath, as if she needed to mentally prepare what she wanted to say. Jiraiya suspected it would be something big, and he wasn't wrong.

"I wish to take part in the mission to Kirigakure," the medic-nin finally said.

Jiraiya was taken aback. For a girl who spend so much time away from battle, and her history with that village, it was rather shocking.

"Uh... I think there may be a problem," Jiraiya replied, after the shock wore off. "You see, the leader of the rebels has already spent all her money hiring other ninja. You weren't part of the selection process since you weren't in active duty."

"I don't care! I'll go for free!" Rin pleaded. "Please, Hokage-sama, I need to go!"

"Isn't this too much of a leap? I mean, you've been off duty for more than a year, and now you want to get involved in a war? Especially in Kirigakure. Given your history with that village, I never imagined you'd want to get involved," the Toad Sage told her.

"I know. It sounds so nonsensical but... that's exactly why I need to go," Rin asked. "I need to face Kirigakure again if I ever want to move on."

Jiraiya didn't say anything, as he pondered what to do, before he finally took a decision. "Alright then, you can go. Given you used to be teammates, you'll be a temporary aggregate to Kakashi's Animal Squad. Stay close to him and do everything she says, understood?"

Rin beamed with joy. A weird way to react to know you're going to a war, but then again, she asked for it in the first place.

"Understood, Hokage-sama. Thank you for this," Rin said as she repeatedly bowed before him.

...

The next day, as Jiraiya had promised, all the Konoha ninja Mei had hired for her rebellion were already in Konoha's northern gate, ready to go to the Land of Water. Some of the ninjas there, such as Kakashi, Rin and Gai, were veterans of the Third War, while most of them weren't, and their closest experience to war were either Orochimaru's invasion attempt a year ago, and/or the Uchiha Insurrection.

Regardless of this, all of them couldn't help but feel nervous. Going to war was way above the average mission, even those ranked as S.

Many of them were talking among each other, mostly to entertain themselves before it was time to go.

"Haku-kun, given that you're from the Land of Water, how do you feel about going back?" Hinata asked her teammate.

"Guess that you'll be happy to return to your previous home and help to liberate it," Naruto added.

"Truth be told, I hardly think in the Land of Water as my home anymore," Haku began. "I've been living in Konoha for so much time, coupled with the fact that that place was where I lost my original family... you can imagine my feelings towards that place are mixed at best."

"That's really sad. I can't imagine myself having such feelings for Konoha," Hinata mentioned. "Even with all the bad things that happened here."

"Konoha had the luck of being ruled by just men, and not bloodthirsty tyrants," Haku observed. "Something that wasn't always the case in Kirigakure's case."

"But thankfully our help to the rebellion will put an end to that," Naruto optimistically stated.

"Haku-kun... in case everything goes fine... what are you going to do?" Hinata fearfully asked. "I know Hokage-sama allowed you to leave with Zabuza-san the moment the latter finishes his probation."

"Honestly, I don't know," Haku admitted. "I don't want to leave Konoha. I made many friends and even have a girlfriend here. But my loyalty will always be with Zabuza-sama. If he returns to Kirigakure and wants me to go back with him, I have no choice."

"Why don't you tell Zabuza you're happy here, and ask him to stay?" Naruto asked.

"I can't do that. My debt with Zabuza-sama is one I will never be able to repay. Asking more is simply unthinkable," Haku replied.

While Naruto and Hinata were unable to understand such train of thought, they decided to respect it nonetheless, even if they really wanted to tell Haku to make his own decisions regardless of what Zabuza said.

"What about Tenten? Aren't you going to tell her about this?" Naruto asked. "You might have to break up with her."

Haku sighed again. "I've been trying to bring up the topic but... I just can't bring myself to have this conversation with her. I know I have too soon or later but... it's really hard for me."

"I hope Zabuza allows you to stay here once the war ends," Naruto said. "Or else, the team will be down to Hinata and I. And I don't want some newbie upstaging your place."

"I hope that too. But for the time being, we should focus on the mission at hand," Haku declared.

The three ninja saw their sensei walking towards them, with a small smile on her lips.

"I heard we'll be going soon. Are you guys ready?" the raven haired woman asked her students.

"Yup! You bet we are!" Naruto proudly declared. "You know, I've always wanted an opportunity to test everything I learned during the past years. The missions we got weren't all that big."

"You might find this way too big for your taste, Naruto," Kurenai advised. "Even if I do agree that you've grown powerful, there are always enemies out there ready to show you how weak you are."

"Besides, Mei-san wants you to help her fight the Mizukage, who is a perfect jinchuriki. Even with your Sage Mode, he's an opponent not to be underestimated," Haku warned him.

"I know, and I'll be ready. I have a new jutsu capable of harming even a Tailed Beast," Naruto boasted.

Hinata then turned around noticed something. "Oh look, there's Meisan!"

Everybody's attention was drawn to the woman who would be their new boss for the foreseeable future. She was flanked by the three of the Seven Swordsmen loyal to her. Everybody stood to attention as she was ready to give a speech.

"It seems that all of you are here, good," Mei began, as she inspected the ninja in the front rows. "I know you're Konoha ninja, but as long as this campaign lasts, you will only be loyal to me. Fear not, since I won't test your loyalty by making you go against your village's interests. Your only enemies will be Yagura's men.

"Time is of essence, so we need to move fast. We will travel to the east until we reach the coast. There, I have a transport ship prepared to carry all of you to my base. Once we reach there, we will plan our next move. Now if somebody has any questions..." several hands were up. "... I suggest you to keep them to yourselves until we reach my main base."

All hands went down, as some ninja started to murmur.

"Well, I hope you guys are ready, because we're leaving NOW! So everybody, move!" Mei ordered as she and her entourage began their march towards the west coast.

While they took a couple seconds to react, the large group of Konoha ninja quickly began to move, following their temporary boss into the thick forests of the Land of Fire.

...

Back in Konoha, Hokage's Office

After seeing the Konoha ninjas hired by Mei, his son among them, finally leave for Kirigakure, Jiraiya returned to his never-ending pile of work. Of course, it didn't last long until the monotony of his work would be disturbed. An ANBU appeared in front of him.

"Hokage-sama, there's somebody who wants to see you," the ANBU informed.

"Hm? Weird. I don't have any appointments until one in the afternoon," Jiraiya replied. "Tell that person to ask for an appointment like everybody else."

"It's not some random person, Hokage-sama, but Danzo Shimura," the ANBU uneasily clarified.

Now that was something that got Jiraiya's attention. Despite being part of the Council of Elders, Danzo rarely showed up to the meetings, nor voiced any concerns over the way the Toad Sage ran the village. Until now, that's it.

While reluctant, Jiraiya decided that he could spare a moment to hear him out. "Tell him to come in."

"As you wish, Hokage-sama," the ANBU said before vanishing.

A couple seconds later, the door of his office opened, revealing the crippled one eyed man that was both his sensei's longtime friend and sworn rival.

"Danzo, what a surprise. Take a seat, please," Jiraiya said in a painfully fake polite tone. Not paying attention to that, the Elder did as Jiraiya told him. "What do I owe this visit?" Jiraiya asked. Albeit deep down, he knew the answer.

"I've recently been informed that you allowed a contingent of some of our best ninjas be deployed to intervene in Kirigakure's civil war," the war hawk began. "I wish to know why I haven't been told the moment this decision was made."

"Last time I checked, the Hokage doesn't have to answer to anybody, so I don't think I owe you any explanation of what I do," Jiraiya replied.

"Quite fooling around, Jiraiya," Danzo snapped, without losing his usual cool. "Getting involved in another village's affair is something that needs to be discussed with the council, so the best decision can be reached."

"First of all, it's Hokage-sama to you," Jiraiya gravely replied, as he fixed a hard glare on the war hawk, who wasn't perturbed. "Second, I didn't randomly decide to have Konoha be part of their civil war. The leaders of one of the sides hired some of our ninjas to boost their forces. It's a job just like any other."

"That's a lie, and you know it," Danzo replied. "A group of ninja of such scale, coupled with the skill of many of its members, can easily tip the balance of the civil war."

"And that's a bad thing because...?" Jiraiya asked, clearly not following the elder. "The faster the civil war ends, the more lives won't be senselessly wasted."

"Those lives are of foreign people, and thus not our concern," Danzo coldly dismissed.

Jiraiya chuckled. "See? That line of thinking is why you were always passed over the title of Hokage."

Despite such a shot, Jiraiya failed to get a reaction out of Danzo.

"And are you so willing to save lives even if it comes at the cost of our ninja?" Danzo questioned.

"I know many ninja won't come back home, but that's a risk they are aware of," Jiraiya rebutted, as he crossed his arms. "But like I said, this isn't an humanitarian mission. Mei paid for the ninja she took with her. We never discriminated any client before, and I see no reason to start now."

"Don't you see it? The longer the civil war continues, the more Kirigakure will be weakened. And if they don't end up destroying themselves, we could have easily finished off the winner, erasing a longtime enemy and competition of Konoha," Danzo explained. "And then Konoha would have reaped the benefits of their chaos, such as any survivor with a bloodline limit, and some of the swords of the Seven Swordsmen. Given what you did with Zabuza and Haku, I thought that was your long-term plan, but it seems you're not as interested in strengthening Konoha as much as I thought."

Jiraiya found Danzo's accusation insulting, but thought it would be better not to let him be carried away by his emotions. "I wouldn't have accepted this job if I didn't have Konoha's best interest at heart, and if you had a more open mind, you'd see the benefits of this transaction."

"Such as?"

"If we manage to help Mei overthrow Yagura, we will gain a powerful ally, given that, even if she did pay for our help, she will owe part of her victory to us," Jiraiya started to explain. "With Suna and Kiri as our allies, Iwa and Kumo won't be as eager to start wars against us like they did in the past. Incidents like the Hyuga Affair won't happen again."

"Alliances cannot be trusted. A friend today can become an enemy tomorrow. What will be of us if any of our so called allies betray us? We have to learn to be self-reliant, or else destruction will be our only fate," Danzo stated.

"Trust me, I made everything in my power to make Konoha strong, but alliances are never to be dismissed. That's why, even if we encourage all of our ninja to train to become stronger, they go to missions in squads and not alone," Jiraiya replied. The Sannin was starting to lose his patience. "You wanted to know why I allowed Mei to acquire the services of our village, and now you know it. As a Hokage, I'm a very busy man, so if you don't have any more grievances to discuss, I'd like to resume my work."

Danzo seemed to accept the end of the discussion, as he stood up and moved towards the door, but before opening his mouth one last time.

"You'll regret this decision, Hokage," Danzo gravely told him.

Jiraiya's eyes narrowed, as he glared at Danzo. "Is that a threat?"

"It's a warning. And it's not me I'm warning you about," the head of Root stated before leaving the room.

...

Root's Headquarters, sometime later

While the old war hawk was an expert at suppressing his emotions, there were times, such as now, in which he wished he could scream into the sky and let all his rage away. But he knew from experience that such actions brought short term relief at the expense of long term consequences. Not that it made him feel any better.

Days like today make him lament losing Shisui's Sharingan to the Akatsuki. With the power of that unique eye, he could have manipulated all the right people in order to get himself promoted to Hokage.

But alas, fate had a different plan, and favored the enemy that day, in more ways than one. Jiraiya was pretty much a follower of Hiruzen's philosophy of seeking peace and creating bonds with other villages, instead of crushing them when they're down so Konoha can reign supreme. And it wasn't the first time that he was told that his refusal to adhere to such way of thinking cost him being Hokage.

Danzo had to admit there was some truth to Fugaku Uchiha's words regarding the clan's reasons to launch a coup d'état. Every Hokage was related to the previous one in some way. Tobirama was Hashirama's brother. Hiruzen was Tobirama's apprentice. Jiraiya was Hiruzen's apprentice, and Minato was Jiraiya's. And given Naruto's meteoric rise in power and prestige, it was more than likely that he will become the next Hokage once Jiraiya retired.

He wouldn't say Hiruzen was a bad Hokage, at least on paper. His old friend was powerful, experienced, wise and knowledgeable. He had all the desirable traits a Kage should have. However, his childlike naiveté and delusions about forgiveness and peace made him a wrong choice. The ninja world was cruel, with no place for childish ideals, and no way to be changed. The only way to survive was to be more cruel than your enemies.

As soon as he entered his lair, his two strongest and most loyal agents appeared besides him.

"Danzo-sama," Fuu, the Yamanaka redhead, greeted him. "How was the meeting with the Hokage?"

"As fruitless as I had feared. I'm afraid that there's nothing we can do now," Danzo replied.

"Maybe we can send some agents to sabotage Kirigakure while they're fighting?" Torune, the masked Aburame, suggested.

Danzo shook his head. "For such idea to work, would have needed to know about Konoha's intervention well in advance. However, not everything is lost. Fortunately, I managed to sneak an infiltrator among the group which left with the Kiri ninja. At the very least, we'll obtain some valuable information about our enemies."

...

Three Days Later, aboard Mei's ship

The Konoha ninja managed to reach the coast in two days, just as Mei was hoping. Thanks to their celerity, they were able to board the ship in no time and head towards the Land of Water. Then, it would be an estimate of three days until they reached Mei's main base and planned the offensive.

Sadly, three days was too much, and the ship was too small for sparring, or even doing any kind of exercise. So the only way to pass the time was talking with others, eating, or, if you were lucky enough to have a significant other aboard, making out.

Unfortunately for Sakura, the latter option wasn't available to her, despite the object of her affections being on board. Oh well, since she had nothing better to do, she might as well try to change that.

Like most people, Sasuke was in the deck, resting against a railing with his arms crossed and his usual "I don't give a damn about anything" expression. Without saying anything, Sakura walked towards him, and rested her arms on the railing while she gazed at the expanse of water before her eyes.

"I've never seen the ocean before. So much water..." Sakura casually mentioned. Even if Sasuke appeared to pay her no mind, she had learned that the Uchiha was indeed listening. "It's so beautiful, don't you think?"

"Maybe at first, but it gets boring really quickly," the Uchiha replied. "Hope we can get to Land of Water as soon as possible."

"Where's the hurry? You should try to enjoy the trip a bit more. I mean, it's not every day we can get a sea trip, right?" Sakura asked.

"I've never been a fan of this kind of things. But at the very least, it gives me time to think," Sasuke replied, as his eyes sharpened.

Sakura turned around, resting her back on the railing, and looked at Sasuke with a sincere smile. "And do you mind sharing what are you thinking right now?"

"See that guy over there? The one drawing a picture?" Sasuke mentioned.

Sakura scanned the crowd before her, until she saw the boy Sasuke was talking about. A pale looking, black haired boy, dressed in black, sitting on a chair, working on a picture.

"What about him?" Sakura asked, as a dreadful thought crawled up her back. "Oh please, don't tell me you're into guys, Sasuke-kun..."

"That boy appears to be the same age as us, yet I don't remember seeing him in the Academy," Sasuke mentioned.

Sakura inwardly sighed in relief, and addressed Sasuke's worries. "Well, maybe he graduated before us?"

"Then how is that we didn't see him in the Chunin Exams? Neither the ones who took place in Konoha, nor the ones in which you and Karin graduated," Sasuke observed. "And before you said that maybe he's still a Genin, remember that this is an S-Rank mission. No Genin would be allowed."

"You think there's something fishy about him?" Sakura asked.

Sasuke nodded. "It's a gut feeling, but there's something about that guy that makes me distrust him."

"I see. Do you want me to go and talk to him? Maybe I can get something out of him," Sakura offered, knowing very well that for all his talents as a ninja, Sasuke wasn't the most social person.

"I'd appreciate it," Sasuke replied.

Sakura nodded, and headed towards the drawing boy. Walking to him from behind, she took a look first at the picture he was drawing.

While it appeared he was drawing the oceanic scenery, it was an abstract picture. That would be an excellent topic to break the ice.

"Nice picture," Sakura praised, her tone soft enough as not to startle the pale boy. "I don't know much about art, but it looks really pretty."

The boy turned around, and smiled at her. "Thank you."

"I'm Sakura Haruno, by the way," the pinkette said as she extended her hand at Sai, which he took. "Nice to meet you."

"My name is Sai, and the feeling is mutual, " Sai replied, keeping that smile all the way. The stiffness of his obviously fake smile was making Sakura a bit uncomfortable.

"Uh, you can stop smiling now," Sakura awkwardly said.

"Oh, sorry. I read in a book that a smile is a good way to show others your friendliness," Sai explained, much to Sakura's bewilderment.

"But if I'm making you feel uneasy, I'll stop... ugly."

Sakura's eye twitched, as her teeth gritted. "The hell did you call me!?"

"Oh, I also read in a book that giving nicknames is a good way to connect with people, and the best nicknames are those who define the-"

"SHANNARO!"

Sai suddenly found himself at the opposite end of one hell of a right hook, which sent the pale boy flying out of the ship and into the ocean.

Author's Note:

So, the Civil War is about to kickstart. Next chapter will mostly develop a bit most of the Kiri characters before the action can begin.

Boy, I love writting Mei being so condescending towards Zabuzza. It's almost as fun as Shizune being sassy to Tsunade. But don't worry Zabuzza, your partnership with Mei will be very fruitful. And well, Mei overall is a pretty fun character, and I enjoyed a lot writing chapters in which she's prominent.

Some people asked for him in the reviews, so I'm going to say it now: Uakata isn't going to have a big role in this fic. Mostly for three reasons: first, fleshing him out and giving him a large role would slow down the story's pace a lot; second, this arc is going to introduce quite a lot of new characters, mostly canon and a couple of OCs, and is getting very crowded as it is; and lastly, I don't find him terribly interesting, so I have no incentive to write for him. Sorry to all the readers who were expecting to see him.

And Sai also makes his debut. He won't be an important character during this arc, but he will in a future original arc of Part II that will deal with Danzo and Root, so I thought I'd introduce him now in order to lay the groundwork for that future arc. Sorry if I suck at writing him, but I find writing for Sai quite hard, and while I saw other writers that are able to grasp what makes him funny, so far I've been unable to, besides his usual lack of tact.

Thanks a lot to gio08 for betareading this chapter.

Alright, end note. Next chapter will focus on fleshing out the rest of the Kiri characters before the action can truly begin. In the meanwhile, don't forget to review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Kirigakure's Hope

Author's Note: I'm so glad Mei and Zabuza's interaction got such a good reception. I was afraid that people would think I was making a disservice to the character by havinh Mei whipping him like that. Glad to see you find it as hilarious as I did.

Also, the story just broke the 500K hits! Yay!

Nothing much to say here. Enjoy the chapter:

Chapter 44:

Kirigakure's Hope

or

Ready for the Prison Break

...

Land of Earth, Undisclosed Location

The mountains of the Land of Earth are one of the most inhospitable places of the entire Elemental Nations, with only the Land of Wind's Demon Desert managing to be close in such terms.

The mountains had everything that made them unfit for humans being to live there: no trees to harvest lumber, no fertile land that could be farmed, very little available water, an extremely strenuous terrain difficult to traverse, much less to build a village on, and the only animals who dared to live there were large, ferocious beasts that were constantly fighting each other, usually for food, who didn't mind the collateral damage their fights could cause. Yes, such combination of factors made the mountains a place completely devoid of human beings.

Just like Han wanted.

Han, known as Han of the Steam Armor, while technically being an Iwa ninja, preferred to live alone, far away from civilization. He was an extremely tall man, wearing a crimson armor that covered most of his body, and his face being obscured by both a mask that covered his mouth and nose, and a red conical straw hat. Being a jinchuriki, the man had faced discrimination and scorn from his peers most of his life, that's why he chose a life of quiet solitude.

While he was preparing some food, Han could hear the footsteps of several men. Whenever the Tsuchikage had a mission for him, he would send a squad of ninja with the news and details for his mission. It was an agreement he reached with Onoki, the current Tsuchikage; he would be allowed to live alone in peace, but he would work for Iwa whenever they needed him. It was a better alternative than being a missing-nin. Besides, that way he could get the supplies he needed to survive in such an hostile environment.

However, there was a problem: these men, the four of them, weren't Iwa ninja. In fact, they didn't look like ninja at all. They were wearing robes akin to religious men, had their head shaved, and their skin was dyed pitch black with white patterns, almost emulating bones. Han deduced they had to be some sort of cultists.

"I don't know who you are," Han calmly said as he stood up. "But if you value your lives, you should leave this place immediately."

The weird looking men grinned, and unsheathed ritual daggers. Such a strange weapon to bring to a fight.

"Sorry, you sinner, but our High Priest has asked us to get you," one of the cultists said, grinning widely.

"Alive, unfortunately. Janshin-sama won't be happy, but the word of our High Priest can't be denied," another cultist said, as he menacingly advanced towards Han.

"So make our jobs easier and-"

The third cultist never got to finish his sentence. In a blink, Han appeared before him, and blew a hole in his chest with a brutal punch, his fist bursting through the man's back. Han shook the man's lifeless corpse from his arm, and shot a murderous glare at the other three.

"Who wants to go next?" he asked.

A moment of silence. Then, the three remaining cultists' faces contorted with rage, raised their daggers, and charged at Han.

"FOR JANSHIN-SAMA!" They yelled in unison.

Meanwhile, hidden above them, two men wearing black cloaks with red clouds observed the fight. One was a young man with slick silver hair combed backwards, who carried a large, three-bladed scythe. The other was a taller man whose face was covered by a mask, leaving only his bloodshot green eyes visible.

"Your cultists are so inefficient, it's almost hilarious, Hidan," the second man commented.

Hidan just shrugged, and chuckled. "I know. But I didn't bring those fuckers here to do our job for us, Kakuzu. It was you who wanted to assess our target before taking him on. Who cares if they die?"

"We aren't going to do much assessment if they die so quickly," Kakuzu noted, as he observed how Han cooked a cultist alive with an attack that involved steam. "Look, he already killed three of them."

"We aren't going to kill him, and Jashin-sama demands sacrifices. It doesn't matter if it's a faithful or a heretic, even if Janshin-sama prefers the latter. It will grant us a swift victory," Hidan explained.

Kakuzu frowned, and glared at his partner. "Do not let those superstitious beliefs of yours make you think you're invincible and fumble the mission. It took us way too long to locate Han to fail now."

"WHAT ARE YOU SAYING BY SUPERTITIONS, YOU SON OF A BITCH!" Hidan yelled at Kakuzu as he grabbed his scythe. "Fucking take back those words or else-"

"Hey, who the hell are you!?" Han asked from below, after noticing the two Akatsuki.

Kakuzu's glare intensified. "Way to go idiot, he saw us. Now we lost the element of surprise."

"Oh, who the hell needs that! I'm sure this fucker ain't that strong! Come on Kakuzu!" Hidan shouted as he leaped at Han.

Kakuzu groaned loudly. "One day, Hidan, I'll find a way to kill you. "

...

Seas of the Land of Water, Mei's Transport Ship

Sasuke and Sakura moved to the latter's cabin, of which she shared with Karin and their sensei, Shizune, to discuss the pinkette's less than stellar attempt at getting closer to Sai.

"You know, the point of asking you to go talk to Sai instead of me is because you are better suited for this kind of situations," Sasuke pointed out.

Sakura groaned. "I know... but the guy called me ugly! We just met, and he called me that! And he had the gall to claim it was an 'affectionate nickname'!"

"Anyway, while the guy was being fished back to the ship, I asked some questions to the others, mainly if they knew about him," Sasuke told her.

"And what did you find out?"

"Apparently, he's an ANBU. And not just that, but he had been trained as an ANBU all his life, " the Uchiha revealed.

Sakura raised an eyebrow. "That's... odd. ANBU or not, all ninja are required to graduate the Academy."

"I thought that as well. But apparently, he's part of some sort of experimental training in order to produce agents better suited for black ops," Sasuke explained.

"No wonder the guy is so socially awkward. I didn't know the Hokage allowed for this kind of brutal methods. Isn't that the reason there's a rebellion in Kiri?" the pinkette asked.

"Yes. But you can voice your concern when we get back. As for the time being, we should keep an eye on him," Sasuke decided.

"Shouldn't we focus on the mission at hand instead?" Sakura asked.

Sasuke snorted. "We're not Genin anymore. We can do both things."

Sakura blushed a bit in slight embarrassment. "Right, sorry."

"By the way, where is Karin? I haven't seen her in all day," Sasuke wondered.

...

To answer Sasuke's question, Karin was with Neji on the latter's cabin, of which he also shared with the other male members of their team. As previously stated, there was nothing much to do on a plain transport ship other than talk with others, eat or make out, and Karin and Neji decided to do the latter.

However, after their make out session, they decided to just relax, and remain snuggled on Neji's small but comfortable bed.

"I don't know how can I resist being far away from you for so long," Karin moaned, knowing full well that she wouldn't be able to stay with Neji once the mission began.

"They say absence makes the heart to grow fonder," Neji replied. "The longer we are apart, the more we want to see each other again."

"Even then. Sometimes I envy Naruto-niisan so much. He gets to see his girlfriend all the time. How I wish you were on my team," Karin continued.

"Maybe, but it was our fate not to be teammates," Neji replied. "That doesn't mean that our bond is any weaker, though."

Karin smiled, "Of course not," she said as she kissed him in the lips. "But maybe once this mission is over, we can ask for some vacation days. To spend it together, you know."

"While that sounds enticing, I'm afraid I will still be busy preparing my promotion to Jonin. Leisure time will have to wait," Neji replied.

Karin frowned, and crossed her arms over her chest, and pouted a little. "You're no fun. You already train and a lot, and are among the strongest ninja of our age. Isn't that enough for you?"

"No, not until I don't achieve the Jonin rank," Neji replied. "There's always room to get better. What about you Karin?"

"What about me what?" Karin asked back. "Are you implying that I'm weak or I don't train enough?"

"Far from it. But I wonder if you plan to stay a Chunin forever," Neji asked.

Karin raised an eyebrow. "I just got the rank not even a year ago. I don't think I'm ready to go for another promotion so soon."

"Why not? You're strong, and one of the kunoichi with the greatest potential I've ever seen. You could easily become Jonin before reaching adulthood," Neji observed.

Karin blushed a bit. "Y-You think so?"

"I wouldn't say that if I didn't think it. You only need to push yourself further," Neji advised.

"Hey! I do push myself really far, thank you very much!" Karin protested, as she fixed a hard stare on her boyfriend.

Neji, however, smirked. "You think so? In that case, you wouldn't mind training with me and my team one of these days?"

"Oh, please. Sakura trained with you guys. If she can do that, then so can I," Karin confidently replied.

"You sound very sure of yourself," Neji noted.

Karin smirked at him. "Of course I am. I'm very strong and have a lot of potential, right? And since I'm so sure, let's make this more interesting: if I manage to resist everything your training routine throws at me, you'll take a few days off to spend with me. No missions, and no training."

"And what if you fail?" Neji asked.

"How dare you suggest I'm gonna fail," Karin stated, sounding half-indignant. "Let me think... if I fail, I'll admit you're right, and I'll continue training alongside you until you deem me worthy."

"Both outcomes involve getting closer to me," Neji observed.

Karin frowned once again. "And you're complaining?"

This, time it was Neji who smirked at her. "Not in the slightest."

Neji then moved closer to Karin, and the two teens continued kissing. That's it, until somebody knocked the door.

"UGH!" Karin groaned. "Go away! We're a bit busy here!"

"I'm sorry to tell you that make out time is over. We arrived at Mei-san's base," a voice the two of them recognized as Tenten informed them.

"Awesome timing," Karin snarked, as she rolled her eyes.

"I feel you, sister. Haku-kun and I were getting intimate too when Lee told me to look for Neji," Tenten replied.

...

When they said that the first stop would be Mei's base, everybody imagined that they would go to some sort of town, small city, hidden fortress, or even a campsite. Yet instead, looming over the transport ship was an even bigger metal ship, way bigger than the one that hosted the preliminaries during the Chunin Exam finals at Konoha.

The huge ship was also surrounded by a thick layer of mist, probably created by the ninjas on board, in order to keep the ship hidden from any kind of sea patrol.

Once the smaller ship was closer to the bigger one, a gangway was placed between the two of them so the Konoha ninja could access Mei's base.

"That... that's your base?" an incredulous Kiba asked.

"Of course," Mei replied. "The Land of Water is not exactly big, and if I had a base on land, it would have been found and razed sooner or later. But by establishing my command center in a ship, my forces and I can be constantly on the move and avoid Yagura's trackers.

"I do have a few decoy bases in the mainland in order to distract the enemy, though," Mei added.

"That's a very intelligent thing to do," Kakashi praised.

"Aw, thanks. But I have to admit this idea was born out of experience and necessity rather than wit or intellect," Mei conceded.

Ameyuri took a step forward. "Everybody, get on board the ship! There's much to discuss and prepare, so time is of essence!"

"Our personnel will show you your new cabins, as well as all of the ship's place of interest. And unlike this one, it has places where you can spar and train," Chojuro continued. "We hope that you find the Kirigakure's Hope to your liking."

After a few minutes, all of Konoha's ninja were aboard the Hope, and the smaller transport ship took a different direction.

"All of the Jonin, come with me to the War Room so we can discuss your first mission for the rebellion. Everybody else will be briefed once a plan had been devised. For the time being, feel free to roam the ship and see everything she has to offer," Mei instructed the Konoha ninja.

...

Everybody took on Mei's offer, and decided to explore the ship. Much to their joy, the ship had multiple training and sparring rooms where the idle ninja could blow some steam and keep their skills honed. Plus the rooms were extra reinforced so the fights wouldn't damage the rest of the ship. Made sense for the ship to have such rooms, since Mei's ninja needed a place to train.

Naruto and Hinata wondered if they could resume the make-out session that was tragically interrupted when Haku told them they had arrived, but neither of them were in the mood after such a jarring interruption.

The blond jinchuriki then suggested to continue his training in Lightning Release, something Hinata didn't mind at all.

"Lightning Release: Spark shot!"

After doing the required hand seals, Naruto pointed two fingers forward, releasing a ridiculously small electrical bolt.

"Dammit!" he yelled, as he stomped his foot in frustration.

Spark shot was a D-Rank jutsu, and the weakest and most simple Lightning Release jutsu. Yet Naruto was having trouble mastering it. His other thirty nine clones weren't having a much better time either.

"Calm down, Naruto-kun. Frustration rarely leads to success," Hinata wisely advised.

"I can't help but feel like that when I fail to master such a simple jutsu as this! I mean, I completed a jutsu my biological dad was unable to! I'm better than this!" Naruto replied.

"Even with clones, you can't expect to master everything the first try. I mean, you told me it took you weeks to combine elemental chakra with the Rasengan, right?" Hinata pointed out. Naruto reluctantly nodded. "This is the same. Now, let's continue, shall we?"

"Maybe you could give me some advice? There's something I must be doing wrong," Naruto told her.

Hinata looked pensive. She brought a finger to her lips. "Hmmm... oh, I know! I'll use my Byakugan and see how you mold your chakra before using the jutsu. That way I can see if you're doing something wrong."

A devious smile appeared on Naruto's face. "Hinata-hime, if you wanted to see me without clothes, you only need to ask."

Hinata turned incredibly red. "W-WHAAT!? T-That's not what-I mean, I would never... !" she started to babble.

"Relax Hime. You should know that I'm joking," Naruto laughed.

"W-Well, it wasn't funny, I don't like when people insinuate that about me or my clan," Hinata protested, her normally pale face still pink. "And I wish you stop doing it."

"I do it because you're adorable when you get that flustered," Naruto replied, still showing that roguish smile.

"Well, do you want me to help you, or not?" Hinata huffed, crossing her arms over her chest.

"Okay, okay, sorry," Naruto replied. 'Boy, I think I did that way too many times already. Hinata-hime doesn't anger easily, but I better do something to make up for that just in case.'

"Byakugan!"

Naruto and his clones repeated the jutsu a couple times, under Hinata's watchful gaze. They didn't need to go it a third time.

"Okay, I think I know what you're doing wrong," Hinata said.

All clones looked at her, expectant. "And that would be?" the original asked.

"You release the chakra way too early. You need to let it build up for a while before casting the jutsu," Hinata stated.

"Oh, I see," the original Naruto replied, and both he and his clones proceeded to do the jutsu as Hinata advised. "Like this?"

This time, the lightning bolt was thicker, even if it still didn't have enough power.

"Yes, like that! Good job!" Hinata cheered.

"Hey, wait a minute," a clone said in realization. "Both you and Sasuke use lightning jutsu instantly. How's that?"

"Practice," Hinata said, as she shrugged. "When I started, I also had to spend a couple seconds building up the chakra so I could release the jutsu properly. As time passed, my skill improved so I needed to do it less and less."

"Of course," the blond replied, then he turned at his clones. "Alright guys, let's work on this so by the end of the day, we can do it instantly just like Hinata-hime does!"

A chorus of "Right!", "Yeah!", and "Sure!" replied, as the army of clones began to work on the jutsu with even more enthusiasm and energy than before.

Hinata giggled as she kept watching over the clones trying to master the jutsu down. However, it seemed like the training would come to a stop, since her Byakugan saw somebody who was about to enter the room. Somebody who was rather close to Naruto for personal reasons.

"Naruto-niisan?" Karin asked as she entered the training room. "Oh."

"Oh, Karin-nee-chan, hi!" the original Naruto said, while the clones were still focused with the training at hand.

She looked around, and saw Hinata among the army of clones. "Is this a bad moment? Are you busy?"

"I'm training with Hinata-hime, don't worry!" the original Naruto said, as he created an additional clone. "I hope you don't mind talking to a clone."

"I guess not," Karin said as she shrugged.

"Cool then!" the new clone said, as he left the original and his "siblings", and went to talk with Karin. "So, what's up?"

Karin and the Naruto clone exited the training room, so the original and his girlfriend could train alone.

"Naruto, I'm going to ask you something, and I want you to answer honestly," Karin started, looking at Naruto in the eyes. "Do you think I'm strong?"

"What? Of course you are!" Naruto replied. "Why ask me that? You think you're not?"

"Well... Neji pointed out that I could be stronger than what I'm now. That I'm not 'fulfilling my potential'," she said, making air quotes. "Do you... agree with him?"

The clone looked pensive. "Well... you do have a lot of untapped potential. But I'd say you should improve at your own pace. Neji is a genius. Guys like him improve at an insanely fast pace. Normal people like you and me should take it easy."

Karin raised an eyebrow. "You, normal? I think you're actually closer to him than you're to me."

"Well, I kinda have the clones, so my case is special, hehe," the clone laughed. Then, he remembered something. "But then again, you do have Shadow Clones too, right? You can use that to get stronger faster than normal."

"I can't make as many clones as you. My limit used to be four, and with a lot of training I managed to push it to five," Karin explained.

"Hey, even then, it's still something," the clone replied. "My dad's limit is six, yet he still used them to great effect. You should try that too."

"Alright, I will," Karin replied, as she let out a weary sigh.

Something the clone noticed. Worriedly, he decided to press on a little. "Is everything between Neji and you alright?"

"Neji-kun is as loving as ever. Is just that recently..." Karin began, and paused for a bit, before sighing again. "Neji-kun nowadays seems to be overly focused on his ninja career. He's been working on his promotion to Special Jonin like crazy, and now he wants to be Jonin."

"And you think he's neglecting you?" Naruto asked.

Karin rubbed her arm. "A little bit, yes. But I can't blame him for wanting to look for his future. Is just that I'm afraid that I might be a load to him. I don't want to drag him down."

"Well, you can always train more. Push yourself to-"

"It's not that," Karin interrupted the clone. "I worked very hard for my Chunin promotion, and I'm very happy with it. While I don't plan to stay a Chunin forever, I wasn't looking forward any further promotion anytime soon. But after talking with Neji it made me feel... inadequate."

"If you're happy with the way you are, then you shouldn't try to change that. Let Neji progress at his preferred pace, and you progress at your own," Naruto said with a shrug. "Funny, I got a similar conversation with Hinata. She seems to think the same as you."

"She has to, given that you're her boyfriend, and I know that she isn't a genius," Karin replied, placing her hands on her hips. "So, anyway, what do you think I should do?"

"Try to get a promotion whenever you want it, and most importantly, whenever you feel you're ready. If you're not ready, it won't matter how much you want it," Naruto told her. "I'm sure Neji will understand your reasons."

"Let's hope he does," Karin replied. "Anyway, thanks a lot for talking with me. Now I feel a bit better about both myself and my relationship with Neji."

"Hey, what's family for?" the clone heartily replied, and chuckled. "I'm sure I can always talk with you if I ever have a problem."

"You can, but I don't have your spirit, so don't expect me to be of much help. Other than having somebody listen to you," Karin replied.

"Sometimes, having somebody to listen to you is all what you need," the clone said before dispelling in a cloud of smoke, leaving Karin alone.

...

Ship's Cafeteria

Feeling she could get some food after doing some light training, Rin decided to head to the ship's cafeteria. As expected from such a place that served as the rebel's main base, the cafeteria was a huge place, full of long tables and benches attached to the ground.

It was relatively early, so there were only a few people scattered through the many, many, tables.

"Well, at least I'm not going to have any problems finding a place to eat," she chuckled.

After picking her food, she headed towards the nearest table, until a shout followed by laughter caught her attention. Looked around, she saw that the commotion came from one of the tables towards the middle, where a trio of Konoha ninja were also eating while chatting a bit. Taking a better look at them, she realized that they weren't some random ninja, but Kakashi's Animal Squad.

The silver haired Jonin did talk to Rin about his "cute little Genin" (now cute little Chunin), but she never met them properly. Maybe now there was a chance to do so, and also befriend some people of her age group. From what Kakashi had told her, they were very friendly. Taking a deep breath, she walked towards their table. None of them seemed to notice her presence until she opened her mouth.

"Excuse me, do you mind if I sit with you?" Rin politely asked, putting on her best smile.

"Sure! The more the merrier!" the brown haired girl cheerfully replied as she patted the empty seat next to her. "I'm Tamaki, and these are my friends and teammates, Kiba and Shino!"

And indignant bark came from under the table.

"Oh, and Akamaru. Sorry for forgetting about you, boy," Tamaki replied, as she handed the now visible dog a treat, which he happily munched.

"Hi there," Kiba replied, just as energetic as Tamaki.

"Hello," Shino said in his usual monotone.

"Nice to meet all of you. My name's Rin Nohara," the medic-nin introduced herself as she took a seat.

"Wait,, Rin Nohara? THE Rin Nohara?" Kiba asked in shock. "As in, Kakashi-sensei's deceased teammate who came to life by mysterious means!?"

Rin chuckled awkwardly. "Yup, that's me."

"Awesome! What does it feel to be dead?" Kiba asked. Tamaki's mouth curved into a frown, and kicked Kiba under the table. "Ow, what was that for?"

"Don't be so rude! That was such an insensitive question, you jerk!" Tamaki chastised him. "Rin clearly had a really bad time, and she doesn't need us to remind it to her!"

"While I agree that Kiba could have used a bit more tact in his question, his curiosity is not misplaced," Shino calmly interceded. "So far, Rin is the only person we know to come back from the dead."

"What about the Hokage Orochimaru revived with that forbidden jutsu?" Tamaki asked.

"They don't count, since not only were they zombies, but according to official reports, they had no knowledge of what happened to them or where did they go after death," Shino explained. "Knowing with exactitude what awaits us after death is something everybody sought to know."

"I'm afraid I have to disappoint you, but I don't remember anything after my death either," Rin admitted, then she smiled. "And while I appreciate your concern, you don't need to walk on eggshells around me. I already came to terms to what happened to me, and accepted my new situation."

"That's something good to hear, Rin-san," Shino praised.

"Okay, let's change the topic to something less grim, then," Tamaki leaned close to her, and smiled wickedly. "Given that you were Kakashi's teammate, can you tell us stuff about him when he was our age?"

Rin smiled back. "Oh, plenty! What do you wish to know?"

"Was Kakashi always late to the team meetings?" Kiba asked.

Everybody eagerly awaited for the answer.

"Actually... no," Rin said, to everybody's surprise. "He used to be pretty diligent back then. He was never late to a meeting, and often chastised those who did."

"Unbelievable. And what happened to make him change like that?" Tamaki asked.

Rin sighed, as her expression darkened. "Well... Obito happened." The mood immediately grew much somber when the female medicnin mentioned her fallen teammate turned Akatsuki. "Did Kakashi... tell you about him?"

"No, he didn't," Shino replied. "And given the circumstances, I find understandable that he prefers not to reminisce of events regarding him."

"Yeah, sorry for unintentionally bringing that up," Tamaki apologized.

"No, it's okay. I think if I talk about it with somebody... I think I'll have an easier time getting over it," Rin replied.

"Even if talking about a traumatic event is indeed good for the psyche, do not feel pressured to do so if you don't feel ready," Shino continued.

"Yeah, what he said. You owe us nothing," Kiba added.

"No, no. I want to do this. I need to do this," Rin said once again.

"You see, Kakashi back then was nothing like you described. He was always punctual, took his missions very seriously, followed the ninja code to the letter, and believed the mission was more important than your teammates."

Needless to say, the Animal Squad was taken aback by such revelation.

"Kakashi? The same 'those who abandon their teammates are trash' Kakashi?" Kiba asked in disbelief.

Rin nodded. "Actually, that line wasn't from Kakashi, but from Obito. Obito used to believe that your teammates were more important than the mission. You see, Kakashi's father, Sakumo Hatake, forsook a mission to save his teammates. When the repercussions of such actions were felt, everybody shunned and ostracized Sakumo for his decision, including the very same people he saved. It was so bad, he was eventually driven to suicide. That's what made Kakashi adopt such a mindset regarding missions."

"What happened then?" Kiba asked.

"During a mission in the Third War, I was captured by enemy forces. Kakashi wanted to complete the mission, while Obito wanted to save me. Eventually, Obito went to save me on his own, but was outnumbered and outmatched. He would have died there if Kakashi didn't appear to save both of us. However, we weren't safe. The enemy made the cave we were in to collapse. Kakashi tripped and fell, and he would have been crushed by an avalanche if Obito didn't push him out of the way, and took his place," Rin explained.

A somber silence followed. Given their sensei's usually carefree attitude, they would have imagined that Kakashi had such a harsh background. They had to admit that the silver haired Jonin was really good at masking his emotions.

"Before the cave collapsed completely, Obito had one last request: to have his left eye removed and implanted on Kakashi, who lost his own left eye on the mission. After that, Obito died. Or we thought he did," Rin finished her tale.

"So that's how Kakashi got his Sharingan," Tamaki commented.

"Yes. Obito's death affected him deeply. He believed it was his fault that he died to begin with, even if he really didn't. But given that he's part of a terrorist organization now... well, I don't think that will cheer him up much," Rin commented.

"I'm sure your and your sensei's death also affected him as well," Shino deduced.

"How can a man keep going after so many loved ones die like that?" Kiba asked bitterly, as his mind started to think in his loved ones.

"When this mission is over, I'm going to tell my mom and sister how much I love them."

"Careful Kiba. People who say that in stories usually end up dead," Tamaki pointed out.

"Yeah, but this isn't a story, this is real life," Kiba retorted, crossing his arms.

"You know... I never imagined Kakashi being a sensei," Rin interceded, changing the topic.

"Why do you say that?" Tamaki asked.

"Well, from how he used to be when we were teens... I don't think he'd had the patience to teach. Kakashi is a genius who pretty much got everything right the first try. He might have had exceedingly high expectations of his students, and would have tossed the towel in frustration when he saw that wasn't the case," Rin told them.

"Well, you're not that far off," Kiba admitted.

"We were the first team Kakashi-sensei passed," Shino began. "We don't know the exact number, but a few other teams were assigned to Kakashi-sensei before us. He tested them, found them unworthy, and sent them back to the academy."

"That's it, until we came and passed that test!" Kiba proudly boasted. Akamaru happily barked in agreement.

"That sounds more like it. You three must be really skilled if you managed to pass a test from Kakashi," Rin praised them.

"Actually, I don't think you're following. You see, Kakashi didn't want to test our skill or strength, but our teamwork," Tamaki clarified.

Rin raised an eyebrow, and a memory came to her mind. "Wait, are you talking about the Bell Test?"

"Yea! You know it already?" Kiba asked.

Rin nodded. "Minato-sensei made us take that test as well."

"And how well did you do? I'm sure you passed since you became their students, but was it difficult?" Tamaki asked.

"Did the Fourth had to tie somebody to a log?" Kiba asked as well, bitterly remembered that moment.

"Actually... Kakashi got the two bells in less than five minutes," Rin stated.

A deafening silence ensued as the Animal Squad processed Rin's words. They knew Kakashi was one of the strongest ninja Konoha had at the moment, but to do something like that...

"Wow. And you said your sensei was the Fourth?" Kiba asked in disbelief, his eyes open wide.

Rin giggled a bit. "Minato-sensei said that he was going to go easy on us since we were newbies. Well, Obito and I were, Kakashi had been a ninja for some years already. Guess he didn't think Kakashi could be so good."

"Thank goodness Kakashi doesn't expect that level of skill from us," Tamaki said in relief, not realizing how lucky she was. "Not that we don't give our all."

"Guess he knows he's the exception rather than the rule," Rin replied. "Anyway, now that I told you all this, I hoped it help you understand Kakashi a bit better."

"It was. I could never imagine how much suffering that man went through. Now that we're armed with this knowledge, we can give him proper support of any kind," Shino concluded, as he adjusted his shades.

"Good, because he's going to need it," Rin agreed. "I believe that our return, and especially what happened to Obito broke him even further."

"Anyway, enough to talk about Kakashi-sensei. Tell us about you!" Tamaki interceded, changing the topic.

"Me? Well... there's not that much to say. What do you want to know?" the medic-nin asked.

"For starters, what have you been doing since you're back among the living. I don't think we've ever seen you once," Kiba pointed out.

"I've been working at the hospital. I wanted a quiet and calm job away from everything so I could think about all what happened to me after my death and resurrection, and get adjusted to this new era. A lot can change in fourteen years," Rin replied.

"Understandable. And what made you change your mind? Given that you're in a mission to a civil war," Shino asked.

Rin took a deep breath, and sighed. "Because Kirigakure had a big role in my death, and I need to face that."

...

War Room

Mei, her inner circle, and most of Konoha Jonin were standing around a large rectangular table with an equally large map of the Land of Water on top of it. The map had several figurines that represented several points of interests. Kirigakure was the biggest. There was also a boat figure that symbolized the ship they were all on.

"Alright, let's get down to business," Mei began. "During these past months, the rebellion have been preparing to invade Kirigakure and end this civil war already. The invasion should have happened already, but a certain event became a major setback to my plans.

"Ao, my spymaster and head of my intelligence network, was captured during a skirmish. Ao knows almost everything about the rebellion. Our future plans, which of our bases are decoys and which are the real ones, the location of our secret hideouts... everything. As you can probably imagine, the invasion can't happen as long as Ao is in the hands of the enemy," Mei concluded her explanation. "Unfortunately, I don't have enough forces to liberate Ao, so that's the main reason for coming to Konoha for help."

"So, Ao defected to the rebellion? Interesting," Shisui thought. He had clashed with Ao quite a few times during several skirmishes following the Third War, and wondered if he would have to fight him again.

"If you don't have enough troops to assault a mere prison, what hope do you have to take over a major village?" Asuma asked. Other Jonin started to murmur, many of them apparently agreeing with Asuma.

Mei, however, smiled at the question. "Most of my forces are spread around the Land of Water, hidden, keeping on tasks vital for the rebellion in secret. If I make them come out of the shadows and join me this soon, they won't be able to work undercover again. If I do that, it has to be when we invade Kirigakure, not earlier. Besides, that way Yagura thinks that our forces are much smaller than they really are."

Her explanation seemed to satisfy the Jonin's doubts about Mei's chances in the war. The rebel leader continued.

"This is the Crimson Citadel," Mei used a pointer to refer to a castle figurine on a small island. "During the Second War it was a military outpost, but it was later converted into a prison. My spies report that Ao has been taken there for interrogation. We need to liberate him, as well as the rest of the prisoner rebels there, as soon as possible."

"How do you know Ao didn't spill the beans already?" Kakashi asked.

"Like most spies and intelligence gatherers, Ao has been trained to withstand the worst forms of torture. It will take a lot of time to break him, if they break him at all," Mei replied. She clearly had a lot of faith in that man's ability to remain silent. "And even if they have mind reading jutsu, they won't work since there are protective seals carved into his head."

"So, what's the plan?" Kurenai asked.

"The Crimson Citadel only has one entrance: a dock that's heavily guarded, and only opens its doors whenever a ship carrying supplies or prisoners enters or leaves the place. Unfortunately, no such ship is scheduled to arrive in a long time, so if we try to pretend we are going to bring prisoners or supplies into the prison, we'll raise suspicions, and our plan will be foiled," Mei told them.

"How are we going to enter, then?" a Konoha Jonin asked.

Mei smiled once again. "That's when you guys enter. One of the reasons I contacted Konoha, and hired several specific ninja, is because they have summoning contracts of flying animals. We'll employ some of those animals to infiltrate a small team whose task will be to open the main gate. Once the mission is a success, the rest of the forces will invade the prison on small but fast boats, kill the guards, and release the prisoners.

"Lastly, it's imperative that news of the prison break does not reach Kirigakure. If Yagura realizes what happened, he will be waiting for us. Any questions?" Mei asked, scanning the small crowd. Upon seeing no raised hand, Mei smiled once again. "Good. You're dismissed. Now we'll decide which ninja will form part of the infiltration team. For security's reasons, we'll use the standard four man squad. Anything bigger would draw too much attention. You'll receive further information shortly."

With the briefing concluded, everybody left the war room, and prepared for the incoming battle.

...

Like with the other ship, Sakura would have loved to go to the dock and admire the vast oceanic sight, but there were two major reasons stopping them from doing that. The first one was the constant veil of mist that followed the ship everywhere, making sightseeing impossible. And the second was that dock access was heavily restricted for security reasons, forcing the pink haired kunoichi -and nearly every Konoha ninja- to remain indoors.

Fortunately, the ship had quite a few living rooms made for a comfortable stay. Going to one of them reserved for Konoha ninja, Sakura saw Ino in the one she entered, sitting on one of the cushioned benches.

"Ino!" Sakura called her blond friend as she walked towards her.

"Oh, hey," Ino replied. "What's up?"

"Nothing. I heard we're going onto our first mission soon, and decided it would be good to rest and relax a bit, in order to be at one hundred percent," Sakura replied, as she took a seat next to Ino.

"You read my mind," Ino replied. "Anyway, I've been meaning to ask you something."

"Shoot."

"Why did you punch that guy into the sea? What did he do? Did he insult you or something?" Ino asked.

"You can say that. It was literally the first thing he did and, well... even with my flawless lady-like behavior, something like that can bring out the worst of me."

Ino chuckled. "You don't have to tell me. Anyway, what made you approach him in the first place?"

"I wasn't that interested, but Sasuke-kun was suspicious of him. He has our age, yet we never saw him in the Academy nor the Chunin Exams. We did some research, and found that he started his ninja career as an ANBU."

"As an ANBU?" Ino parroted, raising a visible eyebrow. "I thought that you had to be at least a Chunin to be admitted there?"

"My thoughts exactly. But if he's truly an ANBU, I'm afraid I won't be able to get anything out of him by simply asking, or tricking into giving me the answers I want, is not going to work," Sakura complained as she slumped a bit.

"I hope you don't expect me to probe his mind, do you?" a very wary Ino asked.

"I would never dream asking you that unless it was a life or death situation," Sakura replied, but Ino remained tense. "And no, this is not the case."

Ino finally relaxed. "Good. But you know, you got me curious. I'll see if I can talk to this guy, just to see if he's as bad as you describe him."

"He's even worse, but you don't have to take my word for it," Sakura replied with a shrug.

"Huh? Sorry for intruding, but who are you talking about?" a new voice said, making Sakura and Ino to turn at the newcomer, and saw Hinata walking towards them.

"Oh, hey, Hinata. Just some guy who got on Sakura's nerves, and she and Sasuke think he's up to no good," Ino quickly summarized.

"I see," Hinata replied as she not so much took a seat as she let herself fall on the bench, letting out a tired moan.

"You look exhausted. Were you training?" Sakura asked.

Hinata nodded. "Mmhmm. I don't know where Naruto-kun gets so much energy. Well, I do, but you know what I mean. Says he wants get promoted to Jonin as soon as possible."

"Let's hope he doesn't get exhausted too much. I heard we're going to launch our first attack on Kiri forces in less than a day, and we're going to need him," Ino said, as she crossed her arms over her chest.

"Trust me, someone who is able to exhaust Naruto has not been born yet," Hinata replied, with a tired smile. "He'll be fine."

"Sasuke-kun is the same. He wants to do nothing but train and get stronger as soon as he can. I don't know why he needs to be so much power so soon," Sakura added, raising her arms in frustration. "He'd be more happy if he learned to relax."

"Well, Sasuke-san lost many loved ones..." Hinata looked at Ino warily. "... that night."

"It's okay, Hinata, you can say it," Ino replied. "It's not like I'm going to have a meltdown if you mentioned that day by its name. What kind of kunoichi I would be if I had such a fragile psyche?"

"Anyway, due to what happened to the Uchiha back then, maybe he wants to get stronger to make sure he can save the loved ones he still has, should something happen to them," Hinata explained. "In a way, I feel the same. I know that I couldn't have done anything to save my father, but I want to become stronger, even if it takes me a lot of time, so I can protect my loved ones."

"That's... a very good reason," Sakura replied, then she looked down at her lap. "Guess I was among the lucky ones who didn't lose anybody important that night."

"Your parents are civilians, so of course nobody would want to target them," Ino pointed out.

"You know... I just realized that we're going to do with Kiri what the Uchiha tried to do with Konoha," Hinata realized.

Sakura and Ino stared at her in mild shock, realizing that there was some truth to her words. This made them feel a bit uneasy.

"But then again, it's not the same. The Mizukage's such a bloodthirsty tyrant, it inspired half the ninjas of Kiri to rise against him. The Uchiha wanted to take over due having an imaginary chip on their shoulder. We're still the good guys, and we're helping the right side win the war," Sakura argued.

"And what if we were hired by the Mizukage to help him crush the rebellion?" Ino pointed out.

Sakura was taken aback by such a harsh question, but nonetheless managed to come up with what she believed was a satisfying response.

"Then I'm sure Hokage-sama would have turned their request down, no matter how much he was willing to pay us. Shizune-sensei said that, even if we're professionals and not a charity, Konoha and its ninja are devoted to make the world a better place, and I don't know how helping Yagura keep the hat would align with that," Sakura replied. "Besides, if Hokage-sama wanted to gain favor with the Mizukage, he could have deported Zabuza-san and Haku-san back to the Land of Water, but he didn't do that."

"That's a fair point," Hinata conceded. "After all, the First Hokage created the village system as a way to pave for an era of peace."

"And now we're helping spread that peace even further by helping the right side of this conflict to end a years long civil war!" Sakura enthusiastically declared.

"Let's hope you're right. I'd hate to see that, after we help them win, the rebels turn out to be worse than Yagura ever was," Ino mentioned.

"You're actually getting ahead of yourself. We didn't help the rebels win yet," Hinata pointed out.

Sakura smirked at her. "'Yet' being the key word here."

...

Meanwhile, in one of the ship's private training areas, Zabuza was in a sparring match against Ameyuri and Chojuro, the two of them against him. So far, the older swordsman was doing a good job keeping them at bay, and making it look as if fighting his two younger colleagues was a boring task.

Ameyuri charged forward, her swords crackling with electricity, and thrust them towards Zabuza, who used his much larger blade to block them, then pushing back, using his superior strength to knock the redheaded swordswoman on her back.

"Somebody should have told you that direct confrontation with an enemy that surpasses you in both height and muscle is a bad idea, little girl," Zabuza sneered. Ameyuri snarled, baring her sharp teeth.

While Zabuza was taunting Ameyuri, Chojuro sneaked from behind, and tried to slash Zabuza with his Hiraamekarei, but the moment the blade descended, Zabuza casually sidestepped, and used Chojuro's momentum against him by tripping him on his legs, making him tumble on top of the still fallen Ameyuri.

"And you, I'll give you credit for sneaking on me from behind like that. However, your silent killing would be far more effective if you didn't breathe so hard," Zabuza pointed out, as he rested his Executioner's Blade on his shoulders.

"Get away from me, four eyes!" Ameyuri snarled as she pushed Chojuro away.

"S-Sorry!" the bespectacled swordsman stammered.

Ignoring Chojuro, Ameyuri's eyes focused on Zabuza once again.

"Let's see how well you like this!" Ameyuri crossed her swords in front of her face in an X, producing a white electric flash.

"Thundersword Ninja Art: Eye of the Storm!"

Ameyuri spread her arms wide, and started to spin at a rapid speed, turning herself into an electric sharp twister, which quickly moved towards Zabuza.

"I kill dozens of enemies with this technique alone! Let's see how well you fare against it, 'demon'!" Ameyuri boasted.

Zabuza wasn't impressed. The moment Ameyuri got close to him and was about to tear him to shreds, Zabuza instantly vanished and reappeared behind the spinning kunochi. The taller ninja then kicked her in the back of the knees, sending Ameyuri back to the floor.

"AUGH!" she cried, unwillingly dropping her swords.

"Let me guess, those enemies were all cluttered and with little space to move, am I right?" Zabuza asked. "As you can see, that move is pretty much useless in a battle with few people and plenty of space to move. Not to mention that you could possibly harm your allies with that as well."

Chojuro, meanwhile, remained locked in place, watching Zabuza dissing Ameyuri once again.

"I always thought Ameyuri-san was so strong, yet Zabuza-sempai is toying with her like that... what chance do I have... no! I can't think like that! Mei-sama says that I can be strong, and I'll show her faith in me is not misplaced!" Chojuro thought, as he raised Hiraamekarei above his head, and charged once again, letting out a battle cry.
"AAAAAAAAAAAAHHHHHH!"

Zabuza turned around, and looked at the now emboldened Chojuro unamused. Making display of his uncanny speed, Zabuza vanished and reappeared centimeters away from the blue haired swordsman, who let out a shocked yelp.

Zabuza grabbed Chojuro by the neck, and raised him in the air, making him drop the Hiramekarei, falling to the ground with a loud clang. Zabuza then proceeded to slam Chojuro against the ground on his back.

"Owwwww... !" Chojuro cried in pain.

"If you two are the best Mei has to offer, then the future of the Seven Swordsmen, as well as the rebellion, is pretty bleak," Zabuza chided, shaking his head in disappointment.

"Don't flaunt yourself as all that! We all saw how Mei-sama wiped the floor with you back in Konoha!" Ameyuri fired back.

Zabuza smirked, walked towards Ameyuri, and crouched before her in order to look at her in the eyes. "Yet here I am, wiping the floor with you two. What does that say about you?"

Ameyuri couldn't say anything but angrily snarl at her fellow swordsman.

"Come on, you two, we're not done yet! I might not have much time, but I'll make sure to whip you up into shape by the time we have to invade the village!" Zabuza shouted, slamming his sword into the ground for added emphasis.

Watching the spar from above, on a special box, were four people. One of them was Mei, the rebel leader, admiring her newest investment. The remaining three were three of her ninja, two men and a woman.

The first one was rather young, the same age as those who belonged to the group called "Konoha 15". He had shoulder length white hair with a light blue tint at the tips, purple eyes, and a pointy tooth sticking out of his mouth. He was wearing a black sleeveless shirt with blue stripped wrist warmers and leg warmers.

Next to him was a rather tall and fit girl, with long dark blue hair that fell down her back, with a long bang covering half her face. Her eyes, or at least her only visible eye, was also dark blue. Like the young man besides her, she was wearing the same type of attire, only with a Chunin flak jacket over it.

Behind the two of them was an even taller man of unknown characteristics, given that his whole body was covered by a black hooded cloak, and his face was obscured by a Kirigakure ANBU mask.

"So, what do you think?" Mei asked the others.

The white haired boy showed a toothy grin. "I did hear a lot about Zabuza-sempai, but seeing him in action is even better."

"Of course you'd think that, Suigetsu," the woman replied, crossed his arms over her chest. "Let's hope Zabuza-sempai is just as good in the battlefield."

"You seem to doubt him, Miyako," Suigetsu pointed out.

"Zabuza-sempai already tried to depose the Mizukage once, and his plan was an utter failure. I think we'd be better off without him," Miyako insisted.

"Zabuza-chan is impulsive, yes, but also skilled. And his failure to depose the Mizukage didn't detract from his reputation, far from it," Mei pointed out. "Just for that, it's more than worth it to have him here. Besides the obvious fact that he has one of the seven swords."

"What about you, Kumori? What do you think?" Suigetsu asked the masked man, who merely moved his head to acknowledge the question, but remained silent. Suigetsu frowned. "You know, you may think that being all silent and mysterious makes you cool, but I know for a fact that everybody thinks you're a pretentious asshole."

"Enough chitchat, I think it's about time for Zabuza-chan to meet you, given that you'll be under his command," Mei stated, as she jumped from the box, followed by the other three.

The moment the foursome landed, Zabuza turned around, and glanced at them inquisitively. Mei merely smiled, and started clapping.

"Impressive, Zabuza-chan. I knew I did the right choice by bringing you with us," Mei earnestly said.

Zabuza growled irritatingly. "Could you stop calling me Zabuza-CHAN!?"

"Of course not, Zabuza-chan," Mei replied, keeping that beautiful but unbelievably smug smile. "Anyway, now that you've already met Ameyuri and Chojuro, and tested their capabilities, I thought that maybe you should meet the rest of the next generation of the Seven Swordsmen. This handsome young man here is Suigetsu Hozuki."

"Glad to meet you, Zabuza-sempai. I've always been a great admirer of your work, and hope that one day I can equate your body count" Suigetsu greeted him with one of his unnerving smiles.

"Hozuki? Are you related to Mangetsu?" Zabuza asked.

"Mangetsu was my brother. Most of our clan, Mangetsu included, was killed because we sided with Mei-sama. I'm all what's left," Suigetsu replied, though he didn't sound especially hurt or mournful.

"If you're his brother, how is that you didn't inherit the Hiraekarei?" Zabuza asked. "Weren't you his apprentice?"

"No. Chojuro was Mangetsu's apprentice. Due his untimely demise, Chojuro's training is incomplete. Hopefully, you'll put a remedy to that," Mei interceded. "Suigetsu was training to become a Swordsman one day, but he wasn't assigned a sensei yet."

"And you want me to train all these brats?" Zabuza asked, almost groaning.

"By virtue of being the only Swordsman who completed his training, yes," Mei replied with a shrug. "Anyway, this lovely young woman here is Miyako Kiui."

"Mei-sama has faith in your abilities despite your track record, so guess that I'll follow your orders," Miyako replied, not too thrilled to meet Zabuza.

"And lastly, this man over here is Kumori Nashi," Mei said, pointing at the masked man.

Kumori didn't say anything, just nodded.

"A talkative one, huh?" Zabuza snarked. "I like those the most. So, where are the remaining two?"

Mei looked confused. "Which remaining two?"

"You know, for both Samehada and my sword. I'm sure you had a backup plan in case you weren't able to get me back into the fold," Zabuza said.

"Oh, I was pretty sure I could get you back 'into the fold'. I have a lot of confidence in my diplomatic skills, so preparing a replacement for you wasn't necessary. As for Samehada... well, you know that sword is different from the others, since it's the sword who chooses its wielder, not the other way around. But I hope to have it back one day."

"You'll certainly need something better than what you have gathered here if you hope to kill Kisame one day. He wasn't Fuguki-sama's apprentice for nothing," Zabuza retorted.

Mei smiled once again. "Zabuza-chan, soon you'll see that what I've gathered here has way more to offer than you think."

...

Later that afternoon, all Konoha ninja were summoned to one of the ship's largest rooms, which was mostly devoid of all furniture, with the exception of a small platform. Mei Terumi and some of her closest allies were on top of it. The rebel leader took a step forward, and began talking.

"Are all of Konoha's ninja here? It looks to me nobody's missing," Mei stated, smiling once again. "Anyway, we've been talking with your commanding officers, and you're about to do your first mission working for us. Our first endeavor will be taking over the island prison named the Crimson Citadel.

"The plan is a simple one, but it has to be done as fast as efficiently as possible. Using the night's darkness as a cover, a team composed by four ninja will sneak into the prison from air. The infiltration team will proceed to disable the guards manning the dock gates, and open them. Once they're opened, the rest of our forces will board the prison, killing all the guards, and releasing all the war prisoners.

"One last thing: once the attack begins, they will try to send a message to the village warning them about what we're doing. Such thing can't happen, so keep your eyes open for possible birds or small boats trying to leave the prison.

"Your commanding officers know all the finer details of this operation, ask them to debrief you even further if you still have any doubts. Time is of essence, and we need to act as soon as possible. Meaning that the attack will take place this midnight."

Naturally, such announcement caused many of the Konoha ninja to murmur among themselves, some of them even wondering if they can get ready in such short notice, while the most veteran ninja told them that they've been training for such unexpected situations like this one. Thankfully, the whispers didn't last long.

"The infiltration mission will be lead by Ameyuri Ringo, one of the Seven Swordsmen of the Mist currently serving the rebellion," Mei motioned her arm, and the younger kunoichi took a step forward. "As for the rest of her squad... can those Chunin belonging to the Tactical Squad, I believe that was the name, take a step forward, please?"

Again, more murmurs ensued as Shikamaru, Ino and Choji left the crowd and came closer to the platform.

"You three? Good," Mei smiled. "Ameyuri will explain the finer details of your mission now. You could also try to get each other acquainted a bit better." Mei then turned at the rest of the crowd. "Several smaller ships should arrive soon. My men will organize you in several larger squads and tell you which ship you need to board.

"That's all. Good luck, and I hope all of us can make it back in one piece."

The short briefing finished, the crowd dissolved as the Konoha ninjas left the room and got ready for the incoming mission. Chojuro then walked towards Mei

"What do you think, Mei-sama? Do you think we can pull this off?" the young swordsman asked.

Mei turned at him, and smiled. "I have to think we can. But something tells me that I did the right thing by asking Konoha for help. I think we're in for an spectacle."

...

Land of Earth, Undisclosed Location

Enveloped in cloak of Tailed Beast Chakra, Han dashed towards Kakuzu at an almost lightning fast speed. Kakuzu then made three hand seals, and channeled chakra.

"Fire Release: Searing Migraine!"

However, it wasn't Kakuzu who fired the jutsu. A monstrous masked being made of a pulsating mass of threads and tendrils opened its mouth, breathing a massive firestorm forward. Han's speed was so great that he was unable to change course, and he was engulfed by the wave of fire. However, despite the great devastation caused by the attack, when the fire and smoke dispelled, Han didn't look any worse for the wear, and resumed his charge.

As Han got closer, he wound a fist back.

"Erupting Propulsion Fist!"

Steam started to come from his gauntlets' holes as Han delivered what it would be a devastating attack towards Kakuzu. However, the strange creature that used that fire jutsu appeared between Han and the Akatsuki, taking the brunt of the attack. Its mask shattered in contact, and the mass of tendrils and threads lost all form and shape, and fell to the ground.

"Damn, that's the second heart I lost to this guy," Kakuzu inwardly cursed. Besides his Fire Heart, he had also lost his Wind Heart. Now only Water, Lightning and his own Earth Heart remained.

"You're strong, I'll give you that," Han admitted. "That won't make me any more merciful towards you once this fight ends."

Hidan chose that moment to appear from behind and tried to slash the jinchuriki with his three bladed scythe. However, like it happened the previous three times, it harmlessly bounced on the Iwa Ninja's thick armor.

"You know Hidan, it'd be great if you could stop being so absurdly useless," Kakuzu groaned.

"Oh shut your mouth! It's not my fault! Who the fuck wears an armor this heavy nowadays?" the Jashin priest complained. "This shithead has to be as old as you are, Kakuzu!"

"Erupting Strong Foot!"

Hidan found himself at the receiving end of what it could be easily considered the most brutal kick ever delivered.

"FUCK YOUUUUUUUUUUUuuuuuuuuuu... !" Hidan screamed as he was sent flying into the air, before he crashed against a large rock.

"That one isn't very strong, but for some reason he refuses to stay dead," Han observed. "Which wouldn't be so bad if he could remain silent for more than ten seconds."

"Trust me, if I knew a way to kill him, it would be long since that man drew its last breath," a resigned Kakuzu said. "Then again, you're my current target."

Kakuzu made a hand seal, and his two remaining monsters attacked Han. The masked monsters opened their mouths, releasing a stream of water and a bolt of lightning, respectively. This forced Han to fall back, as he made several hand seals.

"Boil Release: Heat Cutter!"

Han created a long blade of pressurized steam, and threw it forward like a javelin. The monsters jumped aside, but that's what Han expected. His true target was Kakuzu, since he knew that if he was able to take him down, then those strange beasts would go down with him.

But when the monsters moved aside, Kakuzu was nowhere to be seen.

"Where did he-?"

"Earth Release: Earth Spear!"

Han turned around to see Kakuzu in front of him, his fist, now blackened, wound back. He wasn't fast enough to dodge it, and much to his shock, the punch packed enough force to crack his armor. Not letting his enemy time to breathe, Kakuzu then delivered Han a kick to his face. Han, however, managed to grab Kakuzu's foot before the attack could connect.

"I'm baaaaaaaaaaaaaack!" Hidan shouted as he landed near the two, and delivered a swipe of his scythe to the armor's cracked zone.

This time, the armor gave in, and Hidan's scythe managed to slash Han's flesh. The jinchuriki disengaged Kakuzu, and jumped backwards a few time, as he clutched his wound on one hand.

"Sorry, kid, but you've already lost," Kakuzu stated.

Han couldn't help but chuckle. "You made me bleed once, and you think you already won? You guys are sure confident."

"Trust me, that's all what we need," Hidan said as he licked the blood of his scythe.

The Janshin cultist then transformed. His skin turned black, as white, bone-like patterns appeared across it, giving him an appearance similar to the other cultists Han fought before. Except this time, it was obvious it wasn't body paint. Hidan then cut his hand, and used his own blood to draw around him a circle with a circumscribed triangle.

"Kakuzu, would you kindly...?" Hidan asked, almost in a submissive tone.

Wordlessly, Kakuzu's hand clutched Hidan's throat, and started to strangle his partner, much to Han's confusion.

Han then noticed that something was very wrong. He started to feel as if somebody was strangling him as well. Han's hands instinctively flew towards his neck in a vain attempt to break free from the strangling, but he was unable to do anything. He struggled as the lack of oxygen started to take its toll.

"Wait a minute... his jutsu! Whatever happens to him, it happens to me too! I have to stop them!" Han realized at last.

But it was too late, and before the jinchuriki could do anything, his entire world turned into darkness...

Author's Note: So yeah, goodbye, Han. Sorry if you were expecting him to have a bigger role in this story. And the thing is, I actually added the parts with Han pretty much right before I sent the chapter to betaread, since Han was going to be caught offscreen. There are two reasons for this:

-The first one, some reviewers asked for the jinchuriki who weren't going to appear in the story, that there was at least an implication that they gave the Akatsuki a big fight before they went down.

-The second one was a rant from DryBonesKing, an author from one of my favorite Naruto fanfics, "True Potential", who made a plea for other authors to use the jinchuriki other than Naruto, Gaara and B a bit more.

So that's why, even if some jinchuriki won't play big roles in the story, they will at least be shown giving their would be captors some hell before they go down, so I hoped you enjoyed Han's fight. Conversely, I will try to give some jinchuriki a bigger role in the story than I had originally planned. Then again, I won't promise anything, since this story is getting way too crowded as it is now.

An added benefit is that it allows me to include some action in the slower chapters like this one. But hey, fleshing out relationships is important too! This chapter has Naru/Hina, Neji/Karin and a little Sasu/Saku, Rin meeting Kakashi's team and they learning more about their sensei, more Naruto/Karin family moments, and Hinata, Sakura and Ino having some friendly chat. I'm really proud how many interactions and relationships I managed to put into this chapter.

Once again, thanks to gio08 for betareading this chapter.

Anyway, the next two chapters will be far more action packed as the rebellion assaults the Crimson Citadel. In the meantime, don't forget to review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Crimson Citadel, Part I

Author's Notes: Hmmm... the latest chapter got much less reviews than usual. Wonder if it was because people thought it wasn't up to par, or because the website was acting up and notifications didn't work properly. Here I'm hoping is the latter. Anyway, hope this chapter is far better received then. Enjoy:

Chapter 45:

The Crimson Citadel, Part I

or

Mission: Maybe Possible

...

Midnight came sooner than expected, and everybody was ready for the attack. But first, the infiltration team needed to do its job.

Through the dark sky of the night, two large animals flew above the sea. They would have been seen if there was a moon, but thankfully, it was in its waxing crescent phase, so there was little natural light that could betray the infiltration team's presence. That's why it was so important for the attack to be carried out as soon as possible.

The two animals in question were a giant hawk, and an equally large beetle. Riding the bird was Sasuke Uchiha, its summoner, and he was carrying Ameyuri and Shikamaru on its back as well. Shino was the one riding the giant beetle, and behind him were Ino and Choji. All six of them quickly saw the Crimson Citadel.

The prison in question was a rather large military base that encompassed nearly the whole island. It was surrounded by a rather tall and thick wall, with only a single entrance in the dock. Many ninja patrolled the walls, and multiple searchlights scanned the area with powerful beams of light. However, they only scanned the surrounding water, and paid no attention to the sky. It was obvious why Mei had chosen an aerial drop.

"Fly closer to the southeastern wall. We'll land there," Ameyuri instructed Sasuke.

"The gates are east of the island. Don't you want me to drop you closer to the dock?" Sasuke asked.

Ameyuri shook her head. "There are far too many searchlights there, and the risk of being seen is too big."

"Alright then," Sasuke agreed.

The two flying beasts headed towards the area Ameyuri instructed, and as expected, it was the safest zone to land.

"Alright, let's go!" Ameyuri said as she jumped from the bird.

Shikamaru softly groaned, and followed her. Ino and Choji joined them a couple seconds later. With their job done, Sasuke and Shino returned to the rebel fleet located not far away from then.

The four infiltrators, upon landing, immediately hid in a dark alley between two small buildings.

"Everyone accounted for? Alright then, listen up. See those two towers at each side of the dock? According to our intelligence, that's where the gate switches are. We will also place a bunch of explosive notes on the towers and some sections of the walls for additional damage. Both of them need to be activated at the same time in order to open the gates, so we need to split up in two groups of two. Choji, you'll come with me. Shikamaru, Ino, you'll be the second team," Ameyuri stated.

"Actually," Shikamaru began. "I believe that you should go with either me or Ino, and have the other go with Choji."

The redheaded woman raised an eyebrow. "And you say that because...?"

"Choji's abilities are more combat focused, as are yours. On the other hand, Ino and I fill a supporting role better. That's why the ideal teams should have one combat specialist and one support," Shikamaru reasoned.

Ameyuri fixed a hard stare on the Nara genius. "I don't like being contradicted, pineapple head. On the other hand, you make a good point, and given that it's your team, I'll take your word. Blondie, you come with me, and help me take the northern tower. You two can go together, and take the southern one."

"What do we do with the guards? Should we kill them?" Choji asked.

"Not yet. If those manning the searchlights don't see any guards patrolling the wall, they'll get suspicious. Try to avoid confrontation until you're close to the towers. And even then, try not to cause a ruckus," Ameyuri advised. Then, she shot them an unnerving smile. "But once the gates open, the fun will begin and you can go all out."

Choji and Shikamaru laughed a bit awkwardly.

"Can I go with Choji instead?" Ino uneasily pleaded.

"Nope! Enough chitchat, we can't waste anymore time, go, go, go!"

The group of four split in half. With Ameyuri and Ino taking the northern tower, and Shikamaru and Choji taking the southern one.

...

Now on their own, Shikamaru and Choji proceeded to cover the place in explosive tags. So far, Shikamaru watched the surroundings, while Choji placed the explosive notes. While doing so, Shikamaru also learned quite a few things from the guards and the searchlights.

One, the guards were in groups of two or three. Some of the groups of three were made of Chunin, while some Jonin made half of the groups of two. The groups of three patrolled the longest sections of the wall, while the groups of two the shortest. Also, he noticed that the searchlights illuminated the area not currently being patrolled.

"Not to blind the patrollers, or to keep the least amount of area unwatched? Probably both," Shikamaru deduced.

"Alright, explosives placed here, let's move towards the next one!" Choji whispered, then he made a hand seal. "Reverse Multi Size Jutsu!"

Choji shrank to the size of a marble, allowing Shikamaru to pick him up and place him inside one of his flak jacket's pockets. Just as he did, Shikamaru heard a patrol coming his way. The lazy Nara rushed to hide behind a couple of wooden crates, which were big enough to barely cover his lithe body.

"Thank goodness for this jutsu. Otherwise, trying to hide somebody as big as Choji would have been nearly impossible," Shikamaru thought in relief, as he watched the guards passing by. There were two, and one of them was a Jonin.

Choji brought up the idea of using Transformation to turn into a pair of generic Mist ninja and pass as guards, but while the idea was good, Shikamaru turned it down, since there was a chance that they were asked something, and unable to respond, their disguise would become apparent. No, they couldn't be seen.

Once the guards were far enough, Shikamaru continued advancing, not as fast as he'd wish if he wanted to remain hidden. The fact that a patrol had just passed meant that he had some time before a searchlight would illuminate the area. However, upon reaching a certain point, Shikamaru found an obstacle impossible to surpass.

Two searchlights cast two beams of lights over the wall at specific intervals, in a way that it was impossible to avoid the light and thus being discovered.

"Troublesome lights," Shikamaru groaned.

"What's wrong?" Choji asked from his pocket.

"We're so damn close to the tower, but this section of the wall will be nearly impossible to watch due those searchlights. And we can't disable them without alerting our presence," Shikamaru explained his shrunken teammate.

"Hmmm... maybe we could use my size to our advantage? Even if the search lights illuminate me, at this size the guards from the towers will think I'm a rodent or something like that, if they see me to begin with," Choji explained.

"Not a bad idea, but at your size, it would take you forever to cross this section," Shikamaru pointed out. "Not to mention that a guard that saw you closely wouldn't mistake you for a small animal."

"Then what do we do?" Choji asked.

An idea started to form in Shikamaru's mind. "The fact that we haven't been found yet means that none of those guards are sensors."

"Sensors are rare. What about it?" Choji asked.

Shikamaru smirked in return. "Do you think that somebody will notice that one of the guards has a little stowaway inside their ninja pouch?"

"So it will be guards themselves who will bring me to the tower. Great!" Choji replied, smirking in return. "But how are you going to get into the tower then?"

"Don't worry, I'll think something," Shikamaru replied, as he took Choji from his pocket, "Okay, here comes a patrol, get ready!"

From his hiding spot, Shikamaru waited until the guards passed him. Then, silently, Shikamaru approached the unsuspecting Kiri ninja from behind, and let Choji latch onto the guard's ninja tool pouch on his back. The guard suddenly stopped. Shikamaru's heart skipped a beat before he returned to his hiding place.

"Dammit, did he notice me?" Shikamaru worriedly thought.

"Are you okay?" one of the guards asked the one carrying Choji.

"Well, I just noticed as if somebody was trying to pick my pouch," the guard in question replied.

"Please do not grab your pouch, please do not grab your pouch," Shikamaru mentally begged.

"But there's nobody here and my pouch doesn't feel any lighter, so guess it was just my imagination," the guard replied with a shrug, as he and his partners continued their patrol.

In the background, Shikamaru silently sighed in relief. When the guard passed in front of the tower, he saw something -presumably Choji- jumping out of the guard's pouch -and the guard once again complained about feeling something- and successfully infiltrated the tower.

"Okay, got an idea, it's a bit risky, but it's the best I have," Shikamaru thought.

Once the guards were out of sight, Shikamaru started to run as fast as possible while trying to remain silent. The searchlight's beam of light came dangerously close to him. The Nara then stopped, and made a hand seal.

"Transformation Jutsu!"

In a poof of smoke, Shikamaru turned into a pile of crates just as the searchlight illuminated him. Thankfully, it didn't raise any suspicions. Once the light passed, Shikamaru turned back to normal and rushed towards the tower, in order to rejoin Choji.

"Once they notice those crates are no longer there, or that they weren't there before, it will be too late," Shimamaru thought, mostly to try to relieve himself from the stress he was enduring.

"Shikamaru!" Choji whispered from inside the tower. He was still in the lower floor. "Good job!"

"We haven't finished yet. We need to disable those guards and open the gate," Shikamaru reminded Choji.

"Yeah, but that part shouldn't be hard. We no longer need to be stealthy, and we have the element of surprise," Choji replied. "So, you immobilize them, and I knock them out?"

Shikamaru smirked. "Sounds like a plan."

...

Meanwhile, to the north, the kunoichi proceeded as well with their side of the mission. However, their approach wasn't as subtle as Shikamaru and Choji.

"I'm sensing a patrol. Two ninja. Do you think you can take them out?" Ino asked.

Ameyuri smiled evilly, showing those scary sharp teeth. "Just watch," the redhead said as she unsheathed her trusty twin swords.

"Remember to leave one alive!" Ino reminded her.

"Don't sweat it," Ameyuri casually replied.

The Mist kunoichi silently walked behind the patrolling duo. In an instant, she grabbed one of them from behind, and slashed his throat open, preventing him from shouting. His partner reacted too late.

"What the? We're under-!" But before he could give the alarm, Ameyuri slammed the pommel of one her swords into the man's throat, rendering him mute. She then hit him in the bridge of his nose, knocking him on his back. She then proceeded to immobilize the man, who struggled against the rebel swordswoman.

"Come on, blondie, I can't keep him like this for long!" Ameyuri protested.

Ino rushed towards her, and placed her two hands on the man's head.

"Mind Yokel Jutsu!"

Suddenly, the man stopped struggling. Ameyuri tentatively released him. The man then stood up, and remained there, almost as inert as an inanimate object.

"What did you do to him?" Ameyuri asked, as she waved a hand in front of the hypnotized ninja, who didn't react.

"The Mind Yokel Jutsu pretty much turns an opponent into a puppet of mine. He won't do anything unless I order him to. I can also speak through him. Sadly, the effect isn't permanent. The stronger is the target, the shorter the jutsu will last," Ino replied. "I also have access to most of his memories, so if they interrogate us, there won't be any problem."

"That's some killer jutsu you have there, blondie. Not just for intelligence gathering, but you can also force somebody to commit suicide," Ameyuri praised.

Ino shook her head. "I do receive sympathetic damage from the jutsu. If my target is harmed when it's under my control, I do suffer the same harm. Lethal injuries mean I go down as well."

"Well, you can always force them to jump off a cliff, then undo the jutsu before they hit the ground. Easy and clean," Ameyuri suggested.

Ino crossed her arms, and frowned. "You do have a terrible mind, anyone ever tell you that? I'm afraid what I'd find if I scanned your mind."

Ameyuri merely shrugged, not affected by Ino's critics. "I like to think myself as being efficient at my job. Anyway, enough chit chat, time is of the essence."

Both of them made the same hand seal.

"Transformation jutsu!"

Ino transformed into the ninja Ameyuri just killed, while Ameyuri herself transformed into a random Kirigakure ninja.

"Okay, let's go," Ameyuri said.

The two disguised kunoichi and the mind controlled ninja walked towards the tower, trying not to look suspicious. So far, whenever they crossed another patrol, or a searchlight illuminated them, no alarms were raised, so their plan was working so far.

"These guys have red uniforms. I always thought that Kirigakure's clothes were blue?" Ino asked, while looking at the mind controlled guard's uniform.

"It was. To represent water and all that. Guess that it's red now to represent blood," Ameyuri replied with a shrug. "Well, it works to our advantage. That way, you Konoha guys won't mistake one of them for our own, or vice-versa."

They continued their walk in silence, though when no one was watching, they tried to hurry a bit, since Ino's mind control would end anytime soon. Eventually, they managed to reach the tower without much incident.

"Okay, I'm going to release the jutsu," Ino said, making a hand seal.

After undoing the mental link, the guard reacted as if he just woke up from a very strange dream.

"What? Where am I?" the guard asked, looking dizzy.

The answer came in the form of two blades piercing his gut, killing him in a couple seconds. After hiding the body, Ameyuri and Ino stormed the tower.

"Alright, stealth is no longer an issue, let's cut loose!" the redheaded kunoichi said as she rushed upstairs.

...

Back in the southern tower, Shikamaru and Choji had already disabled the few ninja inside the tower, and were waiting for Ino to contact them, since they had to open the door at the same time. Fortunately, they didn't have to wait much.

"Shikamaru, Choji, are you there?" they heard Ino's voice in their minds. "Ameyuri and I have taken over the northern tower, what's the situation?"

"Wow, that was fast, given that your tower was much farther away than ours," Shikamaru commented. "On our side, Choji and I also took over the tower as well, and we're waiting for your signal."

"In that case, let's open the dock gates so the mission can begin," Ino replied.

"Don't forget the fireworks," Choji asked. Both he and Shikamaru smirked evilly.

...

Not far away from there, but far away enough not to be seen by the searchlights, a fleet of transport boats awaited. The sea was thankfully calm, and silence filled the air, something that greatly benefitted the rebels. Unfortunately, the ansty troops aboard the boats weren't as calm, as expected from somebody who was about to storm a high security prison.

Of all the rebels, none was more restless than Mei Terumi. While she was trying her best to maintain a cool and collected facade, the rebel leader was stressed. She risked a lot on this operation, and if the Konoha ninja weren't up to par, then the rebellion would end there. Then again, she didn't get far by playing it safe.

Her mission was to liberate Kirigakure from Yagura and his reign of blood, not to simply survive as outlaws.

The redhead woman walked towards the prow, where one of her ninja was scouting the prison with a spyglass.

"Nothing yet?" Mei asked.

"I'm afraid not, Mei-sama," the scout replied, not taking his eyes from the target.

"I see. I thought we'd have news from them by now," Mei replied, sighing.

"The infiltration team just departed. It will take long to complete their mission. I think it's best not to get too impatient and-"

But the scout was interrupted by a chain of loud explosions that illuminated the night sky. Several of the watchtowers crumbled down, while at the same time the dock gates started to open.

Mei and her scout watched the display with their mouths agape.

"... incredible!" was the stunned guard's reply.

Mei, however, quickly recovered, and smiled in satisfaction. "I knew those Konoha ninja were good. Now is time to show them that we're just as good as well! Everybody, sail forward to the prison!"

A wave of cheers and shouts erupted in response to Mei's orders, and as she instructed, the fleet of boats quickly sailed towards the island prison. The chaos ensued made sure that the defenders would be unprepared to stop their arrival. Mei's boat was the first one to invade the prison, and the rebel leader herself was the first one to set foot on the island.

"Attack! We need to push them out of the dock!" Mei commanded as she rushed to meet the first wave of defenders. Her hands flew through hand seals as she was ready to spill the first blood. "Boil Release: Skilled Mist Jutsu!"

Mei released a cloud of burning mist from her mouth, instantly burning a trio of unfortunate defenders. The others, seeing what Mei was capable of, wisely fell back, and attacked from afar. Mei merely smirked.

"The end of the Blood Mist begins tonight!" she shouted.

...

Meanwhile, atop the highest floor of the main building inside one of the offices, was the warden. The warden had already seen and heard the rebels' attack, and was getting ready to respond. At that moment, the door of his office burst open, and a shaken ninja barged in.

"Warden-sama! Mei and her band of criminals are attacking the prison!" the ninja informed, panting heavily.

"I noticed. Now calm down. They caught us by surprise, but we'll show them what mistake they made coming here," the warden replied, as he picked his iconic weapon. "Try to hold them as much as you can, while I go and activate our special defense mode."

The guard grinned when he heard those three words. The rebel trash won't know what hit them.

...

Loyalist and rebel forces clashed for the control of the dock, trading blows, kunai, shuriken and elemental ninjutsu. However, it was clear that the rebels, with the surprise factor on their side and their -for the moment- superior numbers proved to be too hard to keep contained, as more and more rebel ninja came out of the still arriving boats.

"Don't let them pass!" cried a prison guard.

"They're too many!" replied the other.

"Don't dare to let them advance a single millimeter!" the first guard angrily replied.

But those failed to inspire the defenders to fight with more ferocity or determination, as the Rebel-Konoha alliance soon broke through the defenders' line, forcing them to fall back, and taking over the dock. Cheers soon ensued.

"Mei-sama, they're retreating to the innermost zones of the prison," Chojuro noted.

"Just as expected," she then turned towards her army. "This isn't over, far from it! Now we will be forced to split and fight on several fronts, but I believe we can do it. Fifth division, secure the dock and start setting up an infirmary! Second division, to the armory! Third and fourth divisions, to the barracks! Everybody else, with me to the prison blocks!"

...

Meanwhile, under the main building cluster, the warden reached his destination, a small, empty room, with a complex seal pattern drawn on the wall in front of the door. He placed his hand in the exact center of the pattern, and send a pulse of chakra. The seals started to glow with a blue light.

The warden smirked as chains of seals started to glow, leaving the room and spreading through the whole prison.

"Let's see how much you like these, you rebel scum," the warden said as he left the room, ready to meet those daring enough to storm his prison.

...

Befitting their role, Kurenai's Assault Squad was leading the charge against one of the points of interest Mei had deemed a priority, the barracks, where most of the ninja who guarded the prison lived and slept. Accompanying them was also Miyako, one of Mei's best swordfighters, and hopeful for the new Seven Swordsmen of the Mist. Taking over it would provide an additional foothold for the rebel forces. Of course, the loyalist Kiri ninja weren't going to surrender it without a fight, and a large contingent of them rushed to meet the rebel forces mid-way.

"So, the rebel scum has brought some Konoha trash in a pitiful attempt to bolster their strength? Pathetic!" a masked ANBU Kiri ninja sneered, as he unsheathed his katana. "Kill them all!"

One of them made a hand seal. "Water Release: Hidden in the Mist Jutsu!"

Soon, a thick mist formed, covering the battlefield. The rebels stuck to each other, expecting the enemy to resort to a silent attack.

"I'll take care of this!" Naruto said as he started to make hand seals. "Wing Release: Cyclone Vortex!"

The jinchuriki cast his hands forward one over the other, and a horizontal tornado shot from them, dispelling the mist.

"Keep the mist active!" the same ANBU as before ordered, and other two Kiri ninja proceeded to recast the mist jutsu. "Somebody kill that blond brat! He's a Wind Release user!"

Several Anbu leaped into the air, and unleashed a barrage of shuriken and kunai at the blond. Hinata appeared just in front of him.

"Naruto-kun, stay behind me!" Hinata asked, as she activated her Byakugan. "Protection of the Eight Trigrams: Sixty Four Palms!"

"Huh? That's new!" Naruto thought, not recognizing the jutsu's name.

Hinata started to move her palms forward in a pushing manner, so fast they became blurry, releasing thin streams of chakra from the palms of her hands, deflecting every one of the steel projectiles that were falling at them.

"Whoa, amazing jutsu, Hinata-hime!" Naruto praised.

"Thank you. I created it because I realized that, with the Heavenly Spin, I can only protect myself, and I can hurt my friends and allies if they're too close," Hinata explained.

"Good thinking, Hinata-san," Haku praised as well. He then started to make hand seals. "But you aren't the only one with something new to show. Ice Release: Ice Dragon Crystal Blast!"

Haku made the same hand motion Naruto did a few seconds ago, but instead of wind, he created a large, serpentine dragon made of ice, which flew at the cluster of enemy Kiri ninja, letting out a roar. The dragon then crashed headfirst into them, exploding into multiple sharp icicles, which seriously injured many of them.

"And that one has Ice Release? I thought that that bloodline was extinct!" an enemy ninja cried, as he removed an ice shard from his arm.

"Don't stay like that looking like idiots! Counterattack already!" the head ANBU ordered.

The loyalist Kiri ninja started to make hand seals of their own, as the rebels prepared for the incoming barrage of attacks.

"Water Release: Water Gun!"

"Water Release: Wild Water Wave!"

Several watery projectiles and waves flew at the rebel group, merging into a massive, chaotic water torrent.

"Counter that quickly!" Miyako ordered.

This time, it was Kurenai and Haku who took a step forward, as both started to make hand seals as fast as they could.

"Ice Release: Ice Barrier!"

"Earth Release: Earth Style Wall!"

A large wall of stone erected behind a smaller wall of ice. The wall of ice was broken by the incoming barrage, but the stone wall successfully absorbed them without breaking. At least for the time being.

"Thank Kami you're an Earth Release user," Miyako told Kurenai.
"Are there many more among you?"

"I'm afraid not," Kurenai replied. "Earth affinity is rare in Konoha. Most of them there have fire affinity."

"Yet none of your students are, as I can see," Miyako pointed out. She then heard something, and turned around, her katana in front of her. "Watch out, I think there are some ANBU hidden in the mist ready to strike us!"

"Hinata, can you see them?" Kurenai asked.

"I'm trying, but this mist is laced with chakra, and it's interfering with my Byakugan!" Hinata replied, as she forced her eyesight as much as possible. "But the chakra is more concentrated in many points around us, I think that's them!"

The whistling sound of several kunai flying at them filled the air, but so far, nobody reported being hit. Yet everybody had the feeling that they did miss on purpose. And, indeed, Kurenai managed to see one of the Kunai embedded into the ground, and the Jonin's eyes widened in shock.

"Explosive notes! Take cover!" the genjutsu mistress warned.

Everybody fell back as explosions surrounded the battlefield, sending rebel ninja flying into the air, and briefly dispelling the mist before it reformed itself again. Seconds later, it was followed by the sound of blades clashing, and people crying in pain.

"Dammit, they used the explosions to scatter us and kill us one by one!" Miyako cursed as she stood back on her feet.

Her acute hearing picked up somebody sneaking behind her. An ally wouldn't do that. Turning around, she raised her katana in return just in time to block a swipe from an enemy Kiri ninja. The two of them struggled a bit, until the blue haired woman forced him back with a kick to the gut. She gripped her katana tightly as she delivered her counterattack.

"Water Release: Razor Stream!"

She swung her blade while she moved at the enemy ninja, who jumped back further, avoiding the slash by mere centimeters. He smirked at her for missing, but soon he felt a sharp pain crossing his body, and a bleeding scar formed across his chest.

"H-How...?" the surprised ninja asked.

"A sharp, condensed blade of water cast through my sword, so thin it's invisible to the eye, but any less lethal," the blue haired girl explained, before slashing his throat. "Did knowing that make your death any better?"

Meanwhile, Kurenai's team was also fighting against a group formed of standard prison guards and masked ANBU that had them surrounded.

"Give up, you're outnumbered!" an ANBU taunted them.

Naruto smirked in return, as he made a hand seal. "You think so? Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

An army of orange and green clad blonds emerged from thin air, pushing the Kiri ninja backwards, as they engaged in combat, but not without retaliating with their kunai, shuriken and mostly water jutsu.

"Good one, Naruto! Everybody, keep pushing forward!" Kurenai shouted as she placed a couple enemy Kiri ninja under a genjutsu.

Then, that moment, several circular sealing patterns started to appear all around the prison. The patterns were black at first, but they started to glow with a blue light.

"What's this? A trap?" Haku asked, taking a step back.

"Probably some sort of defensive measure. Stay alert!" Kurenai warned.

Naruto, however, opened his eyes wide upon recognizing some of the seals.

"Wait a minute... those are Uzumaki seals!" Naruto indignantly pointed out.

The seals produced multiple smoke explosions, which dispelled quickly, revealing something the rebels weren't expecting. Across the battlefield, multiple metallic golems had appeared. While not as large as the one summoned by Jirobo, they still towered over any normal human. Like Jirobo's golem, they also had a stocky build, with massive upper body and shoulders, long arms ending in massive, gauntlet-like forearms, a small head with a v-shaped visor, a small but armored midsection, and short legs ended in massive boot like feet.

They were covered in red plating, with multiple sealing patterns craved around their bodies. Their heads had a small gray metal plate with Kirigakure's symbol, as if they were wearing forehead protectors.

"Ha! The Warden activated the Chakra War Golems! You're so screwed!" an enemy Kiri ninja laughed.

The two nearest golems identified Team Kurenai and Miyako as enemies, and stomped towards them.

"The seal on their bodies, they are also Uzumaki seals!" Naruto realized in shock, but also in anger.

"It seems that Kiri didn't returned as empty handed from the invasion of Uzushio as we thought," Kurenai bitterly said. "Anyway, we haven't been ordered to retreat, so keep fighting!"

"I plan to!" Naruto stated as he started to form a Rasengan in his hands. "I'm going to teach those assholes to use stolen knowledge from my clan!" Once complete, Naruto rushed towards the nearest golem, and smashed the orb of chakra against its chest. "Rasengan!"

The sphere of chakra exploded, but rather than shatter the golem to tiny pieces, some seals on the mechanical construct started to glow, and the golem began to absorb the chakra of Naruto's attack, much to the blonde's bewilderment.

"The hell!?" an indignant Naruto asked, and jumped back before the golem could smash him to pulp.

"The golem used the attack to empower itself!" Hinata noticed. "Don't use ninjutsu, or you'll make them stronger!"

"Then what are we supposed to do? Those things are made of metal!" Haku pointed out.

"We'll do what we can, Haku. Hinata, see if you can find a weak spot," Kurenai asked.

"Maybe we should attack the articulations. Those parts can't be armored if they have to move," Miyako deduced.

"Alright, I don't think we'll need it so soon, but time to ask for reinforcements, " Naruto bit his thumb, and made five hand seals, before slamming his hand into the ground. "Summoning Jutsu!"

Naruto summoned a huge, aquamarine toad with yellow eyes and a green back. His only piece of clothing was a orange sash around his stomach. He was also carrying two katanas to his back.

"Hi there, Naruto. What can I do for you?" the sword fighting toad asked.

"Gamahiro, I need you to help us deal with those annoying golems, as well as the Kiri ninjas dressed in red. Can I count on you?" Naruto asked.

"Sure!" the toad replied as he unsheathed his katanas. "Let the fun begin!"

With Naruto standing on his head, Gamahiro jumped into the battlefield, just in front of Naruto's friends and allies, creating a shockwave that knocked those near him back., and started to deliver multiple swipes at the prison defenders.

"Golems, fire upon that creature!" an ANBU ordered.

The few golems present cast one hand towards the large toad. A hole opened in their palms, releasing a stream of fire from it.

Gamahiro was forced to step back.

"Ouch! Ouch! It burns!" the large toad complained.

"Don't worry, I'll help you!" Naruto said as he started making hand seals. "Water Release: Water Gun!"

Naruto fired several water missiles at the golems from his mouth, reducing some of the fire.

Following Naruto's example, Miyako rushed forward while making hand seals. "Water Release: Water Formation Wall!"

The blue haired kunoichi expelled a huge wave of water from her mouth, countering a couple of the golem's flamethrowers. Other Kiri rebels followed her example, and did as well, saving the giant toad.

"Thank you!" Gamahiro replied, as he slashed a nearby golem in half with one swing of his massive katanas.

"The toad can clear the path for us! We must defend him from the enemy attacks!" Miyako ordered.

"Right away, ma'am!" several Kiri rebels replied.

...

Not far away from there, Kakashi's Animal Squad, alongside Rin, were fighting against a group of enemy Kiri ninja, with neither side pushing the other back.

"Aburame Secret Art: Swarm Spear!"

Shino extended his arm forward, and from his sleeves shot a spear made of bugs compressed together in a tight formation. The spear pierced a Kiri ninja, who vanished in a cloud of smoke.

"A shadow clone," Shino pointed out. "Some of them must be using them to bolster their numbers."

"In that case, we should find those who create shadow clones and take them out. They should be the Jonin," Tamaki deduced.

"Good idea. Why don't you take Kiba and Shino go and try to find them?" Kakashi suggested. "I'll stay here with Rin."

Rin stared at Kakashi disapprovingly. "Kakashi... you don't have to be afraid to leave my side. Even if this is a war, I can take care of myself. It won't be a repeat of the last time."

"Oh, I don't do it for that, Rin. I don't think these three need me to hold their hand all the time, right? They're old enough to do some dangerous tasks without their old sensei," Kakashi jovially replied, before turning at his students. "Now go, I'll create an opening."

Rin continued staring at Kakashi with worried eyes. Certainly, there were a lot of issues that needed to be solved.

...

Meanwhile, in another part of the island prison, Shizune's Medical Squad was acting as support of the rebel division tasked with taking the armory. They mostly stayed behind the front line healing the injured, while Sasuke and other ninja protected them.

And just like it happened before, the prison guards got unexpected reinforcements in the form of chakra golems, who were making a number on the rebel forces.

"Alright, done! You're good to go! Give them hell!" Sakura told a Kiri rebel she just healed.

"I will! Thank you, medic-san!" the rebel gratefully replied as he returned to the battlefield.

"Unless we find a way to get rid of those annoying chakra absorbing golems... we'll we're not going to last long," Suigetsu complained, as he dodged a massive metallic fist from one of those mechanical monsters.

And to prove Suigetsu's words true, one of the golems managed to break the rebel's lines and stomped towards the medic-nin, busy healing the wounded. Fortunately for them, Sasuke cut his path, and forced the golem to engage him in a fight.

"Good one, Sasuke-kun!" Sakura praised.

However, the Uchiha didn't feel he was doing any good. Ninjutsu, his specialty, was out of the equation. Genjutsu was useless on a mechanical being, even if it had chakra, and his sword alone failed to make any dent on that metallic shell.

"Sakura, I'm not doing that good," Sasuke admitted, as he dodged a fist slam. "Maybe your fighting style might be better suited to deal with this thing!"

"You think so?" Sakura asked. If Sasuke was having trouble defeating an enemy, then what chances did she have? But then again, she couldn't deny his request of help. "Alright then, here I come!"

"Either that, or I'll have to use the Mangekyo Sharingan," Sasuke bitterly thought.

The moment Sakura was at close quarter range, the golem tried to squash her with its fists, but the pinkette gracefully dodged them with a surprising show of speed, and jumped as she reared her fist back.

"SHANNARO!"

The effect was instant. The moment Sakura's fist connected with the golem, it made a huge dent on its chest plate, before sending it flying back a few meters.

"Just as I expected. These golems aren't meant to deal with overwhelming physical force. Sakura, you must join the front lines and help them out," Sasuke told her.

"But what about the wounded? I'm a medic-nin," Sakura replied.

"Don't worry, we can go on without you! Make sure those golems don't cause more wounded among our troops!" Shizune told her.

Sakura nodded. "Alright then, take care!"

And the pinkette joined Sasuke in the battlefield.

...

While the bulk of the rebel army fought on the ground, Ameyuri and Asuma's tactical squad remained in the walls, in order to disable the island's defenses, such as the searchlights and the kunai launchers.

"You know, we could take a few of these for the village," Ino commented, as she inspected one of the captured kunai launchers.

"Seal it inside a scroll if you wish, but don't waste much time on that!" Ameyuri told her, while she engaged on a couple enemy Kiri ninja, who suddenly stopped moving. The redheaded girl noticed that their shadows were linked to Shikamaru's. After quickly dispatching them, she turned at the Nara, and said: "Thanks, but it's not as fun if they don't move or defend themselves."

"Hey, look at that! What's going on?" Ino asked, noticing the Chakra Golems popping up across the battlefield.

"What are those things?" Choji asked.

"I don't know, but guess we're going to find out real soon!" Shikamaru pointed out as he stepped back, as two Chakra Golems had just materialized in front of them.

"Ameyuri?" Ino asked, a question unsaid but implicit.

"First time I see these things," the swordswoman said as she also cautiously stepped back.

"That armor looks strong," Shikamaru observed.

"There's no armor my Thunderfangs can cut through," Ameyuri boasted as she channeled lightning chakra through her trusty blades, making them crackle. "Cover me! I'll take them out!"

Ameyuri leaped at the closest golem, and tried to pierce its armor. A seal on the golem's plate glowed, and the lightning of Ameyuri's swords was absorbed, robbing them of their cutting power.

"What?" she asked in shock.

"So they can absorb chakra too. Boy, this is all kinds of troublesome," Shikamaru groaned.

"Let's try physical attacks then. Choji, your turn!" Ino told the Akimichi heir.

Choji nodded and clasped his hands together. "Partial Multi-Size Jutsu!"

Both of Choji's arms suddenly grew, as he reared one of them back, before delivering a devastating punch to the closest golem. The machine, however, managed to cling to the Akimichi's fist. He then proceeded to pound it with his other hand.

Shikamaru made a hand seal. "Let's take care of the other. Shadow Imitation Jutsu!"

Shikamaru easily bound the other golem, but soon he realized how strong the metallic construct was, forcing the Nara to spend large amounts of chakra to keep him in place.

"Damn! I don't think I can hold him for too long... !" Shikamaru warned.

"Make it walk to the edge of the wall! Let's toss it into the water!" Ino suggested.

Shikamaru nodded, and forced the golem to do as Ino said. When the mechanical creature was in the edge, the two kunoichi delivered a flying kick each to the chest, knocking it over the wall, before falling to the sea. Following his team's example, Choji also tossed the golem clinging his fist into the ocean.

Their enemies defeated, Ino looked at the battlefield below her, and noticed the amount of golems that had appeared, and were giving the rebel forces a hard time.

"I don't think we'll be able to bring all the remaining ones here and toss them into the sea," Ino commented.

"No, but we can't give up. Come on! We need to clear this section of the wall if we want to increase our chances of victory!" Ameyuri shouted, as she lead the Tactical Squad forward.

...

Mei herself was leading the offensive against the main prison block. Going with her was Gai's Close Combat Squad, Zabuza and Chojuro. Due to being the most numerous division, as well as the one with the most heavy hitters, they had the least problems making way through the enemy lines. That's not to say that they didn't had any trouble the moment the golems started to appear all around the prison.

"The hell? They absorbed my jutsu!" an enraged Mei shouted.

"My sword isn't doing as good against them either," Zabuza snarled. "And I doubt any of my assassination techniques may work on them either."

Gai, however, was feeling rather excited at such prospect.

"So, the enemy is immune to ninjutsu? Alright then, good thing the Youth Squad is here! Neji, Lee, Tenten, focus on the golems! Let everybody else deal with the human opponents!" the green clad jonin ordered. "Show them the power of your youth!"

The three of them nodded, and in perfect synchronization, they crossed their arms in front of their face, before spreading it downwards, releasing three overlapping bursts of chakra.

"Gate of Opening, open! Gate of Healing, Open!, Gate of Life, open!"

Neji and Lee slipped into their usual fighting stances, while Tenten unsealed a pair of katanas from a small sealing scroll.

"Go!"

Lee charged at a nearby golem, and started to throw punches and kicks at an extremely quick speed, not letting the mechanical construct counterattack and forcing it to step back. Neji did the same, with quick palm strikes that, even if it couldn't disable his opponent like a human, still managed to produce a similar effect.

Tenten started to channel an ungodly amount of chakra through her swords, which started to shine with a radiant blue glow, so bright, it was almost like looking directly into the sun. The ensuing aura made the swords look much longer and thicker than they were.

Two golems stomped towards the dango haired kunoichi. Tenten smirked, as she leaped above the mechanical monsters.

"Strong Sword: Armor Splitter!"

Tenten made two diagonal slashes forming an X, before falling behind the golems. At first, it looked like it didn't have any effect, but after a couple seconds, the slices made themselves known, and the golems fell apart.

"Good work, you three! Keep destroying the golems, and the prison will be ours!" Mei cheered, as she engaged a couple of enemy Kiri ninja.

Suddenly, the gates of the main building opened, and more guards and golems poured from them. However, they made a hallway in the middle, as if somebody of utmost importance was about to appear.

"The warden is here!" a Kiri ninja shouted.

"The warden?" Mei asked. "Good, if we take him out, we'll be much closer to winning!"

"Taking me out? While I admit that you're a strong kunoichi, Mei Terumi, I find that unlikely," the warden said, as he stepped out of the gates.

The battle came to a halt. Mei, Zabuzza and Chojuro were frozen in shock when they saw the warden. A tall man, with a brown moustache and a beard, wearing a cap over his head, and a dark brown poncho over the typical Kiri Swordsmen attire. He was holding a strange weapon that appeared to be an axe linked by a chain to a hammer.

"Jinin Akebino," Mei said, astonished. "You are the warden?"

"Hello to you too, Mei-san. Zabuzza-san, I'm not surprised to see you here. Come to finish what you started all those years ago?" Jinin asked, making Zabuzza to grip his sword tighter. Jinin's eyes then rested on Chojuro. "I don't know who you are, but I see you have the Hiramekarei.. It's sad to see so many swordsmen turning on their village."

"What are you doing here? Being a warden is certainly a job below your capabilities," Mei pointed out.

"I spoke against Mizukage-sama's regime and way of ruling the village. He thinks I can't be trusted, so he sent me here. But I'll show him that I'm as loyal to Kirigakure as anybody else," Jinin replied.

"If you disapprove of Yagura, why are you still loyal to him?" Mei asked, taking a step forward. "I know you, Jinin-san. You're an heroic and honorable man, why are you still loyal to somebody so corrupt?"

"Because it's our duty as a ninja to remain obedient to our superiors. If not, chaos and anarchy will ensue. It's not my place, nor anybody else's, to judge the actions of our Kage," Jinin retorted. "Tell me, Meisan, in case you succeed in your endeavor and become the new Mizukage, will you encourage people who don't support you and your ways to wage another civil war against you?"

"It's not the same thing! Yagura's reign of terror needs to end! People sees us as nothing but bloodthirsty murderers! It might not look like it now, but I'm doing this to save lives!" Mei protested.

"Sure, tell that to yourself. Why don't you-" but Jinin's question was left hanging when he noticed a certain green clad Jonin. "YOU! You're alive! No, it can't be... no, wait, you're not him. His son, perhaps?"

Gai took a step forward as well. "Yes, I am Maito Gai, son of Maito Dai. It seems you remember my father."

"Hard to forget the man who slaughtered the Seven Swordsmen on his own. You have no idea what we had to do in order to silence the rumors that the pride and joy of our village had been defeated by a mere Genin," Jinin bitterly said. "Did you come here to finish what your father started?"

"I came here because the rebels hired Konoha to help them in their campaign. Regardless of what happened in the past, I bear no ill will towards you," Gai sincerely said.

"Jinin-san, please," Mei begged once again.

"Enough," Jinin firmly stated, putting an end to the conversation. "You and your followers are traitors to Kirigakure, and the punishment for treason is death! Everybody, attack!"

"Zabuza, Chojuro," Mei took a step backwards. "I think you two should be the ones to deal with Jinin. Be careful, he's a hardened veteran who fought in the Third War."

Zabuza and Chojuro took a step forward. The former looked confident, the latter not so much.

Ninja from both sides left the three swordsmen some space to fight unmolested. Zabuza and Jinin stared at each other defiantly, while Chojuro attempted to hide behind Zabuza's back.

"You look good, Zabuza-san. It's true what they said? Were you in Konoha all these years?" Jinin asked.

"Not by choice," the masked swordsman replied, as he rested his sword on his shoulders. "But that's irrelevant now. Once the rebellion triumphs, I'll be closer than ever to realize my ambition of becoming Mizukage."

"You were always way too above your head, Zabuza-san. Youth these days..." Jinin then looked at the trembling Chojuro. "What about you, boy? What's your story?"

"I... I..." Chojuro stammered, before gathering some courage to speak up. "I fight under Mei-sama to end the Blood Mist!"

"You must think you're so noble, destabilizing a ninja village so our enemies can take us out easier. But that won't happen under my watch, you hear that!?" Jinin shouted, as he charged at the duo.

Zabuza and Chojuro adopted fighting stances. The fight of the swordsmen was about to begin.

...

OMAKE: SAI'S SECRET

The Fourth Ninja War had taken a turn for the darkest. Despite Madara and Obito not capturing the last two remaining jinchuriki, Naruto and Killer B, they still managed to recreate the Ten Tails. The beast's power was so great, not even the whole Ninja Alliance was able to deal any lasting damage.

"This is hopeless!" Sakura cried. "No matter what we do, that monster just shrugs it off!"

"There's no such thing as an invincible foe. That thing must have a weakness. We need to find it and exploit it," Sasuke replied.

"Yes, we can't give up now! There's too much at stake!" Naruto said.

"If we did, all the people who died in this war would have died for nothing.." Hinata sadly said.

"That sounds pretty nice, but what can we do? That monster will kill us all!" Sakura shouted.

"I believe I can be of help," A new voice said.

Naruto turned around, and saw the ex-root agent, Sai, smiling as if the end of the world wasn't about to happen.

"You? No offense Sai, but I don't think you have enough power to tip the balance in our favor," Naruto dubiously said.

"Actually, I believe do. I have a secret power I haven't used yet, but I don't think I can keep holding it back anymore, given the circumstances," Sai said, before creating a giant bird out of ink, jumping on top of it, and ordering it to fly towards the Ten Tails.

"Sai, wait!" Naruto cried.

"That idiot is going to get himself killed," Sakura deadpanned.

Meanwhile, Madara and Obito looked at Sai, flying at them alone. The zombified ninja smirked, amused.

"Look at that, Obito. A single insect think it can take out a god," Madara said.

Obito chuckled. "Let him try to harm the Ten Tails. This is going to be fun."

When he was over the head, Sai jumped off of the ink bird, and delivered a single punch to the ten tailed abomination.

That punch was all what he needed.

The punch was so powerful, I created a shockwave that shattered the ground and rocks around it, generating a loud booming noise. The Ten Tails cried in pain, before it fell down to the ground, motionless, and lifeless.

Everybody stared at the scene with wide open eyes and mouths opened agape, as their brains tried to understand what their eyes just saw.

"The Ten Tails... it's dead!" Obito said in shock. "That guy killed it in one punch!"

"Who... who are you?" Madara said, experiencing fear for the first time in decades.

"People call me Sai, but it's not my real name. Well, it's more like a diminutive of my real name..." Sai then pulled out his hair, which happened to be a wig, revealing a shiny bald head underneath. He tore off his Konoha uniform, revealing that he was wearing a yellow jumpsuit, red gloves and boots, and a white cape that billowed dramatically despite the lack of wind. "... Saitama."

"ONE PUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUNCH... !" somebody cried in the background, as an epic guitar riff began to play.

Saitama then happily ran towards the amazed and terrified Obito and Madara, both of them knowing that this would be their end.

"I hate crossovers so much..." Madara muttered.

Author's Note: One of the good things of introducing Sai, is that I could finally use that Omake. Any One Punch Man fans out there? Because boy, it's a pretty enjoyable work.

So, the attack on the Crimson Citadel begins, and the first roadblock our heroes have to face in the form of Jinin Akebino. By the end of this arc, all seven swords will make an appearance, and some of them will change owner.

Some readers requested Hinata to have her anime only "Protection of the Eight Trigrams: Sixty Four Palms" attack, so there you go. At first I thought that it was made redundant by the Heavenly Spin, but I realized that the former can be used in ways the latter is impractical. And don't worry, it won't be the last time she'll use that attack.

Now, onto what I think is the biggest foreign element this arc has brought so far: the chakra golems. While I always played to introduce them, they wouldn't show up until much later. I had an idea for a future arc of Naruto and Karin (as well as more Konoha ninja) traveling to the ruins of Uzushio to recover some of the lost Uzumaki fuinjutsu knowledge, among them the chakra golems.

What changed my mind? The Boruto anime Kirigakure arc. When Shizuma and the rest of the wannabe swordsmen broke into the vault where the Seven Swords were kept, they triggered a security mechanism that summoned several self moving puppets to stop them. Said puppets turned out to be hilariously ineffective, and their only purpose was to give the wannabe swordsmen a good target to test their swords and remind the audience what they could do. After seeing that, I decided that maybe I could combine both ideas, and have Kirigakure develop the chakra golems as a secret weapon from the fuinjutsu knowledge they looted from Uzushiogakure. That way, I could also make Kiri into a more formidable opponent. Anyway, hope you like and find them interesting additions.

Thanks a lot to gio08 for betareading this chapter.

I think that's all. In two weeks, the resolution of the Crimson Citadel mini arc. In the meantime, don't forget to leave a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Crimson Citadel, Part II

Author's Note: So the previous' chapter review count is pretty similar to the last batch of chapters that came before that. So I'm going to assume that the unusually low number of reviews of the chapter before that was the website malfunctioning and not the quality of my writing slipping. Something my ego deeply appreciates XD

Anyway, here's the conclusion to the Crimson Citadel mini arc. Enjoy:

Chapter 46:

The Crimson Citadel, Part II

or

Hammer Down

In front of the secondary prison blocks, Shisui Uchiha was leading a small squad in order to liberate it, since the prisoners would make for great reinforcements. At least those who were rebels or dissenters. He already had in mind all the criminals that would claim to be political prisoners just for the excuse to be free.

Turns out, despite the attack, no guard had left the secondary blocks unprotected in order to repel the invasion force. Of course, Shisui was going to prove that quality trumped quantity any time of day.

"Fire Release: Great Fireball Jutsu!"

"Water Release: Water Gun!"

Shisui breathed a huge fireball at a group of guards, while they countered with a volley of watery projectiles, clashing in the middle, cancelling each other out and creating a cloud of steam. Just as Shisui had expected.

Without giving the guards time to react, Shisui unsheathed his tanto and silently dashed towards his opponents. However, he soon found himself being pelted by shuriken, thrown with impressive aim even in the middle of the cloud of steam.

"What the...?" the one eyed Uchiha asked as he deflected the steel stars with his weapon.

"They must have a sensor among them! Watch out!" one of his ninja warned him.

"If they can sense me, then there's no point in stealth. I'll have to take them head on!" Shisui decided as he charged forward.

As Shisui charged, he also heard a second set of quick steps running parallel towards him, as a shadow blurred through the dispelling steam.

"Another one to your right! Watch out!" an enemy ninja warned.

Shisui smirked. "Found the sensor."

However, said sensor wasn't alone, as two more ninja were protecting the one he deduced was the sensor. One of them unsheathed a katana and lunged at the one eyed Uchiha while the other remained close to him.

"So, that traitorous whore got you of all people to help her with her temper tantrum? The nerve!" the red clad ninja scoffed as he delivered vicious swings at Shisui.

"Why the hate? My squad usually has the lowest body count. Did you lose a loved one to my blade or something?" the Uchiha calmly asked.

"You humiliated us by letting your defeated enemies get away! But you won't insult us any longer!" the Kiri loyalist angrily replied.

"Wait... you're angry over the fact that I spared your comrades? You guys have issues," Shisui replied.

"Dark Mirror Clone Jutsu!"

Suddenly, clones of the Kirigakure loyalists appeared alongside the originals, their skin and clothes having a dark blue tint that set them apart from the originals, which drew their weapons, and attacked them. Some of them were caught by surprise.

"ARGH!"

"What the hell is this?"

Shisui took no time to notice that the jutsu had been cast by a masked rebel kiri wearing a dark blue long cloak. The masked ninja swiftly attacked all the enemies fighting their dark replicas, and Shisui did the same. In no time, the block entrance was secured.

"Alright, entrance cleared, go inside and release all the rebel prisoners!" Shisui ordered. All men under his command nodded, and followed him inside.

"Good work out there. That's quite the jutsu," Shisui praised the masked ninja.

"Thanks. Unfortunately, it only works on small groups," the masked ninja replied.

"Hey, it get the job done. I'm Shisui Uchiha, by the way," Shisui introduced himself.

"Kumori Nashi," the man said. "Let's talk later, we have comrades to free."

...

"Forget about the humans, keep firing on that giant toad!" a Kiri ANBU commanded.

Given the damage it was causing, most of Kiri's forces were concentrating their fire on Gamahiro. While arriving at the barracks didn't prove to be too difficult, taking them was a different endeavor. The building was heavily fortified, as well as defended with several kunai launchers that sprayed the attackers with constant rains of kunai.

The golems kept aiming their flamethrowers at Gamahiro as well, and while the rebel ninjas tried to counter them with their water ninjutsu, the Kiri loyalists targeted them instead, keeping them busy. Other ninjas, having identified Naruto as the one who summoned the creature, decided to take the fight to him directly.

"Wind Release: Wind Wall!"

A tornado surrounded Naruto, which blocked the kunai, shuriken and ninjutsu a trio of Kiri ninjas had thrown at him.

"Ouch! Watch out with what you do there, Naruto!" Gamahiro protested.

"Dammit, I forgot I wasn't on the ground. I have to be careful with my attacks or I can hurt Gamahiro!" the blonde thought. "Sorry! Force of habit!"

On the ground, the rest of Team Kurenai and Miyako tried their best to protect Gamahiro from the enemy Kiri ninjas and the golems. One of them aimed its hand cannon at her and released a torrent of flames.

"Heavenly Spin!"

Hinata turned herself into a spinning dome of blue chakra, deflecting the stream of fire. Haku took a step forward and made several hand seals.

"Water Release: Water Gun!"

The Ice Ninja expelled multiple watery projectiles at the stream of flames, slowly pushing it back. Miyako rushed forward, seeing it as the perfect opening to attack.

"The mobile parts have to be unarmored, and thus vulnerable to my blade. They have to!" She exclaimed as she leaped into the air, katana above her head. But when she came down and delivered a vertical slash, her hit was parried by another sword. "What?"

Much to her shock, a blade had appeared on the golem's left hand, blocking the blue haired kunoichi's strike, before she was pushed backwards by the mechanical beast.

"Ice Release: Thousand Needles of Death!"

Multiple icicles rained from above over the golem, though not randomly, as they embedded themselves into the articulations and other unarmored spots. The golem started to shake erratically as it tried and failed to move. Sparks of chakra started to jump from its body as it malfunctioned.

"Good work, Haku! This should put it down!" Miyako said as she tossed a bunch of kunai with explosive notes attached to them. Several explosions later, the golem was down.

"Good one. Let's see if we can repeat the process with the other golems," Kurenai said.

However, a new information about the enemy was about to be known, much to a certain kunoichi's concern.

"Hey, somebody just told me that Mei-sama's group is facing the warden who is nobody but Jinin Akebino himself!" a Kiri ninja shouted out loud.

"WHAT!?" Miyako replied just as louder. Then, she turned at Kurenai. "Kurenai-san, I'm sorry, but if that's true, I need to go there!"

"I know you're an aspiring swordsman, but isn't somebody like Jinin a bit too much for you?" Kurenai questioned.

"Me alone, sure. But I won't be alone. I need to take part in that fight so when we have his sword in our power, Mei-sama will deem me worthy of inheriting it," Miyako replied.

"So you're putting your own ambition over the success of the mission?" Kurenai disapprovingly asked.

"If you think that my presence here will make a difference, or I can do something nobody else can, then I'll stay," the blue haired girl replied.

Kurenai was forced to admit that, truth be told, the Kiri kunoichi leaving wouldn't change the course of the battle too much.

"Alright then, I guess we'll manage without you. Good luck," Kurenai told her.

Miyako smiled at her. "Good luck to you two, and take care!"

And thus, the blue haired rebel dashed towards the entrance of the main prison block.

...

And in the aforementioned main prison block, the three Swordsmen of the Mist were about to begin their private duel.

"Let's get rid of the distraction first! You're in, kid!" Jinin shouted as he dashed towards Chojuro, Helmet Splitter in hand.

Chojuro yelped and held his sword in a defensive position. Zabuza's eyes shot open upon realizing what the blue haired teen was planning to do.

"Watch out, brat! That sword is not like the others! Don't-!"

But it was too late. The moment the axe half of the Helmet Splitter came down, Chojuro raised the Hiramekarei to parry it. Jinin smirked, and used the hammer half of his weapon to slam into the backside of the axe, overpowering Chojuro's defenses. It didn't break Hiramekarei, but it managed to blow it out of Chojuro's hands, and cause him some damage in the forearms.

"My sword can break through any defenses! Blocking or parrying is useless!" Jinin boasted, as he prepared to attack the downed Chojuro. "Now die, traitor!"

Fortunately for Chojuro, his death was delayed when Zabuza tossed the Executioner's Blade at the older swordsman, which forced him to parry it. In a second, Zabuza closed the gap and retrieved his sword, which he used to deliver a series of swipes, which Jinin dodged as he jumped backwards, but much to his chagrin, the size of Zabuza's sword gave it a lot of range.

"Your sword might be the ultimate offense, but it lacks in defense!" Zabuza said as he continued attacking. "Brat, kill him now that he's wide open!"

"R-Right!" Chojuro stammered as he recovered the Hiramekarei and rushed towards the struggling Jinin. Gripping the two handles of his blade, Chojuro delivered an horizontal slash that cut the senior swordsman in two. "Yes! What?"

Unfortunately, Jinin disappeared in a cloud of smoke, leaving a cleaved log behind.

"Not bad, definitely not bad," Jinin said from behind them. "It's about time for you to see what you're up against! Bluntsword Ninja Art: Earth Breaker!"

Jinin slammed the hammer half of the Helmet Splitter into the ground, shattering it, creating multiple quakes and sending a wave of rock and pebbles against the rebel swordsmen. Chojuro quickly stepped in front of Zabuza, raising his sword in a defensive position.

"Hiramekarei: Release!"

Chojuro's sword was engulfed by a cloak of glowing blue chakra, which expanded and took the shape of a shield. Said shield managed to absorb the impact of the rocks and pebbles aimed at them.

Zabuza smirked under his mask. "Not bad, kid. Seems that you're at least aware of some of your sword's abilities, even if you're ignorant of the others."

"Uhhh... thanks?" the bespectacled ninja asked, a bit confused.

Zabuza suddenly grabbed Chojuro by the shoulder and pushed him aside, while he himself jumped in the opposite direction, narrowly avoiding Jinin's swing.

"God damn it brat, one compliment, and you get so distracted he almost kills you!" Zabuza angrily groaned. "This is why I never say nice things!"

Meanwhile, not far from there, Mei spared a glance to check how their duel was going on, and worry spread through her face as she saw that Jinin was proving to be a hard nut to crack. She was tempted to lend them a hand, but in the end, it wouldn't be a good idea. If she, a non-swordsman, disrupted their duel, then the enemy would aid Jinin in return, making the task of taking him down much harder.

There was also the fact that the Seven Swordsmen had a reputation to uphold. If she had to babysit them all the time, it would erode their prestige, and that would be seen as a disservice to Kirigakure's culture. No, she had to let them, and hope that they would come out on top.

The whirring sound of flying shuriken snapped her back from her admittedly brief trance. Gracefully, the rebel leader dodged the steel stars aimed at her, and faced the ones who tossed them, a group of elite ANBU.

"Look at that. The most wanted criminal in the Land of Water, coming right into our prison. That's what one would call irony," one ANBU mentioned.

Mei smirked at him. "Oh, trust me, I didn't come here to become a permanent resident. Pretty much the opposite."

"You have a 'Kill on Sight' order placed on you, miss. Spending your last days on a cold, damp cell is a comfort you won't experience," another ANBU replied as he unsheathed his katana, an action mimicked by his partners.

"Kill on sight? Wow, I'm flattered! My rebellion must be really more of a threat than what Yagura lets on, if he's so desperate to have me dead, don't you think?" Mei squealed in fake joy.

Under their masks, the ANBU growled. "Let's silence this whore already," one of them seethed.

Mei stopped smiling, and frowned. "Whore? Now that's being rude. It seems that not only ninjas under the Blood Mist lack compassion and empathy, but also basic decency. Guess I'll have to teach you some myself."

"The dead can't teach anything! Water Release: Water Shuriken!"

The ANBU created several water shuriken from thin air and made them fly at the rebel leader. Mei smiled as she made hand seals in quick succession, before slamming her hands into the ground.

"Amateurish. Earth Release: Earth Style Wall!"

A wall of stone erected from the ground between Mei and her enemies, absorbing the water shuriken. However, while she was doing that, other two ANBU had flanked her, and were ready to slash her from two different angles. Mei, however, was unfazed.

"Not bad," Mei admitted as he made several hand seals. "But as you are going to find out, bloodlust isn't a good replacement for genuine skill and power. Water Release: Water Whip!"

Mei generated a whip made of water, and she twirled it around herself, expertly parrying and blocking the quick strikes of the enemy ANBU. Their fight was interrupted when a chakra golem tore down the wall, startling her a bit.

"Let's see what your ninjutsu can do against this!" an ANBU standing on the golem's shoulder taunted.

Mei smirked once again, as she started to make more hand seals. "You'll see it shortly. Water Release: All Devouring Maelstrom!"

Water appeared out of nowhere and started to spin around the golem, quickly forming a water tornado. The ninja riding the golem let out a loud laugh.

"You idiot! No matter how big you make your jutsu, the golem can absorb it!" the ANBU taunted.

"I know the golem can do that, but can you?" Mei asked, shooting him a condescending smile.

The ANBU stopped laughing. "Shit..."

When the water tornado formed, while the golem was left unharmed, the ANBU was sent flying high into the air.

"Thought so," Mei nonchalantly said. She saw the golem stomping towards her with predictable intentions. "Well, let's see what can I do with you, big guy..."

...

While Kiba, Shino and Tamaki went to deal with the enemy Kiri ninja spawning shadow clones to bolster their numbers, Kakashi and Rin were holding the rest in line. Most of the enemy forces focused on Kakashi, whom was deemed as the biggest threat, while Rin covered his back. Soon the Kiri ninja noticed that trying to take Rin out was just as hard as Kakashi.

As the brown haired girl clashed with the Kiri ninja, she started to notice something about her body. It was much more resilient and resistant. Despite all the time she had been fighting, she didn't feel tired in the slightest. She moved faster, hit harder, and her reflexes were much sharper. She wondered how she never noticed this earlier, but then she realized this was the first real fight she had been since her resurrection.

"What? How a little girl can be this strong?" a Kiri ninja incredulously asked, as he struggled with the medic-nin in a kunai lock.

"I work out a lot," Rin lied before pushing the enemy ninja backwards.

"Keep your act together! They're just two, even if one of them is the Copy Ninja!" an ANBU captain angrily exclaimed.

"They might be just two, but they're quite strong, and their defense is too solid!" a lesser ranked ANBU complained.

"You whiny cowards! And you call yourselves ninja of the Blood Mist?" the captain yelled before making a hand seal. "Show them what we're made of! Hidden Mist Jutsu!"

Soon, a dense mist covered the area, hiding the enemies of the Konoha duo. Kakashi tensed up, and tightly held a kunai in a defensive position.

"Rin, be careful! Stay back to back!" Kakashi told her.

"Alright," the medic-nin complied with Kakashi's requests, as she expected the enemy to make their move any moment. Then, a realization dawned upon her. " Wait a minute, this mist... I think I can use it to my advantage," she thought, before making several hand seals.

As the group of Kiri ninja slowly approached from all directions, ready to bathe their weapons in the blood of the invading Konoha trash. Little did they know that the only blood spilled today would be theirs.

As they slowly approached, they noticed that walking was becoming more and more difficult. It took them no time to notice that tall grass was growing around them.

"Grass? But how can...?" A Kiri ANBU wondered, puzzled.

But it was too late. The moment they stepped on the grass, Rin located their position, and marked them for death. Soon, multiple vines grew from under their feet, wrapped around their bodies, and were strangled to death. Rin was careful to target their throats as well so they couldn't shout or warn the others about her power.

Nobody could know. At least not yet.

Time passed, and the attack never came. Kakashi was growing antsy, and so was the ANBU captain. Unable to shake a bad feeling, he decided to dispel the mist. The image that appeared before his eyes surprised him to say the least, as he saw the bodies of his subordinates lying on the ground, motionless.

"What the...?" the ANBU captain stammered in shock.

"Good job taking care of those, Kakashi," Rin told her former teammate.

The Copy Ninja looked at her with some concern. "It wasn't me who took them out."

"Really? Oh. Well, guess that somebody helped us out, and then decided to leave," Rin said with a shrug.

"You know, you were never the best liar, Rin," Kakashi sternly said. "But now you're being ridiculous."

She had to admit that trying to fool Kakashi maybe wasn't the best of her ideas.

"Can we talk about it later? We have a mission to finish," Rin replied, weariness seeping into her voice.

Kakashi, nodded and the two of them pressed forward.

...

Meanwhile, on another side of the island prison, the division Kurenai's Assault Squad was part of had successfully taken over the barracks, and were quickly securing the building. Most of the enemy Kiri ninja had retreated towards the main prison block.

"I took quite a beating from those golems. I hate to leave given that the fight is far from over, but I don't think I can be of much more help," Gamahiro apologized.

"Hey, it's okay, you were awesome! We wouldn't have taken over the barracks so easily without you," Naruto complimented the giant toad.

"Thank you. Good luck for what's left!" Gamahiro said before vanishing in a cloud of smoke.

"Alright, now that the barracks are ours, we can establish a proper infirmary and move all our wounded here," Kurenai mentioned.

"Should we help the other divisions?" Haku asked.

Kurenai shook her head. "Our orders were clear. Capture and protect the barracks. Unless we're given new orders, our duty is to stay here."

"Alright then. Can I send a few clones to see how the others are doing? They might be in a position that stops them from sending a request for help," Naruto suggested.

Kurenai pondered the blonde's petition for a few moments, before deciding that there was no harm in doing such a thing. "Alright then. Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

Several Naruto clones popped into existence, and run away into different directions.

"Soon we should have pretty good intel on what's happening on the rest of the isle," Naruto proudly said.

"Zabuza-sama and Tenten-chan were on the main division. I hope they're doing right," Haku mused.

...

"Water Release: Water Dragon Jutsu!"

Using the nearby water, Zabuza summoned a gigantic dragon-shaped construct that dived at the older swordsman. Jinin looked unimpressed, and started to swing the hammer half of his weapon at an incredible speed.

"Bluntsword Ninja Art: Hurricane Hammer!"

The swinging hammer created a strong whirlwind around Jinin, and when the water dragon reached its target, it crashed and dissolved against a barrier of gale force winds, much to Zabuza's chagrin. And it wasn't going to end there.

"Take this!" Jinin shouted as he swung the hammer forward, sending the tornado at Zabuza.

At first, Zabuza was lost on how to survive against such attack, but then he quickly remembered how a past opponent managed to withstand one of his water jutsu, and decided to give the idea a try.

He then stabbed the sword into the ground, and channeled chakra through his fingers in order to stick them to the sword's handle.

When the tornado came, it violently tried to send him flying, but Zabuza was anchored to the ground, and thus wasn't moved.

"Not bad, definitely not bad," Jinin complimented. "But will it be good enough to beat me? I find that doubtful."

"I already killed a Swordsman of the Mist before. You're nothing special," Zabuza snarled.

"Ah, yes, I know how you killed Biwo-san and acquired his blade. Did you best him in single combat, or did you attack him during a moment of vulnerability?"

"Does it matter? The fact that I managed to kill him shows that he wasn't worthy of wielding the Executioner's Blade and belonging to our select group anymore," Zabuza retorted. "I surpassed Biwo-sensei and every sensei, and thus his sword deserved to be mine!"

"While there is some truth to your words, you won't be able to catch all your opponents off guard for an easy kill, as I myself am proving right now," Jinin replied, as he swung the half axe of his weapon at Zabuza, who was smart enough to dodge and not parry it. "Doesn't change the fact that you're a traitorous disgrace that needs to be put down. When the two of you are dealt with, I'll make sure Mizkage-sama gives your swords to loyal ninja of the Mist!"

"Zabuza-senpai is the product of the regime you're defending so ardently!" Chojuro blurted out, his words came with a surprising lack of stammer.

"You have no idea what are you talking about, kid," Jinin condescendingly said.

"Maybe I'm too young. But I know the history of my village. I know how Zabuza-senpai came to be. It was the Blood Mist customs' that drove him to the path he ended up taking, as it did the same to many others who also became missing-nin, some former Swordsmen amongst them! The Blood Mist will end up tearing itself apart!" Chojuro shouted, as he swung the Hiramekarei at Jinin, who easily parried it.

"There will always be people unhappy with a government. But it's impossible to please everybody. Our duty as ninjas is to maintain order and stability," Jinin replied. "Don't try to shift the blame of this war on my side, kid. It was your side who started!"

"We HAD a reason to start this!" Chojuro said as he jumped at Jinin, his sword over his head, which started to glow with a blue light. "Hiramekarei: Release!"

The cloak of chakra covering the giant sword took the shape of a giant hammer, which the bespectacled young man swung at Jinin. Knowing there was no way to block such an attack, he opted to avoid it by jumping back, even if he knew that it would leave him wide open, something Zabuza took no time capitalize on, as he appeared behind the bearded swordsman,

"Your sword might carry a lot of destructive power, but your defense is non-existent!" Zabuza taunted, ready to cleave Jinin.

Then much to Zabuza's surprise, rather than trying to avoid or block his swing, Jinin instead swung the axe half of his weapon at Zabuza's neck. Zabuza released one of his hands from his sword's handle, and used it to grab Jinin's wrist, stopping the attack. But in doing so, he robbed his own swing of much of his power, and Jinin easily blocked it with the hammer half of his weapon.

"You know what they say, the best defense is a good offense. And no offense is better than the Helmet Splitter!" Jinin shouted as he kicked Zabuza in the chest, pushing him back, before lunging at him again.

But once again, Jinin was forced to jump backwards as several kunai rained upon him, a few of them dangerously close to find its mark.

Angry and startled, he looked around to see how had ambushed him, and saw a tall and slender girl with long blue hair that hid one of her eyes landing near Zabuza. Her uniform identified her as a rebel.

"Who the hell are you?" Jinin angrily asked.

The newcomer smirked. "My name is Miyako Kiui, Special Jonin of the Kirigakure Liberation Movement, as well as an aspiring member of the Seven Swordsmen."

"Get lost, little girl, this is a fight between actual Swordsmen, not pretenders," Jinin dissed her.

Miyako crossed her arms. "What, am I too much for you to handle, big guy?"

"Quite the opposite, I'm not going to deal with such an opponent that's below me, so leave if you value your life," Jinin warned her.

Miyako replied by unsheathing her katana. "The most common way to become a Swordsman is to kill the previous wielder of a sword and claim it as your own. And that's why I'm planning to do."

This seems to hit a nerve on Jinin, who dangerously scowled at her. "Alright girl, you got your wish. I'd be more than happy to put you in your place. Bluntsword Ninja Art: Underground Fissure!"

Jinin raised the axe half of his weapon above his head, whose edge started to glow with a dim blue light, before slamming it into the ground, sending an underground shockwave that shook the earth, and left a deep crack in the ground behind it.

"Oh shit!" Miyako shouted as she jumped aside multiple times in order to avoid the widespread destruction.

"Don't get too cocky, girl. This man is a veteran of the Third Ninja War, and possibly the strongest Swordsman loyal to Yagura," Zabuza pointed out.

"You should listen to your sempai, little girl. You're way over your head," Jinin added before raising the hammer half this time. "Bluntsword Ninja Art: Earth breaker!"

Jinin brought the hammer down once more, creating a massive quake that send the two swordsmen and the one aspiring swordsman flying with an incredible force.

"You can bring as many pretenders who want to get their dirty hands onto our swords, yet it won't be enough. Do you know why? Because we fight for a higher cause. We fight for peace, order and stability. You're fighting for the delusions of a mad woman consumed by her lust of power, and you yourselves are nothing but naïve children throwing temper tantrums just because things aren't the way you want," Jinin harshly told them. "That's why you're destined to lose!"

Zabuza managed to land on his feet, and raised his sword in a defensive pose as he slowly advanced towards his foe.

"You see us as children throwing a temper tantrum. Do you know how do we see you? As an old man who desperately clings to the old times because he's too afraid to face the fact that the world has changed., and realize that he's the last of the few relics of a past time. Now go to the place you belong, relic!" Zabuza shouted as he tossed his sword at the older swordsman once again.

"Not falling for that one again, boy," Jinin replied as he also tossed the hammer half of his weapon at the flying sword. Both weapons clashed with a loud clang. Zabuza's sword was sent spinning aside, while Jinin merely tugged the leather link bounding both weapons, and returned the hammer to his hand. "And now it's when either you or one of your allies ambush me from behind, right?"

And true to his words, he turned around and saw Chojuro ready to cut him in two, Hiramekarei already moving to strike. Chojuro yelped upon seeing that Jinin had seen him coming. Jinin smirked, and parried the blow with the axe half, while smashing Chojuro's arm with the hammer.

"AAAAAAAARRRGGGHH!" the young swordsman yelled, dropping his weapon to the ground, as he himself fell on his knees.

"Does it hurt? Well, that's what happens when you get into a war. People either die, or get horribly maimed for life. And while I doubt that injury might be permanent, you won't live to receive medical attention," Jinin said as he prepared to finish the job.

"Leave him alone, you asshole!" Miyako shouted as she charged at Jinin.

Even if the yell was an obvious alert, Jinin was already expecting either of them to try to save their comrade, and was unsurprised that his guessing of the girl turned out to be correct. Jinin's axe clashed against Miyako's katana, resulting in a shower of sparks.

"At the very least, two of the lost swords will go back to their legitimate owner," Jinin said as he effortlessly pushed Miyako back, who made several hand seals.

"Water Release: Water Shuriken!"

Shuriken made of water formed in front of the blue haired kunoichi, as they flew towards Jinin. But the older swordsman merely swung his hammer, and easily destroyed them.

"Nothing you can throw at me will have any kind of effect, girl. Give up already," Jinin dismissively said. "Even if by some miracle you manage to win here, Mizukage-sama is already aware of what you did! Then you'll have no option but face Kirigakure in the open, and you will be crushed!"

"Do you take us for idiots? The island is surrounded by our forces, ready to intercept any bird messenger that tries to fly into the mainland. Yagura will be none the wiser when we storm the village, just like we did with this prison!" Miyako countered, as she delivered fast swipes with her katana at Jinin.

The older swordsman merely smirked. "Ah, yes, the birds. We found out later than what would have been desirable that that's how you've been gaining intel on us. But that tactic won't work with you anymore."

Miyako wanted to believe it was just a bluff to get her upset, but he couldn't feel that her foe wasn't lying.

"What are you talking about?" the blue haired kunoichi shouted.

"Do you have anybody checking underwater?" Jinin mysteriously asked.

"Underwater? Why would...?" she asked, confused, before a realization hit her like a sledgehammer. "No way... !"

"Yes. Upon noticing that you were intercepting our messenger birds, we decided to take advantage of the sea, and used sea animals to carry messages underwater instead. Several couriers were sent away to Kirigakure a few minutes after your invasion started, detailing, among other things, that little sneaking you did in order to disable our defenses and open the dock gates. Mizukage-sama knows everything. You have no way to defeat him."

Miyako was left stunned. Secrecy has always been the rebellion's greatest weapon, and now, they could no longer count on it. Even if Yagura didn't plan to hunt them down, he'll expect them to attack the village anytime, and would reinforce its defenses. Mei had stressed how important Yagura not knowing about them was. There would be no way to take over the village now. They had already lost.

"No... it can't end like this..." a still stunned and shocked Miyako said, almost in a whisper.

"It can," Jinin said. "But Mizukage-sama won't have to end your revolt personally. That honor will belong to ME!"

Jinin was about to cut Miyako in two with his axe, before Zabuza suddenly appeared between him and his potential victim, deflecting the axe blow to the side.

"Goddamit girl, snap out of it!" Zabuza angrily shouted, as he pushed Jinin back. "This isn't the end! I refuse to let it end here after how long I've been walking this path!"

"Didn't you hear what he said? Yagura knows about this attack now! He will be expecting us! All our efforts from these past years are now wasted! We can't win!"

"So what? Things didn't go as planned. When do they do? I did meet my fair share of failures, and here I am, ready to take Kirigakure away from Yagura's hands!" Zabuza shouted.

Zabuza sounded so sure. Did the rebels still have a chance to win? He certainly think so. And what he said is true. He failed in his initial coup. He was captured by Konoha when he helped the Uchiha Clan with their failed attempt at seizing Konoha. Yet the man didn't let discouraging odds to put him down, and persevered.

Yes, he was right. They couldn't give up. Every problem has a solution, and they'd find a solution for this one. Besides, this was far from the first setback the rebellion had faced. Wiping the stunned expression from her face, Miyako gripped her katana tightly, and prepared to rejoin the fight.

"Sorry, I don't know what came over me," Miyako told him.

"Be sure it doesn't happen again. I can't waste my time babysitting you all the time!" Zabuza snarled, as he charged at Jinin once again.

Zabuza and Jinin engaged in a fight once, more, loud clangs rang through the air as their weapons clashed. In no time, it became obvious that Zabuza was gaining the upper hand. Still, that was nowhere near enough to make Jinin consider defeat.

"Just like I said, your defense is pretty poor. Your sword might provide you a formidable offense, but it will be for naught if I simply don't let you attack," Zabuza told him as he pressed on.

"And you think I'm going to let you?" Jinin replied as he parried a blow with the axe half of his weapon, while trying to smash Zabuza with the hammer.

Zabuza, however, disengaged in time to duck the mighty hit., and landed a punch on Jinin's stomach. Still, the bearded man didn't bend over. As the two kept fighting, Miyako decided that the best course of action would be supporting Zabuza from afar. She positioned herself behind Jinin, and made several hand seals.

"Water Release: Water Shuriken!"

Once again, multiple water shuriken formed in front of her, and she directed them towards Jinin, being careful not to hit Zabuza with them. However, as if Jinin had eyes on his back (or a Byakugan), the swordsman swung his hammer in an spinning motion, deflecting all the shuriken, while all the same time using the axe to parry Zabuza's sword.

"You think I'm such an amateur to not to notice how many enemies I'm fighting against? Trying to catch me off guard is-URK!" Jinin choked, as he spat blood.

It took the presents a couple seconds to notice that Chojuro had appeared behind him, and struck his side with Hiramekarei, whom he was holding with his only good arm. He was unable to put much force into the swing, but it was enough to make a grievous wound.

"Y-You... !?" Jinin asked in disbelief.

"I'm... I'm not dead yet, I can still fight!" Chojuro shouted, though he couldn't suppress his stutter.

Then, Miyako appeared besides them, and impaled Jinin with her katana for a good measure. The older swordsman dropped his weapon, and fell to his knees.

"You're right..." Jinin said, coughing more blood. "To think that I of all people made such a rookie mistake... you have guts, kid, I'll give you that."

Zabuza walked towards him, and raised his sword. "Any last words, Jinin-san?"

"Yes. Do know that I don't regret my actions or loyalties, and die as a loyal swordsman. And since I'm sure you're going to give my sword to somebody else, make sure it's somebody worthy of it," Jinin asked.

Zabuza nodded. "I promise you the next bearer of the Helmet Splitter will be a swordsman worthy of your praise."

And then, the aptly named Executioner's Blade descended upon Jinin, separating his head from the rest of his body, ending his life.

Across the battlefield, all the chakra golems suddenly stopped fighting and were rendered inactive, with the seals slapped across their plating losing their glow.

Zabuza then grabbed his head, and raised it above his own.

"Attention everybody! Jinin Akebino of the Bluntsword is dead! The warden of this prison has died! Now give up, unless you want to follow a similar fate!" Zabuza shouted.

The fights around him immediately stopped. The effect of seeing their hero's severed head was immediate for the red-clad Kiri ninja. Some were disheartened, others enraged, but no one was left different.

"Jinin-sama is dead!?" a loyalist Kiri ninja asked in shock.

"Maybe we should surrender..." another one suggested. "The golems were bound to his will, and since he's no longer alive, there's nobody to make them fight..."

"Never! We're the Blood Mist! We don't have mercy, and we shall accept none!" another one shouted.

"Yes! We will go down fighting!" another Kiri ninja replied.

"Don't be such an idiot! Do you value your lives so poorly?" Mei asked.

"As if you don't plan to execute all of us, you traitorous whore!" the same ninja replied.

Trying to contain her anger at such crude insult, Mei breathed deeply. "No. I promise you that no harm won't befall on those who surrender peacefully. You will be treated as fairly as possible by my forces, and you will have the chance to return to active duty once Yagura has been deposed. No more blood needs to be spilled today."

Mei's words seems to have some effect on the enemy ninja, who dropped their weapons and walked towards the blue clad rebels, who quickly grabbed them.

"No! What are you doing, you idiots! Keep fighting!" an ANBU yelled as he lunged at a random rebel ninja, and many others followed his example.

The fight continued for a bit longer, but without Jinin, the golems, and a good chunk of the prison guards surrendering, those who refused to do so were quickly killed.

The effect was the same in the rest of the island. They realized that the golems' sudden deactivation meant that their leader was dead, and thus they were without two of the biggest assets they had. Around half of the prison guards choose to throw their weapons and hope the rebels would have mercy on them. The rest decided to go down fighting.

And as soon as the battle was over, all the rebels celebrated their victory with loud cheers and shouts of joy.

"We're not done here. Come on, we need to release all our allies, and lock up the prisoners!" Mei commanded. "And look for Ao! Finding him is of utmost importance!"

Miyako then walked towards Mei, her face reflecting worry.

"Mei-sama, before he died, Jinin-sempai said something you should know," Miyako told her leader. "Turns out, they did manage to send a message to the village. Apparently they use sea creatures that travel underwater as couriers now."

"That is grave news, indeed. Then again, it was a good thing that Jinin told us that. Otherwise, the invasion of Kiri might have turned into a disaster. Even if that means we can no longer use our original strategy," Mei replied. "I knew that part of your heart was still in the right place, Jinin-san."

"Are we going to continue with the invasion?" Miyako asked.

Mei nodded. "Yes. Now that Yagura knows of this, we can't fall back, even if he will be waiting for us."

...

Turns out, the man named Ao was locked in a secret underground cell which couldn't have been found without a sensor's help.

"Ao. We finally found you," Mei said, as the blue haired man came out of his confinement. "It's good to see you again."

"It's good to be free again, indeed. I was afraid I would never see you again, Mei-sama. I'm glad that I was wrong," Ao said as he made a small bow.

"How are you? Did they torture you?" Mei asked, a bit concerned.

"They did, and with a lot of enthusiasm. But they couldn't crack my will nor my mind," Ao proudly replied.

Mei smiled in return. "I see. What about your Byakugan? Do you still have it? Your seals are still in place, so I presume the answer is yes."

"Still in place," Ao said as he tapped his eye patch. "And as you said, they were unable to undo the protective seals. Not without killing me first, which they wouldn't do until they made me talk."

"Then it's a good thing that everything turned out as we had planned," Mei replied, then she turned at the group of ninja behind her. "Somebody please find Ao some proper clothes to wear in place of that hideous prison attire."

"Right away, ma'am!" two ninja said before leaving.

"Now that the island is under our control, let's check how the rest of the fights went, and how many losses we suffered," Mei said.

...

A few hours later, the sun started to rise in the horizon. Most of the clean-up had already been complete, and the island was fully under the rebel's control.

The guards that had surrendered had been locked inside the very same cells they used to watch, while the prisoners, at least those who could be identified as war prisoners, were released, given ninja uniforms and weapons, and reenlisted in the rebel army. Other criminals remained there.

Mei also called one of her hidden divisions into the island so they could man the prison while the bulk of her forces took a well deserved rest. Said reinforcements also brought food, clothes, weapons, medicine, and other supplies that the battle had drained from the rebel leader's main army, as well as their Konoha allies.

Some of said allies, namely Kurenai's Assault Squad, were inspecting one of the deactivated chakra golems, which was laying on the floor, motionless. Earlier, in an underground basement, they had discovered some sort of machine powered by the chakra of multiple ninja that actually supplied the golems with energy. It was decided that it wouldn't be destroyed, but kept for analysis instead.

And while their next orders arrived, Kurenai's team was studying one of those golems. Or better said, Naruto studied it while his teammates and sensei watched.

"I didn't want to believe it, but it's true. These seals were made by my clan," Naruto concluded. "I don't get it. Mom and Dad told me that neither Kiri nor Kumo got anything from the invasion of Uzushioagakure," Naruto protested.

"Or they did, but decided to pretend that it wasn't the case so their enemies wouldn't suspect anything," Kurenai wisely pointed out. "And it worked, given how off-guard these machines caught us."

"If this prison had these golems as reinforcements, then Kirigakure has them too. And possibly in a much bigger quantity," Haku observed. "It won't be an easy battle."

"No, but we already had experience fighting them. And despite their strength and abilities, they aren't invincible," Naruto pointed out.

"That power generator we found out underground suggest that the golems cannot be deployed far away from them, which means that they can only be used for defensive purposes. If we could lure the enemy into fighting outside the village..." Hinata pointed out, with a small glint of hope.

Kurenai, however, shook her head. "That won't happen. Yagura won't deploy his troops in mass outside the safety of the village's walls. This war won't end until we take over Kirigakure," Kurenai stated.

"Then we'll need a way to counter these golems. Naruto-kun, do you think you can create a seal that can disable them?" Haku asked his blond teammate.

Naruto looked pensive, but dubious. He placed two fingers under his chin. "I don't know. I can try, but the sealing matrix that makes the golems work is way more complex than anything I've studied."

"Whatever you do, no matter how little, it will be welcomed," Haku said in an almost pleading voice.

"Alright, I'll try to work on something," Naruto replied, much to the Ice Ninja's joy.

...

Meanwhile, in the prison's morgue, Mei and her swordsmen were around the table in which Jinin's body, covered by a sheet, was lying.

"His death was a tragedy. He was a good man, I just wish his loyalty wasn't so misplaced," a sorrowful Mei said. "Once the war ends, Jinin will be buried alongside all the previous swordsmen, with all the honors he deserves."

There was a moment of silence.

"Uh... even if it's too soon to ask... what's going to be of his sword?" Suigetsu asked. "Is any of us going to get it?"

Mei nodded, but shot Suigetsu a glare. "I was planning to talk about this later and not in front of Jinin's dead body, but given that you so tactfully brought up the issue..." Mei then looked at Miyako. "Miyako, I know you assisted Zabuza-kun and Chojuro with the fight, so I think you should be the one to inherit Jinin's sword."

"Zabuza-kun!?" the Swordsman Captain protested. "Well, it's not as bad as Zabuza-chan, but still..."

"Really?" Miyako gasped in excitement. "Thanks a lot, Mei-sama! I'll make both you and every past owner of the Helmet Splitter proud!"

"Oh come on! You need a lot of upper strength body to use that sword! Upper strength I have!" Suigetsu protested.

"Do you dare question the decisions of our leader?" Miyako asked, raising an eyebrow.

Suigetsu merely sighed in defeat.

"Chojuro, what about your arm? Does it feel better?" Mei asked the bespectacled swordsman.

"It does, Mei-sama. Konoha has some truly amazing medic-nin. I still need some time before it's fully healed, but it will be recovered by the time the invasion of Kirigakure begins," Chojuro replied with unusual enthusiasm.

Mei smiled. "Good to know that. But don't try to overdo it. Nobody will force you to fight until you're completely healed. Anyway, we should get some rest. The battle has been exhausting, and we only just begun."

...

Kirigakure, Mizukage's Palace

Yagura Karatachi, the Fourth Mizukage, was in a meeting with some his advisors. Like usual, the topic they were debating was how to deal with the ongoing rebellion. More specifically, how to make them come out of hiding. It turns out, however, that such problem was about to solve itself pretty soon, albeit at a very high cost.

"Mizukage-sama!" a couple ANBU burst into the meeting room, drawing everybody's attention. "We carry grave news! The rebels have taken over the Crimson Citadel!"

While Yagura remained silent and pensive, all the councilors started to shout and argue among themselves. The Mizukage raised a hand while releasing killing intent, silencing everybody in the room.

"So Mei has finally made her move. I have to admit it was sooner than any of us were expecting," Yagura commented.

"That's not all. There were Konoha ninja among her ranks. It seems she hired them or struck an alliance with Konoha," the ANBU continued.

"I see. That explains how she was able to launch such an attack," Yagura said, keeping his cool. "The loss of the prison is unfortunate, especially since we had the rebel head of intelligence there, as well as plenty of other rebel war prisoners. She will feel emboldened by this victory, and will move to invade the village next," Yagura deduced.

"Aren't you worried, Mizukage-sama?" one of his councilors asked. "With Konoha helping her, even if we defeat her, she could cause a lot of harm to the village, leaving us vulnerable to foreign enemies."

Yagura turned around, and shot him a small smile.

"Not in the slightest. I was already counting on this to happen, and thus, I made the necessary preparations for the rebels' arrival," Yagura told them.

Author's Note: Well, there you have it, the Crimson Citadel mini arc comes to an end. I hope you liked it. You can consider it a prelude of what the invasion of Kirigakure is going to be. Hopefully Jinin Akebino was a suitable opponent, and worthy of the title of Swordsman of the Mist. One go, other two more to take down. And that's not counting the "final boss", Yagura himself.

And as expected, Akatsuki plans to join the fray. How will their interference pay out? Will they fail to capture Yagura, or will they be succesful? And how will that affect the outcome of the invasion as a whole?

Thanks a lot to gio08 for betareading this chapter.

Next time, prelude to the invasion. In the meantime, don't forget to review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Prelude to the Invasion

Author's Note: I just realized that I never out the disclaimer that I don't own Naruto and I'm not making any profit out of this fanfic. But... plenty of fanfics don't put it either, so I don't think it has to be that important, right? Either way, I already said it in this note. Anyway, enjoy the chapter:

Chapter 47:

Prelude to the Invasion

or

What does it take for Zabuza to love somebody?

After the Crimson Citadel was secured, Mei ordered the rest of her forces back into the Kirigakure's Hope . Once they were in the security of the open sea, the Mizukage aspirant called for a meeting at the ship's war room. Like the previous meeting, her highest ranking officers and Konoha's Jonin were present.

"First of all, congratulations everybody on a job well done. We managed to recover most of our prisoners of war, my head of intelligence among them, and we did so while sustaining minimal loses," Mei praised all the ninja before them, before her expression turned serious. "However, what we did back then is nothing compared to the task ahead. It is now time to invade Kirigakure."

"And there are more complications that the ones we initially expected, right?" Kakashi guessed.

Mei sadly nodded. "Yes. Despite our best efforts, they managed to sneak a message to Kirigakure, and now Yagura knows what happened there. Since he knows we finally came out of hiding, we have no choice but attack Kirigakure now. If we take too long,

Yagura will drag us into a war of attrition we have no hope of winning."

"And do you believe that, with our current forces, we will be able to take over a major village?" Asuma asked.

"Especially now that they know we're coming for them," Kurenai added.

"Yes. Now that we rescued so many p.o.w's, our numbers have grown to a more acceptable level. Besides, there might be a silver lining to our prison break not being a secret anymore," Mei stated and nodded at Ao, who took a step forward.

"This victory has proven that the Blood Mist is not invincible. We know of many groups and individuals who opposed Yagura, but feared him too much to join us. We believe it might not be the case anymore," Ao explained. "And with the news that we now have four of the Seven Swords in our power, as opposed to the two that remains within the village's walls, it will help our cause to gain more support as well, especially with the Feudal Lord of the Land of Water.

"But we shouldn't ignore the fact that even with the additional support, the information leak robbed us of the element of surprise. Yagura will be waiting for us to come, and there won't be any way to prevent that," Mei added.

"Kirigakure has two accesses: one from land, and a gated dock," Ao continued.

"I can take a small team with me to infiltrate the village and open the dock gates, just like Ameyuri did when we stormed the prison," Zabuza suggested.

Mei, however, shook her head. "Sadly such thing won't be possible anymore, since Yagura will be expecting that. In fact, my original plan consisted in luring Yagura's forces to the land gate, while a small team of infiltrators would open the dock gates, which the bulk of our troops would use to penetrate the village, and trap the enemy between us. The typical pincer movement. Our best option would be to do the last thing Yagura expects us to do."

"But that would be full assault from land, and we aren't going to do that," Chojuro pointed out, then he nervously looked at Mei. "... right?"

Mei looked at him, and sighed. "I'm afraid we have no other options."

Needless to say, the whole room erupted into a cacophony of yells, shouts and even profanities as the present ninjas tried to support or debunk the reckless, almost suicidal strategy of the Mizukage aspirant. It took Ao and Mei a couple minutes to calm down everybody, at which Mei continued her explanation.

"I'm not done yet. Listen, I'm not suggesting that we take over the village with our current forces. That's impossible and stupid. But we can do what we did at the Crimson Citadel: if we kill or capture Yagura, the other side will have no choice but surrender," Mei explained.

"But they will expect that too as well. The Mizukage's Palace will be heavily guarded. How will we reach Yagura then?" a Kiri Jonin asked.

"While the village defenders are busy with our forces, a small team lead by myself will infiltrate the palace and confront Yagura. We will either kill him, or capture him alive. Presumably the latter," Mei explained.

"Why do you care so much if that monster dies? He's the reason we're doing this!" another Kiri ninja protested.

Mei nodded at Ao, who took another step forward.

"Because, while there's no solid evidence to back it up, we suspect that the Mizukage might be under somebody else's mind control.

After sharing our intel with our Konoha allies, we suspect that it might be the same man who orchestrated several attacks on Konoha: an Akatsuki under the name of Obito Uchiha," Ao told them.

Kakashi couldn't help but sigh in sadness upon hearing his former friend's name. "Kirigakure too, Obito? Is this because of what Kiri did to Rin?"

"So if we manage to expose the Mizukage, we will be able to end this while avoiding unnecessary bloodshed," Ao finished, taking a step back.

"Who will be part of the infiltration squad?" Zabuza eagerly asked. It was obvious he was dying to have another shot at fighting Yagura.

"Besides myself, it will only have one more ninja: Naruto Uzumaki," Mei told them.

"WHAT? You want my student to fight a Kage on his own!?" Kurenai indignantly asked. Asuma placed a hand on his girlfriend's shoulder, hoping to wordlessly calm her down.

"As far as I've been told, Naruto is a Special Jonin who has mastered senjutsu, and is the jinchuriki of the strongest Tailed Beast. Between the two of us, we should be able to subdue Yagura and whoever is guarding him," Mei explained. "I know that you might feel attached to him given he's your student, and he's pretty young as well. But don't worry, Naruto will be fine under my care."

"But even then... just you and him? Shouldn't a four squad man will have a higher chances of success?" Kurenai suggested.

Mei shook her head once again. "They will expect infiltrators. The fewer we are, the less chances of being spotted. And between the two of us, the only ninja we should worry about is Yagura himself."

"I understand. It doesn't mean that I have to like it, but I understand it," Kurenai regretfully said.

Mei smiled. "Good. Now that's out of the way, let's talk about the invasion in a more minute detail. Konoha's medical corps will be a key to keep our casualties to a minimum. The enemy will foresee that, so we should assign a division to keep them alive and..."

Mei and the rest of the Jonin there spent the rest of the day discussing the invasion plan.

...

Once lunchtime was over, the ship's cafeteria soon became empty, as everybody else went to spend their time elsewhere. Everybody except a certain blonde, who took advantage of the place's large tables and the current quietness in order to work in his current project.

Naruto had created multiple clones and spread them around the table, all working tirelessly on a seal that could disable those pesky chakra golems, while the original studied the theory he had available now.

Spread in front of him, there were several books and scrolls on fuinjutsu, as well as several crumpled papers, the result of a failed attempt at seals. After his latest attempt followed the same route, Naruto groaned, and rubbed his eyes.

"Naruto-kun? Are you still here?"

Naruto turned around and saw Hinata walking towards him.

"Yeah, I am. Why, I'm not sure," the blond half joked.

"Weren't you able to make the seal work?" Hinata asked, as she took a seat beside him.

Naruto shook his head. "Counter-seals are way more complex than regular seals. And the seals that power and direct those golems are way more complex than anything I've seen so far. If only dad was here to help me, or had more time..."

"Don't feel so bad. You did what you could. Besides, it's not that those golems are invincible," Hinata reassured him. "We beat them before."

"Yeah, but if I came up with a seal, it could help a lot with the invasion of Kirigakure," Naruto replied. "Besides, I'm an Uzumaki, and these are Uzumaki seals. I should be able to know how to undo them, right?"

"Oh, I see, so that's what's bothering you," Hinata realized.

"Huh? What do you mean?" Naruto asked.

"You're facing an enemy that uses knowledge of your clan to fight, and that is eating you on the inside," Hinata pointed out. "It's like if I fought an enemy with a stolen Byakugan."

Naruto let out a weary sigh. "And that's not the worst part. They seem to use it better than me, an actual Uzumaki! You'd think they have Uzumaki on their side or something!" Naruto complained.

"From what you told me, the fall of Uzushio happened many decades ago. They had a lot of time to learn about their stolen fuinjutsu art. Even with Shadow Clones, you can't hope to bridge such a massive gap," Hinata told him, as she placed a reassuring hand on his shoulder. "When all of this is over, I'm sure Mei-san will be more than happy to give you everything Kirigakure plundered from Uzushio."

"I hope so," Naruto said, not entirely convinced.

"And then, maybe we can convince Hokage-sama to create those golems for Konoha as well," Hinata suggested.

"That would be cool. I'm sure dad would love to open one of those up and see how it works. I'm sure we could even find a way to make them better!" Naruto excitedly said.

Hinata smiled. "Now that's the Naruto I know. Though, if you have some trouble with this, maybe you could ask Karin-san for help? I'm sure two Uzumaki are better than one."

"Even if that one can become one hundred?" Naruto cheekily replied.

"Does having a hundred clones increase your intelligence a hundredfold, or gives you a new hundred point of views and perspectives to see things?" Hinata replied, just as cheekily.

Naruto then frowned. "You know, Hinata, nobody likes a smartass."

Hinata, however, continued smiling, and kissed Naruto in the cheek. "But I know you love this smartass, Naruto-kun."

"How I hate that you're right," Naruto said, as he returned the kiss as well.

"But seriously, you should ask Karin-san. Maybe she can be of help," Hinata insisted.

"Eh, Karin-neechan is more into medicine than fuinjutsu, besides those chain thingies. And even then, I heard the invasion is going to be real soon, so I don't think we'll be able to pull it off," Naruto replied.

"In that case, then maybe you should try something more productive?" Hinata asked. "Do you want to spar with me a little?"

"Yes, please," Naruto said in an almost desperate tone, happy to have an excuse to get away from the books and scrolls.

...

"Are you sure nobody can hear us?"

Kakashi and Rin were inside an empty cabin that wasn't used by anybody at the moment. The door was locked, Rin was wise enough to know that such thing wouldn't be enough to secure the privacy she needed.

"Fuinjutsu is far from my specialty, but I'm really good at privacy seals," Kakashi said as he finished placing the last one on the wall.

"When did you learn to do privacy seals?" Rin asked.

"During my time in ANBU. They're pretty much a must. They made you do them so many times, you end being able to do them in your sleep," Kakashi answered.

Kakashi had told Rin about how Minato convinced Kakashi to join ANBU in order to get him over the deaths of his teammates, though by Kakashi's own admission, that hardly helped him. It wasn't until he became the sensei of a team of Genin that he started to rediscover his lost humanity.

Rin was hoping she could also help with that. As well as try to bring Obito back from his dark place.

"And done. Nobody will hear us, and nobody can enter this room," Kakashi said, then he crossed his arm, and his friendly demeanor grew a bit more serious. "Now, I believe there's something you should share with your old teammate."

Rin sighed heavily. Even if Kakashi was one of the persons she trusted the most, it was still very hard to open up to him. Or maybe because it was so important to him.

Wordlessly, Rin extended her hand at Kakashi, with the palm facing upwards. Kakashi took a look at her palm, seeing nothing at first, until a flower started to grow. The silver haired man's expression remained unchanged.

"So, you do have Wood Release. Interesting," Kakashi observed, in an almost boring tone.

Rin tilted her head, a bit confused. "'Interesting'? I have the First Hokage's Bloodline Limit, and that's all you have to say about it?"

"Rin, I remember as if it was yesterday how I used my Chidori to impale you through the heart. Yet here you are, fine and unharmed, talking to me as if nothing happened. I think I went past the point of these kind of things being surprising," Kakashi replied in the same casual tone.

Rin had to admit he had a point.

"Besides, you're not the only one in the village with that ability," Kakashi pointed out.

"I know. The Hokage's daughter has it as well," Rin stated.

"I mean besides her," Kakashi said. Rin was visibly surprised. "During my time with ANBU, I met this guy who also had Wood Release. Turns out, Orochimaru had experimented on him as a baby in order to reproduce the Wood Release. Of the fifty children he infused with the First's DNA, he's the only one who survived."

"That's... monstrous," Rin said, visibly horrified. She wanted to hope that Obito didn't do something similar in order to bring her back to life, but deep down she knew the answer.

"So, who else knows about this?" Kakashi asked.

"Just Hokage-sama and Tsunade-sama," Rin replied. "They told me not to tell anybody, at least until I could master my powers and grow stronger, since that would make me a prime target for kidnapping. I only used Wood Release back then because it was an emergency, and the fog could hide the nature of the jutsu I used."

"You did good in keeping it a secret, even from me. Don't worry, I won't tell anybody about your new abilities," Kakashi told her in a reassuring tone.

"That's... that's not all," Rin uneasily said, as she rubbed her arm.

"What do you mean?" Kakashi asked.

Once again, without saying a word, Rin pulled out a kunai, and much to Kakashi's shock, she cut her pinky finger off, before tossing it to a trashcan.

"Rin! What the-?" Kakashi asked in shock.

"Just wait," Rin calmly said as she held her four fingered hand.

In less than a minute, the wound stopped bleeding, and healed completely. Then, little by little, a small bulge appeared on her stump, and it grew longer until it became another finger.

"Can your friend do this too?" Rin asked.

This time, Kakashi was genuinely surprised. "No. At least, I think he can't."

"I can regenerate my whole hand as well. Though I didn't dare to check if I could regenerate an arm or a leg," Rin explained.

Kakashi knew that the First has a healing factor in a similar vein to Naruto's, in that he could heal in minutes wounds that would take hours or even days to normal people. But what Rin had was beyond that.

"I told you I don't think I'm the real Rin. I may not even be human anymore. Do you see why now?" Rin asked.

Kakashi could see why Rin was having such identity issues. Still, that didn't mean he wasn't going to help her.

"Hey, Rin, remember that time, during the Third Ninja War? Gai, you and me were completely surrounded by Iwa's forces. You went to call for help while Gai and I held up the enemy," Kakashi began.

"Yes, I do. I was really worried that I wouldn't be fast enough and that, by the time I could bring help, it would have been too late. But thankfully you two managed to survive," Rin finished the tale. "Why do you bring that up?"

"You remember that. If you do, you must be the real Rin, regardless of how much they modified your DNA. Because, what are we, if not the sum of our memories and experiences? And you clearly have the original Rin's memories, regardless if your body is the same one or a clone," Kakashi explained, then he placed a hand on his former teammate. "And in my eyes, that makes you the real Rin."

Rin held Kakashi's hand on her shoulder, as she pondered her older friend's words. She let out a sad sigh.

"I wish it was just that easy, Kakashi," Rin replied, as she slowly removed Kakashi's hand. "Anyway, is there anything else you want to know about me?"

"No, that's all."

"Alright then. I think I'm going to take a nap," Rin said, before exiting the safe room, with Kakashi leaving as well shortly after.

That's when an ink mouse came out of hiding, climbed inside the trashcan, took the severed finger, and ran away back to its master.

...

Tenten was alone resting in her cabin when somebody knocked the door. The brown haired girl got up from her bed, and opened the door. She smiled upon seeing her boyfriend standing there.

"Oh, Haku, hi!" Tenten happily greeted.

"Hello, Tenten-chan. May I enter?" Haku asked.

"Sure," she replied, moving aside to let him in. She immediately noticed that there was something wrong with the Ice Ninja. "Haku, are you okay? You look tense."

"We... we need to talk," he said, not without difficulty.

Tenten tensed up. Those four words usually signaled the end of a relationship. Worrying thoughts started to form in her mind. Did she do something wrong? Did Haku meet another girl, somebody from Kiri? However, her rational part decided to push them away and listen what her boyfriend had to say.

"What's going on Haku?" she asked.

"You know that in case we manage to oust Yagura, Zabuza will remain in Kiri as the new captain of the Seven Swordsmen," Haku explained.

Tenten nodded. "Yeah, I guessed so. How does affect you?"

"I told you how Zabuza-sama saved me from a certain doom, and in return, I became his faithful follower. That's why, if Zabuza-sama asks me to remain with him in Kiri, I will do so. Which means... if that happens, we will have to break up," Haku finally said.

"Wait, what?" Tenten asked, shocked. "But... aren't you happy in Konoha?"

"I am, but this doesn't have to do with me. I can't disobey Zabuza-sama," Haku regretfully told her. "Listen, you can be angry at me if you want. It was I who asked you to become my girlfriend, not realizing that this could happen, and for that, I will always be sorry. I will try to make it up for you, I promise."

Tenten felt an hurricane of emotions forming between her. She wanted to shout, to cry, to yell... but once again, her rational part stood triumphant. She breathed deeply, before making her question.

"Did Zabuza tell you that he wants you to continue with him?" Tenten asked.

"No, I didn't ask him. But I'm telling you this, just in case," Haku replied. "Listen, Tenten, Konoha has been great, and you were the best part of that. But I swore I'd help Zabuza-sama help to realize his ambitions, so if he wants me to be by his side, I have to obey."

"I see," Tenten replied. "Then if such thing happens... I'll move to Kirigakure with you."

This time, it was Haku's turn to be surprised. "What? But... you can't do that!"

Tenten raised an eyebrow. "And why not, exactly?"

"But... what about your life in Konoha? Your friends? Your family?" Haku asked. "I can't ask you to leave all that behind just for me."

"First of all, I don't have a family. I don't even have a last name, remember?" Tenten asked. "And second, I will be doing the exact thing you're going to do, so I don't think you have the right to call me out on it."

"Yes, precisely! Do you think it's easy for me not just to leave you behind, but my teammates, sensei and friends as well? I don't want you to go through that as well!" Haku insisted.

"Sorry, but that's not your decision to make," Tenten replied, as she moved to hold both of Haku's hands. "We will go through this together. We will be there for each other."

"There's nothing I can't tell you to make you change your mind, right?" Haku asked.

"I'm a strong, independent woman who takes her own decisions. So no," Tenten replied with a smirk.

Haku couldn't help but a smile. "Thank you, Tenten-chan. You're a great person, whom I don't deserve."

"Maybe you don't. Be thankful you're pretty cute," Tenten said as she leaned closer and kissed Haku in the lips.

...

Speaking of Zabuzza, the Swordsman Captain was sparring against the newest member of the Seven Swordsmen, Miyako Kiui, whom Mei had given the Helmet Splitter, with everybody else's approval.

"Come on, put more strength into it!" Zabuzza told her as he pressed his attack.

"I'm trying, dammit!" Miyako replied, dodging Zabuzza's fast swing.

"The bluntsword is a weapon meant for an all out offense! Stop dodging my attacks and attack me already!" Zabuzza insisted.

"I would, if you let me some room to breathe!" Miyako protested.

"Oh, sorry princess. Guess that you also expect the enemy to have such a consideration with you!" Zabuzza angrily snarled, as he attacked with even more ferocity.

"But this is just training!" Miyako countered.

"Training or not, there's no purpose without threat!" Zabuzza replied, as he continued his attack.

"ENOUGH!" she yelled.

Fueled by anger, Miyako nimbly dodged Zabuzza's latest swing, and taking advantage of her opponents slower movements, she dashed towards Zabuzza, and tossed the hammer half of the weapon at him. Zabuzza moved his sword aside, deflecting the flying hammer. Just as Miyako expected, as Zabuzza was left momentarily wide open, and took the chance to sink the axe half into his chest.

Zabuza then dissolved into a puddle of water.

"Not bad, girl, not bad," the real Zabuza said from behind. "You're getting it. Maybe you'll be able to get some skill with the bluntsword by the time we invade Kirigakure."

Miyako nodded and smiled in satisfaction.

From a box above them, Mei and the rest of the swordsmen watched the display, just like they did when Zabuza was testing Ameyuri and Chojuro.

"Do you think she's the right choice for the Helmet Splitter?" Ameyuri asked the Kage aspirant.

"I believe she is. However, despite what Zabuza's saying, she won't be nowhere near as ready for the invasion," Mei replied. "Carrying one of the Seven Swords will make her a target, and without the proper training to master it, that weapon will be like a bull's-eye painted on her back, rather than an asset."

"Pity. More swordsmen to our side would have been a boost to our troops' morale," Ameyuri lamented.

"They know we do have a fourth sword, even if they won't see it. We still have three Swordsmen," Mei countered. She then looked at Chojuro. "That's it, if all of them are completely recovered from the prison break."

"I am, Mei-sama," Chojuro replied, winding up his previously damaged arm to show that it was fine. "Like I said before, the Konoha medic-nin did a good job fixing it."

"Good. Because we're risking pretty much everything on this attack, and I don't want any of my soldiers to be in less than perfect condition, much less one of my swordsmen," Mei sternly said.

"Boy, I can't wait to get my hands on the remaining swords," Suigetsu commented. "Of the ones we can get, there's the Sewing Needle, and the Splatter... I think I could master both, but I'll have to choose one..." he then turned at Kumori. "Which one do you prefer?"

If Suigetsu was expecting to get an answer other than silence, he was about to get disappointed. Suigetsu unamusedly frowned.

"You're an idiot, you know that?" Suigetsu said before stomping out of the room.

"How long do you plan on doing that, Kumori-san?" Mei asked..

"As long as it's funny, Mei-sama," the cloaked man asked.

...

Land of Water, Mainland

A couple days later, the rebels abandoned the Kirigakure's Hope and established a hidden base within a forest near Kirigakure. Mei had sent messengers to her scattered forces, telling them to drop whatever they were doing and meet at the designated point. It was about time to gather all their forces and launch the invasion.

Even if there was still some unrest caused by a combination of lack of activity and the impending invasion, pretty much everybody were glad to be outdoors rather than trapped inside that ship. And most people found ways to keep themselves distracted until the time of attack.

One said person was Ino Yamanaka, who was looking for her best friend in order to talk for a bit, and maybe do some sparring. It has been a while since the last time she fought Sakura, and wanted to check which one of the two was stronger. However, she was starting to grow frustrated due her lack of result.

"Where is she?" Ino asked to no one in particular. "You'd think somebody with bright pink hair would be easy to find..."

As she wandered around, somebody drew her attention. A pale looking, black haired boy sitting by himself, and drawing in a sketchbook. Ino then remembered a conversation he had with Sakura some days ago in the ship about some creepy guy that insulted her, and this guy matched the description. And both she and Sasuke, but mainly the latter, believed that this guy was up to no good.

Pushed by curiosity, she decided to get to know the boy a bit better.

"Hello there," Ino greeted with her usual charm. "Name's Ino. What are you doing?"

The boy turned around and smiled at her. Ino could easily see it was a fake smile. "Hi, blondie. My name is Sai. And as you can see, I'm drawing."

Ino raised an eyebrow. "Blondie?"

"An affectionate nickname. I read in a book that friends give each other nicknames," Sai explained, never dropping his smile. "But the last time I used it, I got a negative response. This time, I decided to use a more objective nickname, based on your hair color."

Ino stared at him in disbelief. Where did this guy come from? It was certainly weird, and that constant, painfully fake smile wasn't helping.

"Okay, you clearly didn't read that book right, or that book is complete bullshit," Ino said, shaking her head. "While it's true that sometimes friends give each other nicknames, they do it when there's a lot of trust between them, not when you're meeting new people. In fact, calling a stranger by a nickname is something extremely rude to do."

Sai's smile disappeared, and was replaced by an expression of mild surprise. "It is?"

"Yes, it is. It's considered insulting in most of the times. Just because somebody might allow a friend to call them by a nickname, even an unflattering one, it doesn't mean they'll extend the same courtesy to a stranger," Ino explained.

"I see. By the way you talk, you seem to be versed in the art of socializing," Sai replied.

Ino's chest swelled in pride, taking his neutral observation as a compliment. "I'm more than 'just versed', Sai."

"Then you'll know what to do in case you want to get close to somebody? All my attempts have been unsuccessful, despite following many books' advice to the letter," Sai told her.

"Okay, first of all, drop the nicknames. And that fake smile as well, it will make people think you're a shady guy. At best," Ino stated. Then, she remembered her conversation with Sakura and realized that this boy might be shady.

"Oh. That was the opposite of the impression I wanted to transmit," Sai replied.

"That's the opposite of the impression anybody wants to transmit," Ino said, rolling her eyes.

"Once I do that, what do I do next?" Sai asked.

"If you want to make a good impression, asking people about themselves is a good way to let them know you care," Ino explained. "For example, I saw that you like to draw, so if I wanted to get close to you, I'd ask you about it."

"Showing interest in other people's interest..." Sai repeated. "Yes, I think it sounds logical. But what if I don't know anything about them?"

"Well, you ask them, of course," Ino replied, as if saying something obvious.

"But we're ninja, and we're supposed to conceal as much about ourselves as we can. If somebody else shares personal information, they're giving the enemy potential information to use against them," Sai explained.

Ino groaned loudly. Where did this guy come from? "Sai, I don't think that a hobby, or a particular interest in clothes, books or movies can be used against somebody in any serious way."

But then again, Ino did remember back in the academy how many girls did she shame because they wore clothes she thought were unfashionable. Oh well, those days were behind her now, and it was unlikely than young adults like themselves would fall into that.

"I see. And why can't I smile? People smile a lot," Sai pointed out.

"Yes, but it has to be a natural smile, not a forced one," Ino told him.

"And how do I make my smile natural?" Sai asked.

"... you really have issues, did anybody tell you that?" Ino asked, weirded out. There was being socially awkward, and there was being this. "But to answer your question, your smile will be genuine when it appears as the result of being happy."

"This sounds way more complicated than the book made it appear," Sai said, feeling a bit overwhelmed by this new information.

"It's easier than you think, you only need practice," Ino said, smiling.

"I will do that, then. I will follow your teachings from now onwards, Ino-sensei," Sai replied, smiling once again.

"Ino-sensei? Heh, I like the way it sounds," Ino chuckled.

Meanwhile, not far away from there, Naruto, Hinata and Haku were happily chatting, when they noticed their sensei walking towards them. Walking alongside Kurenai was a brown haired girl with purple markings on her cheek. A certain girl Haku remembered saving more than a year ago from Orochimaru's lair.

"Hey, Kurenai-sensei!" Naruto said upon seeing her approaching.

"Hello there. I'd like you to meet a friend of mine. Rin, these are Naruto Uzumaki, Hinata Hyuga, and Haku Yuki, whom you met already. Guys, this is Rin Nohara, a former classmate and friend of mine," Kurenai introduced the girl.

"It's a pleasure to meet you," Rin said, making a slight bow.

"Hey, you're that girl that came back from the dead, right?" Naruto pointed out, before Hinata nudged him in the ribs. "What?"

"Naruto-kun, be more tactful. That's not something she'd like to remember," Hinata gently chastised him.

"Oh, yeah. Sorry!" he apologized with a sheepish grin.

"It's okay. I guess that's a part of me that's impossible to ignore," Rin replied with a light chuckle.

"Anyway. Naruto, I'd thought you'd be interested in meeting Rin, given that she used to be your biological father's student, alongside Kakashi and, regrettably, Obito Uchiha," Kurenai said.

"Really? Wow, that's so cool! You have to be super strong if you were trained by the Fourth!" Naruto gushed.

Rin giggled sheepishly. "Well, not as much. I filled more of a supporting role while Kakashi and Obito did the heavy lifting. Though I'm trying to change that now."

"There's nothing wrong with fitting a more supporting role. From what I heard, you're a medical-nin, right? Keeping your teammates alive is something important as well," Hinata replied.

"Yeah! You have no idea how many times Hinata-hime saved our skins!" Naruto cheerfully added.

"Besides, I still have some catching up to do. Working at the hospital this year made me realize how much medical science has advanced. Besides, I don't think I can compete with a generation of medic-nin trained by Tsunade-sama herself," Rin said, rubbing the back of her head.

"Hey, don't sell yourself short. You performed an eye transplant in the middle of a battlefield when you were twelve. I'm sure you'll do fine," Kurenai encouraged her.

"From what I heard, you refused to rejoin Konoha's ranks when you returned to the village. What made you change your mind?" Haku asked.

"It was Kirigakure who kidnapped me and started the chain of events that led to my death and Obito's downfall. And that memory made me terrified of being in a battleground again. However, I didn't want to be afraid all my life, and that I needed to face my demons. Hence I'm here. And if everything goes fine, I will ask Hokage-sama to formally rejoin the ninja ranks," Rin told them.

"While my case isn't exactly the same, I did lose a lot thanks to Kirigakure as well. In fact, I'm a native of the Land of Water," Haku stated. "It might be too late for me, but I know I can help other children have a better childhood than mine."

"Yes, I hope that nobody else has to go through what I went through as well," Rin replied. "Once this war is over, I might be able to finally move on."

"That's the spirit! You can't let such an insignificant thing like dying get in the way!" Naruto cheered.

"Insignificant?" Kurenai asked, mildly upset.

"Hey, she came back from it! If she did that, then why can't everybody else?" Naruto asked.

Kurenai merely sighed and shook her head. Rin simply giggled.

"You know, despite how much you look like Minato-sensei, I'd say personality-wise you are more like Kushina-san. She was really energetic and carefree, and saw the good side of everything and everyone," Rin said.

"Naruto-kun is just the same. Nothing can keep him down, not for long at least," Hinata replied.

"Are you two a couple?" Rin asked, noticing the closeness between Naruto and Hinata. Upon receiving an affirmative nod from the two of them, she added: "You know, the two of you kinda remind me of Minato-sensei and Kushina-san, if they swapped personalities, hehe."

"What about you, Rin? Is there somebody special in your life?" Naruto cheekily asked.

Rin blushed a bit. "Well, not now. I used to have a crush on Kakashi back in the day, but given my current state, I don't think there will be anything beyond friendship between the two of us. Not that I'm looking for a relationship right now. My very existence is still kind of a mess."

"I do think that a relationship would help you a bit with your issues. Help you back into the good things of life," Kurenai intervened.
"Besides, you're pretty cute. Lots of boys would love to date you."

Before the conversation could continue, one of Mei's unofficial ANBU appeared before them, making his presence known immediately.

"Naruto Uzumaki, Mei-sama requires your presence," the ANBU stated in a cold and professional tone.

"She does? Oh well, better not to make her wait," Naruto said with a shrug as he accompanied the ANBU.

Hinata and Haku noticed their sensei tensing up when the ANBU made his request.

"Kurenai-sensei? Everything okay?" Hinata asked.

"I'd like to think that it is, but I'm not so sure," Kurenai uneasily replied.

"It seems that you know something we aren't aware of," Haku pointed out.

Kurenai sighed, and nodded. "I know why Mei wants to see Naruto. She's going to tell him about a special mission he has to do during the invasion."

"A special mission? Is it dangerous?" Hinata asked, a bit worried.

Kurenai nodded once again. "Mei wants Naruto to help her take down the Mizukage in combat."

...

Later that day, the sun was starting to set. Mei had ordered everybody to go to sleep early, since they would attack before dawn, and she wanted every one of her troops to be as rested as possible. So far, the only people not resting were the night watchers, who wouldn't take part in the attack for obvious reasons.

After having so many meetings and planning the last details of the invasion, the Mizukage aspirant was beyond exhausted. Then again, she doubt she would be able to sleep, given that she had to face Yagura himself in combat. If she and Naruto failed, then the whole invasion would be for naught.

Going to her private tent, Mei noticed that there was somebody else awake besides the sentries. The captain of her swordsmen, Zabuza Momochi, was sitting on the grass, at the edge of their camp, sharpening most of his weapons. Mei walked towards him.

"Shouldn't you be sleeping?" the redhead asked.

Zabuza stopped sharpening his kunai, turned his head to shot Mei a brief glare, before returning to his job at hand.

"I could ask the same thing to you," Zabuza retorted.

"The burden of leadership," was Mei's answer, before she decided to elaborate. "I had to give the plan the last touches before we're good to go. I was going to get some sleep, but then I saw you here. You know, you're one of my strongest soldiers, and I want you to be in your top condition for tomorrow."

"I'll go to sleep when I feel I have to. I don't know the rest of your cronies, but I don't sleep on being ordered," Zabuza replied.

Mei raised an eyebrow, before she sat down beside him. "Your attitude is not something I approve. But your performance so far has met my expectations, so I think I'm going to let this insubordination slip."

Zabuza grumbled something inaudible, and continued sharpening his weapons. He then stopped upon noticing that Mei was still there, sitting beside him. Their eyes met, and Mei shot him a friendly smile that left him completely unnerved.

"Well? Aren't you going to sleep?" an annoyed Zabuza asked.

"I was, but I realized that we didn't have a chance to be acquainted with each other a bit better, and this is a good chance, don't you think so?" Mei asked, in the same friendly tone.

"I agreed to fight for you and the rest of your naïve, goody-two shoes followers, not to befriend you. So scram," Zabuza grumbled.

"Now, now, that's not a way to talk to your superior," Mei replied, using a tone a mother would employ on a misbehaving child. "And naïve goody two-shoes? Seriously?"

"I'm telling things the way they are. You are a fool if you ever think that you and your merry friends will change anything," Zabuza replied.

"So far, we've been doing pretty good. What, you think Yagura and his forces are too much for us?" Mei asked.

"You're not fighting a war against Yagura, but against reality itself. This world is a cold and merciless place, where only the strong survive. Trying to pretend otherwise is to delude yourself," Zabuza said.

Mei frowned a little. "Now I want to think is the Blood Mist that's actually talking, and not you. I know that deep down, you aren't like that."

"Even if you read my profile in the bingo book, you know much less about me than what you think, woman," Zabuza harshly replied.

"I know you better than you give me credit for, Zabuza-kun," Mei said as she shot him one of her irritating smiles. "I'm not that much younger than you, we probably went through the same things. What I do know, though, is that beneath all your talk about the world being nothing but misery and death, and the only way to survive is being the top predator, there's a man that cares."

"You really think those Konoha tree huggers tainted me that much? That's insulting," Zabuza spat.

Mei chuckled, and shook her head. "No, I think that Konoha merely brought out your true self. For example, I know how you rescued and took care of that boy of the Yuki clan. An unempathic killer would have never done that."

"I only took Haku under my wing because of his unique abilities, not because I cared about his wellbeing. Do you have any idea how many other orphans I crossed paths with?" Zabuza retorted.

"Many, I'm sure. But even if your reasons to take Haku were selfish, it doesn't take a genius to see that the years you spend together, both traveling and in Konoha, you developed a bond with the boy, not unlike how a father would see his son," Mei countered.

"That's the biggest..." Zabuza tried to reply, but stopped. He wanted to say that Haku meant nothing to him, other than an useful underling. But for some reason, he couldn't. A battle of conflicting feelings started to take place inside of him, not for the first time.

Zabuza's pride wanted him to admit that no, there was no kind of emotional attachment to the boy. He didn't want to be seen as a softie. But there was another part of him that tried to refute that, and wanted him to admit that yes, he did love Haku as if he was his son. His inner battle continued as he remained silent, something Mei took little time to notice.

The redhead kunoichi's smile widened. "Did I hit a nerve, Zabuza-kun? Thought so. I know your parents were monsters, and raised you to be one. You were weak, and they despised weakness. That's why you did such a number on the Academy, and swore to never be weak again. But here's a little thing that will give you some much needed perspective: love isn't a weakness. Love is a source of strength, the biggest of them all. Because when you fight to protect somebody you care for, you're able to tap into a strength greater than any Bloodline Limit."

"Oh Kami, not you too..." the masked man groaned.

"Why do you think I have so many followers? Because I'm strong? Well yes, I'd lie if I said my power played no part in helping me lead the rebellion," Mei admitted. "But it only played a part. People don't want to live in a world of blood and fear, and will follow anybody that promises them something better. I like to think it's my conviction that plays the biggest role in making me a good leader. The fact that my ninja know that I'd die for any of them just like any of them would die for me."

Zabuza glared at her in disgust. "You sound exactly like those tree huggers. If Kiri under you is going to be like that, I might as well commit seppuku and save me the suffering."

Mei let out a laugh at Zabuza's statement. "Oh Zabuza-kun, you're so melodramatic, it's hilarious."

Zabuza narrowed his eyes at her. "Don't dare mock me."

"Then don't make it so easy," Mei replied with a shrug. "But seriously, it's quite obvious that there's something that's upsetting you. Something about Haku, I might add. So you'd better sort that out before the battle begins."

Zabuza inwardly sighed in relief when the rebel leader got up and walked to her private tent. However, rather than bring him relief, he felt even more uneasy than before. He wanted to shake off Mei's words about he and Haku, but found himself unable to.

"Haku... what I'm going to do with you?"

...

When Mei returned to her private tent, she saw that there was somebody in front of it, presumably waiting for her: Kurenai Yuhi. She clearly wanted to talk with her, probably about Naruto, and she was really not in the mood.

"Hello, Mei-san. I know it's late, but there's something I wish to talk with you," Kurenai told her.

Mei let out a weary sigh. "Listen, I know you're worried for Naruto, but you must understand-"

"You didn't even let me begin! And that wasn't what I wanted to talk about!" Kurenai protested, silencing the rebel leader. "Though yes, it's about Naruto. Here, take this."

Kurenai handed Mei something. Mei saw they were several sealing tags she was unable to identify.

"What is this?" Mei asked the red eyed Jonin.

"If you plan to have Naruto fight Yagura, he will more than likely be forced to use the Nine Tails' chakra. However, Naruto's control over the beast's power is very limited, and the demon may take control over him. That's why Hokage-sama created those tags. If such thing happens, slap one of them on him, and they will suppress the Nine Tails' chakra."

Mei studied the sealing tags in her hand, before nodding. "Got it. I wished you told me about it earlier, but thanks. I'll keep what you told me in mind."

"You should also know that the tags aren't infallible. If Naruto has more than four tails' worth of chakra, they won't work, so use them the moment he starts losing control," Kurenai told her.

"Again, thanks a lot for this. But now we should both go to sleep. Tomorrow we will have to face a daunting task."

...

Akatsuki Hideout, Unknown Location

Inside a dark, underground cavernous chamber there was a massive, grotesque statue, composed by a huge head with nine closed eyes and wide open mouth, and two arms separated from it. On each fingertip there was a shadowy figure, distorted and translucid, almost as if it was actually an spectral avatar rather than an actual person.

Floating in front of the statue was a large man in a red clad armor. There was a red colored stream of energy coming from the man's mouth and flowing into the statue's, as if it was draining the man's very soul. And even if it wasn't the case, the man would be dead once the process was complete, which happened in a few minutes.

The flow of energy ceased, and the man's lifeless body fell to the ground. Then, one of the statue's closed eyes opened.

"The first Tailed Beast has been successfully extracted and sealed into the statue," the leader of the group said. "But this is nothing but the beginning. There are eight other Jinchuriki that need to be captured and their Beasts harvested."

"Regarding that, we have news that might be of interest," Zetsu's white half interceded. "The Kirigakure rebels are going to invade the village. It's more than likely that they will try to kill Yagura."

"If that's the case, then we need to evacuate him as soon as possible. We can't afford letting any jinchuriki die," the leader replied.

"Kirigakure, you say? I volunteer to go, then. It will be nice see how my former village is doing," a tall man with a sharp grin mentioned.

"You know Kirigakure the best out of us, Kisame, so I find your request acceptable," the leader then looked at a feminine looking man whose hair was styled in a ponytail. "Deidara, you'll accompany him for this mission. Your air support will be necessary for this mission to succeed."

"Alright then. It would be a great chance to show my art to those Mist whackos," Deidara replied, grinning widely.

"If nobody has anything else to say, then the meeting is over. We will gather again once the Jinchuriki of the Three Tails is safe and secure within our grasp," the leader declared.

Then, all ten figures vanished, and the statue disappeared in a puff of smoke.

OMAKE #1: ZABUZA'S NOT A VERY NICE GUEST

After successfully bringing Tazuna to his home in the Land of the Waves, Zabuza was now staying at the bridge builder's house, since his job wouldn't be done until the bridge was finished and completed.

"Thank you for protecting my father, Zabuza-san," Tsunami said, as she placed a cup of tea in front of the swordsman. "You're helping this country immensely."

Zabuza snorted, as he lowered his mask to drink the tea. "Don't thank me. This is just a job, and I'll make sure it's finished."

"Yeah, sure. All will you make is getting all of us killed," a new, high pitched voice whined.

Zabuza turned around, and saw a kid, no older than ten, glaring at him with his arms crossed.

"The hell did you say, brat?" Zabuza snarled at the boy.

"Inari! Don't be so rude to Zabuza-san! He's going to protect all of us!" Tsunami chided the kid. "I'm sorry Zabuza-san, this whole situation affected my son way too much, and he doesn't feel that good..."

"Why are you even trying? Nobody can oppose Gato! Everybody who does ends up dead!" Inari insisted once again. "Not only you will die, but you will get all of us killed too!"

Suddenly, the entire room was flooded by a vicious killing intent. It was mostly focused on Inari, but it was so intense, Tazuna and Tsunami could feel it as well. Inari felt an oppressive force gripping his heart, as he was invaded by a sense of dread unlike any other. Clutching his chest, he looked at Zabuza, who stared back at him with bloodshot eyes. For some reason, there was an aura around the swordsman that made him look inhuman, demonic even.

"Tell me, brat," Zabuza's voice sounded like he was death itself.
"DO YOU THINK GATO IS WORSE THAN I AM!?"

"Ah... ahh... WAAAAAHHHHHHHHH!" Inari couldn't take it anymore, and ran upstairs while crying loudly, as tears of pure terror streamed down his cheeks.

Zabuza dispelled the killing intent, and went to drink from his cup of tea. "Your tea is excellent, Tsunami-san. Might I have another cup?" Zabuza asked, while he realized the way Tazuna and Tsunami were glaring at him. "What? What did I do?"

OMAKE #2: MEI AND KURENAI'S MEETING - ALTERNATE ENDING

"Hello, Mei-san. I know it's late, but there's something I wish to talk with you," Kurenai told her.

Mei let out a weary sigh. "Listen, I know you're worried for Naruto, but you must understand-"

"You didn't even let me begin! And that wasn't what I wanted to talk about!" Kurenai protested, silencing the rebel leader. She then looked away, and blushed a little. "There's something I need to take out of my chest. Listen, Mei-san... I like you. I like you a lot."

The rebel leader was taken aback. "You what?"

"There, I said it. Sorry if I made you feel uncomfortable, but I couldn't take it anymore..." Kurenai said as she started to leave.

"Kurenai, wait!" Mei said, grabbing her hand. "The truth is... I like you too!"

"Seriously?" Kurenai asked.

"I thought I was only into men, but seeing such a radiant beauty as yourself, who's also a magnificent kunoichi... I feel that we're bound to be together."

"Oh, Mei-chan!" Kurenai squealed, as the two women embraced and shared a kiss in their lips.

Giggling, Mei grabbed Kurenai's hand, and the two of them headed towards the former's private tent, where they spend the night exploring each other's body, and opening themselves to a new world of beautiful feelings of carnal pleasure unlike any others...

...

"... that would only be the beginning of their road together," Jiraiya said, finishing writing the scene. Putting down the pencil, he looked at his latest work, and smiled. "Boy, I outdid myself with this one. Icha Icha Civil War will sell like crazy!" Jiraiya then frowned as he reread the scenes leading to that moment. "... I should better change Mei and Kurenai's names. I have the feeling that being Hokage won't deter them from trying to make me horrible things if they find out what I wrote about them..." the Sannin decided, as he erased the Kunoichi's names and replaced them with something else.

Author's Note: Yeah, I know, it was a slow chapter, but the story needed a moment of calmness between the assault on the Crimson Citadel, and the invasion of Kirigakure. Which will begin the next chapter, and I'm confident it will be epic. And don't worry, we're now on the home stretch of this arc, since I know some readers aren't enjoying this arc as much as past ones. Besides, the best of this arc is yet to come ;)

Boy, I really like writing scenes with Zabuza and Mei together. They have a lot of chemistry and bounce off each other pretty well, don't you think so? Too bad I can't write their impending relationship in more depth without bringing the story's pace to a screeching halt. Thankfully this arc won't be the last time these two will appear.

And yeah, Tenten isn't breaking up with Haku even if that means moving to Kiri. I'm going to say this now: once a couple forms, it's here to stay, so no, there aren't going to be any breakups. I don't want romantic drama to overshadow the mostly adventure-oriented plot of this fanfic.

As for the omakes, the first is canon. The second one... perhaps? XD

Onto the first omake, well, everybody knows how much I dislike the Wave Arc, not because of the arc itself, but how often it's copy-pasted into fanfics. And from that arc, Inari is the character I like the least, and I don't think my sanity can withstand seeing him being a little bitch for the billionth time. So yeah, I'd found funny the idea of Inari doing his little pessimistic speech to somebody like Zabuza, which, well, didn't end as he expected XD

Thanks to gio08 for betareading this chapter.

Anyway, the ending of the Kirigakure Civil War arc is even closer now, and Akatsuki joins the fray, with Deidara and Kisame (remember that I said all seven swords would be featured in this arc) chosen to capture Yagura, and Naruto if they see him. How will the invasion end? Find out in two weeks. In the meantime, leave a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Invasion of Kirigakure, Part I

Author's Note: So, after much buildup, here we are. The invasion of Kirigakure is about to begin! Both this and the next part are two of the most action filled chapters I've written so far. I hope you enjoy them:

Chapter 48:

The Invasion of Kirigakure, Part I

or

Clash of the Seven Swordsmen

After many preparations, today was it. The day the rebels would march over Kirigakure and liberate it from its bloodthirsty and more than likely manipulated Kage. While the morale was high, most of them were rather nervous. Assaulting a Great Village would fall under what was considered major warfare. The battle wouldn't be easy.

As they approached, the mist became more and more dense. The Kiri ninja explained to their Konoha allies that they kept a permanent mist barrier surrounding the village for defensive purposes. But while said mist would hinder Konoha ninja, it would do little to stop other Kiri ninja. And after some time walking, they could see the village gates through the mist. Mei, heading the march, stopped and held one hand, and the rebel army stopped as well.

"Bring me our siege specialist," Mei commanded one of her ANBU.

The masked ninja nodded and vanished. A minute later, he reappeared alongside Sasuke Uchiha.

"There's the gate, Sasuke-kun. You think you can take it down on your own?" Mei asked, a bit skeptical.

Sasuke glared at the rebel leader, his Sharingan flaring to life. "Don't underestimate the Uchiha Clan."

Sasuke took a few steps forward, and got ready. He started to gather his chakra, as his normal Sharingan morphed into the Eternal Mangekyo Sharingan, and flinched when he was forced to relive the time he believed he had killed Naruto. Even if he knew the loudmouth blond was alive, the anguish felt very real.

He started to glow with a purple aura, as a purple, ghostly ribcage appeared around him. More bones started appearing as it formed the upper half of a giant humanoid skeleton, which was then covered in flesh, and then an armor. The chakra construct raised its left arm, and a bow was generated on its wrist. Pulling the string with the other arm, a huge arrow covered in black flames was generated.

"Infernal Release: Susanoo Black Fire Bolt!"

Sasuke released the arrow, which pierced the gate with such force it tore it off of its hinges, leaving a wide entrance for the rebels to get into the city.

His job done, Sasuke dispelled the chakra construct and fell on his knees, panting heavily. His teammates quickly rushed to check him.

"Sasuke-kun, are you okay?" Shizune asked. "Do you need healing?"

Sasuke shook his head and got back on his feet again. "No, I'm okay. Using Susanoo is very taxing, but I will be fine in a couple minutes."

"Even then, try to take it easy," Shizune advised.

After seeing Sasuke's attack, Mei was a bit stunned at such display of power. "Wow, and here I thought he was exaggerating. Worth every ryo indeed." She then turned to her troops. "The gates are down! Everybody move out! Kirigakure is ours for the taking! Today, the world will see the end of the Blood Mist!" she yelled as she charged forwards.

Her words were replied by a loud chorus of war cries as the rest of the rebels rushed into the village behind their leader

Meanwhile, as the bulk of the army rushed into the city, two lone figures hidden nearby cautiously watched.

"So, how long until they notice that's a clone?" Naruto asked his partner.

As opposed to her usual elegant blue dress, the Mizukage candidate was wearing the Kirigakure ANBU uniform, with a happuri-shaped Kirigakure forehead protector instead of a white and red mask, but with the standard sword, even if Mei's skill with such weapon was less than zero. Her extremely long hair was now tied into a more manageable braid that fell down her back.

"My Earth Clones are very durable, can last days if undamaged, and can even use some jutsu of moderate intensity. How about you, are you ready?" Mei asked.

Before taking one last glance at the two clones sitting in the lotus position, Naruto gave Mei a thumbs up as well as a confident grin.

"Shouldn't you activate your Sage Mode already? Remember that we're going to face a Kage who happens to be a perfect Jinchuriki," Mei reminded him.

"But... Sage Mode is active!" Naruto told her.

Mei raised an eyebrow. "That's it? Some yellow eyes and orange eye-shadow? When you told me about it you made it sounded far more impressive."

"It might not look much on the outside now, but once you see what can I do in Sage Mode, you'll change your mind," Naruto told her.

"I'll take your word for it. Now come on, let's see if we can get into the Mizukage's Palace without drawing much attention," Mei replied as she and Naruto sneaked into the village.

...

Mizukage's Palace

Oblivious to the chaos that was about to be unleashed on his village, Yagura was in his office, doing the paperwork his job usually entailed. He thought it would be a day like any other, when the doors of his office were burst open. A kunoichi with short blond hair entered the room, flanked by two ANBU. She looked rather shaken.

"Yagura, the rebels are here! They took down the gates as if they were nothing, and are pouring into the village!" the woman almost screamed.

Yagura calmly stopped doing paperwork, got up from his chair, and fixed a stare on the woman. "Calm down, Aiko-chan. You're a ninja, please behave like one. When did the attack happen?"

"About five minutes ago. What are your orders?" she asked, still visibly restless.

Yagura let out a sigh. "So, Mei finally made her move. She came sooner than I expected. Tell me, Aiko-chan, was she spotted among the invaders?"

"Yes, she was spearheading them. What about it?" Aiko replied.

"Then this attack is just a distraction. According to the messages we got from the Crimson Citadel, they managed to break in by sending a team of infiltrators in order to open the dock gates. I believe she will try the same trick. Send half our forces to meet them, and send reinforcements to the dock. I wouldn't discard infiltrators working to neutralize the defenses of our docks as we speak," Yagura told her.

Aiko appeared a bit more calmed now, though she was still uneasy. "What if the rebels won't attack the docks?"

"Then moving our troops from the docks to wherever they're needed won't be hard. It's a small village after all. Just in case, I'll activate the Chakra Golems. But truth be told, the fight for the village is worthless," Yagura cryptically said.

"What do you mean?" Aiko replied.

"Mei will use the ongoing battle as a cover to sneak a team of assassins into the palace and murder me. Knowing her, she'll lead the group herself. All we have to do is wait for her here, and kill her. With their leader dead, the rebellion will be easy to dismantle," Yagura explained.

"Sounds risky, but looks like our best bet. But first, I need to make sure Dagura is safe," Aiko replied.

"Do not worry for our son. The rebels aren't after him. Besides, he's also a ninja. The battleground is where he needs to be," Yagura chided his wife.

Aiko bit her lip. "But... okay, yes, you're right."

"Besides, I'm going to need you here when that redheaded whore and her assassins arrive," Yagura told her.

...

The initial onslaught managed to push the first wave of Kirigakure defenders with relative ease. However, as it happened during the assault on the Crimson Citadel, the moment the rebel forces started to spread out, their advance was considerably slowed down as the ensuing battles became more even for both sides.

Zabuza had asked Mei to be assigned to the same group as Haku, so the two of them could fight this battle together.

"Here I am, again, trying to take over Kirigakure, even if I won't be the next Mizukage if we succeed," Zabuza thought, as he brutally fought the opposition. "Though even then, I'll be closer to being Mizukage than I've ever been. Plus this time, it seems that I will be on the winning side!"

Haku was not only fighting for the man who had given him a second chance at life, but for himself as well. It was thanks to Kirigakure and Yagura that he lost his family, and people with Bloodline Limits were seen in the Land of Water as monsters to hunt down. Besides helping Zabuza achieve his ambitions, he was also making sure no other child like him would have to go through the same thing he did.

"Ice Release: Ice Dragon Crystal Blast!"

Haku conjured a dragon made of ice from his hands, which flew towards a cluster of red clad Kirigakure ninja, dashing towards them. The dragon crashed against the group, shattering in a multitude of razor sharp ice shards that flew in all directions.

"They have an Ice Release User! I thought all of them were killed!" A Kirigakure defender shouted in disbelief.

"Not all of them, obviously. Anyway, let's finish the job ourselves!" another ninja replied.

"Yes, I'm the last of the Yuki clan. But you're truly foolish if you believe that my clan will disappear today," Haku coldly replied as he made several hand seals. "Ice Release: Piercing Icicle Shot!"

This time, Haku made a rather large spear made of ice, which flew at the group of ninjas. However, this time he wouldn't catch them off guard, since one of them was making hand seals.

"Earth Release: Earth Style Wall!"

The Kiri defender slammed his palms into the ground, raising a thick stone wall that blocked the ice jutsu.

"They can use Earth Release, which can counter my jutsu," Haku said to nobody in particular. He then looked at Hinata, who was dispatching another Kiri ninja. "Hinata-san, think you can crack that wall?"

After she was done, Hinata looked back at Haku and smiled. "Leave that to me." The young Hyuga's hands flew through hand seals, before casting both hands forward.

"Lightning Release: Thunder Fang!"

Hinata's hands crackled with electricity as she released a mass of lightning from them. The shapeless mass soon took the form of a giant lion head. The lightning lion opened its mouth, letting out a metallic sounding roar before crashing against the wall, blowing it up to pieces.

Taking advantage of the opening, Zabuza dashed towards the cluster of enemies and started to engage them all at once. Despite the numerical advantage, they were having a hard time keeping up with the Demon of the Hidden Mist.

"The hell? Zabuza's back!" a Kiri ninja shouted.

"Indeed I am. I came here to finish what I started so many years ago. Now you can do the smart thing and run with your lives, or die pointlessly against me. I personally find the second option more amusing," Zabuza coolly told them.

"You traitorous bastard! You don't deserve that-" a Kiri ninja was about to say, but he was interrupted when something happened.

Suddenly, circular sealing patterns started to appear across the village. The rebels have already seen this once, they knew what was going to happen.

"Everybody, get ready! Here they come!" Kurenai shouted.

And as expected, after a brief burst of smoke, large Chakra Golems were summoned by the sealing patterns. The machines instantly activated with a metallic hum, and they quickly began to search for the invaders and end their lives.

"These golems are probably bound to the Mizukage. Hopefully Naruto and Mei will finish their mission before we suffer too many losses," Kurenai hoped as she prepared to fight an incoming golem.

...

Not far from there, Naruto and Mei were moving through the village as silently as possible. Naruto felt the need to join his fellow Konoha ninja in the battlefield, especially those who were having a hard time against the golems, but in deep down he knew doing so would endanger more lives than it would save them.

"How long until we reach the palace?" an impatient Naruto asked.

"I think we're halfway there. If we keep this pace, it shouldn't take us more than half an hour to get there." Mei replied.

"I see. In that case-" Naruto then stopped and perked up. "I think somebody saw us. I'm sensing a group of four ninja getting closer. All of them Jonin level."

Mei raised an eyebrow. "You didn't tell me you were also a sensor."

"Normally I'm not, but Sage Mode also gives its user sensing abilities," Naruto explained. "Should we hide?"

"No. They know we're here. Better take them out now than let them warn Yagura that we're going after him," Mei replied. Then again, she knew Yagura would be expecting her and would prepare accordingly.

"And here they come."

And just like Naruto said, four red-clad ninja landed in front of them and unsheathed their katanas at once. Judging by their uniforms and older faces, it was easy to tell they were Jonin even if Naruto wasn't there to gauge their power.

"Mei Terumi. What's a pretty traitor like you doing here, accompanied by a Konoha child?" one of the Jonin asked, a tall muscular man with short brown hair.

"Yagura said he wanted you alive," another one said, this one being slimmer, with black hair tied in a slipknot. "But he also said that he'll understand if you have to die."

"Which means we don't have to hold back!" a third one, a burly man with a large nose and a soul patch, said in delight as he charged towards the duo. "DIE!"

Naruto met the man's charge with one of his own, and sank his fist on the man's gut, much to his disbelief.

"H-How...?" he babbled.

Naruto smirked, and delivered a punch with his other arm, sending the Kiri ninja flying into the horizon, much to everybody's amazement.

"Kyoko!" the black haired Kiri ninja cried.

"How... how that kid was able to do that? Such strength..." the fourth ninja, a younger man with light blue hair stammered.

"Snap out of it, you cowards!" the muscular man yelled, as he made hand seals. "And don't let your guard down! Earth Release: Mountain Hammer!"

The muscular ninja pulled out a gigantic hammer made of stone from the ground and swung it at Naruto from above. The blond Sage merely raised a hand, which was enough to block the strike. The hammer's wielder was left speechless.

"Impossible!"

"Sorry, that word isn't in my vocabulary," Naruto casually said as he snatched the hammer from his hands and swung it at the muscular ninja, sending him flying against a building.

"That boy's too strong! Fall back!"

The other two ninja attempted to flee, but they found that Mei was cutting their escape.

"Aw, you don't plan to leave without letting me have my share of fun, right?" Mei cooed as she made several hand seals. "Water Release: All Devouring Maelstrom!"

The two remaining Kiri ninja found themselves inside a violent water tornado which sent them flying in different directions.

"Good job," Naruto told her.

"You too. You were right, Sage Mode is way more impressive than it looks at first glance," Mei admitted.

Naruto couldn't help but smirk. "Trust me, you haven't seen anything yet."

"In that case, we better get going. I'd hate to keep Yagura waiting," Mei replied.

Naruto nodded, and the two of them headed towards the now visible Mizukage Palace.

...

"Shadow Imitation Jutsu!"

Shikamaru's shadow successfully trapped two Chakra Golems, freezing them on the spot. But the mechanical monsters' strength put a strain on the Nara, who struggled to keep them contained.

"Come on Choji! It won't last much longer!" Shikamaru urged.

Choji rushed towards the golems, and clapped his hands together.
"Partial Multi Size Jutsu!"

Choji's arms swelled up, tripling in size. The Akimichi Clan heir smashed one of the trapped golems with a powerful punch before smashing the remaining one to bits. Shikamaru was allowed to cancel his family's signature jutsu and fell on his butt, panting.

"I don't think I'll be able to do that too many times..." the lazy Nara complained.

"Shikamaru, watch out!" Ino called out.

Suddenly, two Kiri ANBU were leaping at Shikamaru, their katanas unsheathed. The Nara quickly got up and pulled out two kunai in a hopeless attempt to parry the two incoming strikes, but fortunately for him, something else took care of that.

In less than a second, a redheaded woman stood between him and his attackers, parrying their blows with her own swords, resulting in a loud CLANG. The woman, Ameyuri, struggled against the attackers in a double blade lock.

"Goddammit Pineapple Head, get your head out of the clouds!" Ameyuri complained, before the two red clad Kiri ninja overwhelmed her and pushed her back.

"Troublesome woman. I'd like to see you trying to take on those golems..." Shikamaru murmured.

"More enemies incoming!" Ino warned.

And true to her words, a batch of Kiri defenders arrived the scene. Some unsheathed their swords, while others made several hand seals.

"We'll take care of them. Shikamaru, Choji, with me!" Asuma said as he started to make hand seals of his own. "Fire Release: Ash Pile Burning!"

The youngest son of the Third Hokage spewed a cloud of gunpowder from his mouth, while Shikamaru and Choji prepared another jutsu.

"Fire Release: Great Flame Jutsu!"

Both Shikamaru and Choji expelled a large stream of flames from their mouth directly into the cloud of gunpowder, igniting it instantly, resulting in a massive explosion that shielded them from the barrage of water jutsu aimed at them.

"Good work, but we need to-URK!"

Suddenly, what appeared to be a gigantic needle with ninja wire attached to it came out of the ensuing cloud of smoke, impaling Asuma through the shoulder. Somebody pulled the wire backwards, making the sword to fly back as well. An extremely tall and lanky man wearing an ANBU mask flew out of the cloud, caught the sword-needle and fast as lightning, wrapped Asuma in ninja wire, leaving him completely immobilized.

"Asuma-sensei!" Shikamaru cried.

"You must have a death wish coming here," the masked man said in a cold tone as he raised his strange weapon above Asuma. "Let me grant you that wish then!"

However, before he had the chance to kill he Tactical Squad's sensei, a pair of spinning swords coated in electricity flew at him.

"Shit!" the man cursed as he jumped back in order to avoid the swords, thus being forced to release Asuma.

Upon missing their mark, the swords returned to Ameyuri's hands.

"Leave that man alone, Kushimaru. It's me whom you have to fight," Ameyuri declared, as she took a step forward.

"You know him?" Ino asked.

Ameyuri nodded. "Kushimaru Kuriare. ANBU Captain, and one of the Seven Swordsmen of the Mist. The two remaining ones still loyal to Yagura."

"So that giant needle is one of the Seven Swords then?" Ino asked again.

"It might not look like much, but in the hands of an expert, it's a deadly weapon. And I'm afraid Kushimaru more than qualifies as an 'expert'," Ameyuri explained.

"Yeah, you got that right. And if you think I'm going to lower myself into a duel with you, then you're even crazier than your traitorous friends! Just because you have Raiga's swords doesn't mean you're part of the Seven, little girl!" Kushimaru retorted.

Ameyuri's face contorted with rage. "Little girl!? I'm eighteen, you asshole! That's it, you're going down!"

"I have no time to deal with brats with delusions of grandeur! Everybody, kill that girl, and take back the swords!" Kushimaru ordered his men.

A chorus of "yes, sir!" replied to the masked swordsman's order.

...

"Medic!" an injured Kiri rebel cried in anguish.

"Incoming! Sasuke-kun, cover us!" Sakura called.

"You've got it," Sasuke coolly replied as his hands flew through hand seals. "Fire Release: Great Fireball Jutsu!"

Sasuke poured as much chakra as he could into the attack, and expelled a massive fireball towards the group of red clad Kiri ninja. Unfortunately, a golem blocked the attack, and absorbed it into its body.

"Those walking pieces of scrap are going to be trouble..." Sasuke grumbled.

"Not so boastful anymore, I see," Suigetsu chuckled, as he casually engaged an enemy ninja.

"Those things are hard to take down. And I didn't see you defeat one either," Sasuke snapped back. "Sakura would be able to bring them down in one punch, but she's busy tending the injured."

"Sakura's not the only one able to do that!" Karin protested, as she rushed forward while making a hand seal. "Shadow Clone Jutsu!" Five Karin clones popped into existence besides the original, and ran towards the golem in a tight formation. "I'd like to see Sakura doing this! Six Fists of Fury!"

Karin and her five clones leaped at a golem, their fists reared back, and wreathed in an intense, fire-like glow. The six punches connected, instantly shattering the mechanical construct. The original Karin wiped her hands, and her mouth curved into a confident grin, not unlike certain blond.

"Ha! What about-"

But Karin's gloats were interrupted by a chain of massive explosions engulfing her, that shook the ground and send burst of winds into every direction.

"KARIN!" multiple Konoha ninja cried, her teammates among the loudest.

But when the smoke dispelled, all what was left were the charred remains of a log.

"Whew, that was a close one! Better not get distracted like that," the real Karin said, panting heavily, as she walked towards Sasuke and Suigetsu. "Did you see where the explosions came from?"

"I'm almost sure they came from that guy," Suigetsu said, pointing out to the direction of the explosion.

Flanked by multiple red clad Kiri ninja, there was a man wearing a loose, pin striped light brown shirt, black pants and striped leg warmers. He had a brown beard tied into two braids, thick lips, and one of his eyes was covered by an eye patch. He was carrying a rather weird looking sword.

"Damn, it's been a while since somebody managed to avoid my explosion jutsu. Just for that, I'll make sure your death is extra painful, girl," the weird man threatened. He then looked at the white haired boy near her, and the one eyed man smiled wickedly. "Suigetsu! Wasn't expecting to see you again. Still in the losing side, as I can see."

"Who's this man?" Sasuke asked, as he cautiously eyed the new enemy. "A Swordsman of the Mist?"

"Yes, he's Jinpachi Munashi, wielder of the Splatter. His sword is also a scroll of self replicating explosive tags. With it, he can create an infinite number of explosions," Suigetsu explained, before he fixed his eyes on the swordsman, and snarled. "Shut your trap, Jinpachi! I am where I have to be."

"Really? Because somebody like you would fit better with us in the Blood Mist, than with that deluded woman. I mean, I can understand Zabuza siding with her being an even earlier traitor, but you? There's nothing that you love most than the smell of blood impregnating the air," Jinin replied.

"And you think I'll join the side that killed my brother?" Suigetsu incredulously asked.

Jinpachi merely shrugged. "Hey, he got it coming. He thought that being the best Swordsman who ever lived gave him free reign to do what he pleased. We simply proved him wrong," Jinpachi then frowned. "And it seems that you're going to follow his footsteps to an early grave."

"You think so? Let's see who's going to who's funeral!" the young swordsman shouted as he charged forward.

"Suigetsu, wait!" Another Kiri ninja called, to no avail.

Jinpachi's smirk widened as he adopted a fighting stance. "Blastsword Ninja Art: Exploding Piledriver!"

Jinpachi slammed his sword into the ground, creating a line of explosions towards Suigetsu. The explosions caught the white haired boy, who was launched backwards before slamming back into the ground. Or at least, what was left of him.

"Oh Kami, that explosion liquefied him!" Karin screamed in a mix of horror and disgust.

"I'm... I'm not dead!" Suigetsu exclaimed as his head reformed from the liquid. The rest of his body started to reform as well. "It takes more than that to take me out!"

"Oh, I have more than that, trust me. Yet I know that the moment you lack the chakra to sustain your Hydrification Jutsu, you'll be as good as dead," Jinpachi laughed. Looking around, he noticed two Chakra Golems walking closer, and an idea formed on his mind. "In fact, let's test how strong is that ability. Golems, focus on Suigetsu!"

While they didn't make any kind of acknowledgement, the golems started to walk towards the white haired swordsman, now fully reformed, who instinctively took a couple steps backwards.

"Man, this ain't look good..." Suigetsu whimpered. The golems then raised their respective arms with wrist mounted cannons, and released two streams of fire at the Hozuki younger brother. "IT LOOKS WORSE THAN BAD!" Suigetsu yelled as he tried to avoid the streams of fire aimed at him.

Karin took a step forward, and made a hand seal.

"Adamatine Sealing Chains!"

Chains made of pure chakra shot from Karin's back, and wrapped themselves around one of the Golems, immobilizing it. The chakra absorbing seals started to flicker, but they did not activate.

"Whoa, it's not absorbing your jutsu? What gives?" Suigetsu asked.

"These chains are able to bind the chakra of those wrapped around them, even mechanical monsters like these ones!" Karin explained, as she struggled to keep the golem in check. "Now go and deal with the other!"

Suigetsu didn't have to be told twice, as the other mechanical construct stomped at him. It raised its arm cannon once again.

"Oh no, you won't!" Suigetsu raised an arm as well and a huge water sphere started to form. "Water Release: Water Missile!"

Suigetsu fired the water blast, which collided against the stream of fire, resulting in an explosion of steam. Before the golem had any time to react, Suigetsu was already leaping at it, his fist reared back.

"Take this, you walking piece of scrap! Water Release: Great Water Arm Jutsu!"

Suigetsu's right arm swelled up, becoming unnaturally large and muscular, and used it to deliver a devastating punch to the golem, which broke apart upon absorbing the impact. The golem done for, Suigetsu's arm returned to normal, and the boy started to pant heavily.

"Aw man, this is going to hurt a lot tomorrow," Suigetsu complained.

"Ew. That was so gross," Karin mentioned as she used her super strength to tear the golem to pieces with her chains.

Suigetsu looked at Karin and shot her a devious smirk. "Yeah, you say that, but deep down I know you only say it to mask how badly you want this body," Suigetsu said as he made a pose.

"I have a boyfriend!" Karin protested. "And stop being a creep, we have a battle to win, you moron!"

"Are all Konoha girls this bitchy, or just you?" Suigetsu asked as he shrugged.

While Karin and Suigetsu argued as they faced more enemy Kiri ninja, Sasuke decided to face Jinpachi, after identifying him as the bigger threat. Something Jinpachi himself took no time to notice.

"So, what's with you, pretty guy? Think you can take me on?" Jinpachi asked in a mocking tone.

Sasuke's Sharingan flared to life as he fixed a glare on the Kiri Swordsman. "It would be possible. It all depends on how much of your power comes from your sword, and how much comes from you."

"An Uchiha, I see," Jinpachi said, noticing the Sharingan. "I've always wanted to fight one of you, but your clan being wiped out made that rather improbable. Yet here you are! Fate seems to be smiling upon me today."

Sasuke frowned, as he tightly gripped the handle of his katana.
"Let's see if you think your fate favors you after you got to fight me."

"You seem to be pretty confident in your ability. Typical of your clan. That's why you guys thought you could pull a coup d'état in your village, yet look at what happened," Jinpachi replied in a mocking tone. "And trust me, the result is going to be the same here."

In the past, Sasuke would have let out a savage cry and mindlessly charge at the one eyed swordsman for bringing up such a sore and sensitive topic. But after the Chunin Exams incident, Shizune and Shisui pretty much forced him to learn how to keep his anger in check and not be carried away by it. So this time, Sasuke merely deepened his frown.

"Did I touch a nerve? Bohoohoo!" Jinpachi replied in a mock childish tone, before he smirked wickedly. "When I kill you, I'll gouge out your eyes. But I won't use them to replace my missing eye, or even sell them. No, I'll keep them in a jar, and will be displayed as a trophy. How does that sound?"

"You assume you can take my eyes!" Sasuke replied as he charged forward, tired of exchanging words with the bearded swordsman.
"Fire Release: Burning Edge!"

Sasuke's blade was wreathed in flames. Jinpachi chuckled upon seeing it.

"Not bad. But nowhere near enough to help you," Jinpachi said as he prepared to attack. "Blastsword Ninja Art: Exploding Piledriver!"

Jinpachi slammed his sword forward, creating a line of explosions. Sasuke already guessed he would do that, given it was what he did when Suigetsu charged at him. However, Sasuke was ready, and used a couple of Body Flickers to dodge the line of explosions, and appeared behind him. He had noticed that, while powerful, Jinpachi was vulnerable the seconds after he attacked, and that's when Sasuke would deliver the killing blow.

"Got you!" Sasuke thought as he sunk his fire sword into Jinpachi's unprotected back. However, Jinpachi then did something that Sasuke wasn't expecting.

He exploded.

His Sharingan noticed less than a second before his body detonated what was going to happen, which allowed him to reinforce his whole body with chakra in order to survive the explosion, but even then, the explosion did a lot of damage, as he was violently flung against a wall.

"Didn't your Sharigan catch that, pretty boy?" Jinpachi asked in the same mocking tone, as he was standing in the roof of a nearby one story house. "You've been fighting an Exploding Clone all this time. As you can see, my mastery of explosives goes beyond the Splatter. Now let's end this already. Blastword Ninja Art: Bombardment Wave! "

Jinpachi delivered a wide swing, releasing a multitude of explosive notes at Sasuke, which flew at him at a much faster speed than they should despite being made of paper. The Uchiha wasted no time and made several hand seals.

"Fire Release: Phoenix Sage Fire Jutsu!"

Sasuke expelled a multitude of fireballs, that he directed towards the incoming explosive notes. The two attacks collided, creating a multitude of explosions, which resulted in a rather large cloud of smoke forming between the two.

"Not bad, Uchiha, not bad. But once again, not good enough!" Jinpachi chuckled behind the wall of smoke.

"I'm getting tired of his explosions..." Sasuke grumbled, as he thought of a way to counter them. He was tempted to activate his Burning Man, but realized that being covered in fire when fighting a guy that uses explosions wasn't the most sound of strategies. He also refused to use the Mangekyo Sharingan a second time. Not just because of the mental and physical strain, but just like Itachi had challenged him, he wanted to see how far he could go before he was forced to rely on such a power.

"No time to sleep!" Jinchichi yelled as he jumped out of the cloud of smoke. He swung his sword once again. "Blastsword Ninja Art: Blasting Bridle Repeating Death!"

The explosive scroll unraveled, and surrounded Sasuke in a wide area around him, cutting off any escape route. He doubted he could activate Susanoo in time in order to avoid an untimely end.

"Now die already!"

However, before the chain of explosions could reduce him to ashes, Sasuke felt a familiar chain wrapping around his body and pulling him up, saving him from the ring of explosions. When his feet touched the floor again, he was in a roof of a nearby building, surrounded by his team, and a bunch of Kiri ninja.

"Good one, Karin. That was a close one," Shizune complimented the redhead.

"Sasuke-kun, are you okay?" Sakura asked and started to heal Sasuke before he could reply.

"You thought you could take Jinchichi on? You crazy bastard..." Suigetsu chuckled, shaking his head.

"Well, that's exactly what you tried to do not long ago!" Karin fired back on Sasuke's behalf. "So you're not the best one to talk."

"Regardless of that, Suigetsu isn't entirely wrong. Trying to fight a much experienced ninja without proper intel on his abilities was foolish, Sasuke-kun," Shizune stated in a mildly chastising tone.

"I know..." Sasuke begrudgingly admitted.

"Then again, you must have learned something about that guy, right?" Sakura inquired.

"He has a sword that can produce infinite explosive tags that he can use in a variety of ways. However, his power isn't limited to that sword either, as it has several explosive jutsu of his own," Sasuke explained. "While his offensive power is formidable, I find his defenses lacking, since he's left wide open whenever he attacks. I tried to exploit that, but I was unsuccessful."

"Maybe not on your own, but together we can bring that man down," Shizune told him. "Alright, listen everybody, this is the plan."

...

"Alright, this zone it's clear. We should move to the next," Kurenai stated, as she saw the few defenders left falling back.

"It's not!" Hinata quickly replied. "I'm seeing reinforcements coming this way!"

"Let them come, and I shall reward their bravery with a swift death," Zabuza said as he held his Executioner's Blade in front of his eyes.

"Any golems with them?" Kurenai asked.

Hinata shook her head. "Thankfully none."

"Good. This should make things a bit easier," Kurenai said, a bit relieved.

But that relief didn't last long when the defenders' reinforcements arrived, and the attackers found themselves once again outnumbered. Leading the group of regular ninja and ANBU, there was a young man with dull brown hair and, oddly enough, bright pink eyes.

"You managed to reach deep into our village, invaders, but you won't advance any further," the commander claimed in an almost theatrical tone as he pulled out a pair of sais. "As long as I, Dagura Karatachi, son of the Fourth Mizukage, is here to stop you!"

Dagura's men cheered in unison at his short but inspiring boast.

"Attack!" he ordered.

"Everybody, meet them on! Send them to hell!" Zabuza ordered his own troops. "I'll take on his leader!"

Zabuza then felt a hand touching his shoulder. Turning around, he saw it was Haku.

"Actually, I'd wish if you let me fight Dagura-san, instead," Haku suggested.

"This is no time for games, Haku. Dagura is the Mizukage's son. If we capture him alive, we will have a valuable hostage that might help us make Yagura surrender," Zabuza explained.

"I know that, but this is something I need to do," Haku insisted. "Don't worry, I won't kill him. Besides, you trained me, Zabuza-sama. That should be enough."

Zabuza couldn't help but smirk under his mask. "Using my pride against me? That's low. And something I'd approve. Now go, but be careful. I'm sure that guy's a Jonin."

Haku smiled in return. "Don't worry, Zabuza-sama, everything will turn out fine."

The Ice Ninja headed towards the enemy commander, Yagura's son, who was fighting a random Kiri rebel. Haku made a couple of hand seals.

"Ice Release: Thousand Needles of Death!"

Haku formed multiple ice needles from the air's moisture, and flew at Dagura. The whistle they made as they move alerted the Mizukage's son, who noticed the incoming attack, disengaged the opponent he was fighting, and expertly parried all the projectiles with his sais as he jumped back. Haku then jumped in front of him.

"Hello, Dagura-san. My name is Haku Yuki, and I will be your opponent," Haku said in an overly polite tone.

"I don't care who you are! You're just another rebel that needs to be put down!" Dagura replied as he made several hand seals. "Winged Nightmare Jutsu!"

Motioning his hands forward, Dagura released a massive flock of bats that flew at Haku, making disgusting chirping noises. Though the Ice Ninja was far from its only target, as the bats also attacked nearby Konoha and Kiri rebels.

Not letting the bats distract him, Haku prepared his counterattack. "Ice Release: Certain Kill Ice Spears!"

Haku unleashed a multitude of long and sharp ice spikes from his body, impaling most the bats -which poofed into tiny clouds of smoke- which were attacking him. This drew Dagura's attention.

"An Ice Release User. Interesting, I thought all of you had been wiped out," Dagura observed.

"I do get that a lot. Not to my pleasure, might I add," Haku replied. "And do you know why I'm the last of my kind?"

"Like I said before, I don't care," Dagura dismissed as he prepared to attack again.

"Too bad, because you're going to hear it anyway," Haku cut him off, as he continued talking. "Because of your father's policies and way to run Kirigakure. Thanks to the Blood Mist, ninjas are seen as little more than blood thirsty murderers and barbarians in the eyes of the citizens of the Land of Water, as well as the rest of the Elemental Nations."

"So what? We never cared what other villages think about us! Kirigakure was on its dead bed after the Third War, and my father renewed its strength!" Dagura replied.

"You should care, given that this invasion is a direct product of your barbaric practices," Haku replied. "And do you know what else was a direct product of your father's ruling? The Bloodline Purges. Ninja are heavily feared and distrusted among the common people, and those with Bloodline Limits even more. That's why my mother was killed by the same people she called friends and family, with me barely surviving."

"And you think that your family's loss was my father's fault somehow? Ha!" Dagura replied, making more hand seals again. "Soundwave Jutsu!"

"Ice Release: Ice Barrier!"

Haku slammed his hands into the ground, erecting an ice wall between himself and his current enemy. While the sound waves shattered it, the jutsu used all of its power to take it down, leaving Haku unharmed.

"My family was far from the only one which was lost to the madness your father is perpetuating. That's why he needs to be removed from power, one way or another," Haku calmly said.

"Lies! All you want to do is depose my father so you can rule Kirigakure yourselves! And I'd die before seeing it in the control of traitors and their Konoha scum allies!" Dagura then cut the palm of his hand, and made several hand seals, before slamming them on the ground. "Summoning Jutsu!"

After the initial smoke explosion, Haku saw that Dagura was now riding a gigantic bat, almost as big as Sasuke's hawk summons.

"You shall not destroy what my family has fought so hard to build!" Dagura declared.

Haku let out a defeated sigh. "Guess there's no way to convince you of your wrong ways. In that case, I won't hold back anymore," Haku ominously said as he made a hand seal. Suddenly, a burst of icy winds came from his body, as he was surrounded by a blue and white aura that sparkled with the rays of sunlight. The ground around him started to freeze at a fast pace." Ice Release: Walking Winter!"

...

"Longsword Ninja Art: Wire Crucifixion!"

Kushimaru's tactic was a wicked one. He'd trap everybody with his jutsu involving the Sewing Needle and ninja wire, while his troops stopped anybody who attempted to cut the wire in order to release their allies.

"And the monster's leaving them alive, just to savor their suffering. He won't even give them an honorable death," Ameyuri thought in disgust. "Alright, time to end this nonsense! Thundersword Ninja Art: Eye of the Storm!"

Ameyuri crossed her swords in front of her face in an X, producing a white electric flash. The red headed kunoichi began to rapidly spin with her arms spread forward, turning into a deadly electrical spinning top. Several enemy ninja tried to stop her.

"Water Release: Water Gun!"

Multiple water projectiles flew at her. However, Ameyuri managed to dodge them without stopping her spinning. She was aware that she was left wide open when using that jutsu, that's why she developed a way to dodge attacks even if she was spinning. And while most enemies managed to avoid her deadly slashes, her true target, the ninja wire, did not. When several of the wires were cut, most of Kushimaru's victims were released.

"Bring some medics here, now!" Ameyuri ordered.

So far, Ino was one of the very few medics supporting that division, and right now, she was busy healing Asuma's shoulder wound.

"Are you feeling better, Asuma-sensei?" Ino asked, just as she finished healing the wound.

"Yes. I don't think the pain will go away completely for the time being, but I think I can fight," Asuma said as he stood up.

"We need to take out that swordsman. With their commander gone, dealing with the rest shouldn't be hard," Shikamaru suggested.

"Easier said than done. Any plan, Shikamaru?" Asuma hopefully asked.

Shikamaru shot his sensei a confident smirk.

Meanwhile, Ameyuri continued to fight Kushimaru. Or better said, Ameyuri fought off the red clad Kiri ninja who got in her way as she made her way to the tall, masked swordsman. Her already scant patience was reaching its limit.

"Stop throwing this rabble at me and face me in a duel, you coward!" Ameyuri angrily shouted as she dispatched an enemy Kiri Chunin.

"I might, given that you're starting to get on my nerves. Not to mention your daring to defile Raiga's swords," Kushimaru replied as he pierced a rebel with the Sewing Needle.

"Raiga's? These are MY swords! I earned them! And I'm way better than that fish lipped psycho obsessed with funerals!" Ameyuri protested.

Finally, Kushimaru ignored the rest of the Konoha and Kiri rebels, and focused his attention on Ameyuri.

"In that case, show me that you're worthy of them," Kushimaru taunted.

Ameyuri grinned in anticipation. "I'm more than happy to oblige," she said as she crossed her blades in an X. "Lightning Release: Lightning Fang!"

From the intersection of the crossed swords, several bolts of lightning flew towards the masked swordsmen, finding its mark. The electric blast produced an explosion, but when the smoke dispelled, all what was left was a charred log.

"Body Replacement? Dammit!" Ameyuri cursed as she looked around. "Enough of these tricks! Show yourself already!"

Suddenly, the Sewing Needle burst from underground below her, piercing her lower body.

"URK!" she choked, spitting blood, and forcing her to drop her swords. "Still, bad move," Ameyuri said as she made a hand seal, and her hands started to crackle with electricity.

"Like hell I'm going to let you!" Kushimaru said as he motioned his sword. "Longsword Secret Art: Wire Crucifixion!"

More ninja wire wrapped around Ameyuri's arms, forcing them apart, stopping her from making hand seals, and thus using ninjutsu. She struggled to break free, but the wire was wrapped really tight around her.

"See how easy it was to defeat you, pretender?" Kushimaru mocked, as he walked towards her. "Now, let's recover what belongs to our village."

"Human Bullet Tank!"

A huge shadow loomed over Kushimaru as he saw what appeared to be a gigantic red sphere falling towards him. However, he was fast enough to avoid being crushed to pulp. The human boulder wasn't done, as it rolled at the masked swordsman at high speed. He tossed his sword at it, but much to his chagrin, it bounced back, forcing him to dodge the incoming bulldozing sphere as well.

While Kushimaru was busy, Asuma got closer to Ameyuri and cut the ninja wire trapping her.

"Are you okay?" Asuma asked as he helped the younger ninja stand up.

"I've been better," Ameyuri sourly replied.

"Don't worry, Ino will patch you up. But first, we need to deal with that guy," Asuma pointed out. "My students are on it. Let's make sure nobody else gets in the way of their fight."

"I admit that, from what I've seen, they're good, but are they good enough to take out a member of the Seven Swordsmen who's also a veteran of the Third Ninja War?" Ameyuri asked, not being able to repress a sense of shared pride with their enemy.

Asuma just smirked. "Wait and see."

Back to the battle, Choji had returned to his normal shape, and moved to attack the masked swordsman.

"Partial Multi-Size Jutsu!" Choji's arm grew in size once again, and clenching his fist, he tried to smash Kushimaru under it.

However, the tall ninja proved to be too nimble for such an imprecise attack, and easily dodged it.

"Too slow!" Kushimaru mocked. He jumped over the still enlarged arm, and ran towards Choji as he threw the Sewing Needle at him.

But much to his confusion, Choji smirked. He then enlarged his other arm, and used it to catch the flying sword. It graced his skin a little, but it was nothing major.

"Guys, I have it! I got his weapon! Go for it!" Choji happily said.

"You're so naïve, kid," Kushimaru said with a chuckle as he rushed towards Choji. He pulled the ninja wire still attached to the sword, but thanks to Choji's increased strength, he was unable to retrieve it. Choji in return pulled back with even greater force, launching Kushimaru forward... just like the swordsman wanted. He then used the momentum to spin around Choji, wrapping him in ninja wire, and forcing him to drop the Sewing Needle, which Kushimaru easily recovered. "What do you say now, kid?"

"Mind Body Disturbance Jutsu!"

Kushimaru jumped out of the way just as Ino casted one of her family's most used jutsu. The masked swordsman looked at Ino, still holding that ridiculous pose, and laughed.

"If it's not becoming clear by now, I fought your clans during the Third Ninja War. I know how to counter all of your jutsu," Kushimaru boasted. "Plus I'm older and more experienced. My instincts and senses can't be fooled."

"Counter this then! Shadow Imitation Jutsu!" Shikamaru said, as he once again used his family's signature ability.

Kushimaru just shook his head. "You know, some people would have some qualms about kill or even just seriously harm children. Unfortunately for you, I'm not one of them."

As the shadow came close to him, Kushimaru rushed towards the Nara Chunin, who constantly redirected the jutsu in an effort to catch him, but once again he proved to be too fast. When he was close enough, he prepared his sword to impale Shikamaru.

"Die!" he shouted as he threw his weapon as if it were a javelin. At that distance, the Nara wouldn't be able to dodge it.

Then, something unthinkable happened. A Kiri ninja jumped in the way, getting promptly impaled by the Sewing Needle. However, it wasn't a rebel who tried to selflessly save Shikamaru's life, but one of the red-clan Kiri ninja fighting under Kushimaru's orders.

"What the hell are you doing, you idiot!?" Kushimaru bellowed.

"I... I don't know! My body moved on its own!" the poor impaled ninja cried, while coughing blood.

"Moved on its own? But how...?" Kushimaru wondered, and then remembered Ino's attack. "That blonde bitch! That jutsu wasn't aimed at me, but at one of my men!"

"That's correct. And now that you're that close to me, there's no way for you to escape my jutsu!" Shikamaru claimed, as he used the Shadow Imitation Jutsu once again.

"That's what you think!" Kushimaru said as he jumped backwards, pulling the ninja wire in order to retrieve the sewing needle. At that distance, he was sure he could avoid Shikamaru's jutsu. His keen senses would allow him to detect any kind of danger his eyes didn't see. "From this distance-!"

"I still caught you," Shikamaru flatly said.

"What!?" Kushimaru indignantly cried. Much to his shock, Shikamaru's shadow had touched his, and thus he was unable to move. "How? That's impossible!"

"The ninja wire your sword uses also projects a shadow, which I can use as a conductor for my jutsu," Shikamaru explained, as he shot the masked ninja a smug smile.

"You thought that just because you fought our parents, you already had us figured out, don't you?" Ino asked Kushimaru. "You should know that the new generation will always surpass the one that came before!"

"Hold him still!" Ameyuri called, as she held her swords up in the air, which started to crackle with electricity. "Thunder sword Ninja Art: Lightning Redirection!"

A lightning bolt fell from the skies, which was absorbed by Ameyuri's swords. She then motioned the Thunder swords in Kushimaru's direction, releasing all the stored electricity. The blast was powerful enough to end his life in a matter of seconds, and Kushimaru's lifeless, smoking body fell forward with a thud, releasing the Sewing Needle.

"We did it!" Choji cried in joy.

"Yay, go Tactical Squad!" Ino squealed, pumping her fist in the air.

"Don't celebrate it yet, brats! We might have taken out one of the commanders, but this battle is still far from over!" Ameyuri called out.

"Ameyuri-san is right. We need to continue pushing forward. And don't let your guard down," Asuma added.

The three Chunin nodded, and rejoined the rest of the rebel army in their onslaught.

...

Meanwhile, not far away from there, another fight with a Swordsman of the Mist continued. Sasuke, this time aided by the rest of his team, as well as many other Kiri rebels, were trying to take down Jinpachi Munashi.

"Blastsword Ninja Art: Blast Wave!"

Jinpachi slammed his sword into the ground, creating several waves of explosions that spread outwards. Some of them even hit his own men.

"Jinpachi-samaaaaaaaaaa... !" an unfortunate Kiri ninja cried after being caught in an explosion.

"If you get in the way, don't cry to me because you get hurt!" Jinchichi chided the wounded ninja.

"If you treat your own men like that, then your defeat is all but assured," Shizune told the swordsman.

Jinchichi chuckled. "Those who let themselves be killed are weak, and there's no room in Kirigakure for the weak!"

"Even if it's you who killed them?" Shizune fired back.

"If he was unable to dodge my attack, then he deserves to die, as so do all of you foreign invaders!" Jinchichi shouted as he charged forwards.

Shizune made several hand seals. "Water Release: Water Formation Wall!"

Tsunade's first apprentice released a torrent of water from her mouth, stopping Jinchichi on his tracks, and pushing him backwards.

"Sasuke-kun, Sakura, now!" Shizune called.

Sasuke and Sakura jumped from the sides, Sasuke holding his fire wreathed katana, and Sakura's fist surrounded by fiery blue chakra. However, before they could attack, Jinchichi unfurled more explosive tag roll and enveloped himself with it.

"Blastsword Ninja Art: Exploding Barricade!"

"Karin, your turn!" Shizune called.

Jinchichi realized that they were expecting him to do that, but it was too late. The explosions went off, but before they could catch Sasuke and Sakura, Karin pulled them out with her chakra chains. Shizune, meanwhile, proceeded on the offensive again.

"I have something your little explosions won't be able to protect you from! Poison Mist!"

Shizune released a purple colored, poisonous cloud from her mouth, which quickly moved towards Jinpachi cursed, and jumped backwards. Shizune jumped inside her own poisonous cloud, and a second later she came out of it, kunai in both hands ready to engage the swordsman.

"You're immune to your own poison. Oh, I see your plan. You want to stall me here and wait until the poison cloud reaches us. You'll be fine, but I will more than likely die," Jinpachi deduced.

"It seems that there's a brain under that skull. Not that guessing my strategy will be of any help," Shizune replied, as she engaged Jinpachi in a duel.

"We'll see about that! Blastsword Ninja Art: Exploding Piledriver!" Jinpachi motioned slammed his sword into the ground, generating a line of explosions. "From this distance, she won't be able to dodge them!"

"Sasuke, Sakura, attack again!" Shizune said as she was engulfed by an explosion.

"What!?" Jinpachi said in shock. 'So she goaded me to attack her in order to be left wide open!'

Sasuke and Sakura tried to attack again, but even if Jinpachi couldn't use his blast sword again like he did before, he managed to jump back, avoiding being gutted by flaming sword, and seeing how Sakura's punch opened a large crater in the ground.

"You almost got me there, you brats! Your sensei died for nothing! But you'll need something more than-!"

"Water Release: Great Water Arm Jutsu!"

A gigantic fist, not unlike a certain Akimichi's, connected with Jinpachi's one eyed face, sending him crashing against the ground, dropping the Splatter as well.

"That was for my brother, you one eyed son of a bitch!" Suigetsu spat.

"I'll take care of this," Karin said as she caught the explosive sword.

"Not killing your allies has a lot of advantages, as you can see," Sakura told the downed swordsman in a mocking tone.

Despite the immense pain, Jinpachi tried to stand back, but when he tried to, he was pelted by a rain of senbon, much to his surprise thrown by Shizune.

"What? How can you be alive? Nobody survives my explosions!" Jinpachi protested.

"True, but you didn't kill the real me. While I was hidden in my poison mist, I created a Shadow Clone and sent it to fight you in my place, while I remained unseen," Shizune explained.

"You... YOU BITCH!" Jinpachi cried in anger.

Shizune smiled in a condescending way. "Stick and stones, Jinpachi, stick and stones. Now, Sasuke-kun, Sakura, would you kindly finish this off?"

Sasuke and Sakura nodded, placed themselves at the opposite sides of Jinpachi, and made several hand seals.

"Fire Release: Great Fireball Jutsu!"

"Earth Release: Earth Dragon Bullets!"

Sasuke's fireball and Sakura's flammable mud bullets crashed against Jinpachi, engulfing him in a multitude of explosions, and the swordsman ceased to be.

A fitting end for one of the Splatter's most infamous wielders.

...

They finally did it. After sneaking through plenty of battles, forcing Naruto and Mei to repress their urges to help their comrades, they had finally reached the Mizukage's palace.

The palace was a three story building, whose architectonic style was much refined than most of the village's buildings. To complement its beauty, it was surrounded by patches of green grass, as well multiple fountains. It had a giant kanji of "Water" drawn on it on the façade. There were several ninja standing guard on the outside.

Since the battles were still far away from the palace, these ninja weren't expecting an attack anytime soon. Naruto and Mei were about to prove them wrong. Hidden behind a fountain, the two of them inspected the zone.

"Okay Naruto, from this point on, stealth is no longer necessary. But before we attack, can you feel Yagura inside the palace?" Mei asked the blond Sage.

Naruto closed his eyes for a second, and nodded. "Yes, I'm sensing Tailed Beast Chakra inside the palace. It has to be Yagura."

"Can you sense how many guards are inside?"

Naruto checked once again. "Besides Yagura, I'm counting about twelve or so people. Their chakra is strong, but they shouldn't be a problem."

"They're the Mizukage's personal guard. While not the Seven Swordsmen, they're still elite ninja. Even so, we shouldn't waste much energy with them, or else Yagura will crush us," Mei instructed.

"Do you have a plan?" Naruto asked.

Mei bit a finger and started making hand seals. "We lure them out, dispatch them, break into the palace, and kill Yagura. Much easier said than done, but that's the best I have. Summoning Jutsu!"

Mei slammed her hand into the ground, and both she and Naruto found themselves standing on a massive sea squid.

"What the hell?" one of the guards asked, before he was snatched by a tentacle. His partners followed the same fate.

Wasting no time, Mei made more hand seals. "Fire Release: Dragon Fire Jutsu!"

Mei took a deep breath, and released a massive stream of fire right at the palace's façade, opening a hole in its second floor.

"Ikamaru-san, take care of the guards! Naruto-kun, follow me!" Mei ordered both her summon and Naruto.

Naruto nodded and both she and Mei infiltrated the palace through the hole she had opened. Mei let Naruto lead her to where Yagura was no doubt waiting for them. A couple Jonin cut them off.

"Stop right there!" one of the Jonin called.

Mei replied by making more hand seals. "Boil Release: Skilled Mist Jutsu!"

Once again, Mei breathed a cloud of highly acidic mist at the two enemy ninja. However, one of them was ready to counter it.

"Water Release: Water Wave!"

The Kiri Jonin expelled a stream of water that quickly dispelled the acid mist.

"Smart. Since Boil Release is a combination of water and fire, it's still weak to water. Oh well, this changes nothing," Mei confidently thought.

Naruto pulled out and activated his Wind Blade, which projected a white, flame-like chakra blade. One of the Jonin unsheathed his katana, and went to meet Naruto in combat.

"You pretend to defeat a Kiri ninja in a sword fighting duel? Such arrogance!" the Jonin laughed as he and Naruto fought. However, the moment their blades clashed, Naruto's cut his as if it was made of butter. "WHAT!?"

"I'm not pretending. I'm doing it," Naruto said with a confident smirk. He then punched at the Kiri ninja, who dodged his fist by moving aside.

But much to his shock, he felt as if the fist had connected even if he clearly had avoided it. And it packed such force, he was knocked unconscious.

"Kademaru!" the other ninja cried. "Who the hell are you!?"

"Lava Release: Lava Shuriken!"

The other ninja was so focused on Naruto, he didn't notice Mei, and that proved to be fatal. His life came to an end the moment three shuriken made of burning lava embedded into his body, burning it from the inside out.

"Good work, Naruto-kun," Mei praised.

Naruto grinned at her. "Hehe, thanks. It was a nice warm-up." His face became serious again. "Yagura just went to the roof. He's not alone. I think he's waiting for us."

Mei's expression hardened, as she nodded. "In that case, let's not keep him waiting."

Unimpeded, Naruto and Mei climbed the stairs to the roof of the palace where, true to Naruto's word, Yagura was there, alongside some blonde woman. The Mizukage was watching the battles that were taking place still far from the palace. It appeared that he didn't notice the two newcomers.

"Hello, Mei-san. I was expecting you," Yagura said, without turning around.

"Let's cut the formalisms, Yagura. You know why I'm here," Mei firmly said as she crossed her arms.

"It's Mizukage-sama, you traitorous bitch!" the kunoichi snapped at Mei.

Yagura then held her hand. "Relax, Aiko-chan. Fretting over such thing is a waste of energy."

"Who's that woman?" Naruto whispered Mei.

"Aiko, Yagura's wife. While not as strong as him, we shouldn't underestimate her either. She's a Jonin," Mei told the blond Jinchuriki.

Yagura turned around, and looked at the two rebels, while at the same time allowing Naruto to get a good look at him.

"What? But... he's a child! A child is the Mizukage? And he's married to an older woman?" Naruto asked in shock.

"Despite my appearance, I'm not a child, you brat," Yagura said in a dark tone. He then glared at Mei. "I'm seriously hoping you brought something more than this slow-minded kid to take me down, Mei-san."

"You talk about not judging people by their appearances, yet you have no problem doing the same," Mei retorted. "Despite his young age, Naruto-kun here is one of the strongest ninja Konoha has to offer."

"She's not lying, dear. His chakra is both immense and very strong. I believe he may be a Jinchuriki," Aiko warned her husband.

"You failed to seduce Uzakata, so you went to Konoha and begged them to loan you their jinchuriki in a vain attempt to depose me."

Pitiful," Yagura spat. "What did they make you promise them in return? Some of the Seven Swords? All of them? Secret techniques? Clan secrets? Our resources? Or will you simply turn Kirigakure into Konoha's lapdog?"

"Even if that were true, it would still be better than what Kirigakure is now," Mei spat back. "Listen, no more blood needs to be spilled today. It may sound unbelievable, but we have reasons to believe that somebody has been messing with your mind. You're under somebody else's mind control."

"Lies! If that were true, I would have noticed it! I'm his wife, on top of a sensor!" Aiko protested.

"That's the thing, you don't notice anything!" Naruto countered, "I've been mind controlled before, and it makes you think that everything's fine. But it's not. Deep down, you know there's something wrong, but you don't know what it is."

"You are right. It sounds unbelievable, as well as stupid. A desperate bid to avoid a fight you know you can't win," Yagura told her.

"I know I can defeat you, Yagura. I just simply don't want to kill a man that's just a victim of somebody else's crimes," Mei sorrowfully said.

"I think I've heard enough," Yagura said, as he and Aiko prepared to fight. "Try not to die too soon, and give me an entertaining fight."

Likewise, Mei and Naruto prepared for battle, knowing that they were going to face an opponent unlike any other.

The future of Kirigakure would be decided on the outcome of this battle.

Author's Note: And thus, the invasion has begun. Sorry for those who were expecting Naruto and Mei to fight against Yagura already, but I felt that that fight deserved to have its own chapter. Besides, I wanted to have more fights besides that one, among them, the two remaining swordsmen, as well as Yagura's son Dagura. And yes, I made him up, so he's a quasi-OC. But given that the Boruto anime gives us his grandson Kagura, I thought it would be appropriate to show his son, and that way I could have an enemy that's not a random faceless elite ninja or ANBU.

These fights also had the double purpose of give some spotlight to some of the other teams, namely Team Shizune and Team Asuma. Don't worry, Team Kakashi and Team Gai will have their spotlight as well in following arcs once we reach Shippuden, especially Team Kakashi.

Thanks a lot to gio08 for betareading.

So yeah, next time in Son of the Sannin, the much awaited clash between Naruto, Mei and Yagura (and Aiko, I guess)! And not just that, but Deidara and Kisame will join the fray! One way or another, the Kirigakure Civil War WILL end next chapter, but HOW will it end? In the meantime, don't forget to leave a review with your thoughts on this chapter! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Invasion of Kirigakure, Part II

Author's Notes: Welp, here it is. The moment you've been waiting for so long. The climax of this rather long arc. Naruto and Mei finally facing Yagura. Hope you enjoy it:

Chapter 49:

The Invasion of Kirigakure, Part II

or

The Shadows in the Water

...

"I won't be the one dying today, Yagura. I won't rest until the Blood Mist becomes a thing of the past, and such thing can't happen as long as you're Mizukage," Mei said as she started making hand seals. "Boil Release: Skilled Mist Jutsu!"

Mei opened the fight with one of her two Bloodline Limits, releasing a cloud of corrosive mist at the opposing duo. Yagura took a step forward, positioning himself between the attack and his wife, as he made hand seals of his own.

"Stand back, Aiko-chan," Yagura took a deep breath. "Wind Release: Passing Typhoon!"

Yagura blew a powerful gust of wind that easily dispelled Mei's attack. It had such force that Mei and Naruto were nearly blown away. Aiko took the chance to attack as well. She made a hand seal.

"Water Release: Famine Mist!"

A thin mist started to envelop the roof of the palace. However, unlike other times Naruto had seen a mist jutsu (mostly from Haku), the mist wasn't thick enough to block vision.

"Naruto, this isn't the usual mist jutsu," Mei warned him, as if reading his thoughts. "I don't know what it does, but stay alert just in case."

"Then the best solution will be dispel it as soon as possible!" Naruto reasoned as his hands ran through hand seals. "Wind Release: Cyclone Vortex!"

Naruto thrust his hand forward, casting an horizontal tornado. However, Naruto noticed that the jutsu was weaker than usual, and only succeeded in stirring the mist, which quickly reformed.

"The hell?" Naruto indignantly asked.

"You foolish child! This mist dampens the ninjutsu used by the enemy, while at the same time enhances mine!" Aiko gloated as she made several hand seals. "Water Release: Water Gun!"

Aiko expelled a powerful torrent from her mouth at the duo. Instinctively, Mei reacted by using a jutsu of her own.

"Earth Release: Earth Style Wall!"

A wall emerged, getting in the way between Mei and Aiko's attack, but much to the rebel leader's surprise, Aiko's water jutsu tore through Mei's earth wall, before the attack blasted her backwards. Fortunately, the wall at least had absorbed some of the jutsu's original power, and it didn't make as much damage as it could.

"Didn't you hear what I said? My ninjutsu is stronger while yours is weaker! Elemental weaknesses become irrelevant!" Aiko stated.

Thanks to his Sage Mode, Naruto could sense that Aiko was supporting the mist with her own chakra. Even then, the chakra consumption rate was very low, and Aiko had a respectable chakra pool. Waiting until she ran out of chakra wasn't an option. They had to take her down first if they wanted to have any chance against Yagura.

"Mei! If we take out Aiko, the mist will banish! We have to focus on her first!" Naruto shouted as he pulled out his trusty Wind Blade. Upon channeling his chakra, the weapon projected a white, flame like energy blade. "Let's hope the mist doesn't affect my Wind Blade either!"

Now armed, Naruto dashed towards the female Jonin but he was intercepted by the Mizukage. Naruto's wind blade clashed against what appeared to be a rather large black club with uneven sized hooks on its ends, and oddly enough, a green flower on the larger hook. Much to his surprise, the club resisted the wind blade's swipe.

"You're more foolish than I thought if you think I'm going to let you get my wife," Yagura replied in a threatening tone.

Naruto ignored Yagura's words and focused on the staff. 'He's channeling chakra through it. That's why he manages to make it durable enough to resist my wind blade. Boy, this is getting harder by the second. And the mist may weaken my sword as well.'

Still, thanks to his senjutsu enhanced strength, Naruto was able to overpower Yagura and push him backwards. Naruto then ran past him and headed for the kunoichi.

"I'm not afraid of you, Konoha scum!" Aiko challenged as she prepared to fight.

Yagura, however, wasn't planning to go back on what he said a second earlier. "Get away from her!"

"Earth Release: Mud Trap!"

Much to his shock, the ground around him turned into mud, rendering him immobile as his feet were stuck on it. He struggled to get out of it.

"Naruto, now!" Mei called.

Naruto didn't need to be told twice, and prepared to strike the Mizukage's wife down. Aiko unsheathed her katana and used it to parry Naruto's swing, but unlike Yagura, she didn't channel chakra through her weapon to make it stronger, and the Wind Blade cut through her katana as if it was made of butter.

"What?" Aiko asked in shock.

Naruto attacked once, again, and this time, Aiko was forced to dodge the swing, lest she fall prey to its ridiculous cutting power. Despite the power of such weapon, Aiko noticed the boy's swings were unrefined and slightly brutish. He more than likely didn't have anything more than basic sword fighting training.

Aiko pulled out a few shuriken from her tool pouch and tossed them at Naruto. As she was expecting, Naruto used his Wind Blade to parry them away, and she used that window of opportunity to attack. Rushing at Naruto, she extended her hand.

"Water Release: Water Blade!"

Like the name of the jutsu implied, a sword of water materialized in her extended hand, and ran her makeshift weapon into Naruto's gut.

"You're dead!" Aiko shouted before, much to her shock, she saw her sword breaking upon hitting the blond, almost as if he was made of steel. "WHAT?"

Naruto took advantage of the woman's astonishment and kicked her in the chest with such force that she was sent flying away before she fell onto the roof of another building. Even if she wasn't moving, Naruto sensed that she was still alive.

The mist dispelled instantly.

"Good work Naruto! One less problem!" Mei cheered, just as Yagura overpowered her Mud Trap. With Aiko out of the fight, taking out Yagura would be much easier.

"That was a mistake," Yagura said in an icy tone.

"Your wife is still alive. She's just unconscious," Naruto tried to reassure him.

But it was too late. Orange chakra started to form around Yagura, enveloping him in a fiery aura. The aura vaguely took the shape of a turtle with three long tails.

"Get ready, Naruto. Even if we got rid of Aiko, the fight had become much harder," the rebel leader grimly noted.

...

In another part of Kirigakure, Chojuro and Kumori were leading an offensive against what their intelligence believed it was Kiri's Chakra Golem factory, hidden under a mere textile workshop. They were doing a good job so far, but the arrival of reinforcements forced them to fall back.

"Where did these reinforcements come from?" Chojuro asked as he engaged a rather skilled ANBU.

"These ninja were probably guarding the docks. By this point, they must have realized that we don't plan to attack the docks in any way, so they're moving their remaining forces here," Kumori explained as he engaged another red-clad Yagura loyalist.

"We need some time to fall back and regroup, Kumori-san. Do you think you can provide it to us?" Chojuro asked the hooded ninja.

Kumori smirked under his mask. "Just leave that to me," he said, as he started to make hand seals. "Demonic Illusion: Shattered Reality!"

Suddenly, all the Kirigakure defenders saw how the village, its houses, streets, roads, everything, started to crumble and disappear into an endless void below. Naturally, plenty of them fell prey to panic.

"What the hell's going on?" a ninja asked.

"I've never seen anything like this!" another one cried.

"You idiots, it's a genjutsu, dispel it!" a more veteran ninja warned the others.

Even if his illusion was identified, it send the enemy troops into disarray for enough time to allow the rebels to disengage and safely retreat to a more secured position from which they could strike back.

In the rear guard of the division, many medics, Rin Nohara among them, were working tirelessly to heal the wounded rebels. Many of them were too wounded to continue fighting and had to be taken out of the village, but fortunately there were as many who could continue fighting after being patched up.

Among the ninja protecting the medics were Kakashi's Animal Squad, who were positioned close to Rin, as well as other medics.

"How it is going, Rin?" Kakashi asked.

"I'm working as fast as I can, yet I have the feeling that I could do more," Rin replied, as she focused on healing a wounded rebel.

"Even if the situation may not allow it, it's best not to let yourself be carried away by the stress, or else you'll do a worse job than intended," Shino told her.

"Yeah, don't get so worked up. We're here to keep you safe," Tamaki added with a tender smile.

"I know, but still..." Rin insisted. "I think I have enough chakra now to learn the Shadow Clone Jutsu. That way I could heal multiple people at once."

"While risky, it's an intelligent idea," Shino commended.

"Unfortunately, most people don't have the necessary chakra reserves to carry it out."

"That's why I said that I think-AAAAAAHHH!" Rin yelled as she clutched her body.

"Rin!" an alarmed Kakashi yelled as he rushed to her side.

"What's happening?" Kiba asked, mildly panicked.

"The... the Three-Tails..." Rin panted. "It's the Three Tails... it's unleashing its power right now!"

...

Despite his small size, the Tailed Beast chakra cloak made Yagura look rather intimidating. His look of pure fury and anger at the rebel leader and her Konoha ally only made it worse.

"Very few people push me far enough to make me use the Three Tails' power. However, such accomplishment will do you no good," Yagura darkly stated.

The Fourth Mizukage leaped forward, his hooked staff raised above his head. A mass of water formed around the hook. Naruto tried to parry the incoming blow with his Wind Blade, but the water exploded outwards, forming a small torrent that blasted both Mei and him backwards. He then raised a hand, forming a massive orb of water.

"Water Release: Great Water Missile!"

Both Naruto and Mei wasted no time to made hand seals in order to counter Yagura's jutsu.

"Wind Release: Great Breakthrough!"

"Lava Release: Volcanic Roar!"

The mass of water met a powerful gust of wind as well as a stream of burning hot molten rocks, resulting in a explosion of a multitude of elements. Yagura, however, wasn't going to be deterred, and slammed his staff into the ground.

"Coral Ripples Rising!"

Yagura generated a long row of coral spikes to rise out of the ground. Mei's eyes were wide open.

"Naruto, jump! Don't let those corals touch you!" Mei cried in an uncharacteristic panicky tone.

"Why? What's so bad about them?" the blond asked, unable to repress his curiosity.

"No time to explain! Just trust me on this one! You don't want those corals to touch you," Mei vehemently warned her ally.

"You made your homework after all, Mei. It seems that you have a brain under that pretty face," Yagura complimented. "Too bad no amount of brainpower will save either of you from being crushed by the sheer power I possess!" Yagura brought his hands together, and formed a hand seal. "Water Release: Three Headed Water Dragon!"

Yagura created three massive blobs of water that moved forward when the Mizukage motioned his hands in the same direction. The blobs quickly took the shape of three roaring dragons. Mei was already preparing a defensive measure.

"Earth Release: Double Earth Style Wall!"

Mei slammed her hands into the ground, erecting two large stone walls between her and Yagura. However, much to her shock, her walls proved to be ineffective as the water dragons merely jumped above them, and crashed against the two rebels, exploding into a torrent of water that blasted the two of them high into the air before falling into a nearby empty street.

"Uggggh..." Naruto groaned as he tried to get himself back on his feet. "Mei? Are you alright...?"

"Y-Yes," the rebel leader said, before coughing some blood. "I never imagined Yagura was this strong. And from what I know, he isn't even using his full strength yet..."

"We've been in the defensive all the time. We're not going to do anything like this, we need to attack!" Naruto claimed.

"I know. But we're an even bigger disadvantage now. It won't be long before some of Yagura's troops spot us and join the fray," Mei told him.

Yagura landed in front of them with a loud crash, leaving several cracks in the ground.

"Does it look like I need help to deal with you two?" Yagura mockingly asked. "You're on your last legs, while I'm pretty much untouched. Some help you got there, Mei."

Yagura's taunting had the desired effect on Naruto, who gritted his teeth and narrowed his eyes at the Three Tails jinchuriki. Naruto extended a hand, and formed a Rasengan.

"Let's see how you like this help!" Naruto shouted as he charged at the Mizukage, who smirked.

"Naruto, wait!" Mei called him.

But it was too late. Yagura motioned his free hand in a circle. "Water Release: Water Mirror Jutsu."

Yagura created a flat, circular pool of water of reflective surface, almost like a mirror, showing a perfect reflection of Naruto. A replica of Naruto came out of the mirror, dashing to meet the original.

"Rasengan!"

Both attacks clashed against each other, but original Naruto's attack was more powerful, destroying the clone, which dissolved into a puddle of water.

"You... you overpowered my jutsu," Yagura noted, genuinely impressed. "How? Is because of your Sage Mode? Yes, it has to be that. Senjutsu can't be replicated."

"Still thinking I'm of little help?" Naruto asked.

"Yes. You might provide a slightly greater challenge than I had originally imagined, but in the end the result will be the same," Yagura confidently said. "Senjutsu is still inferior to the power of a perfect Jinchuriki."

"Naruto, don't try a frontal attack like that again, much less on your own. We're two against one, let's use that to our advantage as long as it last," Mei told him.

"Right, sorry," Naruto replied as he tried to calm down.

"How long until Sage Mode runs out?" Mei whispered the blond.

"It won't until I start using my strongest jutsu. I'm trying to save them for the right moment," Naruto whispered back.

Mei nodded. "Well thought. I'll try to create one such moment shortly."

With that, Naruto and Mei spread out a bit so Yagura couldn't target the two of them at once. The Mizukage noticed that they were making hand seals, Naruto just once, while Mei did several.

"Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

"Fire Release: Burning Whip!"

Two clones appeared at Naruto's side, while a lash made of flames appeared on Mei's hand. Yagura realized that Mei would try to distract him so he'd be wide open for whatever Naruto was going to prepare. He wasn't going to let such thing happen.

Just as he predicted, Mei rushed forward and used her fiery whip to attack Yagura. The Mizukage parried the blows with his water-enhanced club, all while never taking his eyes away from Naruto.

"I'm your enemy! You have no time to look away!" Mei shouted as she pressed her attack. A second whip made of flames appeared on her other hand, and she continued her onslaught, successfully pushing Yagura back.

The Mizukage frowned and channeled even more water chakra into his hooked club. He swung it at Mei, creating a watery explosion that put out Mei's fire lashes. Mei, however, jumped in time in order to avoid the water attack. Suddenly, a loud, high pitched noise could be heard, coming from Naruto.

"Naruto, now!" Mei shouted.

Yagura looked at Naruto and saw that the blond was holding in his raised hand what appeared to be a huge shuriken made of pure chakra and wind. Wasting no time, Naruto threw it at Yagura.

"Wind Release: Rasenshuriken!"

Upon seeing the chakra shuriken flying at him, Yagura was overtaken by a fear of the like he never experienced before. If he let that jutsu hit him, it would be the end. Not even the Three Tails' chakra cloak could save him. At least not the first version. Fortunately for him, he hoped there would be a jutsu that could save his skin right now. He made several hand seals.

"Water Release: Water Mirror Jutsu!"

Yagura motioned his hand in a circle, creating another mirror of water between himself and the deadly attack, successfully blocking it. Now a second Rasenshuriken, would pop out of the mirror, counter the first one even if it was weaker due the lack of nature energy. Then, the unthinkable happened

The Rasenshuriken tore the mirror apart and exploded into a massive wind vortex. Even if the explosion didn't catch him, the shockwave was powerful enough to blast the Mizukage backwards, being painfully slammed against the floor.

"Ugh..." Yagura groaned as he slowly got up. He raised his head, shooting a look of fury to where Naruto was standing. "You finally show your true-"

But Yagura's words were cut by the unsettling sight of a second Rasenshuriken flying at him. He had learned that blocking them wasn't going to work, he had to dodge it. As fast as he could, he made a hand seal before slamming his hand into the ground, creating a burst of water that propelled him upwards, successfully dodging the Rasenshuriken, which crashed against a nearby building, reducing it to rubble in a few seconds.

"Let's hope those houses were empty, since the collateral damage of this fight alone is going to be colossal," Mei grimly thought.

The rebel leader then looked at Naruto, and noticed that his eyes had returned to normal, meaning that his Sage Mode had run out. Then, he looked at Yagura, and her face became extremely pale.

"Naruto-kun?" Mei asked, a bit panicky. "Can you go back into Sage Mode?"

"Yeah. I have two clones nearby gathering nature energy for me. I only need to dispel one of them and that energy will be mine," Naruto explained.

"Good, because you're going to need it," Mei said, still staring at the coming Yagura.

Naruto looked at Yagura, and was taken aback. "Uh, what's with him? Why does he look like that all of sudden?"

Yagura had turned into a completely different being. He looked now like turtle-man hybrid with three tails, arms ended in claws and spikes on his shell and shoulders. His body was covered by a thick cloak of dark red chakra, and his eyes had become two glowing white dots.

"Naruto, get ready. Yagura is about to unleash the full power of the Three Tails upon us..." a slightly fearful Mei warned, as she knew the real fight against Yagura was about to begin.

...

Haku stood on guard as he saw the bat flying in circles about him. At any time, the bat would swoop down at Haku, and Dagura would attack him from the top of his flying summon, before returning once again to the safety of the skies. While not very effective from an offensive point of view, it kept Dagura safe from Haku's attacks.

This time, he was taking his sweet time to attack. Haku was waiting for him to attack at any moment, and delaying his move would get the Ice Ninja on the edge. However, Haku was somebody blessed with near infinite patience. Especially for battle. That's how he managed to become so good.

He had to be this good. Zabuza wouldn't deserve any less.

Not being able to reach Dagura in close combat, Haku had deactivated his Walking Winter jutsu, since it would be a senseless waste of chakra. He needed to be careful if he wanted to defeat this opponent. The Mizukage's son had to be somebody powerful Finally, it was Dagura who got impatient, and commanded his giant bat to dive at the Ice Ninja. The flying mammal let out a high pitched cry as it swooped down once again. Both ninja prepared to trade attacks once again.

"Soundwave Jutsu!"

"Ice Release: Piercing Icicle Shot!"

When the attacks collided, Dagura's jutsu shattered Haku's, and still had enough power to push forward. The Ice Ninja jumped sideways, barely dodging the sonic attack, which created a small crater on the ground upon hitting it.

"My Ice Jutsu is ineffective against his sonic attacks. I have to change my tactic, or else he'll beat me," Haku thought as he saw Dagura return to the sky. "Guess it's about time to test that new jutsu."

Haku made several hand seals before clapping his hands together.

"Ice Release: Crystal Bird!"

Ice particles started to gather in front of him, growing into a mass of frost that soon took the shape of a medium sized bird. The Crystal Bird let out a cry, and flew towards Dagura. The Mizukage's son noticed the frozen avian flying at him. He didn't know what it was, but he knew it couldn't be good.

"Better get rid of that as soon as possible," Dagura said to no one in particular as he pulled out a kunai with an explosive tag attached to it and tossed it at the bird.

However, much to his shock, the bird nimbly dodged the explosive kunai and continued its flight towards Dagura unimpeded. The Mizukage's son started to panic a little. The ice bird was dangerously close.

"I'll give you something you won't be able to dodge!" Dagura shouted as he made several hand seals. "Fire Release: Dragon Fire Jutsu!"

Dagura breathed a wide stream of fire that, true to his word, engulfed the ice bird in a torrent of flames, and it instantly melted, much to Dagura's relief. But his relief was short lived when the fire dispelled and saw that Haku was nowhere to be seen. He was alerted to a creaking sound coming from above, accompanied by an odd cold breeze.

"What the...?" Dagura looked up and saw Haku coming from what appeared to be a mirror made of ice. He made a hand seal.

"Ice Release: Thousand Needles of Death!"

The mirror above him shattered into a hundred shards, which elongated and turned into needles and rained upon Dagura and his summon. The bat was too large, and was unable to move in time in order to avoid the rain of razor sharp ice shards, dealing enough damage to undo the summon, and causing Dagura to fall below.

Despite being caught off guard, the Mizukage's son managed to land on his feet and one hand, leaving a crack on the floor due the force of the impact. Haku landed softly in front of him, as if carried by gentle winds.

"You're good, Yuki, getting rid of my summon like that. Too bad you're fighting for the wrong side, Kirigakure has a constant need of strong ninja," Dagura praised.

"Did you not hear what I said before? I'm not going to side with the village that cost me my family," Haku stoically replied with some repressed anger seeping into his words. He made a hand seal and raised a foot. "For more bloodshed to be prevented, your father and his supporters need to be removed from power by any means. Ice Release: Crystal Blade Field!"

Haku slammed his foot into the ground, creating a row of large ice spikes towards Dagura. Dagura jumped backwards, pulled out a couple of explosive kunai, and tossed them at the incoming ice spikes. While it successfully halted their advance, it was a temporary solution as the spikes reformed and continued advancing towards him.

"Don't focus on the jutsu, focus on the ninja who cast it," Dagura reminded himself as he jumped back even further while making hand seals. "Fire Release: Blazing Nightmare!"

Dagura summoned another flock of bats, though these one appeared to be made of fire, and following Dagura's hand motion, they all flew at Haku, letting out annoying screeches. Haku, however, merely made a hand seal with a single hand.

"Ice Release: Walking Winter!"

Haku's ice aura was reactivated just as the fire bats were close to him. Making another hand seal, the aura expanded, creating harsh, cold winds that pushed the burning fliers away, some of them even being put out by the freezing gusts.

"You can't win this fight. Your father created far too many enemies during his bloodstained reign. Even if we fail today, another group will raise in the future to finish what we started," Haku told Dagura as he walked forward, freezing the ground as he moved.

"Then we will crush them again! That's how the ninja world rolls! Only the strongest are able to survive!" Dagura replied.

"Then you won't mind if I kill you, right? Since so far, I'm proving to be the strongest of the two," Haku fired back. He made several hand seals. "Ice Release: Never ending Winter!"

Haku's freezing aura started to grow around him, blowing with more intensity, freezing everything around him. But it didn't stop there. The cold became more and more intense. All the nearby buildings and Kiri loyalists were covered in frost and snow, until they were completely frozen. The ice spread as far as their eyes could see.

"No!" Dagura made several hand seals. "Fire Release: Dragon Fire Jutsu!"

The Mizukage's son breathed a massive stream of fire around, hoping to melt some of the ice, but it was useless. The ice was so strong that it was impervious to his fire attacks. Soon, the cold also caught Dagura, as ice began to grow all around him. His body started to feel numb, and his movements slowed down.

"No... this... can't..." Dagura said before freezing completely.

What Dagura didn't know is that Haku wasn't really freezing the village, the Kiri ninja, or anyone for that matter. He had caught him in a genjutsu, which made him fall into a harmless coma. Being the son of the Mizukage, Haku thought of a way to disable him without killing or even hurting him much. He hoped keeping Dagura alive would smooth the transition.

A shadow passed over the ice ninja, alerting him. Looking up, he saw two large, strange looking birds flying above him. One of the birds dropped something. It was too small to notice, but there were many things.

The street Haku and other rebels were fighting Kiri loyalist was then engulfed by a massive chain of explosions.

...

"Woohoo! What do you think about my art, you uncultured swines?" one of the men riding the giant bird yelled. He was a young, girly looking man with long blond hair styled in a ponytail, with a bang covering one of his eyes. He was wearing a black cloak with red clouds. He then looked at his partner, and asked: "Hey, Kisame, you don't mind if I share some of my art with your village, do you?"

The man's partner, riding the other bird, merely shrugged. He was a tall, blue haired man with blue skin, small and sunken eyes, what appeared to be gills under them, and sharp teeth, which gave him a shark like appearance. He was carrying a massive sword covered in bandages on his back. "Do as you please. This village has its days numbered one way or another. Just make sure you don't drop your 'art' where the Jinchuriki is," Kisame warned him.

"Don't worry, he should be in the palace, right?" Deidara asked, as he saw the Mizukage's Palace in the distance. "It seems like there was a battle there. I better check that they didn't kill the jinchuriki before we can nail it, hn!"

"Well thought. I'll stay back, and make sure nobody gets in the way," Kisame said, as he prepared to jump off the giant bird.

Deidara grinned at him. "Liar! You only want to have some fun killing those idiots!"

Kisame grinned back, and shrugged. "I'm not lying. Those two things aren't mutually exclusive," the shark-like man said before jumping.

While he was falling, Kisame made several hand seals.

"Water Release: Exploding Water Colliding Wave!"

While mid air, Kisame expelled a massive amount of water from his mouth into the ground, which safely cushioned his fall. Unfortunately, his jutsu drowned a few ninja, rebels and loyalists aside, that were fighting at the moment. While on the mass of water, Kisame then bit his finger, and made more hand seals before slamming his hand into the water.

"Summoning Jutsu!"

A trio of sharks appeared inside the mass of water, which quickly tore the unfortunate ninja caught inside Kisame's previous jutsu.

"Look at that! It's Kisame Hoshigaki!" a red clad loyalist said.

"What is he doing here?" a rebel asked.

"Is he with us or with Yagura?" another rebel wondered.

Kisame couldn't help but chuckle at the rebel's rather naïve question.

"What makes you think that I'm on either side, brat?" Kisame answered, letting out a small laugh. "Now, my pets are a bit hungry and all the blood being spilled around us really got them on edge. And unfortunately for you, they really have a thing for human meat."

Kisame motioned his bandaged sword forward, and the mass of water moved in that direction as if it had life of its own. Most of the ninja there stopped fighting and tried to run away. Some of them managed to avoid Kisame, less fortunate ones were caught by the wave and were devoured by the sharks in a matter of seconds.

"Ah... it's good to be home."

...

In another part of the village, Ao was leading a group of rebel ANBU, when he received a rather distressing news through his radio. His men noticed his expression.

"Sir, is everything alright?" a masked ANBU asked.

"Our men are reporting that Kisame Hoshigaki has been spotted in the village and has joined the fight," Ao gravely replied.

"Is he fighting for Yagura?" another ANBU asked.

"It seems that he's killing indiscriminately rebels and Yagura's men alike. I think I may have an idea as for why he's here, and it's not good," Ao replied. He then tapped his earpiece before relaying his orders. "Attention everybody, according to recent reports, Kisame Hoshigaki has been seen in the Trade District! Zabuza, Ameyuri, Chojuro, move there and engage him before he causes more loses! Everybody else, stay away from him! Kisame is an S-Rank ninja, and only Mei-sama or our Swordsmen would have any chance against him!"

"Ao-sama, do you think Zabuza and the others will be able to beat Kisame?" a female ANBU asked.

Ao sighed. "I hope they can. If they don't, the damage he can do could be catastrophic."

...

Kisame was many things, but subtle wasn't one of them. In just a few minutes, he had killed dozens of ninja of both sides, and brought down half a dozen buildings. He started to notice that most ninja, rebel and loyalists aside, were staring to flee on him the moment he appeared.

"Aw come on, don't leave so soon!" Kisame whined in a painfully fake hurt tone. "Don't you want to play with me?"

"How about if I play with you, you fucker?" a female voice said.

Ameyuri Ringo landed in front of him, her Thunder swords crackling with electricity, as she fixed a determined stare on the missing nin.

"They gave Raiga's sword to a little girl?" Kisame shook his head. "You know, you guys are giving me more and more reasons not to regret defecting."

"I'M NOT A LITTLE GIRL!" Ameyuri roared as she stomped her foot into the ground.

"But then again, if you at least have the courage to face me, maybe then you're worthy of having those swords," Kisame added, almost in an approving tone, as he adopted a fighting stance. "Are you ready then...?"

"A-Ameyuri-san won't fight alone!" a new voice stammered as Chojuro landed besides her.

Kisame raised an eyebrow. "Another one? And this one has Mangetsu's preferred blade. Oh well, the more the merrier, as they usually say."

"If that's the case, then you won't mind if I join them," a third voice said as Zabuza landed in front of them, his Executioner's Blade in hand.

"My, my, Zabuza Momochi! Such a surprise seeing you here! I can't believe that you ended up joining Mei-chan's ragtag group. I thought you had a little more self-respect," Kisame told him.

"Mei is stronger than you think, Kisame. Anyway, it's a fortunate coincidence that you decided to drop by. That way, we can finally collect all of the seven swords," Zabuza pointed out.

"What? You guys killed Jinin, Jinpachi and Kushimaru?" Kisame asked in disbelief, then he smirked. "Even if that's true, it won't change anything. Those three, while strong, were still nowhere near my level. I will send you to hell with them, and I'll take your swords with me."

The three rebel swordsmen tensed up as they felt the killing intent Kisame was releasing. Zabuza needed for them to keep their cool, or else they would be dead.

"Listen, brats, I know we fought and defeated other swordsmen, but Kisame's more than capable of backing those boasts. I can't defeat him alone, but with the three of us working together, we might have a chance. However, you two must not give into the fear, and do everything I say, understood?"

"Y-Yes, Zabuza-taicho!" Chojuro stammered.

"Sure, whatever!" an antsy Ameyuri replied as she crossed her swords and aimed them towards the sky. "I'll finish this with one move! I can call down a lightning bolt from the sky and fry both him and his fishes!"

"Don't!" Zabuza warned as he forced Ameyuri to lower the swords down. "Kisame's sword, Samehada, is able to absorb chakra and ninjutsu attacks and funnel that chakra to Kisame. Using ninjutsu will only make him stronger."

"So... we can't use ninjutsu? Only our swords?" Chojuro asked.

"You're part of the Seven Swordsmen, brat. That should be enough," Zabuza chastised.

"I know, but so is he," an unsure Chojuro replied, pointing at Kisame.

The rogue swordsman adopted a fighting stance, moving his sword to the front, as the sharks under him became visibly restless.

"As much as I love a nice conversation with my fellow Swordsmen, my pets are still hungry. Time to fight!" Kisame shouted as he motioned his sword forward.

The mass of water, that was completely still, turned into a massive torrent, ready to add Zabuza, Ameyuri and Chojuro the list of victims it had already swallowed. Fortunately, the three rebel swordsmen were fast enough to avoid the incoming wave, and jumped out of the way before being crushed by tons of water.

Unfortunately for them, though, Kisame had already planned for that. Without even having to give them a command, verbal or otherwise, the sharks swimming under Kisame leaped out of the water, their jaws full of sharp teeth wide open, ready to taste fresh blood. Too bad their targets were much too close to being predators rather than prey, and mowed down the attacking animals when they got too close, undoing the summon.

"Aw, why did you do that to my pets? You guys must hate animals," Kisame said as he shook his head.

"Don't worry, you'll go next!" Ameyuri shouted as she leaped at him, bringing down the Thunder swords upon him in a vertical swing.

Kisame raised his sword with just one hand, and easily blocked Ameyuri's attack. Heeding Zabuza's words, she wasn't channeling any chakra through them, lest it feed Samehada.

"Come on girl, that's the best you can do? I'm only using one hand!" Kisame laughed.

While Kisame was busy dealing with Ameyuri, Chojuro landed behind him with a splash, ready to cut Kisame open as he reared back his Hiramekarei.

"Too slow!" Kisame said as he easily kicked Chojuro away, while still keeping Ameyuri at bay.

Ameyuri then removed one of her swords and tried to use it to slash Kisame's legs. The shark-like man, however, reacted in time, disengaged her and jumped backwards. However, before he could counterattack, Zabuza appeared before him, and delivered a flurry of swings with his Executioner's Blade, which Kisame parried with great expertise.

"Ah, I always regretted not being able to cross my blade with you, Zabuza-san. Of all the swordsmen of our generation, I always thought you were the least pathetic," Kisame chuckled as he defended from Zabuza's attack.

"You shouldn't have come back, Kisame. You're alone, all sides of this conflict are your enemies, you have no allies to rely on. You died the moment you set your feet here!" Zabuza told him as he pressed the attack.

Kisame couldn't help but laugh uproariously.

"When did you develop a sense of humor, Zabuza-san? Trust me, there's no ninja, either rebel or a servant of Yagura, that's a threat to me, no matter their number. The few ninja that could be a challenge are far away fighting each other. In fact, the only ones they dared to send against me were you three!" Kisame countered, as he pushed Zabuza backwards with a mighty tackle. He then made several hand seals. "Three versus one is not very fair, let's even the odds! Water Release: Water Clone Jutsu!"

Four water clones of Kisame emerged from the mass of water the original was standing on, all of them also carrying a copy of Samehada, before he directed them at the two youngest swordsmen. Chojuro audibly gulped, while Ameyuri growled at them, and prepared to fight.

"Now that the kids have somebody to keep them busy, how about a duel, just the two of us, Zabuza-san?" Kisame asked as he grinned evilly.

"Alright, but no swords. You carry the strongest of the Seven Swords, but how much of that strength is yours, and how much is Samehada's? Prove you're better than me," Zabuza said, as he extended his right hand, ready to drop his Executioner's Blade, hoping Kisame would do the same.

Kisame, however, replied with a mocking laugh again.

"Do you really think my ego is so fragile that I'm willing to discard my most powerful asset?" Kisame asked incredulously. "You disappoint me, Zabuza-san, resorting to such foolish tactics. I have nothing to prove, and much less to the likes of you."

Zabuza said nothing in return. Kisame had won this round. All he could do is try to best his fellow swordsman in a fight, as impossible as it looked.

"Snap out of it, Zabuza. Don't you want to become Mizukage? You never will with that attitude," the masked swordsman chastised himself, as his expression grew more determined, and adopted a fighting stance.

"I see you stopped fooling around," Kisame said, noticing Zabuza's change of attitude. "Much better. It wouldn't be fun otherwise!"

Kisame then launched himself at Zabuza, Samehada raised above his head. Taken aback by Kisame's deceptive speed, Zabuza raised his sword to parry the incoming hit. He struggled against the shark-like man as their swords were locked against each other, when said man noticed a disturbance in the water.

And indeed, two Zabuza water clones came up from the water they were in, and tried to hack Kisame, forcing him to disengage and fall back. He grinned widely at Zabuza and his clones.

"Not bad, Zabuza-san. Not bad," Kisame praised.

"You forgot I'm also a Water Release user. Even if it was you who summoned all this water, there's nothing that stops me from using it!" Zabuza replied as he directed his two clones to attack Kisame.

"It's you who forgot who's the better Water Release user here, Zabuza-san. The terrain is way more to my advantage than it is to yours," the shark-like ninja confidently replied as he watched the clones approach.

After easily dodging the first one, he smashed it with Samehada, not only destroying it, but absorbing its chakra as well. The second soon followed. The sound of a third splashing footsteps warned Kisame that those clones were merely a distraction to leave him wide open to the original. He wasn't going to let Zabuza catch him off guard like that.

Much to Kisame's surprise, Zabuza pulled out a few shuriken from his ninja tool pouch, and tossed them at Kisame, who he easily blocked them with Samehada. The Akatsuki laughed.

"You weren't very fond of shuriken back then, if I remember correctly. And if that amateurish throw is any indication, you aren't much fond of them now," Kisame replied as he dashed towards Zabuza as well.

Displaying a deceptively fast speed and agility, Kisame dodged Zabuza's rather slow diagonal swing, and smashed Samehada against him. With a hit like that, victory was assured.

Then, much to his surprise, Zabuza dissolved into water, just like the other clones did.

"What...?" Kisame said, mildly surprised. He didn't remember Zabuza creating a third clone. Then he remembered that when he raised Samehada to block Zabuza's shuriken, his view of his enemy was momentarily blocked. "Shit! Those shuriken were just a distraction!"

That brief moment of surprise was the window of opportunity Zabuza needed. Waiting from underwater for the best moment to strike, the Demon of the Hidden Mist rose to the surface, delivering a wide swing upwards. Kisame was able to notice the disturbance in the water and jump away, but not fast enough to avoid a slash to the chest. Kisame's hand was instinctively brought to the wounded area, as he slid backwards.

"You... you made me bleed!" Kisame said, outraged, as he looked at the blood on his hand.

"I already warned you that I could use your water against you, but you didn't listen," Zabuza said, grinning under his mask. "Samehada is a powerful sword indeed, but counting on that much power has dulled your abilities. I don't know what kind of opponents you're used to fighting, but keep in mind that you're against another Swordsman of Kirigakure!"

Surprisingly, Kisame's anger was brief, and the shark-like ninja shot Zabuza an unnerving grin.

"Yes, I admit I probably grew a bit confident in fighting you. Trust me, not only you won't be able to touch me again, but this wound will remain here very little," Kisame replied.

"We'll see about that!" Zabuza retorted as he charged against Kisame once again.

Meanwhile, Ameyuri and Chojuro were fighting the four Kisame clones. Despite being weaker than the original, they were still pretty tough, and their Samehada's retained the original's chakra absorption ability.

The two younger swordsmen were back to back, fighting the Kisame clones, two of them each. However, when they tried to attack, one of the clones would parry the attack, while the other would take advantage and strike them, forcing them to fall back.

"Goddamn it Chojuro, tell me we are not being cornered by goddamned clones!" Ameyuri complained as she dodged a swipe from one of her enemies.

"T-They very strong! Way stronger than normal Water Clones!" Chojuro replied, as he blocked a swipe with Hiraamekarei.

"I have an idea. When I tell you, bend forwards!" Ameyuri told him.

"What? What do you plan to-?"

"Don't question me, goddamn it, just do it!" Ameyuri angrily snapped, cutting Chojuro off.

"Y-Yes!"

They kept going like that for some time, until the red headed swordswoman finally saw the opening she was waiting for.

"Chojuro, now!" she yelled.

After pushing a Kisame clone backwards, Chojuro bent forward, placing his back perpendicular to the ground. Then, much to his confusion, Ameyuri jumped on his horizontal back as she dodged another attack as well. The two Kisame clones attempted to strike her once again, but she leaped above them, channeled lightning chakra through her blades, and slashed their backs as she landed.

"Way to go, Ameyuri-san!" Chojuro praised, jubilant that they were finally making some progress.

"Don't get distracted!" Ameyuri warned, as she ran past him, and parried an attack from a Kisame clone.

This time, Chojuro's resolve didn't waver, and slashed the clone across the chest as Ameyuri held it in place, which dissolved into a puddle of water. After that, the two eyed the remaining clone and lunged at it at the first time. The clone was unable to defend himself from both ninja and fell prey to their blades as well.

"We did it!" Chojuro yelled in joy.

"Don't let that get to your head. We only killed a bunch of clones. Come on, Zabuza-taicho needs our help," Ameyuri told him.

Chojuro nodded and the two young swordsmen joined their captain in his fight against the real Kisame.

...

Meanwhile, far from there, Naruto, Mei and Yagura continued their duel. The two parties eyed each other, Mei and Naruto looking cautious and pensive, while Yagura's new visage shot them a terrifying grin.

"Naruto-kun seems to be okay, but I already used a good chunk my chakra. Now that Yagura is using his jinchuriki powers to their fullest, I need to be careful with how I spend my remaining chakra," Mei warily thought.

Yagura didn't wait, and made the first move.

"Water Release: Oceanic Bullet!"

Yagura opened its mouth, and released a huge water missile at Naruto and Mei. The two of them jumped away in opposite directions. However, Yagura wasn't done. Much to their shock, he kept firing watery projectiles nonstop at the two of them. Naruto made several hand seals while running to avoid them.

"Wind Release: Great Breakthrough!"

Naruto blew a powerful gust of wind at the incoming water missile. It spun mid air for a few seconds, trying to overpower Naruto's attacks, before it ran out of momentum, and fell to the ground with a splash. Yagura, however, chuckled, and fired a volley of more water missiles at Naruto.

"Now's my chance to strike!" Mei thought as she made several hand seals. "Lava Release: Melting Apparition Jutsu!"

Mei expelled a stream of lava from her mouth and hit Yagura in the side. The transformed jinchuriki let out a scream of pain as he looked at Mei with hate filled eyes.

"You'll pay for that," he darkly said, before he curled into a ball. "Shadow Stroke!"

Yagura then rolled into Mei at a quick pace, trying to bulldoze her. Mei was agile enough to dodge him, but much to her surprise, after passing her, Yagura spun around and charged back at her. The process was repeated several times.

"Naruto-kun, I could use some help here! I don't know how long I will last!" Mei called, in an almost pleading tone.

"I'm almost there! Bring him closer!" Naruto said as he was preparing his strongest attack, helped by a clone.

Mei nodded, and started to run towards Naruto as fast as she could. Yagura, however, was much faster, and would catch her in no time.

"Wind Release: Rasenshuriken!"

Naruto tossed the chakra shuriken at Mei, followed by Yagura. Mei was fast enough to jump out of the way. However, Yagura's speed was turned against him when he saw that he had build so much momentum he couldn't maneuver properly, and thus, the attack connected.

"AAAAAAAAAAAAARRRRRGHHH!" Yagura screamed as he was engulfed by a vortex of extremely powerful and razor sharp winds.

"Finally!" Naruto said, happy to see that his jutsu had connected.

"Will he survive?" Mei asked a bit worried, as she watched Yagura in pain, as the wind currents tore him apart.

"I don't know. A normal human shouldn't. But given the control he has over his Tailed Beast. He might," Naruto said, placing a finger under his chin. "Even then, he won't be in any shape to fight after that."

"Alright then. Let's get ready to... what?" Mei asked, her eyes looking at Yagura once again.

Yagura was completely immobile. His skin had been covered by a coral-like armor that protected him from the razor winds. When the vortex subsided, the coral armor shattered, revealing a very angry Yagura. He was grumbling and moaning in pain, though there was no visible injury on his body. Even then, the Three Tails' chakra would heal them over time.

"That jutsu..." Yagura replied, panting, as his arms and legs trembled. "For the first time in a long time, you, Konoha jinchuriki, made me feel fear..." Yagura said, as if it was an unforgivable offense. "That was your strongest jutsu, right? In that case, let me show you mine!"

Yagura raised his head, and opened his mouth. Red and blue Chakra particles started to gather, forming a dark purple chakra orb that continually grew in size. Mei paled in horror, while Naruto looked worried.

"Naruto-kun, Yagura's charging a Tailed Beast Ball. That's a Tailed Beast's most powerful move. If he hit us with that, we're as good as dead," Mei ominously warned. "Your Rasenshuriken is powerful, maybe enough to stop it?"

"You think so?" Naruto asked, unsure, but realized there was no time to waste asking questions. "O-Okay!"

Naruto and his clone started to work on a second Rasenshuriken as fast as they could. Mei, meanwhile, looked at the forming jutsu with interest.

"So you spin your chakra into a spiraling sphere, then channel elemental chakra through it, right?" Mei said, after a quick glance.

"Pretty much. You're pretty smart if you guessed it after seeing it just once," Naruto praised. Mei didn't say anything, walked close to him, and placed her hands above the jutsu. "Uh? What are you doing?"

"Increasing our chances. Do you think it can handle a second element?" Mei asked, and before Naruto could answer, she started to pump fire chakra into the jutsu.

"We'll see it soon enough," Naruto said as he warily looked at Yagura. The orb in his mouth had reached a worrying size.

"NOW TASTE DESPAIR!" Yagura yelled as he launched the ball forward. "TAILED BEAST BALL!"

"Scorch Release: Spiraling Burning Wind!"

Mei and Naruto tossed the burning chakra shuriken as well, and both attacks met in the middle. The combination attack expanded into a vortex of raging flames powered by powerful winds, while the Tailed Beast Ball tried to power through. Still, Yagura's attack was unable to push forward, ending it in a massive explosion. When the resulting smoke of both attacks dispelled, there was a massive crater in front of them.

"We did it!" Naruto cheered.

"Yes, but don't celebrate it yet. That Tailed Beast Ball wasn't very powerful," Mei told Naruto. "My guess is that Yagura is holding himself back due not wanting to level his village, but that may change soon."

"Damn..." Naruto muttered. Noticing that he was no longer in Sage Mode, he dispelled his last clone. "I have no more clones gathering nature energy. Once all my current nature energy runs out, I will be useless, so we have to finish this now."

"I think that we'll need Tailed Beast power to match his," Mei said, shooting a meaningful look at Naruto.

Understanding what the rebel meant, Naruto looked downwards. "I know but... I still can't control it. Is that a good idea? It can only create even more trouble."

"I know, but may have no choice. And don't worry if you lose control, your sensei gave me..." Mei's hand reached into her ninja tool pouch, to make sure the suppressing seals were there. And the moment her fingers touched them, an idea dawned upon her. "Of course, that's it! I can't believe I didn't think of this earlier!"

"Huh? What do you mean?" Naruto asked.

"Your sensei gave me some sealing tags that would suppress the Nine Tails' chakra in case you lose control," Mei explained.

"Ah, yes. My dad made them so I don't endanger my friends if the fox goes out of control," Naruto continued.

"And if he works on the Nine Tails, do you think it will work on one of its siblings?" Mei asked, as she looked at the approaching Yagura.

Naruto slapped his forehead. "Oh damn! I can't believe we didn't think of that!"

"Do not fret. It's not too late to carry the idea out. Alright Naruto, I need you to distract Yagura. He must not suspect anything," Mei instructed him.

"Alright. Since I don't have clones gathering nature energy, now I can use as many shadow clones as I want, so this shouldn't be hard," Naruto said, as he prepared to face Yagura once again.

Meanwhile, not far away from there, the unconscious Aiko started to stir, as her consciousness slowly returned to her. Blinking a couple times until her eyes adjusted to the light, the Mizukage's wife saw a medic-nin using the Mystic Palm Healing jutsu on her.

"Ah, you're awake, Aiko-sama! Don't worry, I treated all your injuries, you'll be fine in an instant," the medic-nin assured with a reassuring smile.

The blonde woman looked around, and saw a bunch of other Kiri ninja surrounding her. Some looking at her, others looking at something she couldn't see. It was then when she realized of something important.

"What are you doing here!? That rebel whore is trying to assassinate my husband! Go and help him!" Aiko commanded.

"We tried, Aiko-sama, but the scale of the battle is greater than us. I'm afraid that we'd be more of a hindrance for Mizukage-sama than actual help," a Kiri jonin pointed out.

"You were part of that battle, right? That's how you ended up like this," the medic-nin guessed. "If we follow your example, we'll only get caught in the crossfire and become collateral damage."

"You lot of cowards! When this is over, I won't forget this! Now get out of the way, my husband needs me!" Aiko said as she tried to stand up, but winced when a wave of pain surged through her body.

"Easy there, Aiko-sama, I haven't finished with you yet," the medic-nin said as he forced her to remain lying down in the ground.

"Don't worry, we won't plan to let Mizukage-sama die against the rebels. We'll wait for the best moment to strike," a masked ANBU assured her.

...

"Is everybody okay?" Haku asked the people around him.

There were both rebel and loyalist Kiri ninja, and a couple of Konoha ninja as well. All of them equally confused, no longer fighting. Dagura was still in the ground, unconscious. If it wasn't for Haku, all of them would likely be dead.

Haku looked up, and saw his almost destroyed, two-layered ice dome. He saw a strange looking bird dropping something on them. Even if he didn't know what it was, the Ice Ninja had a bad feeling, and tried to protect both him and his allies from the incoming danger. And Haku himself wasn't sure if his ice barriers could resist all those explosions. It was close, but they did.

In all honestly he didn't care about the enemy ninjas, but it was either save everybody, or no one. Though even then, Haku was a bit grateful that he had avoided unnecessary deaths, even from the side he was fighting against.

Looking at the sky, Haku saw the strange bird flying away. Now he could see there was a figure riding it. Dread started to set in as the ice ninja realized that the bird and his rider were heading towards the Mizukage's palace, where Naruto and Mei were fighting Yagura.

"Naruto-kun... please be safe..."

...

"Rasengan Barrage!"

Yagura saw multiple Narutos leaping at him, a Rasengan on hand each. Yagura grinned. While this was a formidable attack, for a ninja of his caliber this would be still insufficient. The transformed jinchuriki once again curled into a ball.

"Shadow Stroke!"

Yagura used the same attack he had employed on Mei, and dashed towards the blond. He plowed into the clones at such speed they were unable to strike him with their chakra spheres. He took advantage of both his building momentum and the rebound to freely bounce from one cluster of clones to another, easily destroying them all.

"That's the best you can do?" Yagura taunted.

"How about this?" The other clones replied as they surrounded Yagura from different directions. "Wind Release: Cyclone Vortex!"

Yagura was assaulted by multiple tornados coming from different directions. The resulting clash ended up forming one massive tornado, so brutal it threw Yagura into the air.

"Mei, now!" Naruto jumped.

Yagura saw a red and blue blur leap into the tornado, and use its currents to fly at him. Whatever they were planned, it couldn't be good. Even if he doubted they could do any real damage to him, he'd better not take any chance. He opened his mouth and started to gather Tailed Beast chakra on it.

"Die, you traitor!" Yagura bellowed as he swallowed the small energy ball. "Tailed Beast Wave!"

Upon opening his mouth, Yagura released a destructive wave of chakra that hit Mei full on, almost instantly vaporizing her. The attack also managed to dispel the tornado, and Yagura landed on the ground with a loud thud. He couldn't help but rejoice at the thought of Mei finally dying. His attack had wiped her off of the face of the planet so fast... and that was exactly what tipped Yagura that there something off.

"Wait a second, that wasn't Mei, but a clone!" Yagura said, looking around. "Where's the real one? What are you planning?"

The ground at Yagura's feet cracked, and the real Mei burst from underground. Before Yagura had time to react, she slapped the sealing tag onto the jinchuriki's forehead, as she made a hand seal while pumping chakra into it.

"Suppressing Seal... activate!"

The seal started glow, as tendrils of blue chakra formed from it and began to wrap around Yagura.

"AAAAAARGGHH! WHAT IS THIS!? WHAT IS THIS!?" The jinchuriki roared as he tried to pull it away, to no avail.

Naruto and Mei watched carefully as the Tailed Beast chakra started to fade, little by little. Yagura eventually regressed into his human form, with a chakra cloak that it too started to vanish. Once there was no more Tailed Beast chakra, the seal instantly burned in a flash.

The experience had left the Mizukage completely drained and exhausted. He tried to call the Three Tails' chakra again, but found himself unable to. He didn't know if it was because of the seal or his current state, but he didn't care. Those bastards had deprived him of his greatest asset, and he would make them pay. That's it, if the rest of his body didn't hurt so much.

"You... you..." Yagura groaned as he tried to get back on his feet.

"It's over, Yagura. You've lost. Surrender so no more lives have to be wasted in this war," Mei told him.

"Like hell it's over! For you, you betraying whore!" a vaguely familiar female voice said.

At that moment, Aiko and a group of Kiri ninja landed around Yagura, Mei and Naruto. Aiko quickly went to check Yagura, and helped him back on his feet.

"Are you okay, dear?" A concerned Aiko asked.

"Much better now that you're here, and you're okay," Yagura smiled at her. Then, he turned at Mei and Naruto, and smirked. "You may have defeated me, but even if you won this battle, you're about to lose the war! My loyal ninja, execute these traitors immediately!"

Mei and Naruto tensed up, and adopted fighting stances as the Kiri ninja unsheathed their weapons and came closer. Mei gritted her teeth at the sight of the current situation. She has been so close to defeating Yagura, and now the tables had been turned. Would her and Naruto, tired as they were, be able to fight Yagura's ninja, and finish the fight before the Mizukage fled? Well, on the bright side, Naruto had still Sage mode.

Said blond then took his eyes from the current enemies to look at something in the sky.

"Hey, what's that?" Naruto asked.

Aiko, being a sensor, realized that Naruto wasn't lying and something was flying above them. Looking up, she saw a giant white bird dropping something on them. A bad feeling washed over her.

"Everybody, duck and cover!" she cried.

But it was too late, and the entire area was engulfed by explosions. While the explosions weren't strong enough to kill them, they did their job and left them temporarily disabled for the bomber to do his job.

The giant white bird landed, and everybody saw a long haired blond man wearing a black cloak with red clouds. While such attire didn't mean anything for most people there, there was one person who paled in horror upon seeing it.

"Akatsuki!" Naruto cried. "Yagura, you need to leave! That man has come for you!"

Yagura didn't hear Naruto. The explosion had sent him to the ground again, and was trying to get back on his feet. Aiko, however, did, and placed herself between her husband and the new threat.

"If you want to get the Mizukage, you'll have to get through me first!" she defiantly yelled.

"While a tempting offer, it won't be necessary," the Akatsuki said, before clearing his throat. "There were nine, but now there's just one!"

The Akatsuki then waited expectantly for something to happen, but everything remained the same.

"Wasn't that the line?" he asked. "Oh, right! It was 'Let's the nine be one now!'"

But again, nothing happened. Everybody looked at each other awkwardly.

"What the hell, those weren't the words either?" the Akatsuki indignantly asked. He then started to search through his cloak. "Where did I put the cheat sheet...?"

Yagura got on his feet, and glanced at his men.

"Execute this idiot too as well," he ordered.

His ninja nodded, and moved to attack the Akatsuki. However, at that point, the Akatsuki pulled a crumbled paper out, and read its contents.

"The time has come for the nine to become one!"

The effect was instant. Yagura clutched his head as he fell to his knees. His ninja forgot about his orders, and went into the Mizukage's aid.

"Yagura, what's happening!?" Aiko asked.

"Mizukage-sama, are you okay!?" a worried Kiri ninja asked.

The, Yagura stopped screaming. He stopped clutching his head and rose back on his feet. He didn't look to be in pain anymore.

"What are your orders, master?" Yagura asked the Akatsuki.

The blond man grinned. "I've been sent to pick you up, so get over here and let's get going," he said, as he pointed at his artificial bird.

"Right," Yagura nodded as he started to walk towards the Akatsuki, much to the everybody else's shock.

"Yagura, what are you doing?" Aiko asked as she grabbed Yagura's arm.

Yagura wordlessly shook her arm off of his, and pushed his wife back.

"That's it. The definitive proof he was under someone else's mind control," Mei thought.

"We can't let this man kidnap Mizukage-sama! Everybody, attack!" a Kiri Jonin said. His comrades snapped, nodded, and prepared to attack.

"Naruto, let's join them! We can't let Akatsuki take Yagura away!" Mei told the blond jinchuriki, whom nodded in return.

"Ah, trying to stop me? That's not good," the Akatsuki said, shaking his head, before he made a hand seal. "Then again, I'm more than happy to have a chance to show off my art!"

A second artificial bird dived from above, releasing more bombs over the group. The Kiri ninja were forced to abort the rescue attempt and run to find some cover. Using the explosions as a smokescreen, the Akatsuki and Yagura took off and flew high into the sky.

"NO! Yagura, come back! YAGURA!" Aiko impotently screamed as she saw her husband being spirited away by the Akatsuki. She fell on her knees and continued screaming as tears rolled down her cheeks.

Author's Note: So there you have it. Akatsuki ends up abducting Yagura. I know it's not the ending some of you were expecting, since you were hoping for him to live, but I can't just spare everybody. Akatsuki needs to score some victories, or they would come off as rather ineffective villains. And boy, poor Aiko. Seeing her husband flying to his death shortly after finding about his brainwashing.

Anyway, I really hope you enjoyed this chapter and all its fights. Naturally, the one I liked to write the most was the main event with Mei and Yagura, but I also loved to do the Zabuza, Chojuro and Ameuri vs Kisame. That's one fight I always loved to do, since unlike Mei vs Yagura, I didn't see anybody doing it, and hope that you liked it as much. Also, this won't be the last time Zabuza and Kisame clash in the battlefield ;)

If anybody is wondering, yeah, the war has finally come to an end. The next chapter will be the last one of this arc, it will feature the reunification of Kirigakure, Mei finally becoming Mizukage, and will wrap up all the remaining loose threads, such as what will happen with Zabuza and Haku. I know that this arc has been rather long (way longer than I had anticipated) and some of you want this story to adapt Shippuden already. To those who think like that, just bear with this a little more, just one more chapter.

Thanks to gio08 for betareading this chapter.

In the meantime, don't forget to review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

End of the Civil War

Author's Note: And with this chapter, not only does the Kirigakure Arc come to an end, but we also reach the 50th chapter milestone! Let's see how much the story has grown upon this point:

607066 views

1903 favorites

2283 alerts

and 1654 reviews!

Thanks a lot to everybody who reads, favorites, follows and reviews this story. It wouldn't be the same without you.

Boy, 50 chapters already. Time surely flies, doesn't it? Wonder how much it will take until we reach chapter number 100. Anyway, enjoy the end of the current arc:

Chapter 50:

End of the Civil War

or

And Here Ends the Detour

...

"NO! Yagura, come back! YAGURA!" Aiko screamed as she saw her husband being spirited away by the Akatsuki.

Mei looked on as the artificial bird flew away. While some of her Konoha allies could summon flying animals, by the time she managed to contact either of them, the Akatsuki would be far away, probably even beyond the Land of Water's borders.

The rebel leader couldn't help but feel a tinge of sympathy for Aiko. The blonde kunoichi had been her mortal enemy not even a minute ago, yet in that minute, her whole world had crumbled. However, it was no time to feel sorry. Mei walked towards the kneeled Aiko, still crying her eyes out. The Kiri ninja besides her looked at Mei apprehensively, but didn't try to stop her. Mei placed a comforting hand on Aiko's shoulder.

"Aiko-san, what has happened here is tragic, but this isn't over," Mei began. "There are fights going on all around the village. We have to stop them before more lives are senselessly wasted. Being the Mizukage's wife, they'll listen to you."

Aiko fought back the tears, tried to compose herself, and stood back on her feet. She tried to gave Mei a determined stare, but she was unable to hide her sadness.

"Y-Yes," Aiko replied. "It's just... I can't believe you were right..."

"It's okay, Aiko-san. There may still be time. We can still send a squad of Hunter-nin to track down Yagura," Mei told her in a reassuring tone, though deep down, she doubted they could save Yagura. "But not before stopping the fighting first."

"If I cooperate, do I have your word that my men will be spared?" she asked.

Mei nodded in return. "You have my word they will. It would be unbelievably cruel of me to punish them for just defending their village."

Aiko nodded, and turned towards her men. "Everybody, spread and tell our forces to stop fighting, and surrender to the rebels."

...

Meanwhile, back in the streets of Kirigakure, the fights went on. Among those, one of the most intense was the clash between Kisame and the three rebel Swordsmen. Despite the numerical disadvantage, it was obvious that Kisame had the upper hand. Despite the wound caused by Zabuza earlier, it had already closed and fully healed thanks to the chakra absorbed by the living sword Samehada.

"Water Release: Multiple Water Shark Bullet!"

Several watery shark-shaped missiles came from the mass of water, and flew towards the rebel swordsmen with their jaws wide open. Zabuza's hand flew through hand seals as he prepared a counterattack.

"Water Release: Water Dragon Jutsu!"

Using that same water, Zabuza created a huge, serpentine dragon, But rather than directing it towards Kisame, he made it coil around the three swordsmen, blocking them from Kisame's attack. Ameyuri and Chojuro then took the opportunity to leap at Kisame and attack.

"He may not be able to use ninjutsu directly against me, but he knows how to use it in a defensive manner. Not bad, Zabuza-san. Not bad," Kisame observed, before he directed his attention towards the incoming youths.

"Die already, you walking fish!" Ameyuri angrily shouted as she brought down her two swords.

Kisame raised his own sword, easily parrying both her and Chojuro's attack. He looked at Ameyuri, and laughed. "Walking fish? That's the best you can come up with, girl?"

While he was struggling, Zabuza Body Flickered behind him, and raised his sword for the kill. Unfortunately for him, Kisame had noticed the masked swordsman's tactic, and prepared a countermeasure accordingly. As Zabuza was about to attack, a Water Clone formed between the two senior Swordsmen, parrying the attack.

"Come on Chojuro, it's two versus one! We should be able to overpower him!" Ameyuri said, as she tried to push harder.

"You should also count Samehada as your enemy too, girl. It's not like the rest of the swords," Kisame chuckled as he overpowered Ameyuri and Chojuro, pushing them back. "Now-!"

"Hey, Kisame!" a voice shouted from the sky.

Recognizing his temporary partner, Kisame disengaged the young swordsmen and jumped backwards in order to put some safety distance between him and his foes. Two artificial birds flew towards him, one of them being ridden by his temporary partner and the jinchuriki they came to find.

"The package is safe and ready to deliver! We need to go, now!" Deidara urged him.

"Awwww, so soon? I was having so much fun..." Kisame said in a mock sad tone, before jumping onto the second bird. "Guess work comes before pleasure. Alright then, let's go!"

Of course, it took no time for the rebels to realize that Yagura was with the Akatsuki, and much to their confusion, he wasn't restrained nor unconscious. Then again, that didn't matter, their mission was to either capture or kill Yagura. Letting him escape wasn't an option.

"Is that... Yagura?" Chojuro pointed out as he adjusted his glasses.

"We can't let them escape!" Ameyuri said as she spread her arms forward, with the tip of her swords pointing to the sky. "This attack will drain all my chakra, but it'll be worth it! I doubt that blond guy can absorb ninjutsu too. Thundersword Ninja Art: Thunder Gate!"

Ameyuri's swords send bolts of electricity towards the sky. In a few seconds, all the gathered electricity would be redirected towards the blond Akatsuki and Yagura in the form of a devastating and impossible to avoid lightning bolt. Too bad she won't be able to complete the jutsu in time.

"And before we leave, let's give this boring village another taste of my art as a goodbye gift!" Deidara said as he dropped several of his clay figurines from above.

Zabuza's eyes widened as he realized what was going to happen. "Ameyuri, cancel the attack! Everybody, duck and cover!"

Thankfully, the younger swordsmen didn't waste precious time asking him what was going on, and followed their captain's orders. Their curiosity, however, was sated when several explosions rocked the area, explosions that would have engulfed them if they didn't do as Zabuza told them and found a safe place to hide. They spent hidden a few more moments, until they made sure the Akatsuki won't feel like finishing them off.

However, once they came out of their hiding spots, they saw that the Akatsuki were far into the sky, with Yagura in their power. This cast a doubt over what would be of their rebellion now.

"That was a close one. Thanks, Zabuza-taicho," Ameyuri told the senior swordsman. "It seems you were familiar with his jutsu. Did you met that Akatsuki before?"

Zabuza shook his head. "No, but he appears in my bingo book. Deidara, a missing-nin who formerly served Iwa, and one of the best masters of the Explosion Release despite his young age."

"That was very knowledgeable of you, Zabuza-taicho," Chojuro praised.

Zabuza huffed in response. "Of course! Being a ninja isn't just a matter of knowing jutsu or even killing people. Knowledge of your potential enemies is always a must."

"Alright, and now that Yagura has fled, what do we do now? Do we keep fighting?" Ameyuri asked.

"For the time being, yes. Though I presume that, with Yagura gone, the battle should end soon. From now on, let's disperse and support our allies across the village," Zabuza stated.

"Yes, sir!" Ameyuri and Chojuro said at once, before leaping away in different directions.

...

With Aiko's help, all the Kirigakure defenders were told to surrender to the rebels. She told everybody that the rebels were right, Yagura was a pawn of the Akatsuki brainwashed to weaken the village from the inside, and had been abducted in order to extract his Tailed Beast once his uselessness had come to an end.

Many took the orders with a decent amount of skepticism, but all of them complied in the end, since they did see the Akatsuki flying on white artificial birds made of clay (the explosives those birds dropped as they flew by were pretty hard to miss).

The first one to stop fighting weren't the ninja, but the Chakra Golems. As most rebels guessed and every loyalist knew, the golems were bound to Yagura, so the moment the Mizukage was too far away from the village, the link was broken and the machines became inert.

Thankfully, despite the invasion, the village ended up much less damaged than both invaders and defenders feared. The area with the most damage was, ironically, the one with the least people fighting. But when said people were two jinchuriki, one of them a Kage, and the Rebel Leader, it was only logical.

The two days following the invasion were the more chaotic. While the loyalist ninja were briefly incarcerated, it didn't last long since they needed all the available hands to help with the reconstruction effort. And when they heard from Aiko's own mouth that yes, the Mizukage had been brainwashed by the Akatsuki, they had no qualms working under the rebels. Some of them even volunteered to be part of Yagura's search and rescue team.

The fact that the rebels managed to save Yagura's son from a certain death definitely helped to ease the tensions a lot.

And after two days, they decided it was time for a new Kage to take the hat. While the palace wasn't completely repaired, it was good enough for the ceremony to be held. A large crowd formed in front of the palace, composed of mostly civilians, Kirigakure ninja -all of them wearing the rebel blue uniform, since the red one has been discarded- and Konoha ninja. The six Swordsmen were proudly standing at the front. Miyako could finally show her Helmet Splitter, while Suigetsu and Kumori were given the Sewing Needle and the Splatter, respectively.

"Whoa, she did have a boyfriend!" Suigetsu exclaimed to himself, as when he got sight of Karin holding hands with Neji. "And a hot one to boot! How did that redheaded nerd get to date such a guy outside her league?" the white haired teen asked, before being shushed by Ameyuri.

Ao appeared in the palace's central balcony, and addressed the crowd.

"People of Kirigakure, friends of Konoha, without further ado, meet Kirigakure's Fifth Mizukage, Mei Terumi!" Ao announced, as he took a step back.

Wearing her usual clothes, with the Mizukage's hat covering her head, Mei walked into the balcony, and gazed at the crowd below.

"For a long time, Kirigakure had been nothing but a pawn of a terrorist organization, and locked in a civil war. But that time is over! Today, a new era begins! An era in which civilians and foreigners won't fear us nor think of us as bloodthirsty savages, but admire us for our strength and unbreakable resolve!" Mei shouted, and her speech was met with a huge uproar. "There are still many things to do. We need to rebuild our beautiful village. And healing the wounds caused over the past years on both sides will be a long and hard process. But I have faith that together, we will be able to do it!"

...

Naruto and his friends were among the crowd, clapping and cheering for Mei. They were happy that, after such a brutal battle, the civil war had finally ended, and Kirigakure would enter a new, better age.

"So, how was fighting the Mizukage, Naruto?" Kurenai asked the blond.

Naruto sighed upon remembering the battle, but then grinned. "The most brutal fight ever! There were times I thought I was a goner, but not even a perfect jinchuriki can stand before my awesomeness!" Naruto boasted.

"I'd wish I was there to help you, Naruto-kun," Hinata told him, as she held his hand. "The thought of you having to fight such an opponent with no help other than Mei-san was distressing."

"Aw, you don't have to worry for me, Hinata-hime. Besides, I don't think I would have been able to focus properly if you were there. Yagura was a tough opponent, and you could have been seriously hurt," Naruto told her.

"I know," Hinata said, not without resignation. "This made me realize that I have to be stronger if I ever want to fight alongside you."

"Don't feel bad for not being able to measure to a Kage, Hinata-san," Haku reassured her. "Zabuza-sama is a strong and skilled ninja, and he was no match for Yagura either."

"Speaking of the devil," Kurenai mentioned, as she nodded forward.

The group then noticed that Zabuza was heading towards them. It was obvious what he wanted. Wordlessly, Haku walked towards the swordsman, while the rest of his team stayed behind, but carefully watched the scene.

"Zabuza-sama," Haku greeted him.

"Haku, there's something I need to talk you about," Zabuza began. "Since the day I took you in, you've been my greatest asset. Skilled, obedient, and incredibly loyal. Not only you helped me during countless dangerous situations, but your mere presence even spared me from being executed when the Uchiha Insurrection failed. And when the time came to bring the fight back to Yagura, you were by my side. I could have never asked for a better tool to fulfill my ambitions."

"I'm happy to hear that, Zabuza-sama," Haku said with a slight head bow. "I live to fight for you, and always will."

"That's the problem, Haku," Zabuza said, much to the Ice Ninja's shock.

"What? Zabuza-sama, is there something wrong?" Haku tilted his head in confusion.

"Even if I'm not Mizukage yet, I'm the closest I've ever been to fulfill my ambitions. Being the captain of the Seven Swordsmen of the Mist grants me the best chance to become Mizukage, and I know that Mei won't hold onto the hat forever. However, what remains of the path, I can walk it alone. I have no more use for you, Haku. Your usefulness has come to an end," Zabuza coldly stated.

Despite the harshness those words were coated in, Haku's heart was filled with rejoice, as he gasped in pleasant surprise.

"Zabuza-sama, does that mean...?" Haku dared to ask.

Zabuza nodded. "Yes. Since I do not require your help anymore, you can stay in Konoha if you wish to do so."

Haku didn't say anything, just remained there, silent, and motionless. Despite being a native of the Land of Water and loving Zabuza like a father, he didn't want to leave Konoha. He had grown there, and grew to see it as his home. In fact, he had already prepared to leave his life behind in order to continue working under Zabuza. Yet now, he was told that he wouldn't have to give that up.

Overwhelmed with joy, Haku jumped forward and wrapped his arms around Zabuza. While startled at first, Zabuza hugged his protégé back, this time without anybody having to tell him to.

"Thank you, Zabuza-sama. Thank you for everything..." Haku softly said as tears started to come from his eyes.

"It's okay, kid. You did a good job. Consider this is your reward," Zabuza said as he himself was fighting back the tears.

They broke the embrace, and looked at each other in the eye.

"If you ever need me, Zabuza-sama, you can always call me. I'll never turn down a request from you," Haku said.

Zabuza smirked under his mask. "For the time being, that won't be necessary, but I'll keep that in mind."

"HAKU!" Naruto shouted as he glomped his teammate. "You're staying! That's so great!"

"Indeed it is. When a team loses a member, it never goes back to the way it used to be, even with a replacement," Kurenai said.

"Thank you for letting Haku stay with us, Zabuza-san. I know you must have grown to love Haku like a son, and it must be really hard for you to let him go," Hinata thanked Zabuza as he made a bow.

"Like a son...? What nonsense are you talking about, girl!?" Zabuza asked, visibly nervous. "Haku is nothing but a tool to me, no more!"

Both Kurenai and Hinata couldn't help but giggle in amusement, while Haku smiled knowingly. They decided it would probably be for the best not to tease the swordsman too much.

"Well, I think everything that had to be said has been said already. Before you leave, Haku, Mei wants to have one last talk with you, so follow me," Zabuza said as he turned around and walked towards the palace.

"Hey, Zabuza, wait a second!" Naruto called.

Zabuza turned around and glared at the blond. "What do you want, brat?"

"I just remembered something. I need to talk with Mei, I mean, with the Mizukage, too, about an important issue," Naruto began.

"Say no more, brat. Follow me," Zabuza said as he continued walking towards the palace, with Naruto and Haku behind.

...

Mizukage's Palace

While Naruto had been in the Mizukage's Palace not even a week ago when he stormed it alongside Mei, he didn't have the time to admire it. Unlike the Hokage's Tower, which has a rather plain and utilitarian design on the inside, the Mizukage's Palace had much more emphasis on decoration. The floors were covered in beautiful rugs, plenty of pictures of the Land of Water's landscape, alongside portraits of some of Kirigakure's most prominent past ninja. Multiple weapons also decorated the walls.

The trio eventually reached a double door, which Naruto guessed it would be the palace's council room. His guess was proven right when Zabuza opened the door, and they saw Mei talking with some of her ninja, and some civilians. When Mei looked at the newcomers, she smiled.

"Oh, good, you're here," Mei then turned towards the people she was talking to. "Can we continue this discussion later? I need to discuss something with these Konoha ninja before they leave."

"Of course, Mizukage-sama," one of the ninja replied, before he and the rest of them left Mei alone with Zabuza, Haku, and Naruto.

"Here is Haku," Zabuza announced. "Naruto wanted to tag along. Said he had something important to discuss with you. I guessed you could spend some time hearing him before he leaves."

"Of course. Thanks for being so swift, Zabuza-kun. You can leave now," Mei politely dismissed him.

"Mizukage-sama," Zabuza replied with a slight bow, before leaving quietly.

"Wow. I never thought I'd see Zabuza acting so... submissive towards anybody," Haku noticed, rather surprised. "You certainly made an impression when you fought against him, Mizukage-sama."

Mei smile grew. "Zabuza-kun needs a strong woman that can set him straight and put him in his place. He also needs a woman so he can blow some steam, if you know what I mean," Mei replied, as she winked at both Haku and Naruto. Both boys started to blush like crazy and smile awkwardly. Mei's smile vanished, and let out a weary sigh. "And I need to blow some steam too, and I'm not talking about my Bloodline Limit. Kami knows when was the last time I had some action..."

"With all due respect, Mizukage-sama, but I presume you didn't call me to talk about your more intimate aspects of your personal life, right?" Haku asked, hoping the answer would be 'no'.

"Oh, right, sorry. Guess I got a bit carried away, hehe," Mei chuckled as well. "You see, thanks to Konoha's help, we managed to oust Yagura and unite Kirigakure. Given how valuable allies they turned out to be, I'm planning a series of measures to strengthen our bonds. Among them, is the establishment of an embassy in Konoha. Naturally, Konoha can also establish an embassy here if the Hokage wishes to," Mei said, looking at Naruto.

The blond got the hint. "Right! I'll tell dad when we arrive home."

"That's an excellent idea, but may I ask what it has to do with me?" Haku asked.

Mei chuckled again. "It isn't obvious, Haku-kun? I want you to become Kiri's ambassador in Konoha. You will be the link that keeps the two villages together."

"While I'm honored to see you want me to take such a position, I don't think I may be the most appropriate candidate. I'm not even a Kiri ninja," Haku countered.

"I know. But you're a Land of Water native. And don't forget that, besides the training you got from Konoha, you were also instructed by my current captain of the Seven Swordsmen. So in a way, that makes you both a Konoha and a Kiri ninja. And that makes you the ideal candidate to become our ambassador," Mei explained.

"I guess I can't argue against such arguments. Therefore, I accept being Kirigakure's ambassador in Konoha," Haku said, as he bowed politely.

"Good, I knew we'd reach an understanding. This yours, by the way," Mei said, as he handed Haku a Kirigakure forehead protector. "You can wear it alongside your Konoha one, if you choose to."

"I will wear it with pride, Mizukage-sama," Haku replied.

"Good. You can leave if you wish. And now that's settled..." Mei then turned towards Naruto, who was waiting for her to be done with Haku. "I believe Zabuza-kun said there was something you need to discuss with me?"

"Indeed it is," Naruto replied. "Remember those golems we had to fight during the war?"

"Hard to forget them. Something that can absorb ninjutsu like that is my natural enemy," Mei chuckled. "What about those?"

"The seals they used to power up the golems, their ninjutsu-absorption abilities... they were all Uzumaki seals," Naruto pointed out.

"Oh..." Mei replied in realization.

"I know those seals were the spoils of a war that happened before the two of us were even born, but since you want to improve the relationship between our villages even further, it would be nice if you returned the stolen sealing knowledge to their original owners. The Uzumaki clan still exists in Konoha, even if we're just three people," Naruto explained.

Once again, Mei smiled tenderly at Naruto. "Of course, Naruto-kun. Having not one, but two Bloodline Limits myself, I know better than anybody the importance of a clan treasure. I'll order the original scrolls and books that were plundered from Kirigakure to be handed to you before you leave."

Naruto earnestly smiled in joy. "You mean it?"

"You have my word. It's the least I can do, given how much you helped me against Yagura," Mei told him.

"Really? Thanks a lot! I'd thought you'd be more resistant to give them back, but I'm glad you weren't! Anyway, that's all what you wanted to tell you! Good luck with the whole Mizukage thing! One day, I'll be your equal as the Hokage!" Naruto cheerfully said.

Mei laughed softly. "I'm sure you will, Naruto-kun. Have a nice trip back."

Naruto nodded and left the council room. Once she was alone, Mei allowed herself to smile. Oh, children were so naive and easily to trick. Sure, she was going to return the original scrolls and books to the Uzumaki Clan. After all what Konoha did for her, that would have been extremely rude, not to mention foolish.

Too bad Naruto didn't say anything about all the copies the previous Mizukage had made of such sealing knowledge...

...

With everything said and done, there was nothing left for the Konoha ninja to do in Kiri, so they decided it was time for them to return home. Most Konoha ninja had already boarded the ship that would take them back to the Land of Fire. Only a few of them remained. Among them, Haku Yuki.

The Ice Ninja was about to say goodbye to the most important person in his life, Zabuza. Mei was also there to bid the Konoha ninja goodbye.

"Well, kid, this is it. From now onwards, our paths will diverge," Zabuza said, his voice having a tinge of melancholy.

"I know I said this already, but if you ever need me, don't hesitate to send me a message," Haku insisted. "Thanks for everything, Zabuza-sama. It was thanks to you that I got a second chance at life, and I'll never forget what you did for me."

"I'll never forget what you did for me, either," Zabuza replied. "But don't be so down. I'm sure we will meet again, sooner than you expect."

Haku nodded. He then turned at Mei, and in front of her, he pulled out the Kirigakure forehead protector, and wore it on his neck like Hinata did, since he was already wearing the Konoha forehead protector there, like Naruto and most Konoha ninja did.

"Thank you to you as well, Mizukage-sama. I'll keep working on making Konoha and Kiri's bond even stronger," Haku promised her.

"I have no doubt you will," Mei smiled tenderly at him. "Now you better get into the ship. All your friends are already on board, and I'm sure all of you want to get back home."

"Indeed. Goodbye then," Haku said, before making a polite bow, and got into the ship.

As the last Konoha ninja boarded, the access stairs were removed, and the ship started to move. Wordlessly, Zabuza turned around and started to walk. Mei walked besides him.

"You did the right thing, Zabuza-kun," Mei reassured, as he patted the swordsman in the shoulder. "The kid will be better in Konoha."

Zabuza sighed. "In moments like this, I miss the times in which I wasn't ruled by any kind of moral compass."

For a split second, Mei could have sworn she saw tears forming on Zabuza's eyes.

...

Haku was leaning against the ship's railing, watching Kirigakure become smaller and smaller as the ship departed. Zabuza has been there to bid him a goodbye. It was short and to the point, like most of the time he opened his mouth.

"Everything all right, Haku?"

Haku noticed that Naruto and Hinata were besides him. Haku smiled a little, and nodded.

"Yeah, I'm fine, don't worry," Haku reassured them.

"Come on Haku, we can see something troubles you," Hinata insisted.

"It's not much. It's that... well, I never imagined the day Zabuza-sama and I would part ways," Haku confessed. "I thought I would always be at his side, and if there was a time in which we wouldn't be together it would be because one of us wouldn't be among the living."

"It has to be hard, leaving somebody like him behind. Despite his rough exterior, he really cared about you," Hinata replied.

"Indeed it is. But I know Zabuza-sama will be fine without me. And one day in the future, we'll hear the news about how he has become the Sixth Mizukage," Haku hopefully guessed.

"Let's hope this time around he tries a less violent method, hehe," Naruto joked. "Anyway, did you tell Tenten about the news?"

"It was the first thing I did after I left the Mizukage's Palace. She couldn't be happier. Despite her promise to move to Kiri if I stayed here, I can tell she really didn't want to go with it. Konoha is her home. And truth be told, it's also mine," Haku admitted.

"We're also really glad that you're staying with us. If you left and they forced some new chump into our team... gah! That would be so lame! Thank goodness it's never going to happen!" Naruto said.

The three of them laughed merrily at the idea. No, their team would remain solid and stable until the three of them retired as ninja. Or at least, that's what they hoped.

"There you are, Naruto," a new voice said. The Assault Squad turned around, and saw Sasuke looking at them. "May I talk with you?"

Before Naruto could reply, Haku and Hinata decided to leave the deck, leaving the two of them alone.

"We'll go to the dining room to eat something. We'll wait you there, Naruto-kun," Hinata told him as he left.

Naruto nodded, and then turned at Sasuke. "So, what do you want to talk about?"

"You fought against Yagura alongside Mei." Sasuke stated. "Was he really mind controlled like they said?"

Sadness began to crept Naruto's face, as he regretfully nodded. "Yes."

"Judging by your mood, I presume you weren't successful in breaking the mind control," the Uchiha inquired, though it was pretty much a statement.

"No. Akatsuki got in the way before we could. At this point, the poor guy has to be dead," Naruto replied, as he let out a weary sigh. "Why do you ask? Does it remind you of the time I was mind controlled."

"Indeed," Sasuke laconically answered. "There's not a single day in which I don't ask myself what would have happened if I failed to break the mind control. That was the most intense fight I ever had, and even if in the future I-"

"Sorry for being rude but... what is your point?" Naruto interrupted. "This is not something I like to wallow in, given my failure."

"Sorry, guess I digressed" Sasuke replied, his tone unchanged. "I was going to say that, if you want to talk with someone about it, you can tell me."

Naruto was taken aback by Sasuke's sudden... openness. Usually, the Uchiha wasn't the most social or welcoming person.

"What?" Sasuke asked, noticing Naruto's reaction. "You think I won't understand?"

"No, it's not that. It's that..." Naruto began, trying to find the best way to word it. "It's just that... well, you're not the kind of person to offer emotional support to others, you know?"

Sasuke scowled a bit. "Hn," he grumbled, as he fixed a stare at Naruto, who chuckled awkwardly. "I know I never valued personal relationships much before. But then again, you were one of the few who offered me his support after my clan rebelled, and I'd like to return you the favor."

"Oh. Well, thanks. It means a lot to me," Naruto sincerely replied.

"Yagura... since he was also a jinchuriki, did you feel any kind of kinship towards him?" Sasuke asked.

"Yeah. He... he didn't deserve this," Naruto said. "He got a target on his back the moment he was made a jinchuriki, whenever it was, just like it happened with me. Hell, did you know that the whole Uchiha Insurrection was orchestrated by Obito just to create a smokescreen in order to get into the village and kidnap me? And I'm sure Orochimaru's invasion served a similar purpose. That's not even getting to my biological parents," Naruto bitterly recounted. "Despite we technically won, it really didn't feel like a victory. The only ones who won were the Akatsuki. Kirigakure may be at peace now, but they lost plenty of their ninja in a senseless conflict, their Kage among them."

Sasuke didn't say anything, just kept listening to the blond. He always found him so upbeat and optimist to the point of obnoxiousness, so seeing Naruto showing such an unknown side of him was a sight to behold. Not that it made anything he said any less true.

"There will always be scumbags like Obito and his Akatsuki pals who won't rest until they can get their hands on us, or better said, our Tailed Beasts, for whatever purposes they may have," Naruto continued. "And do you know what's the worst part? All the collateral damage. All the people who die and suffer that have nothing to do with this."

Sasuke looked pensive. He then opened his mouth. "That makes me think that there may be other turmoil in foreign villages regarding their jinchuriki that we may not even be aware of," the Uchiha pointed out.

Naruto opened his eyes in realization. "Whoa, you're right!" he said.

"Too bad there's nothing we can do about them," Sasuke replied.

Naruto scowled at the Uchiha. "Says you!"

"No, say international borders. Naruto, I know that protecting the remaining jinchuriki is important, but we can't meddle into other village's affairs because we feel like it," Sasuke explained.

"Then I won't rest until dad talks with other Kage and form some sort of plan or coalition," Naruto suggested.

"Not to sound like a contrarian, but that might be way harder than you think," Sasuke warned Naruto. "Such action might be seen as Konoha trying to meddle with other villages' affairs. And from what Itachi and Shisui told me, they can be rather touchy when it comes to jinchuriki."

"I know, but I can't just sit down and do nothing. I can't let what happened with Yagura to happen again," a determined Naruto said. "So far, I know Gaara from Suna, and Fu from Taki. Kumo also had that weird rapping guy. Besides Yagura, there are other four jinchuriki we know nothing about their whereabouts."

"Whatever you plan to do, you can count me in," Sasuke told him.

Naruto smiled sincerely at the Uchiha. "Thanks a lot Sasuke. That means a lot."

In a rare display, Sasuke smiled back.

...

Konoha, a few days later

"Hokage-sama, the group sent to Kirigakure has returned to the village a few minutes ago," an owl masked ANBU told Jiraiya.

The Sannin was busy as usual with the never ending paperwork when an ANBU appeared to deliver the news. Jiraiya often wondered how they were doing in Kirigakure. That is, until he got a letter in which he was told that Yagura was no longer Mizukage, and that Mei Terumi had been recently inaugurated. That told him almost everything he needed to know, and knew that his ninja would come home any time now.

"Good. Did all of them make it back?" Jiraiya asked.

The ANBU shook his head. "Negative, sir. We had reported eleven casualties. Eight Chunin and three Jonin," the ANBU informed.

Jiraiya weighed those words. While the Konoha casualties were less than ten percent of the group that left with Mei, it was still disheartening to hear about them.

"Understood. Tell me their names so I can write a proper condolence letter to their families," Jiraiya instructed. "Also, I want to have a meeting with all the Jonin to hear from them how the campaign went."

"As you command, Hokage-sama," the ANBU said, but he didn't leave just yet. "One more thing, your son is here. He wishes to speak with you."

Jiraiya smiled upon seeing this. "Ah, good! So nice of Naruto to drop to see his old man, hehe! Tell him to come in!"

The ANBU nodded, and left the office. A couple seconds later, the Hokage's adoptive son walked in.

"Hey, dad," Naruto softly greeted.

"Naruto, it's so great to have you back!" Jiraiya happily greeted his son back. "Take a seat. Come on, tell me everything! How was the mission?"

"It was good," Naruto said as he sat down in front of the Sannin. "Yagura's reign of terror came to an end, and Mei is now Mizukage. Kirigakure is no longer embroiled in a civil war."

Despite the good news, Jiraiya frowned. He knew Naruto far too well to know that there was something more to those news. Naruto looked far way too subdued, to the point of sounding melancholic. There was something wrong going on that was eating him from the inside.

"But not everything went as good as you make it look, right?" Jiraiya guessed. "Did something bad happen? Was any of the deceased close to you?"

"Yes. Well, no. I mean, yes, but not in that way," Naruto was starting to get confused. "You see, the fight against Yagura didn't go as planned."

"But Yagura was ousted. Did you kill him?" Jiraiya asked. "Listen, I know that it had to be hard to kill a fellow jinchuriki, but sometimes-"

"No, it's not that. Yagura is probably dead right now, but I didn't kill him. Akatsuki did," Naruto said.

Those words took Jiraiya aback. The Sannin raised an eyebrow, as he fixed a questioning stare on his godson. "Come again?"

"You see, Mei and I were fighting against Yagura, right? And things were going fine. Turn out those seals you made to keep the Nine Tails in check worked with the Three Tails too, so we were able to nullify his power. Anyway, the thing is, an Akatsuki appeared and got involved. We were pretty exhausted, so we weren't able to put much of a fight against him. He took Yagura away, and left," Naruto said, summarizing the turns of events as good as he could. "Turns out he was mind controlled. That Akatsuki said something weird, and Yagura became his puppet. That's how he was able to spirit him away so easily."

"That is... troubling news indeed," Jiraiya gravely said, as he weighed down Naruto's words. "Did he try to capture you as well?"

Naruto shook his head once again. "No. He didn't pay me any attention. Guess he didn't know who I was, or else he would have tried to kill two birds with one stone. Then again, I wish he did try to capture me. I was still in Sage Mode, and I think I could have freed Yagura before he could fly away."

"The Akatsuki... flew away?" Jiraiya asked.

Naruto nodded. "The guy had some weird-ass bloodline limit that could create figures of clay that exploded. He used a giant clay bird to fly."

"Clay? Explosions?" Jiraiya asked, as he opened a drawer on his desk and pulled out a Bingo Book. He quickly flipped through the pages, until he found the one he was looking for. "Was this the man?"

Naruto took a look at the profile, and upon seeing the picture, he nodded. "Yeah, that's him! So, his name's Deidara? You know about him?"

"I heard about him, but never met him in person. A young prodigy of Iwa that liked explosions too much for his own good. He defected from Iwa after stealing some forbidden knowledge regarding explosion jutsu. He then became a freelance mercenary, and worked for several terrorist groups," Jiraiya explained. "Though I never imagine that he'd join Akatsuki. While troubling, at least we have some more intelligence on the enemy."

"He wasn't alone. He brought another Akatsuki. I think his name is... Kasumi? No, that's a girl name. Kisame? Yeah, Kisame! He also has one of Kiri's Seven Swords."

This time, the news didn't shock him as much, since he knew from Mei what Kisame was doing now.

"Anyway, the thing is, Yagura was captured by the Akatsuki, and now they probably have the Three Tails," Naruto then fixed an intense stare on his father. "Dad, we need to make sure this doesn't happen again. Akatsuki can't have more jinchuriki."

"Don't worry son. I have extensive data on all current jinchuriki. Though sadly, I guess that information on Yagura won't be of much importance in the future," Jiraiya said. "Our allies of Suna and Taki are already aware of the Akatsuki threat. From what I know, two of the jinchuriki are from Iwa, and the other two from Kumo. I'll try to contact them and see if we can work together on this issue."

"What about the remaining one?" Naruto asked.

"You must be talking about Utakata. That's going to be a little trickier, since he doesn't work under any village, despite hailing from Kirigakure. He's a vagrant and a wanderer, and given his condition, he'll try to keep a low profile," Jiraiya explained. "Then again, while that might work against us, it will also make Akatsuki's job all the harder. But don't worry, once Itachi comes back from his mission, I'll tell him to work on this."

Naruto smiled in relief. "Thank you, dad. That's what I wanted to hear. While I know it's mostly a matter of security, protecting the other jinchuriki means a lot to me."

"Don't sweat it, son," Jiraiya replied.

"By the way, is anybody at home? Mom, the twins?" Naruto asked.

"Tsunade-hime is in the hospital, working, and I guess your siblings are still in the Academy. So I think the house is going to be a bit empty until it's lunchtime," Jiraiya told him.

"Alright then. I'll hang out with Hinata-hime a bit more then. See you later!" Naruto replied, as he walked out of the office.

"Same. Good to see you made it back in one piece, kid."

...

Root Lair, somewhere under Konoha

Inside a dark instance illuminated by a few oil lamps, Danzo and some of his most loyal agents were gathered. While the elderly leader of Root was standing in front of a kneeling boy, the rest of his men inspected several large scrolls.

"Uzumaki knowledge that was thought to be lost forever, including the schematics for Chakra Golems," Danzo said. "Sending you to take part in the Civil War was a good decision, Sai. You made a good job."

"Thanks, Danzo-sama. I live only to serve Konoha," Sai stated.

During the journey back home, Sai had infiltrated the ship's cargo, and made copies of all the fuinjutsu scrolls and books he could. Sai was somebody that rarely stood out, so almost nobody noticed his prolonged absence. His lack of friends or meaningful connections also worked in his favor, since nobody really missed him. Even Sasuke and Sakura, the ones who openly showed distrust of him, seemed to pay him no mind.

"Were you able to obtain one of the Chakra Golems so we could reverse engineer them?" Danzo asked, sounding a bit disappointed.

"Unfortunately, we were only able to take with us a limited number of them. If one of them disappeared, somebody would have noticed it rather soon," Sai explained. "So I decide to follow my judgment and not steal one of those."

"I can't find anything wrong with that line of thinking, so you're excused this time. Guess the blueprints will have to do for now," Danzo decided.

"However, I also brought something else that it might be very helpful, Danzo-sama," Sai said, as he pulled out a small sealing scroll from his pocket, and handed it to his superior.

Danzo took the scroll, and unsealing its contents. A lone, severed finger appeared before him.

"Explain," the one eyed man demanded.

"That finger belongs to Rin Nohara, the one who came back from the dead, and has now the power of the Wood Release. I thought it was something you'd want to have," Sai replied.

Danzo sealed the finger back again into the scroll, and put it under the folds of his robe.

"Indeed I do, Sai. You did good work. Now, leave. You're dismissed," Danzo said.

Sai nodded. "As you wish, Danzo-sama."

And the pale boy left, leaving the elder alone.

Danzo couldn't believe his luck. He had been trying to gather some DNA sample from Rin since the moment his agents revealed the way she had been revived and the abilities she possessed now. So far, all his men could gather were hair strands, but that wasn't enough. Now, Sai had brought him a sample of flesh, blood and bone in perfect state. Yes, this would make great strides in his research regarding Hashirama's power.

Soon, Danzo would have enough strength to become the leader he was always meant to be, and nobody would get in his way.

...

Forests of the Land of Fire

A new day arrived for the inhabitants of the green ocean of leaves and branches known as the Land of Fire. As nocturnal animals returned to their lairs, diurnal ones exited theirs and took their place. Herbivores started to eat from the green grass and green leaves from the many lush trees, while predators stalked what would be their daily meals.

However, today it wasn't going to be a normal day in the forest. Today, the forests would receive a new inhabitant, if briefly.

Wind started to blow. Softly at first, but stronger over time. It didn't come from the clash of cold and hot air currents, as normal wind does, but from a certain point in the forest. A clear among the trees, that became much bigger thanks to a clash between several human ninja. Yes, in that clear, more than a year ago, Jiraiya and Anko fought against the resurrected Minato Namikaze and Kushina Uzumaki. Fortunately, Minato and Kushina's love for their son gave them a sense of closure, and were able to return to the afterlife. Back then, it looked like it was the end of their battle.

What neither Jiraiya, nor Minato, nor even Orochimaru knew, is that such action brought back somebody else from the guts of the Reaper.

The wind continued to blow out, this time with more intensity. The animals that were wandering the area stopped what they were doing, and ran away, no matter the direction. Their instincts told them that something was about to happen, and they shouldn't be there.

After a few seconds, red threads of chakra started to gather in the clear. More and more red chakra gathered, forming a red sphere. The sphere started to grow as it became whole. Then, once the process was complete, the sphere changed shape, and took the form of an animal.

A fox.

A gigantic fox.

A gigantic fox with nine tails.

The beast opened his eyes, and looked around, confused. He tried to remember, but he couldn't. He didn't know anything. Who he was, where he was, what he was supposed to do.

Oh well, he could always find out for himself.

As the fox left, a white Zetsu emerged from the grass.

"This is a... most interesting turn of events," he said to no one in particular. "I should warn the boss about this."

And the Zetsu sank back into the grass.

Author's Note: So there you have. Kirigakure is now at peace, and the Konoha ninjas return home. Given the number of reviews, it seems that this arc wasn't as interesting as the ones that came before, which sadly, seems to be a thing with all my original arcs, for some reason, they get a more lukewarm reception than those adapted from the manga/anime. Even then, I don't regret writing this arc (even if it ended up way longer than I expected), since it allowed me to write and focus on both an event I found mostly interesting, characters I like a lot, really cool battles, and flesh out a village beyond what little we saw in canon.

Yes, Zabuza is staying in Kiri. It was always the plan from the very beginning. Many stories that feature a redeemed Zabuza had him stay in Konoha permanently, but even if I don't have anything against those, to me it didn't feel natural. It's as if Naruto decided he wants to be Raikage rather than Hokage. Zabuza being closer than ever to realize his ambition of being Mizukage is a nice way to end his character arc. And to all Zabuza fans there, don't worry! I assure you this is not even close to the last time you'll see the Demon of the Hidden Mist again, as well as Mei, Suigetsu, Ameyuri and the rest of the Kirigakure gang ;)

On the other hand, Haku is staying. Unlike Zabuza, most of his life is in Konoha, so it makes sense that he'd choose to stay, even if it'd mean not being alongside Zabuza anymore. Some people were worried that given that both his potential leave coincided with Sai's introduction, I planned to replace him with Sai, kinda like how Sai replaced Sasuke in canon. HA! Haku is one of my favorite characters of the manga (he isn't Naruto and Hinata's third teammate for no reason) while I'm not very fond of Sai. Hell, the only reason I introduced Sai is for him to be Ino's love interest, and because I need him for a future arc focused on Danzo and ROOT. Otherwise, I wouldn't even have bothered with him to begin with (and on top of that, he's proving to be super hard to write for). Though that doesn't mean that I'm going to bash him or anything. I don't have a very high opinion on authors that indulge in bashing, and there's no room for such thing in this story.

And regarding the end of the chapter... how many of you saw that coming? Yeah, I didn't forget about the Kyubi's half sealed inside Minato, which died the moment Minato's edo tensei body was destroyed. However, Tailed Beasts are immortal, and after some time, they reform in the place they died. And unfortunately for the newborn half Kyubi and the good guys, Akatsuki now know about this. How this development will affect the story? Not in a good way for the heroes, that's for sure.

Thanks to gio08 for betareading this chapter

Well, next chapter, we will finally enter Shippuden with the Gaara Rescue Arc! Yay, since I was dying to bring the Sand Siblings back into the story at last! In the meantime, don't forget to review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Wind Stops Blowing

Author's Note: And with this chapter, we officially entered Shippuden! Yay!

This chapter finally feature the return of the Sand Siblings, not seen since the end of the Chunin Exam arcs. And boy, did I miss writing for them, all three of them. Oh, and unlike the canon Kazekage Rescue Arc, rest assured that Kankuro and Temari are NOT going to be pushed away to put Chiyo in their place. All arcs that focus on Suna in some way should have them front and center.

Anyway, enjoy the chapter!

Chapter 51

The Wind Stops Blowing

or

When the Sand Explodes

Fifteen and a Half Years since the Nine Tails attacked

A year had passed since the Kirigakure Civil War came to an end, thanks to Mei Terumi recruiting Konoha ninja to her side. After she was inaugurated as the Fifth Mizukage, she and Jiraiya wasted no time in formalizing an alliance treaty. With both Suna and Kiri as its allies, the future seemed bright for Konoha.

Seemed being the key word.

Turns out Suna hated Kiri with a passion. During the previous war, they sent Pakura, one of Suna's strongest ninja, and a hero the village looked up, to formalize an alliance with them. However, the Kiri ninja betrayed Suna and ambushed Pakura and her squad, revealing that their intention was to kill one of Suna's greatest ninja. Suna never forgot such transgression.

So naturally, when the news of Konoha's alliance with Kiri reached Suna, the Kazekage wasted no time and expressed his thoughts in a rather... colorful letter to the Hokage. Jiraiya learned at least five swear words he wasn't even aware they existed after reading that letter.

It took almost a whole year to smooth things up, in which multiple negotiations and diplomatic visits had to be made. Jiraiya was really thankful for keeping his old sensei around as an advisor, as Sarutobi's diplomatic skills saved his skin multiple times. Even then, it took giving Rasa a few Chakra Golems -with Naruto and Karin's explicit permission- to satisfy him. The fact that Kirigakure was under new leadership helped to alleviate some of the tensions between Suna and Kiri.

Eventually, they did manage to convince the Kazekage to let go of the old hatred of Kiri, and form a three way alliance with them and Konoha. However, Kiri had to make quite a few concessions, some of them of the monetary kind, but in the end, everybody was happy.

Right now, the long, arduous process was finally coming to an end. The Kazekage had sent his own children to Konoha in order to deliver the final draft of the alliance treaty Jiraiya had to sign in order to make it effective. Rasa, however, had forced Mei to come to Suna to sign the treaty herself. Given the circumstances, she had no choice but to comply.

Right now, both parties were gathered at the Hokage's Tower Council Room. Jiraiya was surrounded by his four advisors, Sarutobi, Koharu, Homura and Danzo, with the document on the table in front of him. At the other side of the table were Gaara and Kankuro. Wordlessly, Jiraiya took out a pen, and signed the document.

"Alright then, this should be it," Jiraiya picked the document as he got up from his chair, walked towards Gaara, and handed him the piece of paper.

"That was... quicker than I expected," Gaara said, as he took the paper from Jiraiya's hands. "Don't you want to negotiate more?"

"I discussed this with my advisors, and we found your father's terms pretty reasonable. Even Danzo, and that should say something!" Jiraiya laughed as he looked at Danzo, who shot him a neutral stare with his one eye. "Besides, after this year, I'm pretty sick of negotiations."

"So send your father our regards, and tell him that Konoha will always be a friend of Suna," Sarutobi interjected.

"Don't worry, he already knows that, even if he doesn't really show it," Kankuro assured. "It's just... well, your alliance with Kiri really pissed him off. It's like if we decided to ally with Orochimaru without telling you first."

Jiraiya chuckled. "Honestly, I can't picture that. But yeah, I can empathize with him. Hopefully, we can put this mess behind us."

"Yes," Gaara agreed. "Well, as much as I'd like to stay more, Father wants us to deliver him the treaty as soon as it was signed. So we will pick Temari up and leave."

"Sad, but understandable," Jiraiya said. "Anyway, have a good trip back home."

"Thank you, Hokage-dono," Gaara said as he made a polite bow, before he and Kankuro left.

They walked outside of the tower, and saw Naruto and Hinata still there. The couple had walked with the brothers to the tower and told them they would wait for them when the meeting was over. Gaara told them not to since it could last several hours, but in the end, it ended up being as short as Naruto had expected.

"So, I presume everything went alright?" Naruto asked with a hopeful grin.

Gaara nodded. "Indeed. I was expecting for Hokage-dono to try to negotiate better terms, but he's a far more generous leader than most."

"Heh, yes, dad knows the value of friends and allies," Naruto chuckled. "So, what now?"

"Now that the treaty is signed, we need to return to Suna as soon as possible and deliver it to Father," Gaara replied.

Naruto deflated a little. "Aw, shucks. I was hoping you guys would stay a little more. I feel I haven't seen you guys in forever."

"Don't worry, we'll return to see the Chunin Exams," Kankuro told them. "Temari is planning to enter her Genin team for the exams, so we'll come to help her."

"Ah, the Chunin Exams..." Naruto said, as he became a little nostalgic. "It feel like they were so long ago, given that all of us are Jonin now!"

"Well, I'm just Special Jonin, but hopefully I'll become one soon..." Hinata said, rubbing her arm. "Then again, so is Haku-kun."

"By the way, where is he?" Gaara asked. "I wanted to have a chance to talk with him as well, yet I didn't see him."

"Haku-kun is a bit busy now. Yugao-san and Hayate-san had a child recently, so Haku-kun is a bit busy helping them taking care of the little boy. His name's Seiichi, by the way," Hinata explained.

"In a way, I can understand him. Shizune-nee-chan also had a second child, and she sometimes calls me whenever she needs a babysitter for her and Shiro," Naruto explained.

Shizune and Shisui had decided to call their daughter Shizuka. The name got even more groans and eye rolls when they decided on it.

"Speaking of the absent, where is Temari-san? I thought she would be present for the signing of the treaty," Hinata inquired.

Kankuro snorted dismissively. "She wanted to spend some time with Pineapple Head," Kankuro said, rolling his eyes. "I'm betting the two of them are having some fun while we are here stuck doing all the boring diplomatic chores."

...

Training Ground Ten

"I'm so NOT having fun right now!" Shikamaru cried as he barely avoided a powerful gust of wind, which shattered into splinters a tree stump.

"Really? Because I'm having a blast here," Temari laughed as she prepared her giant folding fan for another attack.

Shikamaru knew he had no one but himself to blame for this. He promised he'd give the Suna kunoichi the rematch she demanded since his first Chunin Exams. Whenever he would meet Temari -and he did meet with her A LOT during the past year- she would always bring that up, but Shikamaru wanted to leave it for the next time, arguing that he needed to train more in order to be a match for her. Which wasn't a complete lie either.

However, Temari couldn't wait anymore, and pretty much forced him to fight her before she would leave for Suna. Shikamaru realized he couldn't delay their clash for any longer, and decided to get over it already.

Feeling it was his time to attack, Shikamaru's hands flew through hand seals.

"Fire Release: Great Flame Jutsu!"

Shikamaru took a deep breath, and exhaled a large stream of fire at Temari, which widened as it flew. Temari just shook her head, and smirked.

"Tsk, tsk, still thinking you can defeat me because your affinity beats mine," Temari confidently said as she wounded back her giant battle fan. "Great Sickle Weasel Jutsu!"

Temari motioned her fan forward, creating a powerful gust of wind that stopped the fire stream right on its tracks. The fire stream then burst into a multitude of embers, that set several parts of the battleground on fire. Temari smirked confidently as she stopped her opponent's attack, but her smile disappeared the moment a realization dawned upon her.

"Wait a minute, the flames, they're casting shad-" she started to realize.

"Shadow Imitation Jutsu!"

With all the shadows created by the small flames scattered across the battlefield, Shikamaru could expand and extend his shadow far beyond his usual limit, and catch Temari from a safe distance. The Suna kunoichi started to run and jump around, trying to avoid the multiple shadow threads attempting to bind her shadow. She did try to get closer to Shikamaru in order to counterattack, but the Nara was cleverly pushing her away from him with his jutsu.

"Enough!" Temari said as she reached for something inside her ninja tool pouch, before tossing it at her feet.

A cloud of smoke formed, hiding her from Shikamaru's eyes. He probed the cloud with his shadow threads, but was unable to find Temari. And before he had time to keep probing, several shuriken flew out of the cloud of smoke towards him. Having no other option, Shikamaru cancelled the jutsu and jumped sideways in order to avoid them.

"Now's my chance!" Temari said as prepared to attack. She then motioned her giant folding fan downwards, creating a gust of wind under her. She then hopped onto her fan, and flew on it as if it was some sort of glider.

"This has to be a joke..."

Joke or not, Temari was coming from him from the air. He could barely jump and hit the dirt before Temari passed over him. Unfortunately, the danger wasn't over, since Temari maneuvered her fan to spin around, and glided at him once again, a sadistic smile on her lips.

"Troublesome woman," Shikamaru muttered as he rummaged through his ninja tool pouch, in order to find something that could save his ass. "Take this!"

Shikamaru tossed a handful of kunai and shuriken at the flying kunoichi. While it looked like a lame counterattack at first, it proved to be effective as Temari had nothing to protect herself with, and was forced to jump out of her fan, which fell to the ground a few meters from her

"Now that she's unarmed, this is my chance!" Shikamaru said as he pulled out several kunai with explosive tags attached to it, and tossed them to the intermediate space between Temari and her fan.

"Whatever you're planning, it won't work!" Temari declared as she boldly rushed through the improvised minefield. Explosions went off as she passed the tags, but she soldiered on. With one final leap, she landed besides her fan, and recovered her trusty weapon. "You failed, Shikamaru!"

"You think so?" Shikamaru's voice said behind the cloud of dirt and dust the explosions had created. "Shadow Imitation Jutsu!"

Once again, several shadow threads appeared from the vanishing cloud of dust, but Temari wasn't deterred.

"Trying to put me on the defensive again? Ha, fat chance!" Temari said as he blew her fan once again. "Great Sickle Weasel Jutsu!"

Temari made sure to put as much chakra into the attack as possible in order to give it enough power to reach and hit Shikamaru. She felt her body going stiff as Shikamaru's jutsu bind her shadow, but it would be temporary. The gust of wind caught the Nara, and violently hurled him against a tree.

"Yes!" she cheered.

However, there was something wrong. Despite cancelling the jutsu, Temari didn't recover her mobility. She looked down, and saw that the shadow thread was gone. Then how is that she couldn't move anymore? Was that a new jutsu that permanently left you paralyzed despite only touching your shadow for a few seconds?

Then, to answer her question, 'Shikamaru' disappeared in a puff of smoke.

"Shadow Neck Binding Jutsu!"

A shadowy arm crept through Temari's body as it reached her throat, and put a slight pressure on it.

"And unless you think otherwise, I believe the fight goes to me," Shikamaru's voice said from behind.

Temari sighed. "Okay, okay, I admit defeat."

Shikamaru smirked in victory and undid the jutsu. She then walked towards Temari, hoping she wouldn't be too mad for the loss.

"So, was the fight to your liking?" Shikamaru asked.

Then, in a split second, Temari pushed Shikamaru backwards as she tripped his feet, making him fall on his back. Temari then sat on top of his chest, and pinned his arms to the ground.

"Ugh..." Shikamaru groaned, as she looked at Temari, staring into his eyes. "If I won, how is that I'm in the ground and you're on top?"

Temari smirked at him. "Because that's the way it should be."

Temari then closed her eyes, lowered her head, and planted a kiss on Shikamaru's lips. A kiss the lazy Nara happily welcomed.

"See? Just like I said, having fun with her boyfriend and leaving all the work to us," a new male voice complained.

Temari quickly broke the kiss, and realized that her brothers, Naruto and Hinata were staring at them. Gaara looked as stoic and unexpressive as usual, Kankuro was looking at them un-amused, Naruto was grinning widely, while Hinata was smiling at them. Temari blushed a little, quickly got on her feet, and helped Shikamaru on his.

"Um... what are you doing here? Shouldn't you be in the Hokage's Tower?" Temari awkwardly asked.

"We were. The meeting is over, and the treaty is signed. Time to go back home. Unless you want to spend more time here sucking face with Pineapple Head," Kankuro retorted.

"Why does everybody calls me that?" Shikamaru complained to no one in particular. Then he turned at Temari, and smiled sadly at her. "So, you're leaving then?"

Temari nodded, returning the sad smile. "Yeah. I was expecting that things would last longer. But oh well, I'll be back for the Chunin Exams."

"Well, I can still walk you to the gates then," Shikamaru offered.

"You better," Temari replied, as she and Shikamaru started walking with the others. "By the way, when did you learn the Shadow Clone jutsu? It requires a lot of chakra, and you don't look like having a big chakra pool to me."

"My mom taught it to me," Shikamaru replied. "After failing the first Chunin Exam, she pretty much ran me into the ground with training exercises until I had enough chakra to create a single clone. Then again, she wanted me to expand my chakra reserves. Learning the Shadow Clone was just an added bonus. Though I have to admit it's very useful. No wonder Naruto spam's it nonstop," Shikamaru mentioned, making Naruto chuckle a little.

"Your mom sounds like my kind of woman," Temari said, interested. "Speaking of which, how is that you never introduced me to your parents yet?"

"I don't think our relationship is in the appropriate stage for such thing to happen," Shikamaru uneasily replied, as he rubbed the back of his neck.

Temari frowned. "I'll be the one to decide that. Plus you met my father already."

"Yeeeeeeesh, and I'm trying to forget that day as hard as I can," Shikamaru replied.

"Why? It was hilarious!" Kankuro interjected, followed by a loud laugh. "I can't wait until Temari brings you to have dinner with all of us!"

Shikamaru let out a weary sigh, and realized that Kankuro's words would be true sooner or later. Why couldn't he just have dated an orphan...

...

A few minutes later, the group of six were heading towards the gates of Konoha, making some small talk among them, when suddenly, a brown blur passed in front of them at an almost imperceptible speed, causing the three Suna ninja to startle and get ready for a fight. Naruto, Hinata and Shikamaru though, didn't, since they were used to it.

"Boy, she did last a lot longer this time around," Naruto chuckled.

"Yes. Wonder who will be the unlucky ones tasked to catch her this time," Hinata giggled.

"What are you guys talking about?" Temari asked, raising an eyebrow.

"Somebody stop that cat!" a high pitched female voice yelled, answering both Hinata and Temari's questions.

The group of six saw Kaida, Hagane and Hanabi running from the same direction the blur had came from. The three of them were wearing Konoha headbands, indicating their status as ninja.

"Hey there, guys," Naruto greeted the trio. "So, you got the Tora mission?"

Hagane nodded. "Unfortunately, yes. This is the second time in a month that we got it. Honestly, this isn't what I was expecting when I graduated the Academy."

"I'm the closest thing Konoha has to a princess! I can't spend all my time chasing cats!" Kaida whined.

"Do you guys need some help?" Hinata offered.

Kaida's face beamed in response. "That would be-"

"No, thank you," Hanabi interrupted her. "We are now full-fledged ninja, we can't let others do our work for us."

Hinata smiled at her sister. "That's a very mature way of thinking, Hanabi-chan. I'm proud of that."

Hanabi smiled back at her older sister. Kaida, however, shot her a murderous glare.

"So, where did that damn cat go?" Hagane asked.

"I'll tell you right now. Byakugan!" Hanabi said as she activated her Bloodline Limit. "There! It's hidden behind a trashcan in that alley!"

"Good, that alley is a dead end!" Kaida said as she rushed towards the alley. "That damn cat is about to feel the power of the First Hokage!"

"Sister, wait... !" Hagane said as he and Hanabi trailed behind her.

"You have nowhere to run down, Tora! Nobody's going to save you!" the heard Kaida's voice yell. "Wood Release: Great For-AAAAAAAHHHH!"

"MEOOOOOOOOWWWW!"

"STOP! STOP IT, YOU DAMN PEST! NOT IN THE FACE, NOT IN THE FACE! BROTHER, HANABI, SAVE ME!"

Eventually, between the three of them, they managed to subdue Tora. The cat was now trying to break from a wooden cage made by Kaida, as Hagane used medical ninjutsu to heal his sister's many, many, many scratch wounds. The Team's Jonin-Sensei, Tenzo, appeared shortly after in case they needed help.

"I hate that cat so much..." Kaida seethed.

"Good job catching Tora, kids," Tenzo congratulated them. "Madam Shijimi will be happy to have her beloved pet back."

"Why can't we just kill it and tell her she went to live to a farm?" Kaida protested. "I'm tired of having to catch that cat!"

"Sadly, we can't. Tora represents a fifteen percent of the village's mission income. It would be a huge blow to our economy," Tenzo explained to her. "Now let's go back to report that the mission has been a success."

As Team Tenzo left, Naruto, Hinata, Shikamaru and the Sand Siblings continued their way to the village's gates.

"I see you guys also have your own Emi," Kankuro noted.

"Emi?" Shikamaru asked, looking a bit confused.

"The Wind Lord's pet dwarf pig. It constantly tries to escape, and many Genin team are assigned to catch it. From what I heard, it's quite the nightmarish beast despite its small size," Temari explained. "Thank goodness we never had to catch him."

"How so?" Hinata asked.

"Being the Kazekage's kids has some perks, you know," Kankuro said with a wide grin.

"Well, I'm the Hokage's son and that never got me out of doing an awful mission," Naruto bitterly said.

"Come on, don't complain. None of us got to catch Tora when we were Genin," Shikamaru told him. "Thankfully so, I admit."

"Because we had Tamaki-san to summon her. But even Tamaki-san got tired of doing that all the time," Hinata interjected. "Not to mention that now that she's Chunin, there's no way for her to take that mission again."

Finally, they reached the gates, and the group stopped.

"Our stay in Konoha has been pleasant, but now we must leave," Gaara announced. "We'll come back for the Chunin Exams in a couple months, though."

"I'll be looking forward it, then!" Naruto happily said.

"Yeah, me too. Of all the women I ever met, you're the least annoying," Shikamaru told Temari.

Temari shot an un-amused look at her boyfriend. "You know, we'll need to work on your compliments a bit more."

"Come on, you know I'm just kidding," Shikamaru said with an earnest smile. "I'll be looking forward seeing you again."

"You can always visit me in Suna, you know," Temari suggested, placing her hands on her hips.

"I could but... crossing a desert sounds beyond troublesome..." Shikamaru whined.

"What!? You wouldn't cross a desert to see me? Some boyfriend you are!" Temari protested, before Kankuro grabbed her arm and dragged her out of Konoha.

"Enough of love quarrels, we need to go, now!" Kankuro told his sister.

"Don't think I'm ever going to forget this, Pineapple Head!" Temari said as she and her brothers headed back to Suna.

Shikamaru sighed. "Oh boy, I better prepare a good way to make up to her for that when she comes back. Man, sometimes I almost feel that girls are not worth the effort. Almost."

"Well, you weren't exactly very sensitive there, Shikamaru-san," Hinata told him.

Shikamaru shrugged. "Eh, it's who I am."

As the three Suna ninja disappeared behind a sea of trees, the three Konoha ninja headed back to their village. And unbeknownst to both groups, a White Zetsu emerged from the ground, and smirked.

"Yes, the Jinchuriki finally left Konoha, and has minimal protection. Time to warn the artists..." the Zetsu said as he sank back into the ground.

...

Sometime later, deep in the forests of the Land of Fire, the Sand Siblings continued their trek back home, leaping from one tree branch to the next as fast as they could.

"If we can keep this pace, we'll be home in less than two days," Gaara told his older siblings. "Father will be pleased when he hears the news of our early arrival."

"I don't know why we have to bring the treaty ourselves. Couldn't a courier bird do the trick?" Kankuro said, unhappy with the idea of being a courier himself.

"This treaty is far too important to trust an animal to carry it back home, Kankuro," Temari pointed out. "The fact that it has been trust to us of all Suna ninja should speak volumes of its importance."

Kankuro just rolled his eyes. "Whatever. I just want to go back to do real missions as soon as possible. I've been carving for some action recently."

Shortly after those words left Kankuro's lips, a set of explosions rocked the forest, engulfing the Sand Siblings in fire and shrapnel. Several birds that were calmly perched on nearby tree branches flew away, letting out caws of fear. A couple trees toppled down after the explosions shattered their trunks, and fell to the ground with a loud thump.

When the smoke and dust raised by the explosions, there were several craters in the ground, surrounding a large sand dome. The dome then dissolved into sand, which returned to Gaara's gourd on his back.

"Are you okay?" Gaara asked, as he looked around for whoever attacked them.

"Yes," Temari grumbled, before he glared at his hooded brother. "Way to go, Kankuro! Hope you're happy with all this 'action'!"

"Hey, how did I know something like this would happen?" Kankuro protested as he raised his arms in defense.

"Silence," Gaara said, softly but firmly. "We need to stay alert. Whoever attacked us is still there, and will strike again soon. There's no time for meaningless quarrels."

Temari and Kankuro nodded somewhat sheepishly, and prepared for the incoming fight. Temari unfolded her giant war fan, while Kankuro unfurled three scrolls before him. From the scrolls, three puppets were unsealed: Karasu, his very first puppet, and the one he had used in the Chunin Exams -to very little success-. The second one was similar to the first, only with a bulkier, barrel-shaped body, a bucket shaped face, and six arms instead of four. The third one, however, resembled a large mechanical lizard.

A minute passed, but the attack never came. Gaara managed to remain calm, but his older siblings were starting to grow antsy. That's it, until they saw a shadow quickly passing over them.

"Kankuro, up there!" Temari pointed somewhere in the sky.

Kankuro wasted no time and directed Karasu towards the spot the enemy has been seen, and directed it to attack. Raising its four arms, the puppet fired a barrage of senbon and kunai while moving its arms in an arc to cover a wider range.

The shadow appeared again, moving between the branches. This time, it wouldn't escape as Gaara prepared to attack.

"Wind Release: Sand Shuriken!"

Several sand projectiles fired towards the shadow, and a loud "ouch!" could be heard. Then emerging from the treetops, a large, artificial looking white bird appeared, with a blond young man wearing a black cloak with red clouds on it riding on top of it.

"Akatsuki. I knew it," Gaara said as he eyed his attacker.

"Dammit, so much for stealth," the Akatsuki grumbled.

"Wait a minute, I think I know this guy," Temari mentioned. "Konoha told us that two Akatsuki appeared in Kiri to abduct the Mizukage, and one of them fits your description. Are you Deidara, the missing-nin of Iwa?"

"You bet I am!" Deidara proudly confirmed. "And today, you three will have the luck to die by my magnificent art!"

"Gaara, he's coming after you. Stay behind us," Temari said, as she took a step forward, ready to face the Iwa missing nin.

"Actually, I don't believe he's alone. Akatsuki usually attack in pairs. His teammate must be close," Gaara warned his siblings.

"Here it comes!" Kankuro warned.

Deidara started to fly above them, close enough so they could be seen, but far enough so their attacks couldn't reach him. Reaching into his bag, the Akatsuki pulled out some explosive clay, and molded it with the mouths he had on the palm of her hands. After chewing the clay a bit, they spat it in the form of ugly looking birds.

"Let's start with something soft," Deidara said as he dropped his bombs as he flew above the trio of Suna ninjas. He then made a hand seal. "Boom!"

The clay birds exploded just before they were about to touch the ground. Kankuro and Temari jumped away in different directions to avoid the explosions, while Gaara shielded himself once again with his sand.

"Scatter! If we're together, his explosions won't be able to reach us!" Kankuro suggested.

"No! That's what the Akatsuki wants! To drive us away from Gaara and leave him unprotected!" Temari argued back.

Gaara had to admit that both his siblings had a point. Remaining together would make them too vulnerable to Deidara's explosive attacks, but it was very clear that the Akatsuki were playing a divide and conquer strategy.

"Both of you are right. However, we can't play into the Akatsuki's hands. We need to be smarter than them," Gaara told them.

"What do you suggest, then?" Kankuro asked.

"Let's remain split apart, though close enough to provide help. The Akatsuki want me, so they'll focus their attacks on me. Of the three of us, I'm the one with the best defenses, so I'll be able to handle them better. Attack the Akatsuki when they're vulnerable," Gaara told them.

Both Kankuro and Temari admitted that it was a sound strategy, even if a little risky. But then again, they weren't in an advantageous position, so they'll have to work with what they had. The three Suna ninjas placed themselves in a triangular formation, with Gaara in the middle, as if tempting the Akatsuki to go and get them.

"You think you're so smart, do you?" Deidara said with a snarl. "But your little plan has a hole on it!"

The Sand siblings were alerted but multiple piercing whistles, as a multitude of equally piercing senbon flew towards them. Temari and Kankuro sprang into action. Placing herself in front of Gaara, she fully unfolded her fan and hid behind it as if it was a shield. Kankuro, meanwhile, used his own puppets to parry the needles.

"You should look where you're stepping into, girl!" Deidara shouted from above.

"What the...?" Temari asked as she reflexively looked down, and much to her horror, she saw some of Deidara's clay animals emerging from underground. "OH SHIT!"

Deidara made a hand seal. "Boom!"

Once again, more explosions rocked the battlefield. Gaara was able to shield himself with the sand, but he wasn't fast enough to protect his siblings, which were painfully hurled into the air, before falling back into the ground, away from Gaara.

"Well, now that I got rid of those two, we can focus on the matter at hand, hm?" Deidara said with a wicked grin.

Gaara fixed a deadly glare on Deidara, as more sand started to pour from his gourd. "You will pay for that."

Far from being intimidated, Deidara grinned in response. "And how do you plan to do that, jinchuriki?"

"Sand Suspension."

With a hand motion, he gathered all his sand under his feet in the form of a platform, and with another gesture, the platform elevated him high into the air, above the trees below almost as high as Deidara's bird was.

"I don't think I've ever had to fight against an airborne opponent. Anyway, this going to be fun!" Deidara said with a glee as he threw something forward. Gaara could see there were tiny birds made of clay that flew towards him.

"More explosives. Better get rid of them as soon as possible," Gaara deduced before making another hand gesture. "Sand Bullets!"

Gaara formed bullets of super compressed sand and shot them towards the incoming explosive birds. The clay figurines detonated once the bullets impacted them, but being that far away from Gaara, the explosions were harmless.

Before the ensuing clouds of smoke could dispel, a few insects made of clay flew out of them, and dashed towards Gaara. The jinchuriki was unfazed, as with another hand motion, he prepared his defense.

"Wind Release: Infinite Sandstorm!"

Gaara blew a massive sandstorm forward. Deidara commanded his clay insects to dodge it, but the sand jutsu's range was way too wide, and the insects were caught, prematurely exploding once again.

"Okay, I think I have a good assessment on what this dude can do. Catching him off guard won't be easy, but there's no challenge my art can't overcome!" Deidara confidently thought.

"I can't let him push me into the defensive. If I want to win this, I have to attack," Gaara thought, and with a hand motion, he commanded the sand platform to fly closer to Deidara.

The blond Akatsuki noticed this and, flew away, trying to keep the distance, since he wouldn't be able to use his explosives on such a short distance. Well, technically he could, but his self preservation instincts told him otherwise.

As Gaara began his chase, he saw Kankuro and Temari in the ground from the corner on his eye. They were back on his feet and looked ready to fight, filling the redhead with relief.

"Oi, you don't have time to look around!" Deidara called him out, as if reading his mind. "Don't worry about your friends. My pal's down there with them, and he will make sure that they enjoy a slow and agonizing death. Then again, that might be a reason to worry, don't you think so?" Deidara asked, shooting him an unnerving grin.

"Kankuro and Temari are far stronger than you think. Your partner is going to be for a rough time," Gaara fire back.

"I won't worry about him, just like you shouldn't worry about those two other kids. All you should worry... is my art!" Deidara said as he threw more explosive clay figurines at Gaara.

...

Meanwhile, down below, Kankuro and Temari were back on their feet. They were looking at the sky high battle above them, which filled them with a sense of uselessness upon realizing that there was nothing they could do to help their little brother.

"That guy's smart. They sent a fly-capable Akatsuki to deal with Gaara, knowing that Gaara can fly as well and thus forcing him to fight alone," Temari said, as she intently watched the fight.

"When this is over, I'm going to build a flying puppet," Kankuro said.

"Forget about the future. We need to find a way to help Gaara NOW!" Temari stated, stomping his foot for an added emphasis.

"I know, but what can we do, Temari? We have no jutsu that can reach that high!" Kankuro protested.

"Don't worry about not being able to help your brother, kids. I'll keep you busy in the meantime. After all, I know how tedious can be when somebody makes you wait," a new, deep and raspy voice said.

Temari and Kankuro quickly turned around, ready to fight however was there, and as expected, another Akatsuki was standing before them. Well, 'standing' might not be the right word.

In front of them was what appeared to be an extremely hunched man, almost looking like he was walking on all fours, wearing the standard black cloak with red clouds of the Akatsuki. The lower part of his face was covered by a piece of black cloth, obscuring his identity.

"Here's the other one," Temari said to no one in particular.

"What's with that guy? Is he even human?" Kankuro asked, taking note of the being's strange appearance.

The Akatsuki seemed to find Kankuro's question amusing, and let out a small laugh.

"Human? No. At least not anymore. Funny you ask that. You are right, though not for the reasons you're thinking," the Akatsuki chuckled.

"Well, human or not, you're about to become a corpse!" Temari said as she took a step forward, and wounded her fan back. "Great Sickle Weasel Jutsu!"

However, before the ensuing gust of wind could blast the Akatsuki, it disappeared, shocking both siblings.

"He's fast!" Temari said in awe.

"Of course he is! If he was a weakling, I doubt he'll be part of Akatsuki!" Kankuro said, as he motioned his puppets to place themselves in a formation surrounding both he and Temari. "Get ready for his attack!"

"Your name is Kankuro, right? Or so I heard," the other Akatsuki asked. "I see you're a puppeteer. It's been a while since I met one. Do you mind if I test your abilities for a bit? Since I have nothing better to do until Deidara finishes the job."

"Show yourself, you coward!" Kankuro shouted back.

The Akatsuki chuckled. "I'll take that as a yes."

Multiple whistling sounds warned the two Sand Siblings of another attack, several senbon coming flying from a nearby group of bushes. Temari turned around, and swung her war fan once again.

"Great Sickle Weasel Jutsu!"

A wall of wind stopped the barrage of senbon dead in their tracks, while clearing the area of small vegetation, leaving the weird looking Akatsuki in the open, though unaffected by Temari's wind attack. Meanwhile, Kankuro moved Karasu and Kuroari to attack their now uncovered enemy, and positioned them to make sure the Akatsuki wouldn't escape nor have space to evade them.

"Take this!" Kankuro yelled.

Karasu and Kuroari started to spin around the Akatsuki at high speed. Then, with a tiny flick of his finger, Kankuro triggered their hidden weapon mechanisms. Karasu fired several poison coated kunai, while Kuroari fired several senbon, also poisoned as well. The Akatsuki didn't move. He didn't need to, as a segmented, metallic tail ended in a triangular tip appeared from under him, and parried all the attacks at a break-necking speed.

"What the...?" Kankuro asked in shock.

It didn't finish there. The metal tail slammed into Kuroari, dismantling it to pieces, before it wrapped around Karasu, and lifted it above his body.

"Is this the best you can do, puppeteer?" the Akatsuki asked in his guttural voice. "Not only I'm not impressed. I'm disappointed even," he finished, before tossing Karasu against Kankuro and Temari.

Both of them jumped aside to avoid the incoming puppet, but soon they would find that was a mere distraction. The metal tail flew at Temari, ready to impale her. The kunoichi reacted in time, folded her war fan, and used it to parry the blow. Still, she was unprepared for the amount of force the metallic tail was carrying, and she was hurled backwards.

"Ugh!" Temari groaned as her back hit a nearby tree.

"Temari!" Kankuro instinctively yelled, but forced himself to ignore his sister's predicament. "No! I have to take advantage now and attack while he's focused on Temari!"

Kankuro reassembled both Kuroari and Karasu, and send them again after the Akatsuki. It proved to be fruitless, as the black and red clad man... thing repelled the attack with another swing of his powerful tail.

"You bore me," the Akatsuki flatly said, before digging underground.

"For such a strange being, he doesn't lack in mobility," Kankuro said to no one in particular, as he gathered his puppets around him, waiting for the inevitable attack.

It didn't take long before the iron tail burst from underground and lunged at Kankuro. The Suna Jonin quickly moved Sanshouo between him and the impending attack. The lizard shaped puppet deployed an iron shield above its head, which successfully parried the attack.

"You won't be able to pierce Sanshouo's iron hard defense!" Kankuro boasted. "Now, let's get you back into the open!"

With another hand motion, Karasu fired a barrage of kunai with explosive notes attached to them at the area where the tail came from, creating multiple explosions. Predictably, the Akatsuki was forced out in the open. The strange-shaped being chuckled.

"Heh, maybe you have-"

"Wind Release. Wind Pillar!"

A powerful gust of wind hurled the Akatsuki into the air, much to his surprise.

"Don't dare forget about me!" Temari called.

"Good job, sister. Karasu and Kuroari will finish this now!" Kankuro said, as he moved Kuroari where the Akatsuki would fall.

The puppet then opened its barrel like stomach, revealing a large empty space inside. The Akatsuki fell inside, and in a heartbeat, the compartment was closed. Meanwhile, Karasu disassembled into many body parts, all of them ended in sharp blades, which floated around Kuroari.

"Time to finish this," Kanuro said, making a hand motion.

...

Meanwhile, back above the trees, Deidara and Gaara continued their aerial duel, exchanging explosions and sand-based attacks.

"You're a tough nut to crack, I admit that," Deidara said. "Say, let's make a deal: you come with us in piece, and you dear siblings will be spared. What do you say, hn?"

"You suppose my siblings will fall to that partner of yours. They're strong ninja, and those who underestimate them will pay for it dearly," Gaara stoically replied.

Deidara couldn't repress a smirk. "I'd knew you'll turn down that deal, that's why I offered it in the first place. It won't be no fun if you gave up like that. Then again, I'm afraid it's you who's underestimating Sasori."

The name seemed to resonate with the redheaded Jinchuriki.
"Sasori? As in... Sasori of the Red Sands?"

Deidara chuckled. "Do you know any other Sasori? Besides, that guy's from the same turf as you are, hn?"

Gaara never met Sasori, but he heard about him multiple times. Sasori of the Red Sands was probably Suna's greatest puppeteer, as well as one of deadliest ninja the village ever produced. Almost nothing was known about him after his defection. But if what Deidara said was true, then his siblings were in grave danger.

"I have to help them!"

On instinct, Gaara turned around and headed down once again, but Deidara got in the way.

"Where are you going, kid? Don't forget that I'm your opponent!" Deidara shouted, sounding almost indignant.

Gaara's face formed a dangerous scowl. "Then I'll take you out of the picture."

Deidara grinned widely. "That's the spirit! You're the kind of opponent I love to unleash my best art against!"

Gaara prepared to resume the fight. It was one thing when it was just his life was on the stakes. But if he wanted to save his siblings, he'll have to fight like he never did before. He made a hand seal.

"Wind Release: Multiple Sand Dragon Bullets!"

The sand floating around Gaara took the shape of multiple serpentine dragons, who all launched themselves at Deidara, their jaws wide open ready to chomp the Akatsuki to bits. Deidara cursed under his breath, and maneuvered his giant clay bird to evade the incoming attack. He tried to make the dragons to crash against each other, however, they would easily rebuild themselves in no time, and continue the chase.

"Okay, let's see what he thinks of this then," Deidara mused as he molded more explosive clay with the mouth on his palms.

He produced what appeared to be an insect with a bloated body. He tossed it forward, and after a smoke explosion, it grew to the same size of its bird. At its bigger size, Gaara could appreciate it was a crudely made bee that carried a large egg sack on its abdomen.

"Let's see what you do about the Explosive Clay Hive Queen, hn!" Deidara boasted, as the giant clay insect flew forward.

The Hive Queen opened its jaws and spat two clay balls that quickly took the form of clay insects that flew towards him. The redhead stopped directing the sand dragons, and sent a barrage of sand projectiles towards the clay insects, causing them to prematurely detonate. The Hive Queen pressed the attack, this time spitting four explosive insects. When Gaara tried the same tactic, the insects skillfully maneuvered around the sand projectiles. Gaara put an end to them with a wide ranged sandstorm.

Gaara's sand reacted on his own and formed a protective dome above him. Several explosions shattered the dome, but absorbed most of the impact, protecting the jinchuriki. Taking a quick glance upwards, Gaara saw Deidara flying above him in circles.

Gaara realized that Deidara's plan was to force him to divert his attention to something else so he could attack when the jinchuriki was distracted, yet this knowledge wasn't of much help.

"Come on, Gaara, think!" Gaara chided himself as he tried to focus on both Deidara and the Explosive Hive Queen.

Speaking of which, the latter released four more clay insects at him. Gaara decided to fight fire with fire, and tried something he had never done before. He formed four globs of sand, shaped them like bats, and sent them after the explosive insects.

"Sand Flying Ambush!"

Each of the bats focused on the targets, which tried to evade them, but unlike previous attacks, this one was homing, and even if the bats didn't catch the insects, they would keep them on the run pretty much forever.

"Now is when the Akatsuki would try to attack me," Gaara thought as he looked upwards, but saw nobody above him. "Where did he-?"

Suddenly, an explosion from below knocked him out of the sand cloud, and fell to the ground below. Fortunately, his sand reacted in time, and formed a sledge that allowed him to slide to the ground safely.

"The bastard attacked from below this time around," Gaara said in realization, far too late.

"Oi! No time to get distracted!" Deidara mocked from above.

Not forgetting about the other enemy, Gaara turned around to see the Explosive Hive Queen flying towards him once again. It spat four more globs of clay that turned into clay insects.

"If I have to fight two enemies at once, I might as well split in two," Gaara said as he made a hand seal. "Sand Clone Jutsu!"

Part of his sand gathered and formed a humanoid shape, that quickly morphed into an almost perfect replica of Gaara. Both Gaara and the clone summoned sand clouds once again, and hopped onto them in order to return to the aerial fight.

"So, a clone. You must think you're pretty smart," Deidara said in a taunting tone. "Too bad that by doing so, you cut the amount of sand you can use in half."

"That's all what I need to defeat you, Akatsuki. And if it's not, I can assure you that getting more sand is not a problem to begin with," Gaara retorted as he made a hand motion. "Wind Release: Sand Shuriken!"

A large barrage of star-shaped sand projectiles flew at Deidara. The Akatsuki maneuvered his bird with great skill to avoid the deadly projectiles, but the amount of them were too many this time, and some of them ended up finding its mark, producing multiple cuts across his skin, some of them rather deep.

"ARGH! So, you like to play rough, hn? Well, so do I!" Deidara said as he made a hand seal. "Explosion Release: Swarm of Fire!"

The Explosive Hive Queen, who was dealing with the sand clone, start to spat globs of clay like crazy until it emptied its egg sack. The globs quickly took the shape of flying insects. With a loud buzz that sounded more like a roar due the sheer intensity, the insects charged forward. Their first target was the Gaara clone, who, being much weaker than the original, perished instantly upon being engulfed by a chain of explosions, obliterating it. The remaining of the swarm set their sights on Gaara, and began the chase.

Gaara frowned upon seeing the swarm approaching. He made a single hand seal with both hands.

"Wind Release: Infinite Sandstorm!"

Gaara gathered all the sand he could, and directed it at the incoming swarm in the form of a devastating sandstorm. The winds were so powerful it successfully halted their advance, some of the clay insects.

Unfortunately, that left him wide open for Deidara to attack, and the Akatsuki sent two explosive clay birds at him. Seeing that if he remained in the air, the insects would have more ways to attack him, Gaara descended upon the ground, and formed several layers of sand domes around him in order to protect himself against the incoming swarm.

"Let's hope this will be enough," Gaara inwardly pleaded.

He was soon about to find out, as multiple explosions rained upon him and his makeshift bunker.

...

Back to Temari and Kankuro, the hooded Suna ninja was about finish Sasori off.

"Black Secret Move: Iron Maiden!"

The improvised swords that were Karasu's limbs inserted into the slits around Kuroari's torso, impaling the Akatsuki inside.

"... and done!" Kankuro said, with a triumphant smirk.

Temari, however, wasn't so optimistic. "No blood spilled. I have a bad feeling about this. Open up. I want to make sure the bastard's dead," Temari asked as she got her giant fan ready.

Kankuro nodded, and with a pull of his finger, he opened Kuroari's stomach. And much to his shock and anger, there was a log in the Akatsuki's place, impaled by the improvised blades.

"The hell? Where did he go?" Kankuro indignantly asked.

"Goddammit Kankuro, he fooled us! Get your puppets back to normal before we're attacked!" Temari urged him.

"Too late for that," the Akatsuki's raspy voice said, as his metallic tail burst from behind a nearby bush, and stabbed into Kankuro's stomach.

"Kankuro!" Temari screamed.

Kankuro grunted in pain, before he wrapped one of his arms around the metallic tail. Then, he created several chakra threads with the other, and tied those threads to nearby branches. When the Akatsuki tried to pull his tail back, he found unable to.

"I got him, Temari! Go for the kill!" Kankuro cried, as he spat some blood.

Temari nodded and rushed towards the Akatsuki. She folded her fan, and hoisted it over her head. Once the Akatsuki appeared before her, she got ready to attack. The Akatsuki, however, opened his mouth, and fired a barrage of senbon that sank into Temari's flesh. The kunoichi ignored the sharp pain and smashed her fan against the Akatsuki's head with all her might.

The effect was instant. Temari had put so much strength into her swipe, that the Akatsuki shattered instantly as if he was made of wood, metal and plastic. And, upon closer inspection, that was the case, much to the Suna kunoichi's bewilderment.

A hooded man wearing the Akatsuki cloak came out of the shattered construct. Pulling his hood back, he revealed to be a very young man with soft facial features and short red hair, not unlike Gaara's.

"Congratulations, you destroyed Hiruko," the Akatsuki said, his voice no longer sounding deep and raspy, but soft and youthful. "Too bad you did it at the cost of your lives."

"Wait a minute, that thing... it was a puppet!" Kankuro said in realization, before he winced and brought one hand to his wounded gut.

"Yes, it was. Not that it would have been of much help had you realized of that earlier," the Akatsuki replied in a bored tone. "The weapons I hurt you with are coated in a lethal, slow acting poison. You might not notice it now, but trust me, you're already dead."

"Who the hell are you!?" an enraged Kankuro asked.

The redhead smirked. "I am what you strive to be. I am the strongest ninja Suna ever produced, as well as its most skilled puppeteer. The hilariously outdated puppets you tried to use against me were some of my earliest creations. Though, to your credit, I'll admit that you handled them with mastery.

"My name is Sasori of the Red Sands. You might have heard of me."

Kankuro paled. If this man was who he said it was, then no wonder he defeated them so easily. But there was something that didn't make sense. Sasori disappeared from Suna twenty years ago, back during the Third Ninja War, when he was just fifteen. Yet the young man in front of him couldn't be older than eighteen.

"You lie!" Kankuro called him out. "If you were really Sasori-"

At that moment, a long chain of explosions happened nearby, raising powerful winds and several clouds of smoke and dirt.

"And it seems that my partner is done. Just in time. Good, since I hate waiting," the redhead said with a smirk.

...

"Hmmm... I think I overdid it..." Deidara wondered, as his bird began to fly in circles around the clouds of dirt and smoke product of the explosions. He then smiled and added: "Nah! It was epic! One of my best jobs!"

As the dust started to clear, among a field of craters, Deidara could see his prey: the redheaded jinchuriki, lying on the ground, motionless. His clothes were torn apart, and his body was covered in burns and bruises. A bad feeling started to creep through the Iwa missing-nin's back, and grimaced in result.

"Boy, I may have overdone it there..." Deidara mumbled as he got off his bird, and started to walk towards Gaara. "If I killed the jinchuriki, then I... no, better check before jumping to conclusions. Oi, are you alive, hn?" Deidara asked as he kicked Gaara's body.

Then, "Gaara" dissolved into a mound of sand, much to Deidara's shock.

"Another clone!" Deidara said in realization, as he looked around trying to find the real deal.

But it was too late. Sand started to burst from underground with the same power as a geyser. The sand then started to form thick tendrils which took no time to wrap themselves around the Akatsuki, leaving him immobilized.

"What the hell is this!?" Deidara screamed as he futilely tried to break free.

"A decoy. They're widely used by ninja around the world," Gaara's voice said from behind as he walked towards the trapped Deidara. "Don't bother, you won't be able to break free of that sand prison. Now, we're going to head towards your partner, and you'll tell him to leave, or else I'll turn your bones and organs into pudding."

"And you'll kill me afterwards. You think I'm an idiot?" Deidara retorted.

"You won't die. At least, not yet. A live Akatsuki member is too valuable. That's why I'll bring you back to my village, where our Torture & Interrogation department will make you spill everything you know about Akatsuki. If you cooperate, you might live."

"So, you want to know Akatsuki's secrets, hehehe..." Deidara laughed mischievously, before shooting Gaara a taunting look. "I think I might share one of those secrets right now with you..."

"I'm all ears. And that would be...?"

"That's not the real me, but a clone," Deidara's voice said from behind.

Gaara instinctively turned around and saw the real Deidara standing there. Startled, Gaara prepared to attack the real one before he could and that proved to be a fatal mistake. The clone behind him gathered its chakra and released it in the form of yet another explosion that engulfed Gaara. The sand trapping the clone tried to move towards Gaara in order to protect him, but it was too late.

After the explosion ceased, Gaara laid there, motionless, just like his clone had been just a few minutes ago.

"I think you're not a clone this time, are you?" Deidara mockingly asked. He then pulled out what appeared to be a compass. The needle in the compass moved a little at a constant pace. "And you're not dead. Alright, our job here is done!"

Deidara jumped onto his giant clay bird, who proceed to catch Gaara with its talons, before it flew to the concurrent battleground. There, he saw Sasori, no longer inside his puppet, with the other two Suna ninja at his feet.

"Oi, Sasori, I already beat him! Shall we move or what, hn?" Deidara asked.

"Gaara..." Temari whispered, disheartened upon seeing her defeated brother being held by that clay bird.

"You did? Nice," Sasori said, before turning to the fallen Suna nin. "The poison inside your bodies will kill you in three days. You will experience the most excruciating pain any human being has ever felt. By the end of the second day, you'll try to kill yourselves. The merciful thing would be to kill you right here and right now," Sasori concluded, shooting them a painfully fake sympathetic smile. "But you destroyed Hiruko, one of my dearest puppets. It's beyond repair, which means I'll have to rebuild it from scratch. And thus, I don't feel especially merciful. So enjoy your last three days of your existence, if you can, that is."

Sasori then turned around, and jumped onto Deidara's bird. The artificial creature flapped its wings vigorously to gain altitude, and started to fly towards the west.

Once the Akatsuki were no longer visible, Temari gathered what little strength she had, and using her folded war fan as support, she got back on her feet.

"Kankuro... get up! We're going to... make those bastards... regret leaving us... alive," Temari said, as she started to cough.

"You aren't thinking in... going after them...?" Kankuro weakly asked.

"Of course not! We need to look for help... for both Gaara and ourselves..." Temari replied.

"We're too far away from Suna..."

"But we're still close to Konoha!" Temari energetically said, as she helped his little brother back on his feet. "Come on Kankuro! Tsunade-sama can... heal us, and then Konoha will help us to... to save Gaara..."

And with the knowledge that not only their lives, but their little brother's life was at stake, the two fallen Suna ninja proceeded to move towards Konoha, as fast as their weakened bodies allowed them to.

Author's Note: And the Gaara Rescue Arc begins! Will Temari and Kankuro reach Konoha in time to save both their lives, as well as Gaara? I think the answer is pretty obvious, not only because if they didn't there would be no arc, but there's no way I'm going to kill the Sand Siblings. You NEVER kill the Sand Siblings. Only villains do that.

And yeah, Shikamaru and Temari are an item already, which happened offscreen during the second time skip. Sorry if it feels rushed, but if I gave all couples the same focus as Naruto and Hinata, the story's pace would be brought to a screeching halt. Romance is good and all that, but it's secondary to the main plot. Also, you enjoyed their rematch. Some people were unsatisfied with their short match in the Chunin Exams preliminaries, so hope this serves to convince you that no, I don't have a grudge against Shikamaru.

Hope you enjoyed the Sand Siblings versus Akatsuki fight. Like I said in the note at the beginning, Chiyo won't upstage Kankuro and Temari from what should have been their rightful place in this arc, and they will get their revenge match against Sasori and Deidara.

BTW, I'm going to leave here a list of rank progression of all the characters of Naruto's age group:

Konoha:

Naruto : Genin-Chunin (Part I), Special Jonin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Jonin (Part II)

Hinata : Genin-Chunin (Part I), Chunin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Special Jonin (Part II)

Haku : Genin (Part I), Chunin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Special Jonin (Part II)

Sasuke : Genin-Chunin (Part I), Special Jonin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Jonin (Part II)

Sakura : Genin (Part I), Chunin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Chunin (Part II)

Karin : Genin (Part I), Chunin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Chunin (Part II)

Shikamaru : Genin (Part I), Chunin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Chunin (Part II)

Ino : Genin (Part I), Chunin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Chunin (Part II)

Choji : Genin (Part I), Chunin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Chunin (Part II)

Kiba : Genin (Part I), Chunin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Chunin (Part II)

Shino : Genin (Part I), Chunin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Chunin (Part II)

Tamaki : Genin (Part I), Chunin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Chunin (Part II)

Neji : Genin (Part I), Special Jonin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Jonin (Part II)

Tenten : Genin-Chunin (Part I), Chunin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Special Jonin (Part II)

Lee : Genin (Part I), Chunin (Kiri Civil War Interlude), Special Jonin (Part II)

Hanabi : Academy Student (Part I), Genin (Part II)

Kaida : Academy Student (Part I), Genin (Part II)

Hagane : Academy Student (Part I), Genin (Part II)

Suna:

Gaara : Genin-Chunin (Part I), Jonin (Part II)

Kankuro : Genin (Part I), Jonin (Part II)

Temari : Genin (Part I), Jonin (Part II)

Taki:

Fu : Genin-Chunin (Part I), Jonin (Part II)

Kumo:

Karui : Genin-Chunin (Part I), Chunin (Part II) :

Omoi : Genin (Part I), Chunin (Part II)

T : Genin (Part I), Chunin (Part II)

Thanks ato gio08 for betareading the chapter.

Anyway, with this the Gaara Rescue Arc, and Shippuden, have officially begun! I hope that with all the changes I'm going to make, you end up enjoying it better than the original! Tell me your thoughts via review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Gaara's Rescue Team

Author's Note: Well, the beginning of Shippuden got an overall much better reception than the Kiri Civil War arc. Guess that people really wanted to see the Sand Siblings back. Anyway, enjoy the second part:

Chapter 52

Gaara's Rescue Party

or

Snakes in the Grass

"Did I ever tell you how much I hate gate duty?" Kiba asked his teammates.

"Many times. And doing so doesn't make our job here any less tedious," Shino fired back.

"You know, I heard that if you get promoted to Special Jonin, you no longer have to do these kind of chores," Tamaki replied. "Problem is, I have no idea what could I do to get that promotion."

"I plan on specializing as a tracker, just like my mom did," Kiba replied. "Tracking missions are always fun."

Tamaki noticed that a faint light was starting to appear in the horizon, and little by little, the forest around Konoha started to become clearer.

"The sun is rising," the Cat Kunoichi said as she stifled a yawn. "That means the day shift will soon come, and we can go home and sleep a little."

Akamaru then started to sniff the air. He walked closer to the wall's edge and started to loudly bark at something below.

"What is it buddy, did you find something?" Kiba said, and soon he also got wind of a foreign smell coming closer.

Tamaki narrowed her eyes, and saw two figures slowly approaching the gates. "Hey, down there! Two people are coming!"

"Can you see who they are?" Shino asked.

"Their smell... I think they're Suna ninja. And not just Suna ninja, but I think they're Gaara's older siblings!" Kiba pointed out.

"Are you sure about that?" Shino asked, as he tried to get a better view of the incoming strangers.

Then, the two figures dropped to the ground, and laid there, motionless.

"Oh shit!" Tamaki said.

"Kiba, go warn somebody about the situation at hand! I'll go down and see if I can heal them. Tamaki, guard my back in case it's a trap," Shino quickly commanded.

"Right!"

"You got it!"

Kiba and Akamaru quickly dashed towards the Hokage's tower, while Shino and Tamaki jumped from the wall, landing on the ground with a 'thud', as they cautiously approached the two fallen Suna ninja.

...

Land of the Rivers

A couple hours after Kankuro and Temari had arrived to Konoha, so did Deidara and Sasori to the designated Akatsuki lair in the Land of the Rivers. While they could have arrived there much earlier, they decided to stop for the night and rest, since neither of them came out unscathed from their clash with the Sand Siblings.

They reached the main door, a massive boulder with a seal attached to it. Deidara made a hand seal, and the boulder elevated above the ground, revealing a cave entrance. The two Akatsuki, with their captured jinchuriki hoisted on Deidara's shoulder, entered the cave, and the boulder slammed down as soon as they were inside.

Deidara walked forward and tossed Gaara's unconscious body in front of him.

"So, I see that you were successful in your endeavor, Deidara, Sasori," a deep, distorted voice said above them.

Both Akatsuki looked upwards and saw eight astral projections, each of them belonging to the other Akatsuki members.

"Of course! When did I fail Akatsuki?" Deidara asked, indignantly. "That's two for two, need I remind you!"

"You shouldn't count Yagura, given that all you had to do was to activate the trigger phrase I implanted inside his mind," Obito dismissively said.

Deidara angrily glared at the Uchiha. "I'd like to see YOU getting into a warzone and take a jinchuriki out of it alive, hn!"

"Then again, we shouldn't dismiss their accomplishments like that, should we?" Orochimaru chuckled. "After all, Sasori lost his beloved Hiruko in order to bring us this jinchuriki."

This time, it was Sasori who frowned at Orochimaru. He hated how that man was able to give praise and diss insults in the same breath.

Still, the best thing to do was not to dignify that gratuitous jab with a response.

"Enough of that. Time is of the essence. We need to extract the Tailed Beast from its host," the leader said as he made five hand seals. "Summoning Jutsu!"

A massive statue emerged from the ground. The statue had an extremely ugly visage, composed of a large, open mouth full of teeth and nine eyes, two of whom were opened. Disconnected from the statue were two arms with their fingers pointing forward. Each Akatsuki placed themselves on one of the fingers.

"The extraction process will take three days, so make sure you're ready," the Leader advised, before making another hand seal. "Sealing Art: Phantom Dragon Nine Consumption Seal!"

Nine ghostly dragons emerged from the statue's mouth and engulfed Gaara, lifting the young jinchuriki above the ground. A stream of red energy started to flow from Gaara's mouth into the statue. The extraction process had begun, and if it wasn't interrupted, Gaara would lose the One Tail. But most importantly, he would also lose his life.

...

Konoha Hospital

When Tsunade crossed the doors of the hospital like she did every other day, she expected to have a day like every other. Sure, medical emergencies happen every day, but nothing she or her qualified and in some cases, personally trained staff wouldn't be able to handle.

What she didn't expect, though, was a medical emergency not even five minutes after she sat on her desk in her office. A nurse immediately requested her to come down, as two people of utmost importance were on the verge of death, and they needed her help as soon as possible. Tsunade's surprise was gigantic when she saw who the patients were.

"Temari and Kankuro? What are these two doing here?" Tsunade asked as she helped the other medic-nin to stabilize them.

"We don't know. The Chunin of Team Kakashi were about to finish their night shift at the gates when they saw them coming," a medic nin explained. "We can ask them when they're awake."

"What's their status?" Tsunade asked.

"Their wounds suggest that they've been in a battle recently. But that's not the reason of their current state," another medic-nin said. "We detected a powerful poison coursing through their bodies. If we don't eliminate the poison, they might not last long."

Tsunade knew what she had to do. "Quickly, fetch my apprentices! We'll need them if we want these two to live!"

She did not mention Shino. He was in her mind, being her apprentice and all, but after being all night awake, he would be way too sleepy to be of help. And for their task ahead, they needed to be as focused as possible.

...

Training Ground Eight

Kurenai's Assault Squad had gathered at their usual training spot, and were about to begin their morning training routine. Since all of them were either Jonin or Special Jonin, none of them were bound to the extra duties all Chunin had, such as guarding the gates, or patrolling the city. And thus, they usually spend the morning training until they were called for a mission.

And unbeknownst to them, today would be one of those days.

"Okay, since we're all here, let us begin," Kurenai said. "I have a good feeling that if we keep this training regime, in a few months you two will get that promotion to Jonin," Kurenai told Haku and Hinata.

"Today I suggested Kurenai-sensei that you should fight me in Sage Mode. I won't go all out on you, but it will be good practice," Naruto said. "You won't find many enemies that are stronger than a master of Senjutsu like yours truly, hehe."

"Alright, Naruto-kun, I'm ready," Hinata confidently said.

"Me too. Besides, that way we can go all out without worrying about causing you irreparable harm," Haku added.

"In that case, get into position. I'll watch and-" Kurenai was saying before she noticed an ANBU pretty much appearing between them. "Huh?"

Haku immediately recognized the ANBU, not just for her cat-shaped mask, but also for her bright purple hair. "Yugao-san?"

The ANBU nodded and removed her mask, revealing her face. "Hinata Hyuga, Tsunade-sama requests your presence at the hospital. You need to assist her with two gravely injured patients of utmost importance."

"I will go immediately," Hinata nodded as she started running towards the hospital.

"Yugao, do you know who are those patients?" Kurenai asked the purplette.

"Yes. Temari and Kankuro, from Sunagakure. We don't know what happened to them since they're unconscious, but we presume they've been attacked," Yugao explained.

Naruto felt his heart sink. He had talked to them not even a day ago. Then, much to his horror, he noticed that Yugao didn't mention a certain somebody. "What about Gaara? He left with Kankuro and Temari. Is he alright!?"

Yugao just shook her head. "We know nothing about him. What we know it's that Temari and Kankuro appeared before the gates of the village shortly after sunrise. It's possible that he managed to run away and return to Suna?"

"No, that doesn't sound like Gaara. He would have never abandoned his siblings like that. I have a very bad feeling about this. I think I'm going to the hospital as well," Naruto said.

"Let's go all then," Kurenai suggested.

Yugao merely nodded, put her mask back on, and Body Flickered out of there.

"Gaara, Temari and Kankuro left yesterday afternoon, and today the latter two show up, badly wounded, without the former," Haku mentioned. "Do you think this is the work of Akatsuki?"

Naruto shot the Ice Ninja a grave look. "That's what I'm afraid of."

...

When Hinata arrived at the room where Kankuro and Temari were being treated, she was greeted by the sight of her master in the medical arts, as well as her fellow medic-nin Ino. Tsunade was studying something under a microscope, while Ino helped other medics to stabilize the wounded Sand Siblings.

"Tsunade-sama, Hinata is here!" a nurse announced.

"Good. Hinata go help Ino, now!" she barked at the Hyuga. "What about Shizune's Medical Squad?"

"It seems they left yesterday for a mission. Nobody knows when they will be back," the nurse replied.

"Drats. I could have really used their help here," Tsunade cursed, as she went back to the microscope.

"Any progress on the poison, Tsunade-sama?" Ino asked as she continuously healed Temari.

"I think I saw something similar in the past. It looks a lot like the poisons Chiyo of Suna used way back during the Second Ninja War," Tsunade told her. "Except this one seems far more advanced. Fortunately, nobody has ever created a poison I can't neutralize, and this won't be an exception."

Suddenly, Kankuro started to tremble violently as he screamed in pain.

"What's wrong with him?" a panicked Ino said as she moved to heal him.

"Byakugan!" Hinata's Bloodline Limit activated, and with it she was able to immediately see the problem. "His liver! The poison is damaging it!"

Ino nodded and focused the Mystical Palm Jutsu on that area. Soon, Kankuro relaxed and became more stable, even if he was still unconscious. Hinata then scanned what organs were the most damaged so she, Ino and the other medics could focus on healing those first.

"Good job you two. Work on keeping them stable while I finish the antidote," Tsunade told them.

"When Temari-san and Kankuro-san left, Gaara-san was with them. Do we know anything about him?" Hinata asked. Like Naruto and Haku, she was afraid Akatsuki would be behind this.

Ino shook her head. "No. We don't know about him. At least not unless these two wake up first."

"Could you probe their minds?" Hinata suggested.

"Guess I could. Though try to keep them stable. If another violent episode happens, the sympathetic damage could break my mind," Ino advised Hinata as she placed both her index fingers on Kankuro and Temari's forehead.

The Yamanaka heiress only needed to see their latest memories before she found the answer she was looking for.

"Got it!" Ino said. "It seems that two Akatsuki attacked them and took Gaara away. Their names are Sasori and Deidara."

Hinata let out a weary sigh. "I dreaded it. We need to inform both Hokage-sama and Sunagakure."

"Let somebody else do that. We have a work to finish here," Tsunade told her, before something Ino said registered in her brain. "Wait a minute, you said Sasori?"

"Yes, that's the name I heard in both their minds. It can't be a coincidence," Ino confirmed. "Why?"

"Sasori is Chiyo's grandson. He disappeared twenty years ago, and nobody has seen him since. Guess that solves both that mystery and why this poison felt so familiar," Tsunade said.

"When Naruto learns of this, there won't be anything to stop him from going to rescue Gaara himself," Hinata mentioned.

"I know," Tsunade sighed in defeat. "That's why I'm counting on you to make sure that boneheaded son of mine comes back alive."

Hinata nodded with determination. "You can trust him to me, Tsunade-sama."

...

An indeterminate amount of time later, Temari stirred as she slowly opened her eyes. She had to blink a couple times, in order for her eyes to get used to the initially bright light of the early morning. Standing up, she groaned as she looked around, finding the surroundings worryingly unfamiliar.

"Ugh..." she groaned.

"Huh?" a female voice said besides her. "You're awake?"

Temari looked at the blue haired, pale skinned girl sitting beside her. "H-Hinata?"

"Temari-san? You're awake!" Hinata said visibly happy. She then walked outside the hospital room, and said to somebody outside: "Naruto-kun, she's finally awake!"

Unsurprisingly, Naruto rushed into the room with an excited, but visibly not overjoyed expression.

"Finally! We were so worried!" Naruto loudly said.

"Shhhhh! We're in a hospital!" Hinata chided her boyfriend.

Naruto acknowledged Hinata with a sheepish nod. "Yeah, sorry..."

Naruto's loud outburst caused Kankuro to awake from his sleep as well. His reaction was the same as Temari's.

"Who the hell is yelling...?" Kankuro complained in a whisper, as confusion started to dawn once he realized where he was. "What... where am I?"

"It's safe to assume we made it to Konoha. But more importantly," Temari interrupted, now more awake. "How long have we been here?"

Temari could feel the tension in the atmosphere growing thicker, which made her dread the answer ever more.

"You've been here for almost a day," Hinata gravely said. "We know about Gaara. Ino-san scanned your minds while you were unconscious."

"What!?" Kankuro indignantly asked.

"Sorry for invading your privacy like that, but we needed to know what happened in order to prepare accordingly," Hinata explained. "Besides, Ino-san only probed the last few hours' worth of memories, so it's nothing you should worry about."

"Now I'm guessing you want to go and look for Gaara, right?" Naruto asked.

Both Temari and Kankuro scowled at such obvious question. "Do we really need to answer?" Temari asked.

"Thought so. If you feel better, get dressed and come with us to the Hokage's tower. We need to prepare for a few things before we leave," Naruto said.

Kankuro and Temari nodded.

...

Hokage's Tower, Half an Hour Later

Inside the Council Room were gathered Jiraiya, all four members of Kurenai's Assault Squad, Temari and Kankuro.

"While I'm willing to lend you my best ninja to help with Gaara's rescue, we have a problem," Jiraiya stated. "We don't know where did they took Gaara, and even if we put our best trackers to work, we'd still need something with Gaara's or his captor's scent, which we don't have."

"Besides, we still don't know if Gaara is still alive," Kurenai intervened, before sending the Sand Siblings an apologetic look.

"Sorry if I'm being pessimist, but it's a possibility we must take into account."

"Fortunately, we have the solution to both problems right here," Temari said as she pulled out a compass from the folders of her robe.

"A... compass?" Hinata asked, tilting her head in slight confusion.

"Not a normal compass. This compass was made with special fuinjutsu, and is attuned to Gaara's chakra signature. The needle marks the direction Gaara is, and the fact that it needle still moves means that he's still alive."

Jiraiya opened his eyes wide in shock. "But... that's extremely dangerous! If it fell in the wrong hands, such artifact would make hunting Gaara trivially easy!"

"We're aware of that. That's why only four of this compasses were made. Temari and I carry two of them, and the other two are under our father's watch," Kankuro explained. "We decided to make them in case something like this happened, which as you can see, it did. All what we need to do is follow the compass and rescue Gaara."

"Speaking of which, how much time do we have?" Haku asked. "Because no doubt the Akatsuki will try to extract Gaara's Beast as soon as possible."

"Not just that, but they also need to seal it in another container, either a human or something else," Jiraiya added. "According to my available knowledge, it's a long and exhausting process. Though between ten people, they can accelerate the process. My estimate is that we have three days until the Tailed Beast is removed and Gaara dies."

A deafening silence fell upon the room, as everybody weighed down the Hokage's words.

"Three days. That's a very narrow window," Hinata said, almost in a whimper.

"Less than three days," Temari corrected them. "We spent a whole day here, recovering. We only have two days at best to do it. Let's hope they didn't take him too far."

"If they want to start the extraction process as soon as possible, they'll have to be somewhere near the place you were attacked. My best bet would be the Land of the Rivers, since it's a small country with no ninja village. The best place to set a hideout," Jiraiya suggested.

Kankuro checked his compass. "The needle does point in the direction of the Land of the Rivers. I don't think they would go any further, or else they'd go into the Land of Wind. Akatsuki wouldn't dare to set a base there."

"Sadly, they would, so don't be so quick to discard that possibility," Naruto pointed out. "Anyway, I think we've talked long enough, can we go now?"

Jiraiya nodded. "Indeed. However, be careful, Naruto. Remember Akatsuki is also after you."

"Don't sweat it, dad. I'll give up ramen before letting such thing happen," Naruto said, with his trademark confident grin.

"Meanwhile, I'll send a toad messenger to Sunagakure in order to warn them about what happened. Hopefully, they will provide them with reinforcements," Jiraiya told them. "Good luck to all of you."

All of them nodded and left the Council Room, ready to leave the village and look for Gaara as soon as possible.

...

A few hours later, the group of six were traversing the forests of the Land of Fire as fast as they could, leaping from one tree branch into the next. From time to time, Temari or Kankuro would take a look at their compasses, not just to check they were in the right direction, but to see if Gaara was still alive. So far, the needle still moved. They might arrive in time yet.

"Kankuro, Temari," Kurenai broke the silence. "Tell us about the Akatsuki who attacked you. We'll have to face them more than likely."

Both Kankuro and Temari nodded, before the latter started to speak.

"The one Kankuro and I fought against is a master puppeteer, who claimed to be Sasori of the Red Sands, one of Suna's most skilled ninja," Temari said.

"That puppet he used to fight us... hell, I even feel unworthy of calling myself a puppeteer. And I'm sure he has others way more dangerous than that," Kankuro bitterly said, gritting his teeth.

"Is Sasori related to one of your village elders, the one named Chiyo?" Hinata asked.

Temari looked at the Hyuga, mildly confused. "Yeah, that's true. How is that relevant?"

"When Tsunade-sama analyzed the poison, she said it was similar to the ones Chiyo used to concoct back in the Second Ninja War. Though this one was far more advanced," Hinata pointed out.

"That's too much of a coincidence to discard. Though those are really bad news if that guy was really Sasori," Temari said, with a shiver.

"Why do you say that?" Haku asked.

"Sasori alone managed to stop Iwa's forces from entering the Land of the Wind. If it wasn't for him, Suna could have come out of the war in even worse shape than we did," Kankuro explained. "In fact, the 'red sands' part of his name is because whenever he was in the battlefield, the sand of the desert ended up dyed in red due the all blood spilled by his puppets."

The Konoha ninja grew uneasy at the fearsome reputation just one of their potential enemies had. Even if they already knew this, they only had very few information on its members and their past exploits.

"What about the other guy?" Haku asked.

"That was the one who fought and defeated Gaara," Kankuro continued. "It was a blonde... well, I dunno. I couldn't tell if it was a guy or a girl, honestly. I mean, it sounded like a man but looked like a girl. Kinda like you, Haku."

Haku raised an eyebrow in annoyance, while Temari snickered a little.

Something clicked within Naruto's minds, and the jinchuriki opened his mouth to speak. "Did that guy fight with explosives, while flying on top of a weird giant bird?"

"Yes, precisely!" Temari said. "Do you know this man?"

Naruto nodded, and his expression darkened. "I met him before. His name is Deidara. He appeared during the Kirigakure invasion to abduct Yagura. Unfortunately, both Mei and I were far too exhausted to stop him that moment. And now, that asshole returned to do the same thing to Gaara."

Hinata noticed Naruto's anger and jumped close to him.

"Don't worry, Naruto-kun. We'll stop both him and the rest of Akatsuki, so they won't hunt any more jinchuriki," Hinata reassured him.

Naruto's frown vanished, and smiled a little at his girlfriend's support.

"Deidara nearly killed me as well during the battle of Kirigakure," Haku interjected. "Had I been a second slower, both me, Dagura-san, as well as many Kiri ninja would have perished, engulfed by the fire of his explosives."

"Kurenai-sensei, do you carry a bingo book?" Naruto asked. The raven haired woman nodded, before the blond continued. "I know Deidara has a profile there. We should take a look before we engage him."

"Indeed. Even if we know he uses some sort of explosive jutsu, getting more information won't hurt," Kurenai agreed.

The group of six continued their trek discussing among each other possible strategies and ways to take down the two Akatsuki. And unbeknownst to them, an inhuman being watched them as they moved.

...

Meanwhile, back at the Akatsuki hideout, the ten missing-nin continued the extraction process. That is, until Zetsu was startled by the new information that reached his brain. Something that didn't go unnoticed by the leader.

"Zetsu, don't falter. We still have a long way to go until the extraction process is complete," the leader said, as he fixed his rippled eyes on the plant man.

"It's not that, boss. One of my clones saw a force of Konoha ninja heading towards the hideout's direction," the white half of Zetsu informed. "I think they're coming to the jinchuriki's rescue."

"How do you know they're coming for us? The location of this hideout is a secret," the only female of the Akatsuki said.

"Yeah. They could be a squad of ninja going on an unrelated mission," Kakuzu suggested.

"For starters, the Nine Tails Jinchuriki is in the group, and looked agitated. And second, two Suna ninja were with them. The jinchuriki's siblings, to be precise," White Zetsu said.

Naturally, this drew Sasori's attention. "That's impossible. I poisoned them. No one has been able to make an antidote to my poisons, and even if by some chance somebody was able to, there's no way they could have done it in such little time!"

"It's obvious what happened, Sasori-san," Orochimaru intervened. "If they came from Konoha's direction, it means they were able to reach the village. Remember that Tsunade-hime is in Konoha, and to her, making an antidote for your poison would have been trivially easy."

Sasori frowned once again at Orochimaru's dig. For all his quarrels with Deidara, he preferred the psychotic blond over the smug Sannin as a partner. He didn't miss the days in which the two of them were part of the same two-man team.

"Even then, there's no way for them to know we're here, right?" Deidara asked.

"They can, if they do use the same compass we used to track the jinchuriki," Sasori replied. "As long as the jinchuriki is alive, they'll be able to track his position."

"How long until they reach this place, Zetsu?" the leader asked.

"I'd say less than a day. They're moving really fast. In a few hours, they'll reach the border between the Land of Fire and the Land of Rivers," the plant man informed.

"We can't afford taking such a big risk. Somebody needs to go there and delay them until the extraction is complete," the leader stated.

"Perhaps I can be of assistance," Orochimaru offered. "I placed some of my minions close to the lair in case something like this happened. While I doubt they will be able to defeat Naruto-kun and his allies, they'll buy us enough time to complete the ritual. Not to mention, they'll be far more exhausted once they arrive to rescue their little friend."

"Good, and once they reach this lair, we'll kill two birds with one stone and capture the Nine Tails' jinchuriki," the female Akatsuki said.

Obito didn't say anything, as he carefully listened to the whole exchange.

"Orochimaru, every day you grow more dangerous, but you still prove to be too useful to eliminate yet," Obito thought. One could say that the solution to his problem was to use Shisui's eye's mind controlling powers on the Sannin. Which he already did, but Orochimaru somehow managed to shrug the genjutsu off. He found later that Orochimaru's skull is carved with protective seals to stop enemies from probing or tampering with his mind, a measure he originally developed in case he was at the mercy of the Yamanaka working at Konoha's T&I department. "But one day, your usefulness will come to an end. And without the Akatsuki to cover your back and provide you with resources, your other enemies won't take long to wipe you out..."

...

Back to the forests of the Land of Fire, the group of six continued jumping from one branch to the other, mentally preparing themselves for the battle that no doubt would happen in a few hours. However, they weren't prepared for the battle that was about to happen in a few seconds.

Without any kind of warning, a giant snake emerged out of nowhere, its jaws wide open, ready to swallow Hinata in one go. Fortunately, while startled, the bluenette's sharp reflexes didn't fail to save her.

"Heavenly Spin!"

Hinata turned into a spinning sphere of chakra the moment the snake's giant jaws closed upon her. The force of the spinning caused the snake to recoil, hissing in pain. With another thundering racket, another snake, just as big as the first one, burst through the trees, this time aiming for Haku. The Ice Ninja nimbly jumped aside, dodging the attack, as he made several hand seals.

"Ice Release: Breath of Winter!"

Haku breathed an extremely powerful gust of frozen wind that covered the giant snake in frost. The reptile hissed in pain as well, as it quickly slithered away.

"Where the hell these things came from?" Temari shouted as she prepared to attack in case more of them came.

"There are only two snake summoners we're aware of. One of them is Anko, a ninja loyal to Konoha. The other one is Orochimaru," Kurenai explained.

"Does that mean that Orochimaru is here!?" Naruto asked as worry began to creep through his back.

"Orochimaru-sama doesn't have the time to deal with insignificant vermin like you. That's why we're here," a new voice said. The group of six saw a man wearing an armored version Otogakure uniform landing on a tree branch in front of them. A large broadsword was hanging on his back. His hands quickly ran through hand seals.

"Lightning Release: Snake Thunder!"

The man's arm started to crackle with yellow electricity, as the lightning gathered and formed into a snake, which lunged at the group. Hinata jumped forward.

"Byakugan!" after activating her Bloodline Limit, she also ran through hand seals. "Lightning Release: Thunder Palm!"

Hinata gave a swipe with one of her electricity imbued hands, deflecting the snake-shaped lightning bolt aside. At that moment, Temari step forward, war fan already unfolded.

"Great Sickle Weasel Jutsu!"

With a single blow of her fan, Temari produced a brutal gale-force wind, which tore nearby tree branches free of leaves, and hurled the Oto ninja backwards.

"Watch out, there's another one ready to attack!" Hinata warned, as she pointed to her left.

"Not bad, girl," a female voice said, and another Otogakure ninja showed up. She started to make hand seals. "But we don't need the element of surprise to deal with you! Wood Release: Wood Dragon Jutsu!"

"What!?" Naruto asked in shock.

From the ground, a serpentine dragon emerged, and let out a powerful roar before it lunged at the Konoha and Suna ninja.

"Just as we feared, Orochimaru managed to successfully grant somebody the First Hokage's abilities," Kurenai realized. "Hinata, can you take a good look at their appearance?"

The Hyuga nodded, and focused their Byakugan on their faces. She gasped upon seeing how they looked behind those balaclavas.

"Hinata?" Naruto worriedly asked, no affectionate honorific this time.

The first thing the Hyuga saw was that two Oto ninja were pretty much twins, given how much they resembled each other. They had pale skin and short white hair, the female being a little longer than the male's, and pretty faces with soft features. Both of them had bright yellow eyes.

"Their faces... they all look a lot like your little siblings, if they were adults!" Hinata said in shock.

"WHAT!?" Naruto loudly asked as he tried to make sense of what the Hyuga said. "How...?"

"Guess they're clones. It seems Orochimaru managed to get some DNA samples of them before we rescued them," Haku guessed.

"It doesn't matter who they are! They're enemies who are blocking us from reaching Gaara!" Temari shouted, putting an end to the discussion, and forcing everybody to focus on the battle at hand.

"Naruto, the man is a Lightning Release user, so you'll be the best suited to fight him. I'll go with you as well," Kurenai asked.

"In that case, I'll join you two, given that I'm a Wind Release user as well," Temari offered. However, Kankuro placed a firm hand on her shoulder. "Huh?"

"Let me go instead. Your wind attacks can clear all the trees that girl can summon, while my puppet won't be that good against her," Kankuro told her.

"I thought Sasori had destroyed all your puppets," Temari said.

Kankuro shook his head. "Not all of them. I still have one with me. I didn't use it because it isn't properly tested yet, but guess I have no other option. This will have to be the test run."

Temari didn't find any holes in his brother's logic, and nodded. "Alright then. Be careful."

"You too," Kankuro replied, as he followed Naruto and Kurenai, while he pulled a scroll from underneath his robe.

Temari then turned at Hinata and Haku, ready to fight the mysterious woman who could wield the fabled Bloodline Limit of the first Hokage.

"Ready, Temari-san?" Hinata asked.

Temari nodded, before dangerously scowling at their enemy. "You guys are going to regret getting in our way."

...

"Shadow Clone Jutsu!" Two clones appeared besides Naruto. "You know what to do."

The clones merely nodded, and leaped away in different directions. Before Kurenai had the chance to ask what he was planning -and confirming her guesses- Kankuro joined them.

"Kankuro, you're going to fight with us?" Kurenai asked.

"Without puppets?" Naruto added.

"While I can fight without puppets, I still have one in reserve," Kankuro replied, as he unfurled the scroll he was carrying in front of him.

From a burst of smoke, a puppet appeared. It had the same dull brown and black color scheme of Kankuro's other puppets, albeit this one was different from the others. It was rather bulky, with a stout main body, thick arms, short legs, and a head that looked like an ancient helmet. On its right hand it was carrying a massive rectangular shield. Numerous seals were carved alongside its plating and shield.

"Does this look familiar, Naruto?" Kankuro asked with a smirk, as he attached the puppet with some chakra threads.

"It looks like... an Uzumaki War Golem!" Naruto said in realization.

"Indeed. After you guys gave us a couple golems, father allowed me to study one. And well, let's say I made a lot of breakthroughs in the art of puppet crafting," Kankuro proudly said. "So all of you, meet Tamotsu, my newest puppet!"

Naruto smirked in return. "Alright then, let's see how the union of Uzumaki fuinjutsu and Suna's puppets do against this enemy," the blond said as he eyed the man in front of him. In less than a second, Naruto's chakra sword appeared on his hand, projecting a blue colored blade of pure chakra. "Let's go!"

The blond jinchuriki dashed forward, ready to engage the new enemy. The Oto ninja unsheathed his broadsword and used it to parry Naruto's initial strike. The fact that his sword didn't break, and the almost unnoticeable faint blue glow made Naruto realize his enemy was also channeling chakra through his sword in order to make it stronger.

They did trade a few blows. Naruto managed to parry and dodge all the attacks from his opponent, but then again, he was also unable to land a strike on his opponent.

"Alright then," Naruto said as he disengaged. His sword's blade started to burn with a white light, showing that he was now channeling wind chakra through it. "Let's see what you do against this!"

Naruto slammed his Wind Blade into the ground, releasing a powerful gust of razor wind that cracked the ground as it flew towards the Oto ninja. Said man stabbed his sword into the ground, as he made several hand seals.

"Wind Release: Breath of God!"

The masked ninja blew a tornado to counter Naruto's attack. The tornado grew bigger as it advanced, cracking the ground as well, and sucking some dirt and grass leaves as it advanced. Finally, both attacks met each other, resulting in a blast of wind blowing in every direction.

"Earth Release: Mud Trap!"

Suddenly, the ground beneath the Oto ninja's feet turned into mud, quickly sinking him into the ground until the level of his knees.

"Shit!" the Oto ninja yelled.

"No, it's just mud. That would be disgusting," Kurenai's voice said behind him. A kunai appeared on her hand. "Now die."

The Oto ninja managed to quickly make a hand seal, and blew a gust of wind to the ground, propelling himself upwards while narrowly avoiding Kurenai's strike. He made several hand seals as he descended.

"Lightning Release: Golden Storm!"

Yellow lightning started to crackle around the Oto ninja's body, before he was enveloped into a bright coat of yellow electricity. Lightning bolts started to fly around, some of them aimless, most of them, towards the trio of ninjas in front of him.

"My turn!" Kankuro called, as he positioned Tamotsu between them and the enemy. "Mechanical Great Light Shield Block!"

Tamotsu raised its massive shield, and one of the seals carved on it started to glow. It then projected a blue cone of chakra that covered the Kankuro and his two Konoha allies. The lightning bolts harmlessly crashed against the chakra shield.

"Now, time to counterattack!" Kankuro said, as he made a finger motion.

Tamotsu lowered its shield, and aimed its other arm at the Oto ninja. Its hand split in two, revealing a small cannon inside. From the canon fired a stream of flames. The Oto ninja merely tossed a smoke grenade at his feet, and when the fire stream reached the ensued smokescreen, he was nowhere to be seen. They noticed a hole in the spot when he was a second ago, surrounded by small flames caused by the puppet's flamethrower.

"Watch out, he used a Headhunter Jutsu! He'll attack from below!" Kurenai warned the boys.

And true to her words, the earth started to shake shortly afterwards. However, the Oto ninja didn't attack. In his place, the same snake it attacked them before burst from underground, forcing the three ninja to jump in different directions.

"Ugh, I can't believe I forgot about the giant snake," Kurenai said, sounding more annoyed than worried.

"In that case, then maybe we should equate the balance," Naruto said, as he made several hand seals, before biting his thumb. "Summoning Jutsu!"

From a cloud of smoke, a massive toad appeared. It was magenta colored, with black markings on his face, arms and legs. He wore a black kimono with a white sash and mesh armor underneath. On his hands there were a sakazuki-like shield a sasumata.

"Hello, Naruto-san," the toad politely greeted his summoner.

"Hi there, Gamaken. Think you can help us to deal with that guy and his pet snake?" Naruto asked.

Gamaken took a glance as said Oto ninja, and then at the giant snake, which dangerously slithered towards them. "I think I can be of assistance. Though I should warn you, I'm rather clumsy."

Naruto gently smiled at the humble toad. "I think you'll do fine."

Upon seeing its natural prey in front of it, the giant snake instantly lunged towards Gamaken. Gamaken raised his shield to protect himself from the attack, as it counterattacked with the sasumata.

At that point, the Oto ninja decided to go onto the offensive as well. As he rushed, he thrust an arm forward.

"Hidden Shadow Snake Hands!"

As its name suggested, a multitude of snakes appeared from under the Oto ninja's sleeve, and all of them lunged at Naruto, letting out high pitched hisses. Naruto merely beheaded those snakes with a swipe of his Wind Blade, as he rushed to attack his now wide open enemy. Or that's what he thought, as the masked man quickly thrust his other arm, releasing more snakes at Naruto, forcing him to break his charge, and take a step back.

"Got you!" Kankuro said as he motioned his hands down.

A shadow loomed over the masked ninja, who looked up too late to see the large frame of Tamotsu descending upon him. The puppet's large shield slammed against him first, before the rest of the weight added to the impact power, causing the Oto ninja to burst through the sheer force of the hit. Though rather than blood and guts, the burst was of even more snakes.

"What?" Kankuro asked, confused.

"A snake clone. Anko uses them too. These guys are more than mere pawns of Orochimaru if he taught them how to use snake-related jutsu," Kurenai explained.

"Watch out!" Kankuro called as he quickly turned around, placing Tamotsu in front of him.

Naruto and Kurenai turned around as well, and saw Tamotsu barely intercepting a sword strike that was intended for Kankuro. Even if the puppet had activated its chakra shield, the arm holding it was torn apart from the main body by the sheer force of the impact, which also hurled the damaged puppet backwards.

"Dammit, not this one too!" the puppeteer complained, as he rushed to check his downed puppet.

"I can't believe I have to resort to this," the Oto ninja said. The Konoha ninja noticed that there was a faint white glow pulsing from his body, a glow Naruto was worriedly familiar with. "But then again, Orochimaru-sama already warned us that your power far exceeded that of the enemies we faced in the past."

"So it is true. He made you with my sibling's DNA," Naruto sadly concluded, as he recognized the power his enemy was now using. He slipped into a fighting stance, as his mouth curved into a confident grin. "Too bad your master sent you to fight against the one person who knows exactly how your power works!"

...

Meanwhile, on the branches above, Hinata, Haku and Temari were engaging the female Oto ninja that could use Wood Release.

"Wood Release: Great Forest Jutsu!"

The masked kunoichi's arms turned into a mass of thick wooden vines ended in sharp edges, that spread in a wide area, and lunged at the three ninja, which promptly jumped back to avoid being skewered. Temari reared her battle fan back.

"Hinata, Haku, move aside!" the Suna kunoichi yelled, before swinging her weapon of choice forward. "Great Weasel Sickle Jutsu!"

Temari blew a powerful current of razor sharp wind that shredded the incoming wooden vines, as well as nearby tree branches, and still pack enough power to push the Oto kunoichi backwards. Hinata decided this was the best moment to attack, as she leaped forward while making several hand seals.

"Lightning Release: Twin Thunder Lion Fists!"

Hinata's hands were covered in chakra blue flames, that quickly took the shape of lion heads. Said heads started to crackle with electricity. Upon landing on the thick branch her enemy was perched on, Hinata began a flurry of strikes at the Oto kunoichi, who did her best to dodge Hinata. However, the Hyuga's jutsu had a far greater range than one would judge at first sight, and even if dodged, the masked kunoichi ended up receiving a lot of electricity-imbued hits.

"SHIT!" the masked kunoichi yelled, as she barely avoided another hit by Hinata. She jumped back into the ground, as she made more hand seals. "If I let her hit me with that, I'm done. Wood Release: Ironwood Armor!"

A green aura flared around the Oto kunoichi, followed by a small burst of smoke. After that, she was completely covered in an armor that appeared to be made of wood, leaving only her yellow eyes exposed.

Hinata was undeterred, and pressed the attack. Her armored enemy seemed more confident, fighting in a more offensive manner. Sharp spikes grew all over the armor, the ones on her knees and forearms being the longest, and used them to attack the Hyuga. Hinata expertly parried her blows, while returning her own. One of them managed to land on the armored kunoichi's shoulder, shattering the wooden armor protecting that zone.

Hissing, she jumped onto a higher branch, as she held the damaged shoulder on her hand. In a few seconds, the wooden armor grew back, covering it once again.

"That armor won't protect you. Wood is a combination of water and earth, both of which are vulnerable towards lightning," Hinata explained.

"Enough!" she yelled, as she pulled out a flash grenade, and tossed it down to the branch she was perched onto, producing a sudden flash of bright light.

"MY EYES!" Hinata screamed as she dispelled her jutsu and instinctively brought her hands to her eyes.

"Alright then," the Oto kunoichi said as a sharp wooden spear appeared on her hand. She raised the spear above the blinded

Hinata. "Say good-"

"Ice Release: Thousand Needles of Death!"

"Wind Release: Wind Scythe Jutsu!"

The Wood Release user was assaulted by a storm of ice flechettes, followed by several crescent shaped blades of wind, forcing her to move in order to dodge those attacks.

"Don't forget about us!" Temari shouted at her.

Haku walked towards her teammate. "Hinata, are you okay?"

Hinata nodded, wordlessly. Haku then noticed that the Hyuga wasn't just covering her eyes, since her hands glowed with a faint green light. She then removed her hands from her eyes, and opened them, adjusting to the light with no problem.

"You're outnumbered, surrender already!" Temari shouted.

"I'm not as outnumbered as you think. Don't forget about my allies!" the Oto kunoichi said, as she stomped her foot.

The Konoha and Suna ninjas heard a loud rustle, followed by the sound of several branches breaking, and one of the giant snakes that ambushed them before appeared seemingly out of nowhere, lunging at Haku. The Ice Ninja, however, was hardly fazed, as he jumped backwards while making several hand seals.

"Ice Release: Breath of Winter!"

Haku blew a gust of frozen air at the incoming snake, which took the brunt of the attack. As a result, the snake's jaws were encased in a block of ice, preventing it to open its mouth.

"Sorry, but that's what you get for trying to eat us," Haku said with a smirk.

The snake didn't appreciate Haku's taunt, and even with its jaws sealed, the reptile lunged at the Ice Ninja with murderous intentions in its eyes.

"Guess I was being too optimistic when I thought that would be enough to get rid of you," Haku said, before jumping over the snake, as he prepared his next jutsu. "Alright then. You're not going to enjoy this."

Meanwhile, Hinata had already recovered from her temporary blindness, and she and Temari were about to engage the masked kunoichi once again.

"Even if my snake got rid of that annoying Ice Release user, I still have to contend with you two," the Oto kunoichi observed. "Alright then, let's invert the number advantage. Wood Release: Wood Clone Jutsu!"

Four vine sprouts grew around the Oto kunoichi, quickly taking her form and shape. All of them adopted fighting stances.

"Go!"

The Wood Release user and her clones leaped at the two kunoichi.

"I'll take care of the original. Can you get the clones out of my back?" Hinata asked Temari.

The Suna kunoichi smirked. "Consider it done."

As Temari blasted with gusts of wind the clones that tried to approach her or her Konoha ally, Hinata rushed towards the original, making the same hand seals as before.

"Lightning Release: Twin Thunder Lion Fists!"

As before, chakra lion heads covered in electricity appeared on Hinata's hands as she got ready to fight. The kunoichi groaned, as she prepared her counterattack.

"Not that jutsu again. Wood Release: Wood Dragon Jutsu!"

The Oto kunoichi projected a growing wood dragon from her interlocked hands, which flew at Hinata as it let out a loud roar. The Hyuga was undaunted, as she thrust an arm forward towards the incoming dragon head. The effect was instant, and its head was immediately shattered. A blow with the other hand ensured that the rest of its serpentine body met the same fate.

Hinata landed in front of her, her feared jutsu still active.

"Your Wood Release it's impressive, but it won't be enough to overcome us," Hinata told her, as she walked towards the armored Oto kunoichi.

"Wood Release is much more than a mere combination of two basic elements, Hyuga. It's the power of life itself!" the kunoichi replied as she slammed her hands into the ground.

The ground started to shake, and multiple wooden vines emerged around Hinata. Said vines tried to impale or wrap around her, but the Hyuga gracefully dodged them before destroying them with an accurate strike. More and more vines started to emerge, to the point that Hinata was starting to feel overwhelmed.

"You can't win against me, since you're fighting against nature itself!" the Oto kunoichi boasted.

Fortunately, Hinata had the perfect counter for an overwhelming attack from every side. The moment she had a window of a single second, she quickly started to spin.

"Lightning Release: Heavenly Thunderstorm!"

Hinata turned into a dome of spinning electricity, which blasted all the vines around her into tiny splinters. Lightning bolts and chakra blasts shot into every direction, cracking the ground, burning the grass, and sending dust, wind and pebbles in a wide area.

"Storms are also part of nature," Hinata firmly replied as her spinning ceased. She spread her arms, and the lightning chakra lion heads reappeared once again, before dashing towards her enemy.

Then, she stopped when they heard an explosion not far away from there. More specifically, where Naruto and the others were fighting. The armored kunoichi let out an audible gasp.

"Brother!"

...

With Kankuro's puppet damaged, Naruto and Kurenai were on their own against the Oto ninja. Thanks to the nature energy he was collecting, he moved much faster, displayed more resistance, and his blows were far more powerful. This time, Naruto and Kurenai decided to attack the two of them at the same time.

"Wind Release: Cyclone Vortex!"

"Earth Release: Crushing Avalanche!"

Naruto thrust his interlocked hands forward, projecting a powerful horizontal cyclone. Kurenai summoned several rocks above them, and tossed them into Naruto's attack, creating a tornado of flying rocks.

"You think you're so clever, combining both attacks," the Oto ninja sneered, as he made several hand seals. "But elemental weaknesses are meaningless in the face of the power I possess! Lightning Release: Golden Storm!"

Once again, a golden aura flared around the masked ninja, as yellow lightning bolts flew from his body towards the incoming elemental attack. The three jutsu clashed into an explosion, raising a cloud of dirt and dust. Then, a looming shadow was cast over him, and the Oto ninja barely avoided the incoming Gamaken falling on top of him. Gamaken tried to hit him with his sasumata, but the Oto ninja was too fast. He then launched himself at the giant toad, and delivered such a powerful flying kick to the amphibious' face, that it made him topple on his back.

"UGH!" the toad croaked as he hit the ground.

"Gamaken!" Naruto cried before turning his eyes at his opponent, Wind Sword in hand, and sped after him. The Oto ninja raised his broadsword to parry the incoming blow, and much to his surprise, he found himself being pushed back by the sheer force of the attack.

"Your strength has increased," the masked ninja noted. "Your sword strikes didn't pack such power before. What did you...?"

It was then when he noticed that Naruto's eyes were now yellow with horizontal pupils, and had orange markings around them. The blond grinned.

"Think you're the only one who can use nature energy?" Naruto asked, keeping his smirk.

"How...? Nature energy is impossible to gather unless you're still! Only my ability can overcome such obstacle!" the masked ninja asked, in shock.

"I'm tempted to tell you, but I think I prefer to see you try to guess it yourself," Naruto replied as he pulled out a second Wind Blade from his ninja tool pouch, and activated it. "Now get ready!"

Having two weapons now, Naruto's fighting style drastically changed. He now delivered a flurry of quick strikes from one arm each, forcing his opponent into the defensive. Seeing that sword fighting wasn't working, the Oto ninja tried a different approach. He tossed his broadsword at Naruto, before thrusting his arms forward.

"Multiple Hidden Shadow Snake Hands!"

Right after swiping the broadsword away, Naruto saw a multitude of snakes emerging from under his enemy's sleeves. Their trajectory seemed a bit off, and too late the blonde realized that they weren't lunging at his body, but at his hands. The snakes sank their multiple fangs onto the blonde's forearms, forcing him to drop his trusty weapons.

"AAAARGGH!" Naruto screamed as he fell on his knees.

The Oto ninja smirked under his mask, as he directed some of his snakes to wrap around Naruto's neck. "Not so cocky now, huh?" he taunted. "Any last words before I end your miserable life?"

"Y-yes..." Naruto said weakly, before smirking at him. "Don't forget about... Kurenai-sensei..."

Then, "Naruto" burst into a flock of butterflies.

"What the-" the confused masked man stammered. "Wait a minute, this is a genjutsu! I have to-"

"RASENGAN!"

In a split second, the Oto ninja saw Naruto slamming a spiraling sphere of chakra into his gut. It had the side effect of dispelling the genjutsu, but it didn't matter since the illusion made its job. The sphere expanded, before it exploded, violently hurling the Oto ninja away.

"Good job with that genjutsu, Kurenai-sensei," Naruto praised his teacher.

"It was thanks to sparring you in Sage Mode that I managed to perfect them so much, Naruto, so don't give up your part of the credit," Kurenai smiled back.

The two of them walked towards the downed Oto ninja. He was still alive, since Naruto could sense his chakra. Crouching besides him, Naruto removed his balaclava in order to take a better look at him. Just like Hinata said, his face was what Hagane would like if he were a young adult. Naruto stayed silent for a few seconds, before he let out a weary sigh.

"Naruto...?" Kurenai asked.

"We should try to bring them to the village," Naruto suggested.

"However, we still need to rescue Gaara, and there's no way we can do that while keeping these guys around."

"Maybe we could send a message to the village and ask to send somebody else to take care of them?" Kurenai suggested.

Before Naruto had any chance to reply, wooden roots emerged from the ground, and lunged at the two Konoha Jonin, who quickly jumped back.

"DON'T DARE TOUCH MY BROTHER!" a female voice said.

The other Oto ninja landed besides her fallen comrade, and helped him on his feet.

"Hebimaru, are you okay?" the woman asked.

"He... Hebiko... I..." the man, apparently named Hebimaru, weakly replied.

"Don't talk, I'll take care of you," Hebiko replied. She then threw a smoke bomb at her feet, creating a curtain of smoke.

When Naruto rushed forward, they weren't there anymore. Thanks to his temporary sensing abilities, Naruto knew she had Body Flickered into the forest, but decided not to chase them.

"Naruto-kun!" Hinata's voice said from behind.

Naruto and Kurenai turned around, and saw Hinata, Haku and Temari running towards them. Kankuro, who had picked up the pieces of his puppet, walked towards them as well.

"Where did the enemies go?" Temari asked.

"The woman picked the guy up and disappeared," Naruto told them.

Gamaken slowly walked towards his summoner.

"I'm sorry for not being enough of help. I'll try to work on my clumsiness for the next time you decide to summon me," Gamaken apologized with a polite bow.

Naruto earnestly smiled at the toad. "Hey, you did fine! Even if those guys got away, you got rid of that snake, and provided me for an opening to attack."

"I'm glad that I was of some assistance," Gamaken replied. "Since the battle is over, I shall now return to Myoboku. See you the next time you want my help, Naruto-san."

And with that, Gamaken disappeared in a poof of smoke.

"It doesn't matter, they weren't our target," Temari said, as she pulled out her special compass. "Come on, we need to continue. The more time we waste, the lower the chances of saving Gaara."

"Actually..." Hinata began, rubbing her arm a bit. "Can't we rest for a bit? I spent a better portion of my chakra fighting that woman."

"Same here," Haku said. "That snake was tough opponent, and I'm a bit exhausted."

"And I need to fix my puppet," Kankuro chimed in. "Thankfully, the damage done isn't beyond repair."

"What!? Gaara's life is in peril! There's no time to rest!" Temari insisted.

"Temari-san," Kurenai called her. "I understand your concerns. But keep in mind that once we arrive their hideout, we'll have to fight against those Akatsuki that captured Gaara. And I wouldn't discount more being there. We shouldn't try to confront them if we aren't in top condition to fight."

Temari tried to protest, but her brain was unable to come up with a good counter to Kurenai's arguments. She sighed in return.

"How long until the extraction is complete?" the blonde kunoichi asked.

"As far as we think, one day," Kurenai replied.

"Okay, we'll rest for a few hours, but not any longer! Understood?" she told them.

Everybody nodded. The first order of business was to set up a campsite that they could use to rest and recover from the fight they just had.

...

Akatsuki Hideout

"Good news, everyone," Zetsu spoke, breaking the silence that had reigned for the past hours. "Orochimaru's minions did their job. My clones informed me that the rescue group has been forced to stop and rest."

"I knew those kids wouldn't disappoint me, kukuku..." Orochimaru chuckled.

"Good, that bought us some precious time," the leader said. "I presume there's still twenty hours until the extraction process is complete. We'll be finished before they arrive."

Everybody nodded, and kept focusing on the extraction process. The red stream of energy that flowed from Gaara's mouth into the statue's not only continued unimpeded, but it was starting to become thinner with each hour...

Author's Notes: So, the group consisting on Kurenai's Assault Squad plus Kankuro and Temari head to rescue Gaara. Though they won't be alone for long, since they will get some reinforcements from Suna shortly before facing the Akatsuki.

Also, what do you think of Hebimaru and Hebiko? Yeah, they're clones of Hagane and Kaida artificially aged into adulthood, and brainwashed to serve their "father" no matter what. While not terribly important in the plot overall, they will play a major role in future arcs revolving around Orochimaru. They also exist as a way to form a new incarnation of the Sound Five that will be featured in said future arcs, alongside the two surviving members of the previous incarnation, Tayuya and Kimimaro, the latter retaining his position as leader, with the fifth member being Juugo (man, i'm so glad that I found a way to bring him into the story. Most AU authors have no trouble including Karin and Suigetsu, but Juugo is much trickier since we know almost nothing of his past).

Anyway, after two action heavy chapter, the next one is going to be more calm. But it will also allow me to flesh out Kankuro and Temari's personality and background a lot, so I'm sure you're going to enjoy it as well.

Thanks to gio08 for beta-reading this chapter.

I'm hoping that you're liking so far my take on the Kazekage's Rescue Arc. I'm doing my best to make it better than the original. Tell me if I'm right or wrong via review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

A Failed Rescue?

Author's Note: I'd like to give a shout out to FoxBlueReaver for making the first fanart of this fanfic, a really cute picture of Shisui and Shizune. Thanks a lot, pal!

With this chapter, we reach the middle point of the arc (most arcs of shippuden won't be as long as the Kiri Civil War, so don't worry about the story dragging on), which also introduces a few characters from Suna I do like a lot. Enjoy!

Chapter 53

A Failed Rescue...?

or

Delaying Tactics Are Nothing to Sneeze at

...

Sunagakure, Kazekage's State

As the sun started to set in the desert village, Rasa was about conclude a meeting he had with Suna's Council of Elders regarding both the village affairs, and the new treaty with Konoha and Kiri. Tensions were high, since a good deal of the councilors barely tolerated an alliance with their longtime allies of Konoha to begin with, they found the idea of an alliance with one of their worst enemies outrageous.

"I still can't see why you're against this alliance, Chiyo-baasama," the Kazekage told one of the female councilors. "So far, we've gained a lot from it, and it's not even settled."

Chiyo was an elderly woman with black eyes, wrinkled face, and dull lavender hair tied in a bun, with two bangs that framed her face. She has been the most prominent dissident to the idea of an alliance.

"Suna should be strong on its own, not depend on the charity of other villages. Next thing I know you'll replace our proud puppeteering corps with those mechanical abominations from Uzushio," Chiyo scoffed.

"Sister, please, don't insult Kazekage-sama in such a way," another councilor, an elderly man with shadowed eyes and thick grey eyebrows told her. "No Kazekage in his right mind would dismantle Sunagakure's pride and joy."

"No Kazekage in his right mind should make us depend so much on foreign powers, Ebizo," Chiyo told her brother.

Rasa groaned and rubbed the bridge of his nose. "Listen, either with or without your support, this alliance will have my approval and will continue until the very end. So just for once, try to make things easier for me and-"

Then, at that moment, a small, goggle-wearing toad carrying a scroll on his back appeared from a cloud of smoke in the middle of the table the Kazekage and the councilors were sitting around. The ninja guarding the room immediately drew out their kunai and other weapons, in any case it was an assassination attempt on the Kazekage or the councilors.

"What's the meaning of this!?" Rasa bellowed.

"Hello there. My name is Kosuke. Are you the Kazekage?" the small toad asked. "Jiraiya-san said that the Kazekage was a man that sucked the joy of living out of you by being in the same room as him, and out of all the people here, you fit the description the best."

"So Jiraiya told you that..." Rasa said, his eye twitching a bit. "Did that white haired idiot send you here? With what purpose?"

"Yes, he did! He said he had an urgent message for you," Kosuke replied before handing the scroll to the Kazekage.

"For your sake, someone better be dying," Rasa fumed as he unfurled the scroll. As he read it, color started to disappear from his face.

"Kazekage-sama?" a councilor asked.

Rasa didn't say anything. He then burst out of the council room, leaving the elders flabbergasted. Running as fast as his legs could carry him, the Kazekage slammed the door of his office open and entered the room. He started rummaging under his desk until he finally found what he was looking for, a hidden switch that revealed a secret compartment.

Opening the compartment, Rasa checked its contents, and his worst fears were confirmed. One of the special compasses designed to track Gaara down was missing.

...

Forests of the Land of Fire, close to the border with the Land of Rivers

At the same time, the group of six decided to make camp and rest for a bit. It was decided that they would be on the move an hour before the sunrise, since they have no time to spare. After a light meal, all of them decided to go to sleep. Kankuro, who still had to repair his puppet, volunteered to make the first watch. Naruto left a clone for him as company, and to help him guard the camp.

For the best part of an hour, the Suna Jonin and the clone stayed silent, the latter watching the former diligently working on his puppet. Then, the Naruto clone decided to break the silence.

"So, how it's going?" the clone asked the hooded ninja.

"Almost done," Kankuro replied, not taking his eyes from the puppet. "Though once all this mess is over and we go back home, I'm going to make Tamotsu even stronger than it was. After that fight with the white haired guy, I have a good assessment of Tamotsu's capabilities and weaknesses."

"Boy, being a puppeteer sounds like it's even more work than I first imagined," the Naruto clone said, scratching the back of his head.

"Make no mistake, it is! But the payoff makes it worth it. Puppeteers are among Suna's most feared ninja for a reason," Kankuro proudly claimed.

"I know. That's why Uzushio tried to take advantage of that," the Naruto clone said.

This drew the hooded ninja's attention, which for the first time took his eyes from Tamotsu, and eyed the Naruto clone. "What? What do you mean?"

"The chakra golems," the clone replied. "Didn't you notice the similarities? Yeah, the Uzumaki Clan saw your puppeteers in action during the First War, and thought that maybe they could take the puppets and improve them."

"How? By making them move autonomous?" Kankuro asked.

The clone nodded. "Ever heard the saying 'the weakest part of a sword it's its wielder'? Well, Uzumaki seal masters worked on that principle. They tried to create a kind of puppet that could move and act on its own, removing the need of having a ninja controlling it all the time," the clone explained. "That way, they could be used to bolster an army's numbers, act as shock troops, defend human ninja, and more."

"Not a bad idea, I must admit," Kankuro said as he went back to work on his puppet.

"Not bad an idea? It was an awesome idea! Hell, I don't even know why you decided to convert those golems into a puppet in the first place," the clone groaned.

Kankuro looked at the clone again, and grinned. "It seems to me that both you and your deceased clansmen forgot another important saying: 'a sword is only as good as the one who wields it'. While it's true that the way your clan designed the golems would impress Monzaemon himself-

"Who?" Naruto interrupted.

"The inventor of puppet ninjutsu. His puppets were rudimentary for today's standards, but truly works of art in their time," Kankuro explained, before retailing the conversation. "What I mean is, no matter how powerful you make those golems, they will never replace the need of the human element."

"You seem very sure of that," the clone said, crossing his arms.

"Because I am. Tell me, you fought against those golems in Kiri, right?" the blond nodded. "Then answer me this: what was their attack pattern?"

Placing a finger under his chin, the clone tried to remember Naruto's time in Kiri over a year ago. Soon, it came with an answer. "Well, they mostly relied on brute strength. They were big and packed a mean punch. They also had some weapons such as flamethrowers and hidden blades in their arms. Some also had kunai launchers."

"Doesn't sound very sophisticated, does it?" Kankuro asked. "In fact, that's why the golems are so big and bulky. They need to be, in order to compensate for their lack of intelligence and inability to come with complex plans and strategies. You already saw me in action, and saw what puppets are capable of. Do you think a golem could do the same things I can do with my puppets?"

"To be honest... no," the clone admitted in defeat.

Kankuro grinned. "Thought so. But then again, this doesn't mean that I think the golems are worthless. The way they're capable of moving on their own is fascinating, and the supplementary seals are sure something. That's why I'm planning to create a new generation of puppets that will encompass the best of both worlds. It's a work in progress, but I have faith in my abilities."

Naruto nodded. "Hey, Kankuro, might I ask you something?"

"Sure," the puppeteer replied.

"What moved you to become a puppeteer?" Naruto asked. "I mean, it sounds something quite daunting."

"Again, it is," Kankuro replied. "As for what moved to me to take that path... well, I guess the desire to stand out. I think you have siblings, right, Naruto?" Kankuro asked.

The clone nodded. "A brother and a sister. The two of them younger. They're twins, actually."

"So, you're the oldest then," Kankuro said. "Temari was the only girl, and the oldest of the three. Gaara was the youngest, and a Jinchuriki. And there was me, the middle child with nothing that made me stand out. And my father is the Kazekage, so of course everybody had a lot of high expectations placed on us, myself included. When I realized that Ninja Puppeteers are considered among the deadliest and most skilled in our village, I decided to become one.

"Though the more I trained and the better I got, the more I loved it. Eventually my initial motivation faded away, and simply decided to throw myself into what I knew was my calling. Not that I'm not going to enjoy being admired for what I love doing, hehe," the puppeteer admitted.

"Heh, I can relate to that too. At first, I wanted to be Hokage so people would admire me and wouldn't fear me for being a jinchuriki, you know?" the clone began. "But as I grow up, I'm starting to find better reasons to become Hokage than my own ego. Such as ending all the misery of this world, and bring us closer to a peaceful future."

"Sounds quite nice, even if a bit utopic," Kankuro replied.

"Hey, if we all just do nothing under the excuse that 'it's just an utopia', of course things will never get better!" Naruto protested.

Kankuro chuckled. "Guess you got a point there. I wouldn't have become the ninja I am today if I let the difficulty of being a puppeteer discourage me from being one."

"See? All we need to do is keep trying until things get better," the clone stated.

...

Later, Kankuro finished his shift and went to bed, while Naruto's clone was dispelled. He was then followed by the blonde's real self, Haku, Kurenai, Temari, and lastly, Hinata. The Hyuga spent some time watching alone, until the blonde kunoichi left her sleeping bag, and went to make her company.

"Temari-san? Shouldn't you be sleeping? You already finished your shift," Hinata pointed out.

Temari sighed. "I don't think I'll be able to get anymore sleep. The sun will rise in a couple hours. Plus I'm quite worried for Gaara," Temari said as she checked the compass. The needle still fluttered a little, indicating that Gaara was still alive.

"I know how you feel," Hinata replied. "I have a little sister. If she was in Gaara-san's place... I don't know what I would do. But don't worry, we will save him. Don't doubt about that for a second."

Temari smiled at her weakly. "Thanks. I wish I could have your optimism right now. Though then again, dwelling in worst case scenarios isn't going to be of any help."

"I know. We were once in a similar situation with Naruto-kun. In the end, everything worked out in our favor, though we just barely rescued Naruto-kun from his kidnappers," Hinata recalled.

"Are you talking about that time Orochimaru invaded your village?" Temari asked.

Hinata nodded. "Turns out, it was just a smokescreen to kidnap Naruto-kun and the Hokage's children. Even if we rescued them, it's not that they came out of that unscathed."

Temari chuckled. "No matter how much hell Konoha takes, you guys always manage to endure. My father doesn't want anybody to know this, but he's kind of jealous of you guys, and wished Suna could be as strong as Konoha."

"I'm sure Suna is strong too, Temari-san," Hinata insisted.

Temari chuckled again, though this time it sounded more like a dismissive snort. "Oh please. Come on Hinata, I'm almost an adult, you don't have to lie to me like that. I'm more than aware that our village is the weakest of the Great Five. Hell, we resemble more a minor village than a great one. That's why our father has been determined to the point of obsession of making Suna as strong as possible. He's aware that we managed to survive so long thanks to Konoha's help, and while we appreciate our alliance, it's rather humiliating to think that we're so dependent on others."

"I remember Gaara-san winning the Chunin Exams Finals when they took place in Konoha. I'm sure that that helped to improve your village's reputation," Hinata pointed out.

"It did. For some time. But we can't just hold onto Gaara's victory forever. There are Chunin Exams every year, each with their respective victor," Temari said. "Hell, I'm sure that if we returned to Suna, our medics wouldn't have been able to find a cure for Sasori's poison. Yet you did it in less than a day."

"Well, you can thank Tsunade-sama for that. If she never returned to the village, our medical knowledge and skill wouldn't be nowhere near as advanced. As an apprentice of hers, I can tell you that," Hinata pointed out.

"That's the thing, we don't have a Tsunade of our own to speak of. Which is why our father did everything in his hand to strengthen the village, which culminated into Gaara," Temari replied.

"That's why he was made a jinchuriki?" Hinata asked.

"That's why Gaara exists to begin with," Temari replied, making Hinata look at her quizzically. "Ah, yes, I forgot you didn't even know the whole story. Do you know why Gaara was chosen to be a jinchuriki, despite being the youngest? Did you even wonder why Kankuro and I were passed over?"

"Now that you mention it... no, I never thought about that," Hinata admitted.

"When I was born, my father was already planning to make me the jinchuriki of the One Tail. But lucky me, I wasn't compatible due some chakra type bullshit I don't fully understand to this day," Temari began. "So my parents went for another baby, and turns out, Kankuro wasn't compatible either. Turns out, there were complications during Kankuro's birth. The medics told my father that he shouldn't try for more children, since the risk of our mother not being able to make it was too high. But my father didn't listen to them, Gaara was born, and to my father's joy, he turned out to be compatible. However, the medics turned out to be right, and our mother died shortly after giving birth to him."

"I'm... I'm sorry to hear that, Temari-san. I know how painful losing a parent so young can be," Hinata empathically said. She then adopted a pensive expression, as her gaze shifted from Temari.

"It's okay. It happened a long time ago, and I'm over that already," Temari replied.

"You know, that reminds a bit of how Naruto-kun became a jinchuriki," Hinata began. "You see, the Nine Tails can't be sealed into anyone. As far as we know, only those of the Uzumaki clan can hold it inside them, and Naruto-kun was the only Uzumaki back then."

"Guess that's why Naruto and Gaara clicked so easily. They have similarities not even they're aware of," Temari chuckled.

"However, there's something I don't understand," Hinata said. "Why did the jinchuriki had to be a child of the Kazekage? Did he feel it was morally wrong to pick somebody else?"

Temari let out a mirthless laugh. "My father thinking that something's 'morally wrong', now that's a good one. No, it's not because of that. He wanted the jinchuriki to be somebody close to him, somebody he could mold into a loyal asset to the village. In fact, it's a frequented practice in all Great Villages. I mean, take a look at Naruto," Temari said, as her and Hinata's eyes rested on the blonde's sleeping form. "The man who ended up adopting him became the Hokage. And even if he didn't, his wife could have been a good candidate. You can't chalk that to coincidences."

"I see," was Hinata's answer as she absorbed the information Temari had explained. Other than Naruto, Gaara, and that green haired girl from Taki, Hinata hadn't had much contact with jinchuriki, so she didn't know much about them. She also remembered Yagura, who pretty much removed the middleman and became Mizukage himself.

"But enough talking about them. I think I don't know that much about you. Do you have any goals you want to accomplish?" Temari asked.

Hinata didn't reply. She placed a finger under her chin and started to think. "Well... I want to be a strong ninja, to make my family proud, and one day being able to lead my clan and heal its rift. I like to think I'm getting a little closer to that goal with each day."

"Have you ever thought about having Genin?" Temari asked. "It's mostly Jonin who take them, but some Special Jonin are allowed to do it as well. At least in Suna."

"You'd think I'll make a good sensei?" Hinata asked, a little flushed.

"You look like a patient and kind person, not to mention quite strong. The ideal combination for a Jonin-sensei," Temari said. "At first I was rather reluctant when I was told about it, since I thought it would be like taking care of my little brothers all over again but... it's a rather rewarding experience. Plus the time I spend taking care of said brothers prepared me for the job."

"Where are they now?" Hinata asked.

"They should be in Suna. I left them a training routine for them to do while I was away doing this mission. Hopefully, I'll be able to whip them into shape for the next Chunin Exams in your village," Temari said.

Hinata smiled. "Hanabi-chan, my sister, also plans to enter alongside her team. Maybe her team and yours will clash in the exam?"

Temari grimaced a little, but chuckled. "If your sister is half as good as you are, I hope not for my Genin's sake. But then again, it might be good for them to face some strong opponents."

"Yes. The more prepared they are, the better. I'm sure you want them to get a promotion as soon as possible, but it's better to wait until they're ready," Hinata replied, then she looked downward. "You know, when I was promoted, I felt I wasn't ready for the new rank, since my fighting style still had some rather glaring flaws I was barely able to hide."

"So far, I never noticed any flaw in your fighting style when we fought against those Oto ninja," Temari complimented.

"Because I trained a lot after that. Guilt can be quite the motivator, hehe" Hinata chuckled awkwardly. "You were pretty nice too. You're possibly the strongest kunoichi of my age group I've ever met."

"Thanks. I did train a lot from a very early age in order to become the very best," Temari proudly replied, before she cast her sight down. "Though not as good, given how easily those Akatsuki kicked my butt."

Hinata placed a comforting hand on Temari's shoulder. "Don't beat yourself up for losing against Akatsuki. They're S-Rank criminals for a reason. But don't worry, with our help, you'll be able to pay them back in kind for what they did to both you and your siblings."

Temari smirked confidently, and nodded.

...

Just as they planned, the group of six got up an hour before dawn and continued their journey towards the Land of the Rivers. Much to their relief, the compass still worked, meaning that there was still hope to save Gaara. But given how much time they were forced to spend resting, they knew Gaara could die at any moment.

Hinata kept her Byakugan active at all times, just in case Akatsuki decided to throw more enemies to delay them: It was decided that if such thing happened, only two or three will stay behind to fight, while the rest could continue forward. They couldn't afford to waste anymore time. Fortunately for them, it wasn't the case, as no enemy came to fight them.

An hour after the sun rose, they reached the Land of the Rivers. It was then when Hinata saw something.

"There's a group of ninja ahead of us. They're in front of a cave blocked by a large boulder," Hinata informed her teammates. "I believe it's the Akatsuki hideout."

"Are those guys Akatsuki?" Haku asked.

Hinata shook her head. "All of them are wearing Suna's ninja uniforms and forehead protectors."

"They could be Akatsuki under a transformation, ready to ambush us," Kankuro conjectured.

Hinata shook her head once again. "The Byakugan can see through transformations. They're actual Suna ninja."

Temari let out a sigh. "Even if they're just four, we could use some reinforcements."

The four Konoha ninjas and two Sand Siblings landed in front of the group of four Suna ninja. They were led by an adult woman with purple facial markings and a turban covering her head, a woman Naruto had seen before. Her subordinates were a girl with shoulder length brown hair and black eyes, a boy with short spiky hair and glasses, and a smiling, friendly looking girl with long black hair. The three of them were wearing the standard Sunagakure uniform, with the two young girls also wearing metallic arm guards. The adult woman took a step forward.

"Temari-sama, Kankuro-sama, it's a pleasure to see you're alright," the woman said in a courteous tone.

"As are we, Maki-san. You can thank Konoha for our recovery," Temari told the Jonin.

Maki nodded and turned at the Konoha ninja. "On Suna's behalf, I thank you for your assistance," she then looked at Naruto, and smiled. "Hello again, Naruto-kun. You surely grew a lot since the last time I saw you."

"Hey, I remember you! You were there that time I visited Suna with dad so many years ago!" Naruto said, in realization. "Man, time sure flies..."

Maki nodded before her expression darkened. "It does. I just wish our meeting again was under better circumstances. By the way, these are my students, Matsuri, Mikoshi, and Yukata."

Matsuri and Mikoshi made a polite bow when they were introduced. Yukata happily smiled and waved at the Konoha ninja. Kurenai took a step forward to do the same.

"My name's Kurenai Yuhi. These two are Hinata Hyuga and Haku Yuki. You already know Naruto," Kurenai introduced both herself and her team. "Do not take this the wrong way, but are you the only reinforcements Suna has sent?"

Maki sighed and nodded at the Genjutsu Mistress. "Sadly, yes. Most of our ninja are away doing missions, plus the Council fear that with our jinchuriki abducted, other villages might get some ideas and try to attack us taking advantage of this, so most of the reserve ninja have been put on patrol border duty."

"Guess we'll have to do with what we have," a resigned Temari said. "I presume you found this place with one of the other two compasses?"

"Yes. However, Temari-san, I do bring grave news. One of the compasses was stolen. That's how Akatsuki managed to locate and ambush you," Maki explained.

"Dammit! Our father kept those compasses under his watch himself! Hell, their mere existence was a secret to pretty much everybody sans a few ninjas whose loyalty to Suna was pretty much unquestionable! To think that there was a traitor among them..." Kankuro angrily seethed.

"While the presence of spies in Suna is sure troubling, we have to rescue Gaara-sama as soon as possible," Matsuri spoke up for the first time. "Gaara-sama might not have much time left..."

"Damn right you are!" Naruto agreed, before he looked at the large boulder blocking the entrance. "So, Gaara is behind that rock, right?"

Maki nodded. "Yes. However, the boulder is just part of the problem. It has a seal on it that made it pretty much indestructible."

"And we did use quite a lot of explosives!" Yukata pointed out.

"Hey, I know a lot about seals! Let me take a look, I'm sure I can find a way to disable it," Naruto offered as he walked to the boulder and began to inspect the seal slapped into it.

"Hinata-san, use your Byakugan to scout the area. We need to know Gaara's state, as well as the number of enemies we're going to face. I wouldn't count past more Akatsuki being there besides Deidara and Sasori," Maki told the Hyuga.

Hinata nodded. In an instant, bulged veins appeared around her eyes as her Bloodline Limit came to life. However, when she directed her sight towards the cave, the result wasn't the one the Hyuga was expecting.

"I... I can't see," Hinata muttered. "The seal formed a chakra barrier that obscures my enhanced vision. Sorry."

Kankuro muttered a curse under his breath. "Which means we won't be able to do jack shit until we get rid of that seal first. Naruto, do you think-"

"YOU HAVE TO BE KIDDING ME!" the blond angrily shouted, causing a few nearby birds to fly away scared.

"Naruto? Is there a problem with the seal?" Kurenai asked a bit concerned, as she and the rest of the group got closer to him.

"I know this seal! It's a Five-Seal Barrier!" Naruto explained, his anger coating each word.

"If you know the seal, where's the problem?" Mikoshi asked.

"This is an Uzumaki Seal!" Naruto exclaimed, outraged. "Not just Kiri, but it seems that Akatsuki as well profited from my clan's downfall!" the blond shouted as he punched the seal, to no effect.

Haku placed a comforting hand on the enraged blonde's shoulder. "That's... distressing to hear, Naruto-kun. But right now we have more pressing concerns. We need to know how to disable the seal."

Realizing his teammate was right. Naruto took a deep breath, as he forced himself to calm down. Gaara needed him now.

"Yes. The Five Seal Barrier, as the name implies, is a barrier formed by five seals. One seal is the core, and the others form the barrier around it. I presume this seal here is the core seal. The other four have to be scattered not too far away. Otherwise, the barrier wouldn't work."

"Leave that to me. Byakugan!" Hinata activated her doujutsu once again, and in a few seconds, she managed to find all four seals, since they had a strong chakra signature. "Found them!"

"To disable the barrier, the five seals must be removed at the same time. Otherwise, it won't work," Naruto finished his explanation.

"Well, sounds easy enough!" Yukata happily chirped.

"Too easy, if you ask me," a suspicious Temari said. "Naruto, is there a way for the seals to be booby trapped?"

"I wouldn't count that out. In fact, this seal is almost tailor made to force a group to split in order to disable it," Naruto guessed.

"But, what options do we have then? Is there another way to disable it that doesn't force half of us to split? Our time is running out!"

Temari urged, as both her fists clenched.

"I think I can disable it," Naruto stated, as he kneeled down, and unsealed his sealing tools from a scroll.

"How long will you take, Naruto?" Kankuro asked.

"Five minutes, give or take," Naruto confidently stated as he started to work on the seal.

"I'm one of Suna's best seal-masters. I'll lend you a hand," Maki offered as she joined the blond.

"Okay, while Naruto and Maki-san work, the rest of us gather around here and listen to me as I told you about the enemies we're about to face. They're S-Class criminals, so stay sharp," Temari began. "One of them hails from our own village. Sasori of the Red Sands," when those words left her lips, Maki and Mikoshi instantly gasped, while Yukata looked a bit confused.

"Do you guys know him? Because that name doesn't ring any bell," Yukata asked.

Temari sighed. "Yukata, I like you, but you need to pay more attention about important stuff like this."

"Aw, I like you too, Temari-sama!" Yukata happily replied. "So, about this Sasori guy...?"

Temari held back another sigh. "Sasori is the greatest and most dangerous puppet master Suna has ever produced. So far, we don't know what kind of puppets he'll use against us, but expect all of them to be weapons of mass destruction of their own. Also, beware of the bladed weapons and projectiles of his puppets, since they're coated in a deadly poison. Hinata-san, fortunately, made an antidote."

"We weren't able to make much before we left. All I have are three capsules," Hinata said, as she showed the three vials to everybody. "This antidote will not only neutralize the effects of the poison once applied, but it will continue to do so for the next three minutes. However, like Temari-san said, try to be careful."

"The other one is a missing-nin from Iwa named Deidara. He can animate sculptures out of clay and turn said sculptures into deadly explosives. His main method of attack is to drop explosives from above as he flies on an artificial bird made of clay, so long range is our only option. Be careful when dealing with him as well, since this guy alone managed to defeat Gaara," Temari explained.

"Okay, done!" Naruto replied, satisfied with his quick work.

Everybody looked at the seal, and saw that Naruto and Maki had written other seals in a circular pattern around it. True to his word, the blond took less than five minutes.

"Let's hope it works," Maki said.

"We'll see right now," Naruto replied, as he placed a hand on the seal, and pumped chakra into it. "Sealing Art: Void Touch Seal!"

The Five Barrier Seal started to glow in retaliation, followed shortly after by the counter-seal written around it. Naruto removed his hands as both seals started to fight each other. Eventually, the Barrier Seal lost, and it burst into flames.

"Hinata-hime?" Naruto asked, looking at his girlfriend.

Hinata nodded, and activated her Bloodline Limit for the third and last time that day. "Yes, the barrier is down! I can see them! Both Gaara and the Akatsuki! There are only two of them, I believe they're Deidara and Sasori," Hinata informed them. "Gaara's still alive, but just barely!"

"In that case, we need to get rid of this rock as soon as possible!" Matsuri urged.

"It's pretty big, and looks sturdy. How many explosives do you think we'll need?" Mikoshi asked, as he walked closer to inspect the boulder.

Naruto smirked. "We won't need explosives. My girlfriend will be more than enough. Right, hime?" Naruto asked, giving Hinata a knowing look.

Hinata smiled back, nodded, and clenched her fist. Blue chakra flames burst around it, as electricity started to crackle around it for additional power. She took a few step backwards, as she moved her fist back. "You might want to keep some distance."

...

Meanwhile, at the other side of the cave, the Akatsuki continued with the extraction ritual, which was on the home stretch already.

"Our enemies are at the gates of this lair," Zetsu's black half spoke up. "They disabled the barrier, and will break in any second."

"I know. I felt the barrier being dispelled," the low pitched voice of the leader said. "But they're too late, the ritual is almost finished."

"That's not all. The jinchuriki of the Nine Tails is among the rescue group as well," White Zetsu replied. "This could be a golden chance to capture the Nine Tails' other half."

"Indeed. Deidara, Sasori, get ready for the incoming fight. Your enemies outnumber you five to one, but I have faith that won't be a problem," the leader stated.

"You're right, it won't be one. Let them come, their confidence in their superior numbers will make their fall all the sweeter," Sasori replied.

"Aw yeah! With this one, it will be three out of three! Nobody in Akatsuki will beat my perfect record, hn!" Deidara loudly cheered.

"You shouldn't fall prey to overconfidence either, Deidara," Obito pointed out. "This jinchuriki is a prey tougher than most."

Deidara snickered. "Hey, just because you and that snake failed so many times to snatch a single brat, doesn't mean that I'm going to follow your path, haha!"

"I'll keep your words in mind once we see the result of this fight, Deidara," Obito dangerously said.

Suddenly, the boulder blocking the entrance was blown up in thousands of tiny shards.

...

After seeing Hinata's sheer destructive display, all Suna ninja were left with their eyes wide open and their mouths agape.

"Good work, Hinata-hime!" Naruto praised, giving his girlfriend a thumbs up. Hinata giggled in return.

"Everybody, follow me inside! We have to rescue Gaara!" Temari called as she prepared her war fan and rushed inside.

Temari's orders seem to snap the rest of the Suna ninja from their stupor, who nodded and alongside their Konoha allies, broke into the cave. None of them knew what to expect once they got inside, but the image before them wasn't definitely in their minds.

The group of ten saw a massive statue, formed by a head, and two arms with their hands pointing upwards. There were nine eyes on the statue's face, two of them opened. On each hand there was an Akatsuki, but eight of them appeared to be mirages or illusions, with only Deidara and Sasori appearing to be really there.

"Gaara-sama!" Matsuri cried.

It didn't take them long to see Gaara floating in mid air, being held by a mass of chakra coming from the statue's monstrous open mouth. There were wisps of red chakra coming from his mouth and flowing into the statue.

"Gaara-sama... is he...?" Mikoshi stammered.

"He's still alive, but just barely! We need to act now!" Hinata urged the others.

Seeing Gaara in such a state filled Naruto's heart with a rage unlike any other. So this is what the Akatsuki did to Yagura? Harvest his Tailed Beast, then toss him away as if he was an empty husk? He wasn't going to stand for it.

"Hey there, brat, good to see you again, hn!" Deidara said in a mocking tone to Naruto. "Though you came here in vain. You couldn't save Yagura back in Kiri, and you came too late to save this other brat, haha!"

Deidara's taunting didn't improve the blonde's mood. However, Naruto didn't just hate the Akatsuki, since there was something that pushed him to hate something else on top of them. He hated that statue as if it was his natural enemy. If his state of mind was clearer, he would realize that he was experiencing the Nine Tails' feelings. Either way, it was going to work in his favor.

"That statue!" Naruto yelled, his voice sounded a bit deeper. His eyes turned red, and the marks on his cheeks became bolder. "Everybody, focus your attacks on that statue!"

Everybody nodded and those with ranged jutsu started to make hand seals.

"Sickle Weasel Jutsu!"

"Wind Release: Wind Scythe!"

"Fire Release: Dragon Fire Jutsu!"

"Lightning Release: Thunder Fang!"

Temari's gust of wind, Matsuri's wind blade, Yukata's stream of fire and Hinata's lion-shaped lightning blast all flew towards the statue's face, exploding upon making contact. The statue let out an horrifying, bone chilling scream as the chakra field that held Gaara mid air vanished, dropping the jinchuriki down below. Fortunately, Naruto was there to catch his friend.

"The ritual has been interrupted!" the only female Akatsuki worriedly stated.

"It doesn't matter, we sealed most of the One Tail, look!" the leader pointed out. And at that moment, one of the statue's eyes slowly opened.

"Were we too late...?" a disheartened Temari asked.

"No, Gaara is still alive!" Hinata informed the others. "But he won't last much longer unless we get him some medical treatment!"

"In that case, let's take him out of here!" Kankuro stated.

Everybody nodded, and proceeded to rush outside the cave. The leader saw this, and wasn't going to let this happen.

"Sasori, Deidara, don't let them escape! Capture the jinchuriki, kill everybody else!" the Akatsuki leader commanded, as he unsummoned the statue, which disappeared in a poof of smoke.

"I'll cover your exit!" Kurenai said as she made several hand seals. "Earth Release: Multiple Earth Style Walls!"

The Genjutsu Mistress slammed her hands into the ground, and several layers of rock walls emerged from the ground, making the cavern tremble when they slammed against the ceiling, separating the Akatsuki from the retreating Konoha and Suna ninja.

"Well, guess this walls will be a pretty good warm-up for the fight to come," Deidara cheerily said as he prepared some of his bombs. "Which one is the jinchurki, by the way?"

"The angry brat you just taunted," Obito mentioned. "Which by the way, seems that you know each other. Care to explain that?"

"Wait, that brat was the jinchuriki!?" Deidara asked in shock. "He was there when I went to fetch the Mizukage!"

"You had another jinchuriki in your grasp, and you let him go?" Sasori asked, his tone between disappointed and taunting. "Hardly unbelievable."

"Shut it, hn! Should I remind you that I captured two of the three jinchuriki so far? I'm the only one here with a perfect record! Two out of two! And soon, it will be three out of three!"

"We hope you're speaking the truth, Deidara. I'll be waiting your report," the leader said, before his spectral avatar vanished, followed by the avatars of the other seven Akatsuki not being there.

With a well aimed set of explosions, the first wall was down. Deidara then prepared another set of explosive clay figurines, while Sasori started to think about something he didn't pay much attention before.

"So it was true. The jinchuriki's siblings were in that group. How? They should be dead by now. And far from that, they were in good enough condition to fight. How did they manage to create an antidote for my poison? No medic-nin on this world should be able to do that... was Orochimaru right?"

...

Meanwhile, on the shallow river outside the cave, everybody else was gathered around Gaara, lying on the wet floor, with Hinata kneeled before him, healing him as best as he could, Byakugan active.

"How is he? Will you be able to save him?" Kankuro asked, biting his lip.

"I'll try! He's still alive, but his chakra network is quickly breaking down! Even if he still has some traces of Tailed Beast chakra inside his body, the damage caused by the extraction was too much!"

"What can we do, then?" a concerned Temari asked.

Hinata looked at her boyfriend. "Naruto-kun, he needs a chakra transfer!"

"Alright!" the blond nodded and kneeled besides Gaara as well before touching the redhead's midsection and started pouring his own chakra into him.

"Hey, you don't know if you-" Temari was about to ask before Hinata interrupted her.

"Naruto-kun is an universal chakra donor! Besides, with his massive chakra reserves, there won't be a problem for the donor to risk chakra exhaustion!" Hinata quickly replied.

The exchange was brought to a halt by a massive explosion coming from inside the sealed cave, that made the area around it tremble. A wave of dust and dirt was expelled from the cave's mouth, indicating that the Akatsuki had finally broken Kurenai's multiple layered barrier. From the cloud of dust emerged Deidara and Sasori, the former on top of a large clay bird, the latter on foot.

"I don't think we'll be able to run away with those two here," Maki grimly noted. "How much time do you need until Gaara is out of danger?"

"I don't know how long it will take us. As much time as you can!" Hinata pleaded.

Maki nodded, and alongside the rest of the group, prepared for the immediate clash with the Akatsuki.

"I don't know how you two are still alive," Sasori said, his eyes focused on Temari and Kankuro, while he pulled out a scroll from underneath his cloak. "But I'm going to correct that mistake right now."

"Yes! You're about to witness such an epic art display, it will blow you away!" Deidara added with a loud snicker.

And with that horrible, horrible pun, the second clash against Sasori and Deidara began.

Author's Note: This chapter, a bit shorter than usual, was mostly to flesh out Temari and Kankuro's character a bit, which I felt they were rather shortchanged not only in this arc, but in the series as a whole. Hope you enjoyed this little digging into their character and backstories. I really enjoyed the little bonding moment between Hinata and Temari.

Some people guessed that Chiyo would be among the Suna reinforcements, but no, I already stated that she wasn't going to play a major role in this arc as in canon. No, the characters I was talking about were Matsuri and her anime-only teammates Yukata and Mikoshi. It was never shown who their sensei was, so I decided to make Maki, another Suna character I like a lot, to fill that spot, and thus I can kill two birds in one stone.

Thanks a lot to gio08 for betareading this chapter.

So, the climax of the arc begins! While Naruto and Hinata try to save Gaara, the rest have to face Deidara and Sasori. How will the fights be? They will be very different from canon, that's for sure, given that the only one from the original arc still there is Naruto. Tell me your thoughts on this chapter and expectations for the next one in a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Battle of the Artists

Author's Note: First of all, I'd like to give a shout out to tzionsinned, who took my Shattered Team Seven challenge. His fanfic is called "The Shattered Path". You can find it in my favorites. So go, read it and give the author your support!

Chapter 54

Battle of the Artists

or

Artists that can't take criticism

For a moment, time froze as both parties stared at each other. Naruto and Hinata kept focused on keeping Gaara alive, while the rest of his Konoha and Suna friends placed themselves around them in a protective formation. The Akatsuki's intentions were very easy to read. Not that it would help them anyway. Deidara grinned, and time continued flowing normally.

"I'll go for the jinchuriki! Sasori, take care of the trash!" Deidara said as his bird started to fly faster around the blond ninja.

"Why I'm always the one who has to deal with the others? I'd like to fight a jinchuriki myself just once," the rogue puppeteer sighed.

"Shit, Naruto and Hinata are like sitting ducks, I have to keep this Akatsuki away from them!" Kurenai thought as she frantically started to make hand seals.

"Oh come on, you're pretty good at keeping them at bay," Deidara replied as he formed several smaller clay birds from the mouths in his hands. "Let's start this!"

However, before he could drop his bombs on the targets below, several massive snakes burst from the ground around them and lunged at the flying Akatsuki with their jaws wide open, their large fangs dripping poison.

"SHIT!" Deidara loudly yelled as he maneuvered his bird to avoid the out of nowhere giant reptiles. "Where did these things came from!? I didn't see anybody summon... hey, wait a minute!"

The blond Akatsuki made a hand seal and with a burst of chakra, Kurenai's quick genjutsu was undone. Deidara looked rather pissed for falling for such a trick.

"Push the Akatsuki away from Naruto and Hinata!" Kurenai shouted.

"Ha! I'd like to see you try!" Deidara boasted. However, unbeknownst to him, the genjutsu, while short lived, had already made its job and created an opening. A cold wind started to blow from above. "What the-?"

Looking above, he saw Haku coming from what appeared to be a portal made of ice floating in mid air. His hands were grabbing a bunch of senbon each and tossed at the Akatsuki as he fell. From such short distance, all of them found their mark.

"AAAARRGH!" Deidara screamed in pain. "You son of a bitch!"

Haku gracefully landed on the clay bird, forcing Deidara to take a step back.

"You almost killed both me and lots of innocents in Kirigakure a year ago. I'm here to repay you in kind," Haku firmly stated, as an ice sword formed on his right hand.

"Well, thanks you for telling me that. I hate to leave a piece of art incomplete!" Deidara said, thrusting his arm forward.

A small insect made of clay flew from under his sleeve towards Haku. The Ice Ninja instinctively jumped backwards, just as the insect exploded, engulfing him in a small but nevertheless lethal explosion.

"Haku!" Kurenai cried.

But much to the Jonin's relief, a mirror made of ice formed besides her and Haku stepped out of it.

"That was close," Haku breathed in relief. "We must be careful, that guy is even more dangerous than I remember."

"Understood. Both you, Temari and Maki's students should try to bring him down with ranged jutsu. Maki, Kankuro and myself will face Sasori," Kurenai stated, as she looked at the rest of the group, looking for their approval. All of them nodded in agreement. "Alright then, in that case, let's go!"

...

As the group split, Kurenai, Maki and Kankuro prepared to fight Sasori, who looked rather nonchalant and even relaxed. He fixed his eyes on Kankuro, ignoring the two women.

"You should be dead," Sasori repeated. "Before I'll kill you, I'll make you say how did you manage to counter my poison."

"Guess now you regret not killing us when you had the chance, right?" Kankuro replied, as he reached for scroll underneath his clothes, and unsealed Tamotsu. "It's time for round two!"

Sasori cast a curious glance on Kankuro's shield-wielding puppet.

"Hmmm. I've never seen that puppet in my life. A creation of yours?" Sasori asked, but didn't give Kankuro the chance to answer. "You see, one does not reach true mastery of puppetry ninjutsu until you create your own puppet. When I was your age, I had already created dozens of them, and my collection just expanded ever since. But yes, now that you finally stopped using those outdated puppets I created so long ago, you might become a worthwhile challenge."

"Don't forget about us!" Kurenai called, upset at being ignored.

"I'd never think in doing that," Sasori said with a painfully fake smile, as he held up the scroll he had pulled out earlier. "Now, prepare to see one of my most cherished creations. I don't use it that much, so consider yourselves lucky to see it, before I use it to send you to hell."

Sasori unsealed the puppet, who appeared to be one with a vaguely human looking face, whose entire body was covered in a long, dull brown coat. Maki gasped upon seeing it, while Kankuro and Kurenai remained unfazed.

"I can't believe it..." Maki stammered.

"So, do you recognize him?" Sasori replied, as his grin grew wider. "Guess that the other two, one being so young, and the other not from Suna, it doesn't ring a bell. Why don't you enlighten them, kunoichi-san?"

"Yeah, what's with that puppet?" Kurenai asked, noticing her Suna counterpart growing pale.

"That's... the Third Kazekage..." Maki finally managed to say. Even if she didn't meet the man in person, she had seen numerous pictures of him in history books.

"Yes, he is. You could consider him the masterpiece of my art collection," Sasori replied, his voice consumed in delight. "He found about my defection, and personally came to confront me. He probably knew I was too powerful for anybody but him to fight. And he was right, to an extent, given the results, hehe. But enough talking, let's begin this already!"

Chakra threads shot from Sasori's fingers, attaching themselves to several points in the back of the Third Kazekage. With a hand motion, the puppet flew at an amazing speed towards Kurenai, who scrambled to adopt a defensive stance.

"You go first!" Sasori yelled, as he made a swift hand motion.

A cluster of blades appeared on the Kazekage's right arm, which were brought down onto the startled Genjutsu Mistress. However, they didn't sink into her flesh, but clashed against a hard, metallic surface of Tamotsu's large shield.

"Mechanical Light Shield Block!"

Tamotsu's chakra-enhanced shield struggled against the Kazekage's blades. Eventually, the former won, and with a burst of chakra, the latter puppet was pushed back.

"Not bad. Not bad at all," Sasori admitted, and with a flick of his pinky finger, a long, jagged katana appeared on the Kazekage's left hand. "Let's do it again!"

With a hand motion, the Kazekage skyrocketed forward, not choosing any target in particular. Sasori probably wanted to surprise his target at the last second and give them no chance to react. Kankuro, however, wasn't going to allow that.

"Like hell I'm gonna let you!" Kankuro replied, making a finger motion.

Tamotsu's shield horizontally split in two. The upper half split into two parts once again, and bended forward. From the resulting slot, a barrage of kunai with explosives attached to them fired forward. Sasori was forced to pull back his puppet in order to avoid the ensuing explosions.

"And that's not all!" Kankuro added, with another finger motion.

Tamotsu rose its other arm, and two small cannons appeared at its sides. The guns fired two kunai with ropes attached, that flew towards the retreating Kazekage in a wide arc. The kunai successfully tied themselves around the puppet's arms, immobilizing it.

"Come on, now!" Kankuro shouted. "Ignore the puppet! Attack Sasori!"

Kurenai and Maki nodded and rushed forward. Kurenai made hand seals, while Maki unfolded a large scroll made of cloth.

"Earth Release: Stone Dragon Jutsu!"

A giant serpentine dragon made of earth and stone burst from the ground, arching over the Third Kazekage and lunged at Sasori, with its jaws wide open. Sasori did the most logical thing, dropped his puppet and jumped to avoid the earth jutsu. However, while he was mid air, Maki choose that moment to attack.

"Cloth Binding Jutsu!"

As if it was alive, the cloth scroll unfurled on its own and flew towards Sasori. However, a blade appeared from the Akatsuki's sleeve and used it to slash the incoming cloth before it could wrap around him.

Realizing he was wide open, Kurenai and Kankuro moved to attack once again. However, Sasori's reflexes were faster than the two of them anticipated, as he shot chakra threads towards Tamotsu.

"Oh shit, not again!" Kankuro cursed, remembering his disastrous fight against Fu in Konoha's Chunin Exams.

However, Sasori wasn't interested in stealing Kankuro's puppet. With a hand motion, he forced the puppet to slam against the unsuspecting Kurenai, The Genjutsu Mistress crashed against the ground, making a splash upon impacting against the shallow water. Wasting no time, Sasori regained control of the Third Kazekage, and with a flick of his finger, he made his puppet to open its mouth, releasing a purple gas that quickly covered him completely.

"Watch out! Sasori's poison is something you don't want inside your body!" Kankuro warned the two kunoichi.

"How can he survive inside the toxic cloud?" Kurenai asked.

"Maybe he has an antidote. Or purposefully build immunity towards his own poisons in case they were used against him," Maki guessed. It was a common tactic employed by ninja who used poisoned weapons.

"He's using that poison cloud as a way to build time. Should I blow that poison away with a Wind Jutsu?" Kurenai suggested.

Kankuro shook his head. "If you do that, you'll spread the poison around. Let him have this round. We can use the small reprieve to regain our breath. Don't worry, the poison mist should dissipate soon"

...

Meanwhile, not far from there, the rest of the Konoha and Suna ninja were trying, without much success, fighting against the flying Deidara on the ground.

"Wind Release: Wind Scythe!"

Matsuri crossed her arms, before spreading them in a wide arc, releasing a sharp wind blade at the aerial Akatsuki. This time, it graced one of the clay bird's wings.

"Not bad girlie! Keep trying, and maybe you'll hit me before I die of old age, hn!" Deidara mocked, as he prepared more of his clay figurines. "As a reward for your tenacity, you can enjoy my art!"

Deidara started to fly in a circle at a fast speed, dropping his clay figurines, which exploded upon hitting the ground.

"Let's wait until he flies close to the ground. That way, our chances to hit him will be greater," Mikoshi suggested.

"The problem is, he knows he has to keep some distance if he wants to retain his advantage," Haku replied. "He won't come down on his own."

"Then we will force to!" Temari energetically insisted. "Continue with the attack. Let's goad him into attacking us! I figured out a weakness to his jutsu."

"As you say, Temari-sama," Yukata obediently replied as she made several hand seals. "Fire Release: Phoenix Sage Fire Jutsu!"

The black haired kunoichi fired a wide volley of fireballs at the flying Akatsuki. Deidara was forced to actually maneuver to dodge them rather than casually fly aside. While he was busy doing that, Haku decided to attack.

"Ice Release: Piercing Icicle Shot!"

Using the shallow water that covered the ground, Haku created a spear made of ice, and lunged it at the dodging Deidara. Though rather than dodge the ice projectile, he opted to destroy it by tossing it an exploding clay figurine at it.

"Oh, getting bolder, are you?" Deidara asked, less amused than before. "Okay then, let me show you how below my level you bunch of nobodies are!"

Once again, Deidara dropped several of his explosive clay figurines as he swooped above the group of Konoha and Suna ninja. Just like Temari was expecting. The blonde kunoichi prepared her war fan for a counterattack.

"Now, feel my ar-"

"Great Sickle Weasel Jutsu!"

Temari blew her fan, creating a powerful gust of wind that flew upwards, and while it did so, pushed Deidara's clay bombs back towards him, which were about to explode.

"Oh shi-" the Akatsuki cursed, before his voice was muffled by a chain of explosions.

Temari watched expectantly from above, but much to her disappointment, the Akatsuki and his artificial flying steed came out from one of the clouds of smoke with only a few minor burns. A snarl of fury appeared on his previously confident face,

"You dare use my art against me!? Oh, such insult won't be left unanswered, you Suna bitch!" Deidara hollered from above, as he prepared his next move.

...

Meanwhile, Naruto and Hinata continued working on keeping Gaara alive, the former pumping his own chakra into Gaara's system, while the latter keeping his body from shutting down with the Mystical Palm Jutsu. Hinata was starting to grow desperate, something that didn't go unnoticed by her boyfriend.

"Hinata-hime?" Naruto asked. "Something wrong?"

"No matter how much I try, his body doesn't heal! While I can keep him alive, the moment we leave his side, he will die!" Hinata cried, much to Naruto's shock.

"But... but there has to be something we can do!" Naruto shouted back. "We managed to catch Gaara in time! Please don't tell me it was all for nothing!"

"I'm trying but... I don't know what to do! If Tsunade-sama was here..." Hinata moaned.

Naruto cursed under his breath. He was almost going to let go of the chakra flow, but managed to keep it steady. "We did interrupt the extraction... this shouldn't be happening..."

"Gaara still has some traces of Tailed Beast Chakra inside his system," Hinata pointed out. "But they're fading as we speak. If we could reinvigorate that chakra..."

"Do you think that if I use the Nine Tails' chakra, it would boost the One Tail's chakra and save Gaara?" Naruto asked, sounding now more hopeful.

Hinata took a few seconds to ponder the answer, before he finally nodded. "I don't know much about Tailed Beast's chakra, but if it's similar to our own, I think it could work."

"Alright then!" Naruto cheered, before closing his eyes. "This shouldn't take too long!"

After a second, Naruto opened his eyes, and he was no longer in the shallow river in front of the Akatsuki hideout, even if there was water at his feet. In front of him was the massive jail gate that kept the strongest of the Tailed Beasts trapped within his being.

"Hey, Kyubi!" Naruto shouted, but got no answer. "I know you're not asleep, so stop pretending you are!"

A loud grumble echoed through the chamber, as the sound of a massive body shifting and steps getting closer filled the area. Soon, Naruto saw the head of the fox behind the bars.

"What do you want, brat?" the Nine Tails asked.

"I need you to loan me some of your chakra, like, really quick!" Naruto demanded.

"Let me think about it..." The Kyubi pretended to consider his request. "I thought about it. The answer is no. Now scram."

"Come on!" Naruto insisted. "It's very important! A matter of life or death! If you don't give me some of your chakra, Gaara will die!"

The Nine Tails grumbled, as he rested his head over his crossed paws. "The life of Shukaku's jinchuriki is of no concern to me."

"Please!" Naruto begged, but the Nine Tails didn't reply. An idea then formed inside Naruto's head. It was a big gamble, but it was worth trying. "You know, I admit that I'm not the brightest person around..."

"Your honesty is touching, brat," the Kyubi snarked.

"But I'm not as dense to not realize what's going on with somebody who literally lives inside me," Naruto continued. "Just like I noticed your reaction to the Valley of the End... I also noticed the way you reacted when I saw the statue they were using to store captured Tailed Beasts."

The Kyubi's eyes were wide open for a split second, but Naruto noticed his guest's reaction, and grinned. It may work yet.

"You know what that statue is, do you?" Naruto asked the Kyubi, sounding bolder.

"That's none of your business!" the fox roared back.

"I also have the impression that, as much as you hate being inside me, you'd hate a million more times being sealed there, am I right?" Naruto asked.

"What is your point, brat!?" the Kyubi impatiently shouted.

"If you don't help me save Gaara, I'll hand myself to the Akatsuki," Naruto replied, and his grin grew wider upon seeing fear in the Kyubi's eyes. "And you'll be sealed there. How does that sound?"

"You... you wouldn't dare to do that!" the Kyubi shouted, sounding both angry and genuinely scared. "If you do that, you'll die!"

Naruto shrugged. "We all have to die someday. Well, at least, we humans do."

"It's a bluff! Nobody would be stupid enough to do something like that!" The Kyubi roared.

Naruto raised an eyebrow. "Is that a challenge?"

The Kyubi grit his sharp teeth, as it growled menacingly at Naruto, before deciding that it was better not to test the blond's idiocy.

"Alright... you win," the Nine Tails conceded. "What do you need of me?"

"Gaara still has some of his beast's chakra inside his body, but it's too weak. I need your chakra to reinvigorate it," Naruto explained.

A wave of red colored chakra came from within the cage, and washed over Naruto, who immediately felt the power of the fox coursing through his chakra system.

"That should be enough," the Kyubi snarled as he walked to the back of his cage. "Now leave me alone!"

However, Naruto didn't leave. Not just yet.

"Hey, Kyubi?" he called.

"WHAT!?" the Tailed Beast hollered back.

An earnest smile formed in the blonde's mouth. He gave the Kyubi a thumbs up. "Thanks a lot. I will never forget this."

The Kyubi remained silent for a few seconds, looking almost surprised by the blond's reaction. He quickly gave up trying to understand the human's reasoning, and returned to the darkness of his prison.

"Bah, whatever. Now disappear if you know what's good for you..."

...

A veil of fiery red chakra formed around Naruto, and that same chakra started to flow into Gaara as well. Rather than mold his own chakra to fit Gaara's, he molded the Kyubi's chakra to fit the One Tail's. In a few seconds, Gaara was covered in the same red cloak of pure energy as well.

"It's working!" an elated Hinata cried. "The Kyubi's chakra is boosting the One Tail's chakra as you guessed!"

As the process continued for a couple minutes, Hinata saw how Gaara's chakra network finally stabilized thanks to the few remaining bits of the One Tail's chakra, and his health returned back to normal. Confident with her work, Hinata stopped applying the Mystical Palm Jutsu. Taking that as a hint, Naruto also stopped the chakra transfer.

"Did we...?" Naruto tentatively asked.

Hinata smiled brightly, and nodded. "Yes. Gaara-san, while still weak, is out of danger now," she said, before an explosion rocked the entire place. "Or all the out of danger he can be with those two around."

"Even if I doubt Akatsuki still has any interest in Gaara, I'll take him somewhere safe. I'll return as soon as I can," Naruto stated as he tossed Gaara's unconscious form over his shoulder.

Hinata nodded. "I'll go help Kurenai-sensei with the puppet master. I doubt I'd be of much help against the flying one," she said as she watched her boyfriend leave with the unconscious Gaara.

Through her Byakugan, Hinata could see that in the fight against Sasori, the rogue puppeteer was dominating the battle, with the two Suna and one Konoha ninja mostly defending themselves from his attacks rather than trying to attack. So far the Akatsuki was pretty focused on the combat, Hinata was sure he could deal a blow without him noticing. And sometimes, one blow it's all what it's needed to finish a battle.

Hinata looked down at the shallow water, and frowned. 'With all this water, I can't use Lightning Jutsu without a huge risk of harming the others. This is like fighting on those rice fields all over again. Gentle Fist only, I guess.'

Two blue flaming lions made of chakra appeared on Hinata's hands as she rushed towards the cloaked puppeteer. The splashes her steps were making when touching the water would make a stealthy attack impossible, but if she attacked from behind, it would force Sasori to address her and turn his back to her teammates, and use that window of opportunity to attack.

"Twin Lion Fists!"

As expected, Sasori already moved to dodge Hinata's attacks a couple seconds before the Hyuga was even close to hand to hand range.

However, Sasori didn't use his puppet to defend himself against Hinata, but merely sidestepped, and jumped back and to the side, so he could have all four ninja within his range of vision and attack. The redhead smiled at Hinata.

"Oh, a Hyuga," Sasori softly said, as his smile grew wider. "What a lucky find."

"Let me guess, you want my eyes, right?" Hinata asked as she adopted a fighting stance. "That's not going to happen."

Sasori just shook his head. "Oh, no, no, no. You misunderstood me. While your eyes are indeed very valuable, that's not the only thing that interests me. No, I want your whole body. That way, I can make a puppet out of you. I always love to make a puppet of my victims that have a powerful Bloodline Limit, just like the Kazekage here. You'll make a fine addition to my collection."

"As... interesting as such offer sounds, I have to turn it down. I'm not planning on becoming one of your toys," Hinata replied. Though, as she focused on the Akatsuki in front of her, she noticed something she had overlooked at first. "Wait a minute, you... you aren't even human! You're a puppet too!"

Kurenai, Kankuro and Maki were a bit confused by such revelation. Sasori, meanwhile, chuckled lightly.

"The Byakugan is sure useful to spoil surprises," Sasori replied, shaking his head in mock disappointment. "But yes, I am a puppet. I have transcended my humanity, and become a form of art myself! A body that doesn't age, doesn't rot, is easy to repair..."

"Not all your body is a puppet. I do see living tissue," Hinata pointed out.

"Yes. Sadly, I can't become a full puppet without losing my ability to use chakra. That's why I had to keep a little piece of my former self untouched," the puppeteer mentioned.

"You're sick," Hinata replied in disgust. "Though whatever you wanted to accomplish by mutilating your body, it won't help you against us."

"We'll see then," Sasori said, making a finger motion. "Thousand Hands Manipulation Force!"

Several compartments opened on the Kazekage's left arm, revealing several storage seals. From said seals, a large number of long puppet arms emerged, all of them ready to smash Hinata. The Hyuga, however, had a fitting counter in her arsenal.

"Protection of the Eight Trigrams: Sixty Four Palms!"

Hinata started to move her palms forward in a pushing manner, so fast they became blurry, releasing thin streams of chakra from the palm of her hands, effectively countering the incoming mechanical arms coming at her.

"Interesting ability..." Sasori praised, not realizing Maki rushing forward, scroll of cloth in her hands.

"Cloth Binding Jutsu!"

Once again, the cloth Maki was holding flew as if it had life on its own, and tightly wrapped itself against the mass of arms.

"Quickly, now!" the Suna kunoichi called.

Hinata and Kurenai nodded, and both rushed towards Sasori. Each one of them pulled several kunai with explosive notes attached to them, and ignoring the puppet, they tossed them at the redheaded Akatsuki.

With a flick of his finger, the mass of arms detached from the Kazekage, and both it and Sasori jumped backwards.

"Mechanical Light Shield Block!"

A shield of chakra formed around the Kazekage, protecting both the puppet and Sasori from the chain of explosions. Following that, several pipes emerged from the puppet's chest, tearing holes in the dull brown cloak it was wearing. The pipes fired multiple kunai, prompting all the women to jump aside.

"No! Deflect them, don't dodge!" Kankuro called out, using his puppet to protect himself from the projectiles.

"Too late," Sasori stated, with a confident smirk.

Like before, the kunai had ninja wire attached to them, and Sasori used it to maneuver around the three kunoichi. While Hinata and Kurenai were able to avoid or downright cut the wire before it trapped them, Maki wasn't so lucky, and the wire wrapped itself around her legs.

"No... !" Maki cried, as she fell to the ground, while being pulled towards the puppet.

"Got you!" Sasori cheered, and his grin grew more sadistic as he made a couple of finger motions. "And the real fun beings now!"

Kurenai and Hinata were quick to help Maki, but were forced to stop and take a step back when they saw what Sasori did next. Another pipe burst from the puppet's chest, and expelled a stream of purple gas. Maki was soon engulfed by a purple poisonous cloud.

"Don't breathe that gas! It's a deadly poison!" Kankuro warned the Konoha kunoichi.

Hinata then pulled out something from her ninja tool box. Kankuro could see it was some sort of capsule with a yellow liquid on it. Hinata tossed it inside the cloud. Thanks to her Byakugan, he could see that Maki caught it.

"Maki-san, that's an antidote for Sasori's poison! Inject it into your bloodstream, and you'll be immune to the poison for the next three minutes!" Hinata told the Suna kunoichi.

"What!?" Sasori asked in shock. "You... you made an antidote for my poison? How? It couldn't be possible! No one can... it's impossible!"

Hinata couldn't help but smile a little at Sasori's shock. "Like Naruto-kun used to say, impossible only means it hasn't been done yet!"

A couple of soft snapping sounds signaled that Maki had finally cut the wires that were immobilizing her.

"Sealing Art: Cloth Binding Armor!"

"Huh?" Sasori dumbly asked.

Maki then jumped out of the cloud of poisonous gas. She was now covered in one long piece of cloth which wrapped around her body and limbs, leaving only her eyes exposed, which gave her the appearance of a mummy. While she was mid air, she made a single hand seal.

"Multiple Cloth Razor Whips!"

Like the name of the jutsu implied, many whips made of cloth emerged from under Maki's bandage, and lashed at both the Kazkeage puppet and Sasori. The redhead jumped aside, as he maneuvered his puppet into dodging or cutting the incoming cloth with the multiple blades on its right arm. However, Maki managed to wrap one of her cloth whips around the base of the arm, and pulled, leaving the puppet unable to move.

"How did you...?" a dumbstruck Sasori asked.

A buzz saw appeared on the puppet's left arm where its forearm used to be, and moved it to cut the binding cloth.

"Quickly, now!" Maki called.

Kankuro maneuvered Tamotsu forward, ready to smash Sasori's puppet with a brutal shield bash. However, the Kazekage's right arm detached from its body, allowing Sasori to move the puppet once again. Kankuro shot a thread of chakra at the discarded arm full of blades, and tossed it backwards as far as he could so the Akatsuki couldn't reattach it later.

The Kazekage fired several smoke bombs, covering the zone in one big, mist like grey cloud, while it moved towards Hinata, whom for some reason gave Sasori the feeling that she was the most dangerous of his four opponents. The arm with the buzz saw came down.

"Heavenly Spin!"

Hinata turned into a spinning blue dome of chakra, which incidentally raised gusts of wind that blew the smoke away, and splashing water around. When the buzz saw struck her, the force the Hyuga's jutsu blew the weapon away from the puppet's arm. Foiled, Sasori put some distance between him and his attackers. Having lost both its arms, it seemed that the Kazekage wouldn't be a threat anymore.

"Seemed" being the key word here.

Despite appearing to be on the losing side, Sasori's face sported a confident smirk. This didn't sit well with the Konoha and Suna ninjas, who were smart enough to realize that the Akatsuki wasn't simply overconfident.

"Well," Sasori began, sounding a bit tired. "I have to admit that the quality of my current opponents is, at the very least, worth of some respect. Guess I have no choice to use this, but once I do, your chances of winning will be close to zero."

Sasori made a hand seal, and the Kazekage opened its mouth with a mechanical click. Black sand started to pour out of it. Maki and Kankuro gasped, immediately recognizing what the puppet was doing, something that didn't go unnoticed by the Akatsuki.

"Being from Suna, it seems that you're familiar with this ability in particular, am I right?" Sasori said with a teasing grin. "Why don't you educate your Konoha collaborators, and let them know what they're against?"

"The Third Kazekage had a very rare Bloodline Limit called Magnet Release," Maki explained, growing more uneasy by the second. "Such Bloodline can be used to manipulate metals, but it's incredibly hard to master. The Kazekage, trying to imitate the One Tail's sand powers, used it to manipulate iron grinded into fine powder that was called Iron Sand. Such ability... made the Third Kazekage the strongest ninja Suna has ever seen."

"Yet Sasori was able to best him..." Hinata squeaked, with a gulp.

"Wait a minute, if the Kazekage is a puppet, how can he use a Bloodline Limit? It shouldn't be possible!" Kurenai pointed out.

"That's a good question. A short answer would be that I developed a special process in which the people I turn into puppets retain their special abilities. Otherwise, doing so would be pretty much useless. The process requires the person to be alive while the transformation takes place, which makes it... more difficult than it should be. But the results are definitely worth it.

"You three are worthless, so you won't have the honor to be included in my art collection," Sasori's eyes rested on Hinata, and glinted with a predatory glee. "But you, a Main House Hyuga... you'll make a lovely puppet. Oh, I can't wait until I can turn you into a work of art!"

"And I can't wait until I can turn you into... uh..." Hinata started to trail off. "Naruto-kun is much better at this than I am. Anyway, your art career will end today!"

"What's an artist who doesn't welcome some challenge?" Sasori asked no one in particular, as he made a hand seal. "Let's begin this. Magnet Release: Iron Sand Drizzle!"

The Third Kazekage tore part of his already ruined cloak, exposing its chest. A compartment on its left chest opened, revealing some sort of chakra-emitting apparatus. The iron sand floating around him started to gather and compress into hundreds of projectiles.

"I don't like where this is going," Kurenai said as she started to make hand seals. "Earth Release: Multiple Earth Style Walls!"

Three walls emerged from the ground between the four Konoha and Suna ninja, and the Akatsuki and its puppet.

"I don't think that's going to be enough," Maki stated as she generated two long cloth whips from her hands. Hinata also took a step forward, ready to take the attack head on.

With a shout of "DIE!", Sasori launched a barrage of iron sand bullets forward. In no time, they shattered the first wall Kurenai had erected. Other two barrages, and the walls came down. The next barrage of bullets came soon.

"Double Cloth Helix!"

"Protection of the Eight Trigrams: Sixty Four Palms!"

Maki's cloth whips started to spin at high speed, forming two cones in front of her that successfully deflected most of the bullets, while Hinata used her custom made technique to do the same.

"An impressive defense," Sasori praised, his confidence unwavering. "But how long can you keep it up?"

Kurenai and Kankuro noticed that while he fired the bullets, Sasori was also retrieving the iron sand from the ones he already fired, and compressed them into more bullets that he could fire. He was right, Sasori could go on forever, while Hinata and Maki couldn't. In fact, they were starting to show signs of exhaustion.

"Shit, I need to do something!" Kankuro seethed as he made a hand seal. "Shadow Clone Puppet Jutsu!"

Two clones of Tamotsu appeared, and the hooded puppeteer took no time to attach chakra strings to them. With a swift motion of both hands, he positioned them in front of Hinata and Maki.

"Triple Mechanical Light Shield!"

Tamotsu and its two clones used the defensive jutsu in tandem, creating three chakra shields that quickly merged into a really big one, successfully blocking the barrage of attacks.

"This is your chance! Go while I'll cover you!" Kankuro stated, as he tried to keep the shield active as long as possible.

Maki nodded, and rushed forward, but she was met with an admittedly small barrage of bullets that forced her to step back behind the safety of Kankuro's puppets.

"Even with this cover, his puppet can attack in multiple directions," Maki said, panting a little.

"Kurenai-sensei?" Hinata asked, looking at the raven haired woman.

Kurenai nodded as she started to make hand seals. "I'll provide you a distraction."

Sasori saw Maki jumping from her hiding spot behind Kankuro's puppets, and rushed towards the Akatsuki once again. The redhead grinned as he made a hand seal.

"Quite the bold move," Sasori praised, as he formed iron sand into a spear, which dived at the mummy-looking woman, impaling her in the chest. "But foolish."

Then much to her shock, Maki burst into smoke, and two Makis took her place, which continued her dash towards the now startled Akatsuki. He repeated the process, nailing the two Makis, but it only caused them to split again, having four enemies to deal with.

"What kind of jutsu is this...?" the stupefied redhead wondered, until he realized what was going on. "Oh, a genjutsu. Turns out I'm still vulnerable to those."

Sasori brought his hands together to form a seal, and with a discharge of chakra, the illusion was broken. That didn't mean that all Makis disappeared, they were simply reduced to one, who was still charging at him, accompanied by Hinata. With a hand motion, he brought the Third Kazekage closer, and issued his next command.

"Magnet Release: Iron Sand Gathering Assault!"

The Iron Sand formed into multiple, long and thick nails, which rained upon the two Kunoichi, forcing them backwards. The attack didn't cease, since the Akatsuki wasn't going to let his enemies go on the offensive.

A few meters back, the Tamotsu clones disappeared, and Kankuro stopped channeling the protective jutsu through them and started panting heavily.

"I don't think I'll be able to do that anytime soon," Kankuro said between pants.

"Can you still fight?" Kurenai asked.

Kankuro smiled, and nodded. "Of course. I still have a few surprises that-" Kankuro, however, was taken aback when he found himself unable to move his puppet. "The hell? Tamotsu doesn't move! It's like... there's something jamming all its joints!"

"It has to be the Iron Sand," Kurenai deduced. "Guess that Sasori doesn't want you to interfere again."

"Goddamit..." the hooded man cursed, stomping his foot on the wet ground.

"Since the Iron Sand is connected to that puppet, if we destroy it, yours might be able to move again," the Genjutsu Mistress deduced.

"Let's hope we can do that. I'll try to help you as much as I can," Kankuro said, sadly discarding his now useless puppet.

Meanwhile, Sasori continued to bombard Hinata and Maki by dropping large and/or sharp Iron Sand constructs on them, forcing them to stay in the offensive. The two of them were forced to fall back where Kurenai and Kankuro were.

"This isn't working," Maki realized. "His Magnet Release is way too powerful. There's no way of getting close to Sasori as long as he has the Kazekage!"

"Maybe we've approached this from the wrong perspective," Hinata thoughtfully said.

"What do you mean?" Kankuro asked.

"We focused on Sasori, because a puppet's weakest part is the ninja controlling it... but what if we focus on destroying the Kazekage first?"

"While it's a good idea, the result would be the same. Even if we focus our efforts on destroying that puppet, we have no way to surpass the power of the Magnet Release," Maki explained.

Kurenai smiled confidently, realizing what Hinata was suggesting to do. "We can, if Sasori thinks we're going to target him, just like we did so far until now."

Hinata smiled back, and nodded.

"Whatever you're planning, it won't work," Sasori said as he and his puppet came closer. "I'm already growing bored of this fight. Now, die."

The Iron Sand above him took the shape of several cubes and pyramids. With a hand motion, Sasori started to direct them at the four Konoha and Suna ninja.

"Come on, go!" Kurenai urged, as she started to make hand seals. "Earth Release: Earth Dragon Bullet!"

In front of Kurenai, a serpentine dragon made of earth and stone emerged, and lunged at the incoming Iron Sand block. Both constructs were shattered to pieces when they crashed. Undeterred, Sasori sent more constructs towards the incoming trio, but Kurenai kept repelling them with her Earth Release jutsu.

When she felt she was close enough, Maki made a couple hand seals and slammed her fists into the water-covered ground.

Feeling a tremor under his feet, Sasori jumped backwards just in time to avoid several sharp cloth whips emerging from underground. The Akatsuki smirked once again.

"Close, but you'll need to do better than-uh?" Sasori then realized that he was struggling to pull the Kazekage back. Much to his shock, he saw that Kankuro had attached his own chakra threads to him, and was pulling back.

"Nothing stops a puppeteer from trying to snatch somebody else's puppet. I learned this during my first Chunin Exams," Kankuro boasted, with a grin of satisfaction. "This is your chance, Hinata!"

The Hyuga dashed forward, as chakra lions covered her fists. A scowl formed on the Akatsuki's face as she passed the Kazekage.

"I'll admit that it was a good plan, but you won't catch me off guard," Sasori replied, making a hand seal, commanding the Kazekage to create a shield of Iron Sand around him, and waited for Hinata to get closer to skewer her alive.

However, Hinata didn't do that. Instead, she suddenly spun over her heels, and with a quick double palm strike, she shattered the Kazekage to pieces. It took a few seconds for Sasori to process what had happened, as the Iron Sand around him became inert, and fell to the ground.

"Yes! We did it! We destroyed the Kazekage!" Maki loudly cheered. It was something rare for the otherwise soft spoken woman.

"You were right, Kurenai-san! Tamotsu works once again!" Kankuro cheered as well, happy to recover his puppet.

While happy on the inside, Kurenai didn't share the Suna ninja's optimism. Sasori was angry, but he didn't look like somebody who was just defeated.

"Hinata, fall back," the raven haired woman commanded. Hinata nodded, and did as she was told.

The group of four waited intently to see what Sasori would do next, now that his allegedly strongest puppet was nothing but pieces of scrap.

"I admit that it was quite the impressive tactic. Such teamwork in the heat of the battle is mostly unseen, especially from people belonging to different villages," Sasori genuinely praised, as he started to unbutton his cloak. "To think that you even destroyed the Third Kazekage... however, diverting my attention by making me think you're going after me and then destroy my puppet won't work with the next one..."

"Don't tell me he is going to..." Hinata began, becoming mildly distressed.

Sasori then discarded the cloak, confirming his initial suspicions. Everybody gasped. Even if the Hyuga had told them beforehand, seeing it with their own eyes was something else. Underneath the cloak, there was another puppet. Two poles emerged from the back of his hips, deploying five poison-dripped blades. His gut was open, revealing a thick steel cable coiled around a pole instead of intestines. He had four scrolls attached to a compartment in his back. On his chest was his core, the only living part of his body left, marked with several red kanji.

"... myself!" the Akatsuki proudly announced.

...

Meanwhile, not far from there, Deidara continued his fight against the Suna ninja and Haku. After realizing Temari's tactic of blowing his explosives back at him shortly before he detonated them, he had changed tactics, and opted to attack closer to the ground.

"I might be more vulnerable to their attacks, but this way, my attacks will have more chances to hit," Deidara thought as he commanded his bird to do a low swoop and prepared more explosive clay figurines. " And they won't see THIS coming!"

As Deidara approached the Suna ninja (and Haku), Yukata stepped forward and made several hand seals.

"I'll stop him before he has any chance to attack!" Yukata proudly stated as she prepared her jutsu. "Fire Release: Great Dragon Fire!"

Yukata breathed a stream of fire at the incoming Akatsuki. Deidara quickly tossed a clay figurine at the incoming inferno, which instantly exploded. From the ensuing cloud of smoke and dirt, multiple clay birds flew out in arches, most of them headed towards Yukata. The black haired girl yelped, as she jumped backwards multiple times, trying to avoid the incoming explosions.

Mikoshi grabbed a handful of kunai and shuriken tossed them forward, and made a hand seal.

"Manipulating Attack Blades!"

As if they had life of their own, the kunai and shuriken flew towards the clay birds, impaling most of them to the ground. Yukata was able to avoid the few that exploded, before she fell on her butt.

"Ow..." Yukata whimpered, panting heavily. Matsuri walked towards her friend and helped her back on her feet. "That was close. Thank you, Matsuri-chan, Mikoshi-kun."

Temari blew a small gust of wind with her fan to dispel the smoke of the explosions, and much to her annoyance, Deidara was nowhere to be seen.

"Where did he go?" Matsuri asked, gritting her teeth a little.

"He's possibly underground! Watch out from attacks from below!" Mikoshi warned.

"That can't be true! If he was underground, there would be a hole!" Matsuri protested.

True to the bespectacled boy's words, clay creatures started to pop from the ground, and launching themselves at the Suna and Konoha ninja.

"Watch out!" Haku shouted, tossing three senbon at a clay creature that was about to latch onto Matsuri, breaking its momentum, and exploding prematurely.

At first, they were able to fend off the creatures reasonably well, but the more they fought, the more they appeared. Haku and Temari realized that some of them didn't explode, got back on their feet, and tried to attack again.

"If Hinata was here, she could locate Deidara underground and see the creatures before they emerged," Haku thought, as he impaled a small clay creature to the ground with an ice spear. "And if Kurenai-sensei was here, she could bring Deidara out with an earth jutsu. But they aren't here. Come on Haku, think! What can you do that can be of help!"

"Everybody, to me!" Temari called as she reared her fan backward.

The trio of Suna Chunin and Haku all leaped towards her, with the explosive creatures waddling towards them, forming a large group. Just like Temari wanted.

"Great Sickle Weasel Jutsu!"

With all enemies in one spot, Temari was able to blow them away with a powerful gale. However, that proved to be a temporary solution at best, since the creatures got back on their feet, and charged once again. Worse, more creatures continued to pop from the ground. It was then when Haku noticed something.

"That's it! All the creatures appear around the same spot!" the Ice Ninja deduced. "That has to be where Deidara hides!"

"They keep coming! Matsuri-chan, what are we going to do?" Yukata cried.

Matsuri herself didn't look that confident about their chances either. "I... I don't know! Just keep fighting! He's bound to run out of these things sooner or later!"

"Temari-san, I think I have an idea!" Haku called, while casting a freezing blast at a group of small clay creatures, slowing them down. "They all come from the same spot! Push them against that spot!"

Temari gasped in realization, before she smirked, realizing what Haku was suggesting. "Alright then! Matsuri, I need your help! Use wind attacks to push the clay dolls from where they come from!"

"Understood, Temari-sama!" Matsuri obediently replied.

Both kunoichi jumped at opposite sides of the spawning spot so they could surround their enemies before pushing them back.

"Wind Release: Breakthrough!"

"Wind Release: Wind Raging Wall!"

As they pushed the clay creatures backwards, the clash of wind jutsu had the unintended effect of creating a tornado that kept them inside, pushing them backwards whenever they tried to walk towards Deidara's enemies.

"What do we do now?" Matsuri asked.

"Nothing! Keep blowing! Wait until more clay creatures emerge!" Temari ordered.

Haku smiled to himself. Temari had quickly realized what was his plan. As more clay creatures emerged, the tornado was having trouble keeping them trapped. The accumulated mass was starting to become too heavy for the current winds. That means it was the time.

"Matsuri, get away! Yukata, set those bastards on fire!" Temari hollered as she jumped backwards. "Haku, protect her from the explosion!"

Yukata nodded and made several hand seals. "Fire Release: Great Dragon Fire!"

Once again, Yukata breathed a stream of fire at the gathered clay creatures, causing all of them to detonate, producing a massive explosion that would have made Deidara proud. Haku managed to build around Yukata and himself a sturdy ice barrier that absorbed the shockwave of the explosion.

Just like Haku had predicted, Deidara was hidden underground under the spot where the clay monsters were emerging, and that explosion had forced him out, hurling him into the air before he fell with a thud a few meters away from them.

"This..." Deidara grumbled, as he got back on his feet as badly as he could. "This is... the second time... you use my art against me... how dare you... HOW DARE YOU!?"

The Suna ninja and Haku slipped into fighting stances as they watched the Akatsuki shambling towards him. Despite being badly bruised and having numerous burns across his body, none of them were foolish enough to think that he may have one last nasty ace in the hole.

"That's it, no more playing around! You're about to feel the full power of my art!" Deidara shouted as he tossed a clay figurine at his feet.

A cloud of smoke enveloped Deidara, and when it disappeared, the Akatsuki was riding another giant clay bird. However, this one was much bigger than the ones he had used before, especially its wingspan, which gave it a majestic appearance.

"Behold the C3 Clay Phoenix!" Deidara hollered as the clay bird flapped its wings, taking flight, gaining attitude in no time.

After quickly flying around in circles a couple times, the phoenix opened its long beak, releasing two balls of clay. In a poof of smoke, the balls of clay turned into smaller replicas of its progenitor, but still noticeably bigger than the ones used before.

"Oh, you still back to that?" Temari asked, as she readied her fan. "Yeah, I don't like your 'art', you can have it back!"

Temari blew a powerful gust of wind once again. However, unlike the other time, the clay creatures weren't pushed back. The artificial birds flapping their wings faster, pushing against the wind current blowing against them. The wind eventually ceased, and clay birds continued their descend. Temari grimaced. Deidara grinned.

"TAKE COVER!"

"Boom!" Deidara shouted, as he made a hand seal.

The clay birds exploded, producing a blast much more powerful than his other figurines. While narrowly avoiding the explosion, the Suna ninja and Haku were tossed into the ground by the ensuing shockwave.

"No time to sleep!" Deidara hollered, sending another duo of clay birds from his phoenix's beak.

"I'll stop them this time!" Yukata said, making hand seals. "Fire Release; Phoenix Sage Fire Jutsu!"

The black haired kunoichi breathed a volley of small fireballs from her mouth, that spread in a rather wide arc. The clay birds, however, expertly maneuvered through the fireballs as if there was an intelligence controlling them. However, while they did so, Mikoshi prepared his next move.

"Manipulating Attack Blades!"

A foursome of kunai with explosive tags attached to them flew towards the clay creatures. The clay birds managed to dodge them as well, but Mikoshi directed them back, and they found their mark. With a hand seal, the bespectacled Suna ninja detonated them, destroying their targets.

"Heh, not bad," Deidara said, as he prepared his next attack. "But the next one is going to be-"

"Wind Release: Rasenshuriken!"

A loud whirring screech interrupted Deidara's ramblings, and much to his surprise, he saw what appeared to be a shuriken made of pure chakra flying at him. His battle instincts screamed to get out of its way. Not having time to maneuver his clay phoenix into dodging it, Deidara opted to jump away. As he fell, he saw the shuriken crash against his clay phoenix, resulting in a massive explosion of wind and chakra.

"Wow... that was sure something..." as he fell, Deidara couldn't suppress a tinge of admiration for the ensuing blast the shuriken produced. Despite the height he fell from, he managed to land on his feet and eyed his opponents. He noticed that there was somebody there who wasn't before.

"You!" Deidara said, outraged. "The jinchuriki!"

"Yeah, that would be me," Naruto said with a smirk, flanked by a single clone. He then pointed upwards. "And that was my most powerful jutsu so far. I still have enough nature energy for a second one. Except this time around, you won't be able to dodge it."

Naruto formed a rasengan, and his clone started to infuse it with wind chakra, taking the form of a shuriken as he did.

"Wait a minute, did he said nature energy? Is this fucker a sage?" Deidara asked, before noticing the coloration around Naruto's eyes, confirming his doubts. "Then there's no way I can defeat him like this, especially with all these people around!"

"Make sure he doesn't escape!" Naruto told the others as the jutsu slowly reached completion.

"It will be you who won't be able to escape!" Deidara fired back as he grabbed some of his explosive clay, and ate it with the mouth on his face, instead of the ones in his palms.

"I have a bad feeling about this..." Matsuri began.

Deidara then started to bloat as if he was balloon, while laughing maniacally.

"HAHAHAHA! Let's see how you stop this! There's no way to avoid this explosion!" Deidara boasted as he swelled up more and more. "Even if you avoid the initial blast, the shockwave will tear apart the land and cause a massive torrent!"

"Is that madman going to blow himself up?" Mikoshi asked in shock.

"I'll stop him before he explodes!" Naruto said as he prepared to toss his Rasenshuriken, which had reached completion.

"No! If you do that, you might trigger the explosion!" Haku stated.

"Then what do we do?" It was Matsuri who asked this time around.

Another idea dawned upon the Ice Ninja. "Send him high into the air with a wind jutsu! It might be the best way to avoid the aftereffects of the explosion!"

"Good idea! Come on Naruto, Matsuri, let's do it!" Temari said.

The blond jinchuriki and brown haired girl nodded. Naruto undid the Rasenshuriken, and the three of them placed themselves around Deidara, surrounding him. Three wind jutsu came from three different directions, clashing against the bloating Akatsuki, producing a powerful tornado that hurled Deidara into the air.

"Keep going! He's still too close to the ground!" Haku urged.

The three wind ninja poured as much power into their jutsu as possible. However, thanks to Naruto's nature energy, he was able to give his the necessary boost to push Deidara much higher. And a couple second later, the Akatsuki exploded in a massive fireball, which started to quickly expand outwards.

"Everybody, get close to me!" Haku yelled as his hands flew through hand seals.

Thankfully, the Ice Ninja created a multi-layered ice barrier around the group in time, which thankfully protected them from the massive blast that Deidara's bloated body produced when it detonated.

"So, this may sound dumb, but... is he dead?" Mikoshi asked.

Naruto shook his head. "No. I'm afraid that was a decoy. I still sense the real Deidara, a kilometer or so to the north. He probably used Body Replacement with a clone without us noticing."

"As much as I'd wish to, there's no time to chase him," Haku stated, earning a nod of approval from Naruto. "We need to help the others against the other Akatsuki."

"Alright. This one won't escape," Temari said in determination as she and the rest of the group rushed towards the other battleground. "By the way, where is Gaara? Is he okay?"

"Gaara is fine. I left him in a safe place near here, with two clones watching over him. We'll get him back once we're done with the Akatsuki," Naruto stated.

"Whoa..." Yukata said in awe, stopping dead in his tracks. "What... what is that?"

The others stopped as well, catching what the black haired Suna girl had seen first: a mass of puppets, almost one hundred, floating above Hinata, Kurenai, Kankuro and Maki.

"I'll tell you what that is. Trouble. A big one," Temari deadpanned.

Author's Note: You know, I was hoping that I could do the fight against the Akatsuki in a single chapter, but damn, even after previously getting rid of Hiruko, Sasori has more phases than a World of Warcraft boss, and I was feeling that the chapter would drag on way too much. So the fight will end the next chapter. Now, a couple clarifications:

No, Sasori didn't go directly with the hundred puppets after the Kazekage was destroyed. Hinata and the others still fought his puppet form before that, it just happened at the same time Naruto and the others finished Deidara off. But don't worry, you'll get to see that side of the fight the next chapter.

Before you point out that Hinata's lightning jutsu could nullify Deidara's explosives and thus she should have fought against him and not Sasori, remember that Hinata didn't know this. Go and reread/rewatch the Sasuke vs Deidara fight, and you'll see that Sasuke didn't know this either. He came to the conclusion mid-fight, when he realized that the clay figurines he hit with his chidori didn't blow up, and even then, he still has to do more tests just to be sure. So, Hinata's train of thought is this: she's a melee specialist with a couple ranged jutsu, she clearly would be much more useful against groundbound opponent than an airborne one.

You know, rewatching the Suna Chunin Exams arc for Team Matsuri, I realized that none of them actually show any kind of jutsu, much to my huge disappointment, so I had to make their fighting styles up from scratch. Though it's confirmed that Matsuri has wind affinity.

Thanks to gio08 for betareading this chapter, even injured. Hope that by the time of this writing, you got better.

So the next chapter will be the conclusion of the fight against Sasori, and thus the end of the Suna arc! In the meantime, tell me your thoughts and impressions on this chapter via review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Wind Blows Again

Author's Note: Unfortunately, my betareader is unavailable for the time being, so I had to proofread the chapter myself. So sorry if the reader experience feels a bit worse. Still, hope you enjoy the chapter:

Chapter 55

The Wind Blows Again

or

The Akatsuki Mean Business

...

The group of four watched in horror the creature in front of them, half a puppet, half human, while at the same time being neither, blurring the line between human and machine. Sasori, however, continued to smirk.

"You have no words for my greatest piece of art?" Sasori asked, his voice showing some conceit. "I guess it's natural. Not every day one gets to see something like this."

"Greatest piece of art!? You perverted the noble art of puppetry, Sasori," Kankuro seethed, as he moved Tamotsu into an attacking position. "You've been Suna's greatest shame for too long. Today, we will get rid Suna of that shame!"

Sasori chuckled condescendingly. "Of course, those who want to break the mold and take art to new limits are branded as criminals. Good thing I stopped caring about that village you like so much long ago."

With a clicking noise, Sasori brought his arms forward, pointing their palms towards the Konoha and Suna ninjas. A pipe emerged from each palm. The uppermost scroll on his back briefly glowed with a blue light. Everybody adopted a defensive stance, ready to react to whatever Sasori was about to throw at them.

"Now... BECOME ASHES!"

Two streams of red hot fire shot from Sasori's palm cannons. Kankuro and Hinata moved to block the attacks.

"Mechanical Light Shield Block!"

"Vacuum Palm!"

Tamotsu raised its shield, creating a barrier of blue chakra that intercepted one of the fire streams. Hinata's vacuum shell also clashed against the second, but it managed to overpower it, and continue unimpeded. The Hyuga yelled as she jumped sideways in an attempt to avoid the red streams of fiery death.

Maki motioned her hands forward, shooting multiple cloth whips from her hands at Sasori. But predictably, they were burned to ashes.

"Hinata, let's surround him! He won't be able to attack all of us that way!" Kurenai suggested.

The Hyuga nodded, and the two women started to run towards Sasori, avoiding his streams of fire as good as possible. Once they were close enough they leaped above him, landing at opposite sides. Now the four of them were around him.

"Now you can only attack one of us at a time!" Maki taunted.

Sasori let out a bone-chilling cackle in return.

"And what makes you think that!?" Sasori replied.

The human puppet stopped his fire assault, and spread his arms to the side. Then, his whole upper body minus the head started to spin at a fast pace. It was truly a disturbing image to watch. However, it wasn't as disturbing as the implication of what this new ability entailed.

"BURN ALREADY!"

"Fall back!" a panicked Kurenai ordered.

Sasori ignited his palm flamethrowers again, releasing waves of flames in every direction. As he increased the spinning speed, the flames started to take the shape of a giant fiery tornado that slowly expanded outwards. The heat produced was so intense, the shallow water started to boil and evaporate, covering the area in steam.

The tornado of fire ceased. However, the steam covering the area made it impossible to anybody but Hinata to see what was going on. Hinata then started to notice a faint pulse of chakra coming from Sasori. She didn't have time to ponder what was it when she saw him raise his hand at Maki's position.

"Maki-san, watch out!" Hinata cried.

Maki jumped backwards, leaping into the air as she narrowly avoided a stream of fire. Another chakra pulse, and this time, the stream of fire was aimed at Hinata, who managed to dodge it.

"Wait a second... that chakra pulse... that's how he's locating us in the steam!" Hinata thought in realization. "I'm the only one who can see him, so it falls on me to end this!"

Another realization dawned upon the Hyuga. She saw that the ground was now completely dry. The heat produced by Sasori's attack had evaporated all the water in the zone. That means that there was no danger of harming her allies if she used a lightning jutsu. Something she was planning to do, since this situation called for a powerful ranged attack. Her hands flew through hand seals.

"Lightning Release: Thunder Fang!"

Thrusting both palms forward, Hinata released a mass of electricity that took the shape of a lion head. It let out a roar as it flew towards Sasori.

"Huh?"

Being so focused on offense, that attack caught Sasori completely off guard. On top of that, since nobody had used lightning jutsu so far, and the attack blasted him full.

"AAARRGH!" Sasori yelled, clutching the only organic side of his body. "Oh... it's been so long since the last time I felt pain... I don't like it."

"Well, prepare for more then, since there's more from where that came from!" Hinata defiantly stated, as she got ready for a second attack.

The steam started to dispel, allowing everybody without a Byakugan to clearly see Sasori. They noticed the uppermost scroll on his back was no longer there. The four Konoha and Suna ninjas allowed themselves a brief sigh of relief upon realizing that this means no more flamethrowers. Said relief, however, was short lived as the second scroll briefly glowed blue.

"I'm no stranger to lightning release either," Sasori said, as he pointed one hand at Hinata, and the other at Kurenai. "Now DIE!"

Two lightning bolts fired from each palm of his hands. Kurenai dodged the one aimed at her, while Hinata channeled lightning chakra into her hands, and swiped the blast away.

Kankuro decided he had been on the defensive for enough time, and moved Tamotsu to attack. Sasori noticed this, and fired an electric blast at the puppet. With a click, the puppet moved its shield forward, dispersing the electric blast. With another click, several slots opened from the shield, and fired a volley of shuriken at the Akatsuki.

"Useless!" Sasori yelled, as he fired two lightning bolts to the ground, and used the resulting blast to launch himself into the air, above the puppet. He then fired his ventral cable at Kankuro. The puppeteer managed to dodge it, but still made a scratch on his torso, before it stabbed into the ground.

Kankuro fell on one knee, already feeling the weakening effects of the poison.

"This time I won't make the same mistake I did before!" Sasori hollered, as he retracted his cable, propelling himself towards Kankuro. His side blades started to spin like a buzzsaw, as the deranged rogue puppeteer dived at the loyal poisoned one. "DIE!"

However, when Sasori was about to tear Kankuro to shreds, something violently stopped him. Turning his head 180°, he could see that Maki had attached several cloth wips around the poles that held the spinning blades. Maki then, helped by Kurenai, pulled Sasori backwards, and the two women tossed the human puppet in the opposite direction, sending him flying.

With Sasori momentarily out of commission, Hinata rushed towards Kankuro, as she fished another antidote capsule from her ninja tool pouch. Wasting no time, she rolled Kankuro's right sleeve, and nailed the capsule into it.

"There. Now the poison shouldn't be any concern for the next three minutes," Hinata explained, before taking a better look at the puppeteer's wounds. "Let me heal that as well."

"Heh, thanks. This is the second time you save my life," Kankuro chuckled, as he watched Hinata healing him.

"Think nothing of it," Hinata said, smiling a little. "It's what we medics do."

"How many of those antidotes you have?" the puppeteer asked, mildly concerned.

"Just one. If more than one of us is poisoned... well, unless we can find the necessary ingredients to make more..."

Suddenly, there was a massive explosion in the sky, producing such intense light, it almost blinded everybody there for a split second.

"What... what was that?" Hinata asked in shock.

"Dammit, that other Akatsuki and his explosions!" Kankuro snarled. "If something happened to Temari... !"

"It seems that my idiot partner just blew himself up," Sasori replied, as he returned to the fight. "I knew this would happen sooner or later. Deidara never reacts well to being cornered. That means that now I'm all alone against both you and however survived the explosion from the other group."

"But something tells me you're not going to surrender, aren't you?" Maki asked.

Sasori's smirk was all the answer she needed.

"Haha, no. I killed a Kazekage, I know very well what will happen to me if I surrender," Sasori then used a chakra thread to get one of the two remaining scrolls on his back. "That means I'll have to end this fight right now. You should feel proud of yourselves, very few people have actually saw me using this. You can say it's my ultimate jutsu."

Sasori unfurled the scroll, and dozens upon dozens of puppets poured from it. Their number was so big, they almost blocked the sun. Lastly Sasori opened a compartment on the left side of his chest, and one hundred chakra threads shot from it, attaching to one puppet each. Needless to say, the four Konoha and Suna ninjas were taken aback by the magnitude of such display.

The puppets were more or less the same size, all of them human-like in shape and form, with a surprising amount of detail to their faces, sporting multiple facial features, hairstyles and even accessories, like nose rings. All of them were wearing long plain maroon cloaks, and were carrying at least some sort of long bladed weapon. Poisoned, no doubt about it.

"These puppets are my strongest weapon, which I used once to conquer a whole country," Sasori said, with that ever present smirk. "You ragtag foursome don't stand a chance against me now."

"This... this is unreal..." Kankuro stammered. "Monzaemon Chikamatsu was considered the best puppeteer who ever lived, and his limit was still ten puppets..."

"Don't falter. There's no way he can micromanage so many puppets at once. He'll send them in small numbers," Kurenai guessed.

"I'd like to know what you do define as 'small'," Sasori replied, his grin widening even further, looking even more psychotic. "Red Secret Technique: Performance of a Hundred Puppets!"

Everybody braced as the puppets descended upon them. And while Kurenai was right in that Sasori was unable to command all one hundred puppets at once, Sasori was still able to control quite a lot of them at once, between ten and sixteen.

"Scatter! He won't be able to focus on all four at once if we're not together!" Kurenai suggested. Her suggestion wasn't contested by Sasori this time around.

Contrary to the skill and minute precision Sasori had displayed when using the Third Kazekage, here it seemed that he wanted to use overwhelming force and numbers to crush the Konoha and Suna ninjas. The puppets attacked in an unrefined manner, blindly charging towards them while trying to skewer their enemies with their bladed weapons. A far cry from Sasori's previous puppets. But for those massive numbers, he had to sacrifice complexity, or else they'd be too hard to manage.

Kurenai mostly relied on Earth and some Wind Release based jutsu to deal with any puppet that got close to her. Maki wrapped her cloth whips around them, and slamming them against each other. Kankuro fought defensively, cornering himself against a wall of stone so the puppets couldn't surround him, while letting his own puppet take the brunt of their attack.

Hinata, meanwhile, fought her way towards the redheaded Akatsuki,.

" There's no way we can win against so many enemies," Hinata reasoned. "This seems to be Sasori's last resort. If I can get close to him, the fight will be over."

Hinata pushed every thought out of her head other than fighting the puppets and pushing forward. While the puppets lacked organs or chakra network, the Byakugan allowed her to easily spot their weak spots, such as their joints or fragile internal mechanisms. She also saw several puppets dashing at her from different sides. Her whole body started to crackle with electricity.

"Lightning Release: Heavenly Thunderstorm!"

Hinata started to spin, becoming a tornado of lightning bolts that blasted the incoming puppets away, shattering most of them to pieces.

Sasori watched that display in awe.

" So, the Byakugan allows her to see any attack regardless of where it comes from. So ambushes will be useless," Sasori reasoned. "Still, one has to wonder how long can she last until her human body gives up."

Hinata continued to fight the incoming puppets as if there was no tomorrow. She was careful spending what chakra she still had, meaning that no more powerful attacks like the one she had used just a moment ago. Of course, such line of thought went down the drain the moment she saw a rain of swords falling upon her.

"Heavenly Spin!"

Hinata successfully deflected the incoming blades, scattering them around the area, with the added benefit of destroying a bunch of puppets near her. But the moment her spinning slowed down, more puppets swarmed her. The Hyuga heiress was pushed back as she deflected the incoming blows, careful they wouldn't cut her skin.

Hinata allowed herself a second to see how the others were doing. Kurenai and Maki were keeping their ground reasonably well. And Kankuro even managed to commandeer a couple of Sasori's puppets to form a better defense. In fact, it seemed that Sasori was only doing the bare minimum to keep them at bay, while focusing all his efforts in bringing her down.

"Listen everyone! I'm Sasori's main target! Try to push forward and end him already!" Hinata called.

"I don't think so!" Sasori replied.

As if on cue, more puppets joined the fight, attacking Kankuro, Kurenai and Maki with even more intensity than before, as if Sasori was trying to prove her wrong out of spite.

" Sasori has lost a lot of puppets already. But the less he has, the more he can sharpen his focus and control all of them in a more efficient manner," Hinata reasoned, while dealing with a trio of puppets. "If this continues, we won't be able to-"

"Great Sickle Weasel Jutsu!"

A gust of wind blew away a group of puppets that were coming towards Hinata from above, which she had seen but wasn't focused on. She also noticed the group of six people that had joined the fray, among them her two remaining teammates.

"Naruto-kun! Haku-kun!" Hinata called them in joy.

"Hi there. It seems that we came here just in time!" Naruto said.

"That other Akatsuki exhausted us a little, but I believe there's still enough fight in us to at least assist you," Haku added.

Hinata nodded. "We can't just waste more time and energy on these puppets. We need to get to Sasori and end this already!"

Naruto and Haku nodded, before the former said: "Leave that to us! We'll keep those puppets at bay, and open a way to him. Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

Naruto created a multitude of clones, which charged forward upon coming into existence, drawing Sasori's attention. A mass of puppets went to greet them. While the puppets were far more durable than the clones, the latter ones did their job at keeping them busy.

"Ice Release: Multiple Piercing Icicle Shot!"

Haku created several ice spears that floated above him, and launched them whenever a puppet came close to either him or Hinata, impaling them to the ground or a wall of stone. The trio of Konoha ninjas were successfully getting closer to the Akatsuki, which was starting to grow desperate.

"Inconceivable. Me, Suna's greatest ninja, who managed to kill the Third Kazekage... cornered by these children? No, I won't allow it! This is not my end! My art is eternal, and so I am!"

Sasori extended both hands. His left hand fell off, and a long, sharp blade appeared in its place. He also shot a chakra thread from his right hand to pull an axe from one of his already destroyed puppets. He then fired his ventral cable forward, prompting Hinata and Haku to jump sideways, while killing some Naruto clones, before stabbing himself into the ground. Retracting the cable, he launched himself forward towards Hinata.

"DIE!"

Hinata didn't to dodge this time. Displaying her agility and elasticity, the Hyuga Heiress nimbly avoided Sasori's poisoned blows, before taking a step forward, and softly poking Sasori's heart with her index finger.

That's all what she needed. The burst of chakra she sent through her fingertip made Sasori's last remnant of his human body to burst into chunky salsa, bringing his sordid life to an end. The chakra threads he was using to keep the puppet army disappeared, and the remaining puppets fell to the ground, motionless.

Nobody said anything. Everybody took a moment to to regain their breath, and make sure nobody was seriously hurt.

"Whoa! You guys did it! You killed Sasori!" Kankuro cheered, happy to see that the man who kidnapped his brother and brought both him and his sister to near death had finally ceased to be.

Hinata fell on her butt, and started panting heavily, as she felt all the accumulated stress and exhaustion washing over her body. Naruto wordlessly sat besides her, and wrapped his arms around her shoulders. The Hyuga also saw Kurenai walking towards her.

"Congratulations, Hinata," despite her naturally happy attitude, the fight had also pushed the Genjutsu Mistress to her very limit. "You have the honor of being the first person to ever kill an Akatsuki."

"Yes! One down, nine more to go!" Naruto cheered, shaking Hinata a little.

"This will send a powerful message out there. Akatsuki isn't invincible," Haku agreed.

"Even then, underestimating them would be foolish. Just look how much damage just one of them can do," Temari said, looking around the battlefield. She then looked at her younger brother. "So, you are planning to scavenge these puppets, right?" Temari asked.

"You can bet on it," Kankuro replied, as he walked towards the deceased Sasori, and lifted his body. "Starting with this guy!"

"Are you planning to use Sasori's corpse as a puppet? That's morbid," Maki added, a bit disgusted, no longer wearing the Cloth Armor.

"It's not really his corpse. Plus it would be a waste," Kankuro replied, as he sealed Sasori's body inside an storage scroll.

"By the way, Naruto," Temari said, as she walked towards the blond. "Now that we took care about the Akatsuki... what about Gaara?"

"Oh right! I left him hidden between a bunch of trees and bushes not far away from here. I left a couple clones watching over him," Naruto made a hand seal. The others couldn't see it, but he was dispelling one of those clones in order to gain his memories. "Yup! Gaara's still there!"

"Go fetch him then. I want to take him home," Temari asked. Naruto nodded.

...

Gaara slowly opened his eyes. He blinked a few times when the sunlight proved to be too intense for his weary eyes. He found himself staring at several blurry figures that towered over him. As his eyes got used to the light, said figures became clearer, and the former jinchuriki could now see they were his siblings, Naruto and his teammates, and Maki and her students.

"Huh...?" Gaara mumbled, still sleepy. "What-?"

Gaara was interrupted when both Temari and Kankuro pretty much latched at him in a tight embrace. He could hear the two of them crying.

"Gaara..." Temari sobbed, almost in a whisper. "You have no idea how happy I am to see that you're okay!"

"Yeah man, you gave us quite the scare!" Kankuro said, as his tears ruined his face paint.

"What... what happened?" Gaara weakly asked. "I don't remember anything... after we fought those Akatsuki..."

"It doesn't matter, little bro. All that matters is that you're alive," Kankuro replied.

Gaara gently pushed his siblings back, and with their help, he stood back on his feet.

"Even then, I wish to know," Gaara's eyes then rested on Naruto. "Given all the people gathered here."

Maki took a step forward, and cleared her throat. "Long story short, the Akatsuki got you, and extracted the Tailed Beast from you. These Konoha ninjas helped us rescue you and drive the Akatsuki away. We even managed to kill one of them, the infamous Sasori of the Red Sands."

Gaara processed the Jonin's words with a thoughtful expression. However, there was something that didn't make any sense.

"Wait," Gaara replied. "If that was true, I should be dead."

"You almost were," Kankuro added. "We managed to stop the extraction ritual when it was about to end. Naruto and Hinata managed to heal you and stabilize what little Tailed Beast chakra remained inside you so you wouldn't die."

"You weren't the only ones they did save," Temari added. "If it wasn't for Konoha, Kankuro and I would have suffered a long and painful death due Sasori's poison."

Once again, Gaara paused to absorb this new information. So, the One Tail was no longer within his body. That would explain why he felt so... different. On one side, he didn't miss having a murderous beast sealed inside, but on the other hand, he felt an unexplainable sensation of emptiness, as if a part of him had been destroyed.

"I see," Gaara replied, as he walked closer to the Konoha ninja. "Thanks to all of you for your help. Suna will never forget what you did here."

"Hey, we did help too, you know!" Yukata protested.

"Yukata!" Maki chided her.

Gaara's lips formed a small smile, something rare to see in the stoic redhead. "No. It would be unfair to deny them their contribution in this endeavor. You also have my thanks, and I'll make sure that you're properly rewarded."

"Yay!" Yukata cheered.

Matsuri then walked closer to Gaara, a smile on her face as she tried to hold back her tears.

"It's okay, Gaara-sama. Seeing you alive and well is all the reward I need," Matsuri earnestly said.

"Now, if all it's said and done, and if it's not much to ask... I'd like to return home," Gaara weakly said.

Everybody nodded, and headed towards Sunagakure at a pace slow enough for Gaara to be comfortable.

...

A few hours later, long after the Konoha and Suna ninjas left the Land of the Rivers, two Akatsuki appeared in the site of the battle, easily identifiable since most of the puppets Sasori had used were still there.

"I'm sorry, boss," the black half of Zetsu said, as he and his other half checked the puppets. "But it seems that they took the body away. We won't be able to get the replacement."

Obito, however, smirked as he noticed something. He walked towards something that caught his attention: a single, disembodied hand. Picking the puppet hand up, he noticed it had a ring on its thumb.

"Not all the body, it would seem," Obito said, taking the ring, and tossing the hand away. "Sasori was gracious enough to make sure we'd be able to replace him once he saw his end was close."

"Those are good news, indeed," the white half of Zetsu replied. "So, shall we proceed to induct the new member?"

"Do you really need to ask?" Obito asked, as he placed the ring inside a pocket under his cloak.

"Of course. I'll make sure the Moon Portal is ready as soon as possible," Black Zetsu said, as both he and Obito vanished.

...

Sunagakure, Next Morning

To say that the previous day had been one of the Hidden Sand Village's most distressful days would have been an understatement. The news of the Akatsuki attacking the Kazekage's children and Gaara's abduction had been like a hammerblow to the collective spirit of the villagers. Fear and worry spread among the population as wildfire, as they wondered if this was nothing but the first part of an attack on the village as a whole.

The general panic made the Kazekage and his councilors to send most of his available ninjas to secure and watch over all the strategic zones, just in case a larger attack would fall upon the village, leaving only a small team to assist Temari, Kankuro and the Konoha ninja with Gaara's rescue. And, indeed, one of those fears appeared to be true when one of the village watchers spotted somebody in the horizon.

"Somebody is coming!" the Suna ninja said, seeing shadowy figures coming from the East.

"Are they enemies? How many of them?" his partner asked.

"I'll tell you right now," the first ninja said, as he pulled out a spyglass, taking a better look of the newcomers. "It's a small group. Ten, I think. They don't appear to be enemies. In fact they're from our own... no way!"

"What? What did you see?" the second ninja impatiently asked.

"It's Gaara-sama! They brought him back!"

The second watcher immediately understood his partner's reaction and sudden excitement.

"I'll spread the good news! Gaara-sama is alive and back with us!"

...

As the group of seven Suna and four Konoha ninjas slowly approached the village, Kurenai started to notice something odd.

"Look like a large gathering of Suna ninjas is forming at the entrance of the village," Kurenai pointed out.

Hinata activated her Byakugan, confirming her sensei's words.

"Indeed. Are they here to greet us?" Hinata wondered.

And yes, Hinata's guess proved to be true. Once they were close enough, the Suna ninjas started to loudly cheer, both for Gaara, seeing him return, and for all the ten ninjas that had made his return possible. Gaara reacted to this by showing as little emotion as he usually does, but on the inside, his heart was flooded by a warm feeling.

"Look at that, brother," Temari pointed out. "The very same people who used to fear and hate you are cheering for your return and safety."

Gaara smiled. He was about to say something, when the cheering abruptly ceased, much to the group's confusion. The mass of Suna ninjas then moved aside, forming a passageway, revealing the reason the mood had been killed so fast.

Sporting an unreadable expression stood Rasa, the Fourth Kazekage, and Gaara, Kankuro and Temari's father.

Wordlessly the Kazekage walked forward, his eyes fixed on Gaara, as the rest of the Suna ninja silently watched their supreme commander, his stone cold face unchanged. The seconds he took to bridge the gap and met Gaara's group felt like an eternity.

"Father," Gaara simply said.

Then, the unthinkable happened. To everybody's utter shock and surprise, Rasa suddenly wrapped his arms around his youngest son, and started sobbing loudly, in an undignified manner befitting a Kage, which indeed caught off guard everybody who already knew the stern and unpleasant man.

"I'm sorry, Gaara," Rasa cried. "I'm sorry for all of this... it was me who made you this, who made you carry this burden..."

"Father," Gaara replied, seemingly not acknowledging his father's state. "I no longer possess the One Tail within me. The Akatsuki took it away."

Regaining some of his composure, Rasa wiped the tears from his eyes as he broke them embrace and stood up.

"It's okay, Gaara," Rasa replied, his lip quivering a little. "When I heard the news about your abduction, I didn't think about Shukaku until much later. It was your life that worried me the most. And seeing you here, alive and well, fills my heart with a joy unlike no other.

"Gaara... I've realized far too late what an awful father I've been to you," his eyes darted to Kankuro and Temari. "To all of you. I won't ask for your forgiveness, I'll earn it by becoming both a better father and better Kazekage altogether."

While they still harbored some resentment towards their father, Kankuro and Temari smiled a little at their father's change of heart.

"By the way," Temari replied, taking a step forward, and handing her a scroll. "The new alliance treaty with Konoha."

"Good job, Temari, Kankuro," Rasa said, taking the scroll. He then looked at the foursome of Konoha ninjas. "But I think that a mere paper is now irrelevant in the light of what has transpired these days. Ninjas of Konoha, in my and Suna's name, thank you for saving my children. Suna will always be a friend of Konoha as long as I'm the Kazekage."

"Good to hear that," Kurenai said, smiling a little.

"Also, you're invited to spend the day in the village. Tonight, we will have a feast to celebrate Gaara's return," the Kazekage said.

Everybody cheered, and they headed back to the village. Temari and Kankuro then noticed somebody, an old woman, walking towards them, sporting a dejected expression. They recognized her as Chiyo, one of Sunagakure's elders.

"Kankuro, Temari. I'm glad to see that both you and your brother are alright," Chiyo said. After a heavy sigh, she added. "Was my grandson... responsible for this?"

Temari and Kankuro nodded. "I'm afraid yes, Chiyo-baasama," Temari replied.

"It was as I feared. What has been of him?" Chiyo asked. The two Suna Jonin took too long to answer, but their silence was all she needed to hear to know. "I see. Deep down, I believe it was my fault my grandson took such a path."

"Don't blame yourself. We're all responsible for our own actions, and Sasori chose his path on his own free will," Kankuro firmly replied. "I know it must hurt to learn the fate of a family member, but don't think for a second what he did was your fault."

"I know. I wish it was as easy," Chiyo lamented. "Oh well, I'll try to see the positives. How we got both you and your brother back... and that my grandson won't be able to hurt anybody else anymore..."

...

Several Hours Later, Kazekage's State

As expected, the party in Gaara's honor ended up being entertaining, memorable, and above all things, really fun. There was lots of food, drink, music and dancing. After finding out that Hinata was dating the son of a Kage, Matsuri asked the Hyuga to share advice on how she could approach Gaara, whom he had a crush on but saw him out of her league. The Hyuga Heiress was way too happy to oblige.

Despite having a good time in the celebration -and having more than enough reasons to celebrate-, there was a couple things lingering on Naruto's mind that stopped from fully enjoying the festive mood. And he was going to deal with one of those issues right now.

Exiting the party lobby, Naruto found a terrace where the sound of said party was barely audible. A deceptively cold night breeze brushed against his face as he entered the terrace, and the blond saw a spectacular view of all of Sunagakure. Yes, this place would be a perfect spot for what he wanted to do. He closed his eyes.

The faint noises of the party in the other room, as well as the city above vanished, a deafening silence taking their place. Naruto opened his eyes, and he was no longer in the Kazekage's state, but in a place where nobody but him could reach.

"Hey, Kyubi!" Naruto called.

Naruto heard a loud rumble, followed by an annoyed groan, as the mighty beast lazily stretched, and looked at him with unfriendly eyes.

" Ugh, again so soon? What do you want now?" the Kyubi asked in a massively annoyed tone.

"I wanted to thank you again for helping me save Gaara's life. What you did means a lot to me," Naruto earnestly said, giving the best the best of his smiles.

The Nine Tails, however, was far from amused. "I DIDN'T DO IT TO EARN YOUR GRATITUDE!" the Nine Tails angrily roared. "It was the only way to stop you from handing me to the Akatsuki!"

Far from being intimidated, Naruto chuckled, his smile becoming wider, as he rubbed the back of his head. "Haha, yeah, I can't believe you fell for my bluff," Naruto laughed.

The Nine Tails was taken aback. "... what did you say?"

"I was really desperate to save Gaara, and I had nothing to bargain with you, and threatening you with that was the only thing I could come up with," Naruto happily confessed. "I mean, I know I'm not the brightest mind around, but even I know that letting Akatsuki getting their hands on you would lead to nothing but trouble. Heh, now that I think about it, I shouldn't have said that. Next time you know I'll be bluffing."

" What would have you done had not I bought your bluff?" the Kyubi asked, sounding sincerely curious, rather than anger for being duped.

"Truth be told, I have no idea," Naruto admitted again. "Though I don't like to think about that. I managed to save Gaara after all."

" Is there anything else you want? Or you came to disturb my rest just to show me your pointless gratitude?" the Fox asked.

"Actually, yeah, there's something I want to talk about," Naruto replied. A loud groan came from the Fox, which Naruto promptly ignored. "That creepy statue used to extract and seal Tailed Beasts... I remember the way you reacted when I saw it for the first time. You know what is it, right?"

The Nine Tails remained oddly silent.

"I'll take your silence as a yes," Naruto continued. "Why don't you tell me what is that thing?"

" Such knowledge won't do you any good," the Nine Tails replied.

"It will, at least if you want me to prevent you being sealed there. Why do you fear so much being sealed inside that statue? Is any worse then being sealed inside me?" Naruto asked.

The Fox grumbled. "To put it into terms your feeble human mind can understand, imagine if somebody tried to shove you back into your mother's womb."

"EWWWWW, GROSS!" Naruto whined, as his face formed a grimace. "No wonder you don't want to be sealed there! Hey, wait a second... is that statue your mother or something like that?"

" In a way, yes. But it's much more complicated than that," was the Fox's answer.

"Then tell me," Naruto said, earning a cold stare from his tenant. He crossed his arms, and stared back at him as he put the best serious face he could. "I'm not going to leave until you do. You should already know how stubborn I can be."

Naruto earned another annoyed groan from the Fox.

" I'd take ages to explain you all the details, so I'll give you an abridged version," The Nine Tails conceded. "Long time ago, before my kind existed, there was a being called the Ten Tails. It was a beast of infinite power that ravaged the land, causing misery and destruction. Until one day, a very powerful man managed to defeat that beast by draining it of its chakra. He then split the chakra into nine entities and gave them form and a mind of their own. That's how my siblings and I were born.

" He then proceeded to seal away the body of the beast, now a lifeless husk, since if the chakra of the Ten Tails was returned to its body, that monster would be reborn again, and would cause the end of the world."

The Fox's tale finished, Naruto took a moment to think about what he just learned. If what he said was true, then it was a discovery of epic proportions, since nobody really knew where Tailed Beasts came from. It also painted the Akatsuki under an even darker shade, since at first, Naruto thought that they merely wanted the Tailed Beasts to use their power for their own means. But if they were trying to revive such an apocalyptic beast...

"Whoa, that was... amazing," Naruto admitted. "So in that way that statue IS your mother. But I also have several questions! If that powerful man managed to seal the statue, how the Akatsuki obtained it then? And who was that man to begin with?"

" To answer your first question, in order to unseal the statue, one must possess the same Bloodline Limit as the man who sealed it: the Rinnegan, the most powerful of all Bloodlines," the Kyubi explained. "As for the man himself, you humans know him as the Sage of the Six Paths."

Naruto's amazement vanished, being replaced by sour skepticism. He raised an eyebrow, as he crossed his arms again. "Yeah. The Sage of the Six Paths. Really?"

Unsurprisingly, the Fox took offense to Naruto's reaction. "You don't believe me? Hmph, fine then! But don't go asking me questions if you don't like the answers!"

"It's not that I don't want to believe you but... the Sage of the Six Paths? Everybody knows that's just a myth of ancient times," Naruto replied, trying not to sound disrespectful.

" And what do YOU know about ancient times, human child?"
The Fox snapped back. "Now, if I sated your inane curiosity, go bother somebody else."

Deciding that it was better not to press the Kyubi any further and take what this conversation had revealed, Naruto exited the mindscape where the Tailed Beast was sealed. When he opened his eyes again, he was back in Suna. Albeit truth be told, he never left that place to begin with. At least, his body didn't.

"Naruto-kun? What are you doing here by yourself?" Hinata's voice asked from behind. "Didn't you enjoy the party?"

Naruto turned around, and smiled at his girlfriend. "Oh, no, none of that. The party was fine."

"But there's something that bothers you, right?" Hinata guessed, holding her hands above her chest.

Naruto chuckled. "You know me so well."

The Hyuga heiress took a step forward, and put on her most sincere smile. "If there's something that bothers you, you can always talk with me, you know that?"

"I know," Naruto nodded. "Remember the barrier seal Akatsuki used to protect their hideout?"

"It was Uzumaki fuinjutsu, right?" Hinata asked, recalling the events from the previous day. "Are you worried about how much Uzumaki knowledge Akatsuki has in their power?"

"At first yes, but then I realized of something. Something far worse," Naruto replied, sounding ominous. "Keeping that barrier seal active consumes immense amounts of chakra. Even a Kage would have a hard time keeping it active for more than an hour or so. Only a member of my clan would have enough chakra capacity to keep it active for so long."

"Naruto-kun, are you implying...?"

"Yes. I believe one of the Akatsuki is an Uzumaki."

...

Amegakure

From the top of a tall skyscraper, two figures contemplated the city below them, as rain constantly poured. A tall man with spiky orange hair, rippled purple eyes, and face covered in facial piercings, and a woman with blue hair styled in a bun, with two bangs framing her face, and light brown eyes. The two of them were wearing Akatsuki cloaks.

"Three of the Tailed Beasts have been successfully captured. One third of our job is now complete," the man said in a deep voice. "The path to true peace lies even closer."

"Yes, but things will get more difficult from now onwards, Pain," the woman told her partner. "Konoha and Suna will do their best to hinder our mission. They wouldn't be above warning other villages against us."

"You worry too much, Konan," Pain replied. "The power the Great Villages currently have pales in comparison to Akatsuki."

"While true, it would be wise not to grow confident. Remember that Konoha and Suna did manage to interrupt the sealing ritual. It was luck that we were almost finished," Konan reminded him. "Not to mention Sasori's loss. Pain, no Akatsuki member ever fell in battle before."

"Do not worry. I'll take measures such thing won't happen again," Pain assured her. "As for Sasori, Obito and Zetsu are in the way of recruiting an even more powerful replacement."

"More powerful than Sasori? I'm already curious to meet this person," Konan admitted.

"While they do that, we need to continue with our plan, and decide which jinchuriki should we target next," Pain said.

"Kakuzu requested he and Hidan to go and capture the jinchuriki of the Seven Tails, currently residing in Taki," Konan informed him. "He has a plan that will take time, but it will not only ensure the jinchuriki, but will also notably increase Akatsuki's resources."

"And unsurprising claim, coming from kakuzu. Wanting to go after his old village, while at the same time finding a way to make profit. Tell him he has my permission to proceed as he sees fit. But also tell him not to take much time with preparations," Pain decided.

"It will be done," Konan replied, before she crumbled into a mass of papers, which bend themselves into origami butterflies, and flew away.

...

Somewhere in the Moon

When Obito and Zetsu emerged from the former's spiraling portal, they found themselves in a large, spacious room, tastefully decorated with all manner of expensive looking ornaments and pieces of art. It looked like the place of residence of a particularly wealthy or powerful Feudal Lord.

Suddenly, the two Akatsuki were surrounded by masked guards wearing dark robes. Spheres of golden chakra appeared in the hands of those guards, no doubt ninjutsu attacks ready to be fired.

"I don't know who you are, nor how you managed to get here," a soft, but firm, young sounding voice said, as a white haired man wearing a long, white robe walked towards them. "Choose your words carefully, for they may be your last."

Obito smirked, his confidence not wavering one bit. "Hello. My name is Obito Uchiha. This is my associate, Zetsu. And you're Toneri Otsutsuki, am I right?"

"You seem to know an awful lot about me. Tell me a reason as for why I shouldn't kill you two right here, and right now," Toneri replied.

"Let's say I made here to make a deal," Obito said, with a wide smirk. "One you won't be able to say 'no' to." His left Sharingan, the one it used to belong to Shisui, changed its shape into a four bladed shuriken. "Literally."

...

Undisclosed Location

A woman with long black hair and green eyes, who was wearing a long white robe, alongside other religious-looking apparels, contemplated the night sky. More specifically, the full moon.

"You sensed it, right, Nori?" a voice said behind her back.

The woman named Mori turned around, and saw a broad-shouldered man in his late fifties, with short brown hair and a thick beard of the same color. He was also wearing a similar religious garment as her.

"Yes, father. The moment we've been preparing for all our lives is about to come," Nori replied.

"You know what you have to do, then," the man said, his tone denoting urgency.

"Yes. I need to go to Konoha... and bring the Byakugan Princess here."

Author's Note: And thus, one of my least liked sagas from Shippuden comes to an end. I did try my best to make it better, and I like to think that I managed to do it to some extent. I mean, a lot of reviews told me how they liked that I had Kankuro and Temari more involved in the arc, so there's that at the very least. And even if the ending is the same (Gaara survives, the Akatsuki gets Shukaku) I like to think the different execution mattered.

And here we had another talk with the Kyubi, which I love to write. On this occasion, Naruto learns quite a few things, such as one of the Akatsuki being an Uzumaki, the origins of the Kyubi, the Demonic Statue, the Rinnegan and the Sage of the Six Paths. Such information will surely come in handy in the future.

I'm pretty sure that the last few scenes, which set up the next two arcs, left you yearning for more. And since Sasuke didn't defect to Orochimaru this time around, the Sasuke and Sai arc won't happen (and good riddance, since in my opinion, it's easily the worst arc of not just Shippuden, but I'd say the entire series. Albeit the Ultimate Ninja Storm 2 game made an admirable effort trying to fix it), so I had to come up with something to fill that void. And while my original arcs tend to have worse reception than straight adaptations, I'm very confident all of you will enjoy the Byakugan Princess Arc ;)

In the meantime, tell me what you think about this chapter, the arc that it capped off, and your expectations for the next one in a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Byakugan Princess, Part I

Author's Note: And with this chapter, this story breaks the 500K words mark! Whohoo!

Something I want to point out: many reviewers asked how Obito put Toneri under a genjutsu if he had no eyes. The answer is simple: he used Kotoamatsukami, which doesn't need to make eye contact in order to work (remember that Danzo used it with his eye bandaged). With that said, I'm not going to address this point again.

So, here we being an arc that I've been wanting to write since pretty much the beginning of this story. Man, time sure flies, doesn't it? Anyway, I hope you enjoy reading it as much as I did writing it:

Chapter 56

The Byakugan Princess, Part I

or

When you find yourself part of an ancient conspiracy

Naruto was in the Hokage's office. The only other people in the room besides him and his adoptive father were Tsunade and Shizune. After giving him the report on the Suna mission, Naruto requested to talk with him, Tsunade and Shizune about certain developments that happened during the mission. Most importantly, the fact that Orochimaru had somehow cloned Hagane and Kaida.

"I can't believe that monster would go such lengths for mere Bloodline Limits," Shizune commented in disgust.

"Sadly, I can. Orochimaru always wanted our children the moment knowledge of their abilities reached his ears, and if he couldn't have the originals, he'll get replacements," Jiraiya said in subdued anger.

"Mom?" Naruto asked Tsunade, who had been silent the whole conversation.

Tsunade didn't say anything, and merely looked at the village outside the window. Her breathing was rather heavy. Naruto felt compelled to crack a quip on how he was expecting her to trash the whole office in a fit of righteous anger upon hearing her former teammate's actions, but she remained surprisingly calm.

"If Orochimaru send our kids' clones against you is because he doesn't care if we know about them. And in my experience, that's never a good sign," Jiraiya stated, crossing his fingers under his chin. "Did they have cursed seals?"

"No. Well, they may have, but if they did, they didn't use them. And given that we ended up winning, the fact that they choose retreat over using them points towards not having it," Naruto reasoned.

"Of course. According to Anko, there's only a ten percent chance of surviving the sealing process. He probably doesn't want to risk them," Shizune said.

"That doesn't remove the possibility of branding them in the future," Jiraiya added.

"Indeed. But what we should ask ourselves is what are we going to do with them," Shizune pointed out. An air of uneasiness set upon the office. "I know they're clones of your children, but they're also Orochimaru's minions. How should we... deal with them?"

"Save them," Tsunade said, turning around, a determined fire burning in her eyes. "Those kids shouldn't be judged by the crimes of their creator. In fact, I'm sure they aren't even aware of their origins. Maybe we can use that to convince them to come to our side."

"Easier said than done," Shizune said with a sigh. "Orochimaru conditions his servants into being devoted to him with an inhuman zeal."

"Yes, but Orochimaru shows little to no care about his minions either. Plus we do have a history of turning our enemies to our side, if Zabuza and the Sound Genin are any indication. And once they're safe..." Tsunade pointed out. Her eyes then narrowed. "... I'll beat the life out of that pale skinned bastard with my own bare hands."

"That's if I don't beat you to it first," Jiraiya interceded, before forcing himself to calm down. "Well, now that we know this, we can plan for the next time Orochimaru sends those clones against us," Jiraiya said, closing the discussion. "Is there anything else you'd want to tell us, Naruto?"

"Actually, yes. During the mission, I talked with the Kyubi," Naruto stated.

Tsunade and Shizune's eyes snapped open, but they didn't say anything. He then explained what the Kyubi told him, about the statue, the Sage of the Six Paths, the Rinnegan and one of the Akatsuki possessing it, as well as the possibility about an Uzumaki among them.

"Those are indeed troubling news," Jiraiya said. "But the more information we know about the enemy, the better."

"Do you know about the Rinnegan, Jiraiya-sama?" Shizune asked.

"Not much. Rumors, legends, but nothing concrete. I'll put a few agents to investigate this issue. If there's nothing left to discuss, then you can go, Naruto," Jiraiya told him.

Naruto nodded, and walked out of the office, followed by Shizune, who said something about meeting her team for training. That only left Tsunade in the office.

"Jiraiya, you know about the Rinnegan," Tsunade pointed out.

"I do," he admitted.

"Then why you didn't say anything?" Tsunade asked, placing her hands on her hips.

"I... okay, I admit that I don't want to think that one of those kids ended up in Akatsuki," Jiraiya confessed. "Even if I'd be happy to know that they survived their clash with Hanzo..."

"I understand. You spent two years with those brats, it's normal that you feel a strong bond with them," Tsunade said, placing a comforting hand in his shoulder.

"While I'll try to remain unbiased, I don't want to do anything rash. I'll put somebody to do some research and see if Nagato is truly an Akatsuki," Jiraiya told her.

"Okay but... if the worst come to pass, try not to do anything foolish, okay?" Tsunade softly pleaded. "A lot of time has passed, and you don't know how much those kids have changed ever since."

Tsunade bent down, and gave Jiraiya a chaste kiss in the lips. And with that, the Slug Princess finally left the office, leaving Jiraiya alone.

...

A Month Later

Kurenai's Assault Squad were having dinner at Shushuya, the team's Jonin-sensei's favorite restaurant, to celebrate the successful completion of an A-Rank mission. The mood was cheerful so far.

A month has passed since Gaara's kidnapping, and during that time, Konoha didn't hear any news about Akatsuki. Even if they knew better than lowering their guard due their apparent lack of activity, they were indeed going to enjoy the reprieve as long as it lasted. Especially now that once again, Konoha hosted the Chunin Exams, and such topic was on everybody's mouths.

"I heard your little siblings managed to make it to the final round, right?" Kurenai asked Naruto and Hinata.

The couple nodded happily. "Yeah, did you really doubt it? Those kids are just as awesome as we are. I bet they will earn a promotion on their first try just like Hinata-hime and me."

"I heard that this time around, the finals will consist on team matches reather than individual ones," Haku pointed out.

"That's even better! The three of them form a really solid team. Just as good as us," Naruto continued his unabashed praising.

"It would have been interesting if we were able to fight in the finals as a team unit, instead of on our own," Hinata commented.

"Yeah. I'm sure you would have been of a lot of help in my fight against Sasuke Uchiha," Haku pointed out, remembering his fight against the black haired teen.

"Sasuke would had had his teammates to help him as well," Kurenai pointed out.

"Yes, but Naruto-kun and Hinata-san are much better fighters than Sakura-san and Karin-san. We could take the latter two easily, then triple team him," Haku explained.

"Any other teams of interest that made it to the finals?" Kurenai inquired.

"As far as I heard, the team with Old Man Hokage's grandson made it to the final as well. And so did Temari's Genin," Naruto recalled.

"Shikamaru-kun is really happy that he gets to see Temari-san every day. Of course, he will never admit it out loud," Hinata said with a giggle.

"Haha, yeah, sometimes wonder what can make him drop that 'everything is troublesome' attitude he has," Naruto added, laughing as well.

"Ah, thank goodness that we already passed the Chunin Exams ourselves, and even moved in rank past Chunin as well," Hinata mentioned. "I'm positive Haku-kun and myself will soon be promoted to Jonin as well."

"And we will be an all-Jonin squad!" Naruto cheered.

Kurenai nodded, and smiled. "Yes, you three certainly grew a lot since you left the Academy and were assigned under my watch. While I knew you three had a lot of potential, I never expected it to be so great. I can safely say that you no longer need me as your sensei anymore."

"Don't say that, Kurenai-sensei. You will always be an integral part of this team," Hinata softly protested.

"Yes. Besides, I still have much to learn regarding genjutsu if I ever want to get close to your level," Haku added.

Kurenai smiled sadly at them. "Unfortunately, you'll have to do without me for some time in the near future," the Genjutsu Mistress said, much to her students' shock, before her smile grew warmed. "Because I've been removed from active duty due maternity leave."

The reaction was instant, and the faces of Kurenai's students morphed into expressions of pure joy, and quickly proceeded to congratulate her.

"Thank you, guys. I'm really happy for this, even if it means not being part of this team anymore," the raven haired woman replied. She then turned at Naruto. "Naruto, since you're the one with the highest rank, you will be the new leader of the Assault Squad."

"Understood, Kurenai-sensei! I'll do my best to fill your spot as the team leader," Naruto enthusiastically replied.

"And I'll do my best as well to fill your spot as the genjutsu specialist," Haku added.

"Let's say we'll do our best to make up for the fact that we'll be one member short for some time," Hinata finished.

"I'm sure all of you will do an splendid job," Kurenai replied.

...

Meanwhile, as this conversation happened, a black haired girl with green eyes wearing what appeared to be religious robes crossed Konoha's gates. As with most newcomers, she was interrogated by the Chunin guarding the gate, namely Izumo and Kotetsu.

"Name?" Kotetsu asked.

"My name is Nori. I'm a priestess from the Land of Tea," the girl told the pair of Chunin, showing a rather pleasant disposition.

"What business brings you to Konoha, miss Nori?" Izumo asked.

"I wish to hire the services of one of your ninjas. Isn't that the reason most people come to a ninja village?" Nori asked, tilting her head a little.

"I guess... you have a point," Izumo awkwardly admitted. "In that case, you should head to the Hokage's Tower to conduct your business. Is a large, red building with the kanji of fire on the front. It can be seen from here."

Nori smiled at the duo. "Yes, I see it. Thank you very much," she said, before she walked into the village, and headed towards the Hokage's Tower.

...

Hokage's Office, Next Day

The Assault's Squad daily training was interrupted by an ANBU appearing there and telling them that the Hokage had an urgent mission for them. Not wasting any time, the now three ninja squad headed to the Hokage's Tower and see what it was.

Turns out, Naruto's team wasn't the only one Jiraiya had summoned for a mission, since Gai's Close Combat Squad was present as well. Haku and Tenten were obviously happy with the fact that they'd get to be on a mission together.

In front of both teams was the Hokage. His face reflected a serious and even tense expression, unlike his usual cheerful and laid back disposition. Whatever this mission was, it seemed it was important.

"Yesterday, we had a visit from a priestess from the Land of the Tea. She requested a team of ninjas to escort her back to her home," Jiraiya asked.

"Wait. You assembled two of the strongest teams Konoha has for a mere escort mission?" Neji asked, skeptical. "Who is this priestess?"

"Come on Neji, is very unyouthful to deny a request from help like that, especially from a holy woman!" Lee loudly protested.

"I'll get to that shortly. Said woman belongs to a group called Order of the Moon Acolytes," Jiraiya's eyes rested on Hinata. "Hinata, does that name sound familiar to you?"

The Hyuga heiress tilted her head in confusion. "No, it doesn't. Should it be familiar?"

"I was asking mostly because the priestess requested specifically you to be among the escort group. She even knew your name," Jiraiya casually said. Naturally, the effect of his words were instant.

"Wait, what?" a shocked Hinata asked.

"Now I demand to know who is this woman!" an angry Neji hollered.

"This situation seems rather suspicious to me. Taking this mission might mean putting Hinata-san in danger," Haku sagely noted.

"And I agree," Jiraiya said, taking a look at Gai's team.

"Wait, that's why you called us, right?" Neji said in realization. "We're Hinata-sama's escorts, just in case something happened to her."

"Exactly. It took me very little to realize that said woman is not interested in any kind of escort. She just wants to take Hinata somewhere else," Jiraiya explained.

"And you're going to let Hinata-hime walk into a potential trap?" Naruto asked, growing outraged. "What the hell, dad? Did you forget that somebody tried to kidnap Hinata when she was little?"

"I'm aware of the implications, Naruto," Jiraiya said, hoping to soothe his son. "That's why I assembled the best ninjas I have currently available to diminish the risk to a minimum."

"You haven't told us why you agreed to do this mission to begin with, Hokage-sama," Neji asked, crossing his arms while fixing a hard stare on the white haired man.

"Said woman claims to have important information regarding the Hyuga Clan, and Konoha as a whole. She shared some of that information with me as well, which is more than enough incentive to continue with the mission," Jiraiya replied. "She said she can't share the rest until Hinata sees what she has to show her."

"Understood, Hokage-sama," Hinata softly replied. "We'll do our best to complete this mission."

"In that case," Jiraiya snapped his fingers, and the door opened. "You should meet our client."

All seven ninjas turned around, and saw the girl in question, escorted by an ANBU. She let out a little gasp when her eyes rested on Hinata.

"Nori, these are the ninjas that will escort you to your home. Guys, this is Nori," Jiraiya introduced both parties.

"It's an honor to meet you," Nori softly said, making a bow. She then walked closer towards Hinata. "By any chance, are you Hinata Hyuga?"

Hinata nodded. "Yes, I am."

Nori's smile grew, and even let out a swoon. "Oh, you have no idea how long I've been waiting to meet you, Hinata-sama. The whole purpose of my Order leads up to this day."

Hinata laughed awkwardly, and took a step backwards. "Uh... nice to meet you too... I guess..." Hinata unsurely said.

"Now that everything's settled, when can we leave? Time is of essence," Nori insisted.

"Don't worry, it won't take long. Give them an hour so they can get prepared for the journey ahead," Jiraiya told her. "Gai, given that of all the Jonin you're the most veteran, you'll be the leader of this mission."

"Yosh! Thank you, Hokage-sama! You won't regret this decision! And if you do, I'll run five hundred laps around Konoha on my hands, with boulders tied to my ankles!" Gai enthusiastically shouted, as he gave Jiraiya a thumbs up.

"I'm starting to regret it," Jiraiya grumbled under his breath. "Anyway, you're dismissed. I'll be eagerly waiting your report once you get back."

...

A couple hours later, the seven ninjas and the priestess were already heading south, to the Land of the Tea, leaping from one tree branch to another as fast as they could. In order to be there as fast as possible, Gai offered to carry Nori on her back, while Lee carried her bag with the few supplies she had brought with her. They estimated that, at the current pace, they'd reach Nori's home in a little less than two days.

The end of the first day arrived before everybody realized it.

"Alright, the sun will set soon, so let us set as well!" Gai cheerfully ordered. "This seems to be a good place to set up a camp. Let's distribute the chores, shall we?"

Haku offered to look for firewood, while Tenten rather unsubtly volunteered to go with him. Fortunately for them, nobody disagreed. Gai, Lee and Naruto went to find some food in the forest, either berries, fruit, or by hunting. That left Neji, Hinata, and Nori to set up tents and the rest of the camp.

Neji had been waiting for an opportunity to approach Nori and talk with her. The Hyuga was a reserved clan to the point of paranoia, if the cursed seal on his forehead was any indication. Yet this Nori treated Hinata as if she was some sort of celebrity, known by all. As far as his experience went, whenever somebody showed disproportionate interest in a clan, it was never because of good intentions.

After he finished setting up the tents, his keen eyesight spotted Nori checking her sleeping bag. She walked towards her.

"Excuse me," Neji said, in his usual stoic tone. "May I have a word with you?"

Nori turned around, and smiled at the Hyuga. "Of course! Your name was Neji, right?" the Branch House member nodded. "What can I do for you, Neji-sama?"

Neji was taken a bit aback. After a lifetime of using that honorific to refer to other family members, it felt incredibly weird, almost to the point of sounding wrong, that somebody else used it with him, to the point that it took him a couple seconds to regain his bearings.

"Uh... listen, I'm going to be blunt. I noticed that, for somebody who isn't from the Land of Fire, much less Konoha, you seem to know quite a lot about Hinata-sama and the Hyuga clan," Neji pointed out. "I'm sure you'll understand my suspicion."

"Of course I do, Neji-sama. But I'm confident that such suspicion will turn into trust once the truth about the Hyuga Clan is revealed," Nori enigmatically said.

"Truth of the Hyuga Clan? What truth?" Neji asked, half annoyed, but half curious.

"Everything will be revealed at the appropriate time. More specifically, when we reach my home. It is not safe to speak of such things here. Who knows who may be listening," Nori replied.

"Your evasiveness isn't helping," Neji bluntly stated. "How do I know you're not taking us to a trap? It wouldn't be the first time somebody pretended to be a friend of us to kidnap Hinata-sama," Neji accused.

"You talk about that incident with Kumo, right?" Nori asked. Neji was a bit taken aback by her knowledge of that event, given that Konoha did their best to make sure it never reached the public ears. But given how much this girl knew, it wasn't that surprising. "Yes, that was the work of our enemies."

"So you made enemies with Kumo then?" Neji asked.

Nori shook her head. "No. I'm talking about somebody far worse than a single ninja village. Kumo were nothing but puppets of this enemy."

"And who is this enemy you speak about? Akatsuki?" Neji guessed, though he immediately tossed the idea aside. The Akatsuki were jinchuriki hunters, and were not interested in collecting Bloodline Limits. Well, one of the Akatsuki was, but as far as he knew, that wasn't the goal of the organization as a whole.

"Again, I'm sorry, but I can't tell you right now. It's too dangerous to talk about that here," Nori insisted. "But try to quell your frustration. Once we're in a safe place tomorrow, you'll learn everything."

Neji didn't look frustrated, but he didn't look relieved or satisfied either. "I see. In that case, I hope you don't mind if I don't take my eyes from you as long as this mission lasts."

"A sensible, and very understandable course of action, Neji-sama," Nori replied with a nod, before she smiled at him. "I'm going to prepare some tea. Do you mind helping me?"

"Not in the slightest," Neji agreed.

A little later, the two Hyugas and the priestess heard two sets of steps coming close to the campsite.

"We're back!" Tenten's happily announced as she and Haku returned from the forest. Both of them looked a bit red and sweaty, had messy hair and slightly disheveled clothes. It didn't take a genius to guess what the two of them have been doing.

Neji walked towards them, looking even more serious than usual.

"Where is the firewood?" Neji asked.

Haku tilted his head. "Firewood?"

"The firewood you were supposed to gather in order to start a fire," Neji clarified. "You know, in order to stay warm once night arrives and we can cook the food Gai-sensei, Lee and Naruto will bring back. That's it, unless the three of them decide to also have an impromptu three way makeout session and forget about their duties."

Tenten's face became even redder. "OH SHIT! I knew we were forgetting about something!"

She took Haku's hand and hurriedly dragged him back to the forest.

Neji then shuddered. "Gai-sensei, Lee and Naruto in a three way makeout... why I even came up with that? Now that image will never leave my brain..."

...

An hour later, everybody had returned to the campsite, and were enjoying the meal Gai, Lee and Naruto had brought. Haku and Tenten also brought some firewood as well. The group of seven ninjas and the one priestess sat around the campfire, and enjoyed their meals. The dinner then made way for some conversation.

"Hey guys, check it out this little thing I've been working on for the past months," Tenten excitedly said as she rummaged through her backpack, until she finally produced some small tool. "Here it is!"

"What is that?" Naruto asked.

Tenten answered by pressing a button, which made the tool to expand and develop into a finely crafted bow with no string. A set of seals inscribed across it started to glow with a blueish white light, and it produced a string made of chakra of the same color.

"Ta-daaaa! This is the chakra bow! A ranged weapon that needs no ammo, only your chakra to attack!" Tenten proudly explained. She stood up, tensed the string, and an arrow also made of pure chakra was automatically created. Releasing the string, the arrow softly flew until it crashed against a tree branch, producing a small chakra blast that cut that branch from the tree, falling to the ground below.

"Wow! That was such an amazing weapon, Tenten!" Lee praised.

"Indeed! As long as you have chakra, this weapon will always work! And you can put more or less chakra into the arrows to regulate their power," the odango haired girl explained.

"It's kinda the same idea behind my chakra sword, right?" Naruto asked.

"Yeah, I took your chakra sword as the base idea, though my intention was to make a ranged weapon," Tenten replied.

"Can I try it?" Haku asked his girlfriend.

Wordlessly, Tenten collapsed the bow and tossed it to her boyfriend. Haku unfolded and activated the bow, pulled the string, and generated an arrow made of chakra. The arrow then generated a frosty aura, and quickly turned into ice.

"It also works with elemental chakra," Haku pointed out, before returning the bow to Tenten.

"Of course it does! I thought of everything!" Tenten boasted. "So, if you guys want one, you only have to tell me!"

"I think that with my Byakugan, I can make a good use of such weapon," Hinata pointed out.

"It's a very useful tool. I'm interested in having one as well," Haku said.

Tenten then looked at Naruto and grinned. "What about you, Naruto? Do you want one so you don't feel left out? You guys can be the Archer Squad!" she asked, and everybody else laughed.

"I'd like to think that I stand out, thank you very much," Naruto replied, in a half joking self important tone, making everybody else to laugh harder. "But since we're talking about fitting with the rest of the team, maybe Neji and you could get a pair of nice green jumpsuits."

Everybody laughed, except Neji and Tenten this time around, who instead sulked, as their faces made a grimace.

"OH! That's a great suggestion, Naruto-kun!" Lee excitedly agreed, as he turned towards his sensei. "Gai-sensei, do you think that when we go back to Konoha we can get Neji and Tenten some green jumpsuits?"

"That won't be necessary, Lee..." Gai replied, prompting Neji and Tenten to sigh in relief. "... because I always carry several spares with me! Now we only need to find the right size!"

Naruto felt a massive killing intent focused on him coming from Neji and Tenten, though that didn't stop him from sharing a laugh with his friends.

...

While the group of eight chatted and laughed, they were unaware that there was a certain somebody spying on them. And since neither of them were sensors, they couldn't detect this presence. And said spy was feeding all this information to Akatsuki's newest member, who wasn't that far away from there.

"So, those Moon Acolytes are finally making their move," Toneri said to no one in particular. His lips curved into a small smirk. "Then it should be time to make my move as well. Byakugan Princess... you shall be mine."

...

The Next Day, Land of Tea

Once sunrise arrived, the group of eight continued with their journey towards Nori's home, which was completed without incidents. Or at least, that's what it appeared when they arrived to what appeared to be a large wall of rock, and the priestess started that they had arrived, much to their confusion.

"Are you sure it's here?" an skeptical Naruto asked.

"Let's ask somebody with a better eyesight," Nori cryptically replied, giggling a little. "Hinata-sama, Neji-sama, can you use your Byakugan and tell me what you see?"

The two Hyuga obliged, and activated their Bloodline Limits. Both of them let out a soft gasp in unison.

"What did you see?" Haku asked.

"There's a door in there!" Hinata pointed out. "It's both made and protected by innumerable chakra seals invisible to the eye."

"Exactly. We might not be ninja, but we still know how to use chakra," Nori added, as she placed a hand on the wall, and send a pulse of chakra into it.

The effect was instant. The earth started to shake, as a large rectangular section of the stone wall sunk down, leaving a large entrance hole of the same shape. Everybody could see a path that led inside, illuminated by torches on both sides.

"Hurry, let's get there. Once we get inside, we'll be safe, and all your questions will be answered," Nori urged as she quickly entered in, followed by the eight ninjas.

Once all of them were inside, the section of the stone wall rose again, sealing the entrance with a loud slam, inevitably making some of the Konoha ninja felt that they've walked into a trap, though that may have been their instincts. Nori walked forward, with the rest of the group following her. She certainly looked far more relaxed, as if she took a weight off of her shoulders.

"What is this place, Nori-san?" Gai asked the priestess.

"Our home," Nori replied. "Our shrine. Our refuge. At least, until now."

They eventually left the tunnel, which ended in a massive underground chamber, which looked like nothing the Konoha ninjas had seen. It had the appearance of a massive temple, complete with pillars, statues, smaller temples and shrines, and other religious ornaments. There were a few waterfalls that fed a river that crossed the chamber. It was illuminated by beams of light that came from holes in the chamber ceiling. There were multiple people dressed in the same white robes as Nori, who took no time to notice the newcomers.

"Hey, look, Nori is back!" a man said.

"Yes, it's Nori!" a woman replied.

"Did you find her, Nori?" a second man asked.

"Yes, my brethren, I have returned. But that's not important," Nori then grabbed Hinata by the wrist and pulled her forward. "Because I found her! The Byakugan Princess is finally with us!"

The chamber was filled by cheers and shouts of joy and jubilation, many repeating "Byakugan Princess" over and over. Hinata really didn't know what to make out of that. Nori seemed to catch the Hyuga's confusion.

"Don't worry, everything will become clearer once you meet my father. He's the leader of our order, and the one with all the answers," Nori assured. "He'll explain everything. Now follow me."

Nori took the group of Konoha ninjas to the temple in the opposite extreme of the underground cavern, which was also the biggest. On their way there, they noticed something odd about the statues scattered around the area, which depicted a man and a woman. The man had horns, and the woman had four arms. They wondered what kind of deities these religious people worshipped.

When they entered the temple, a strong smell of incense invaded their noses. The temple, just as finely decorated as the rest of the place, was empty, save for a single burly man with a beard and a moustache that was sitting on a table-like altar, reading from a large tome, under the light of several candles. He took no time to notice the newcomers, and recognize Nori.

"Ah, Nori, welcome back. It pleases me to see you so soon, and completely unharmed," the man got up, and walked to hug his daughter. After that, he turned towards the Konoha ninja, and made a head bow. "Welcome to our humble home, Konoha ninjas. My name is Takuya, High Priest of the Order of the Moon Acolytes."

Everybody else introduced themselves in return as well. Unfortunately, the atmosphere wasn't as cordial as Takuya would have hoped.

"I never heard of such group," Neji suspiciously said.

"That's because we didn't want to be heard of," Takuya sagely replied. "We were created with a single purpose, which is to complete a sacred mission. Unfortunately, we do have powerful enemies that don't wish us to succeed in our endeavor."

"But they're about to fail. Now that the Byakugan Princess is here, our mission shall be completed," Nori added, her voice overflowed with hope.

"Okay, I think it's time for some answers," Naruto impatiently demanded, as he took a step forward. "You keep calling Hinata-hime

'Byakugan Princess' and refer to her as if she's some sort of world savior. What's with that?"

"Fear not, your worries and doubts shall be elucidated," Takuya assured. "However, our history is a really long one. You might want to take a seat," Takuya said with a hand motion. All the Konoha ninja and Nori sat on the floor around him. "But first of all, answer me this questions: what do you know about the Sage of the Six Paths?"

"They said he was the very first man who ever used chakra, and that taught humankind how to do it as well," Tenten replied.

"But that's just an old myth. There are no historical records that such figure ever existed," Neji pointed out.

In the past, Naruto would have been quick to agree with Neji. But now, he wasn't so sure. It would be better to remain silent and listen before opening his mouth, or even forming an opinion.

" Wow, that's SO unlike me," Naruto thought, repressing a chuckle.

"Part of the reason of the very existence of this order has been to preserve the knowledge of ancient times. Work we wouldn't be able to do if we didn't keep such secrecy," Nori interceded. "Now father, if you may tell our guests what they need to know..."

"I was about to do that," Takuya replied, before clearing his throat. "The story of ninjutsu begins with a woman. A woman that came from a faraway land. Some even said that her home was in the sky beyond the stars. Though that's irrelevant for this tale. Her name was Kaguya Otsutsuki, and she was the first Byakugan user."

Naturally, Neji and Hinata were taken aback, but decided to remain silent for the time being.

"Nobody knows why she came to this planet or what she wanted, though she claimed that she came to bring peace to the world. To do so, she sought to consume the fruit of a powerful tree called the Shinju, or Divine Tree. That fruit only appeared once every thousand years, and whoever ate from it, it would gain the power of a god. Something she managed to achieve, and using her newfound divine powers, she put an end to all wars, and instated world peace. Due this, Kaguya ended up being worshipped as a goddess.

"It was known that Kaguya was pregnant when she ate the Divine Fruit -the name of her lover and father of her children was sadly lost to history, but beyond that he isn't relevant to this story either-, and she gave birth to two twin children, both boys, which she named Hagoromo and Hamura. The older, Hagoromo, would become the Sage of the Six Paths.

"At first glance, Kaguya's peaceful world looked like the kind of future we strive for. But the peace she created was artificial. Conflicts still existed, she simply shut them down by force rather than trying to properly solve them. People grew more and more unhappy, and they started to see Kagura as what she really was: a tyrant with far too much power. People went from worshipping her as if she was a goddess, to fearing her like a demon.

"Hagoromo and Hamura inherited their mother's vast power. Hamura had a Byakugan, just like her, while Hagoromo developed a doujutsu known as the Rinnegan. Despite their power, the brothers tried to solve conflicts in a peaceful way, and they did try to convince their mother to drop her oppressive ways, but Kaguya refused to do so. Having no other options, the brothers engaged Kaguya in combat. Kaguya found her sons way stronger than she thought, and in order to have a chance at beating them, she merged with the still existing Divine Tree, and became an abomination as horrifying as powerful: a beast named the Ten Tails."

"Ten Tails?" a startled Naruto asked. Takuya and Nori realized it wasn't the first time he heard that.

"Is it related to the other Tailed Beasts? I thought then one with the most tails was the Fox," Tenten pointed out.

"Yes, it is. I'll explain in a second, but first you need to let me finish," Takuya replied.

"Sorry, Takuya-san. Please, continue," Lee politely asked.

Takuya nodded as well. "Anyway, the battle that ensued was of such scale, is pretty much impossible to imagine, to the point that it pretty much changed the face of the planet forever. Think of the Valley of the End, only applied to the whole world.

"After literal months of battle, the brothers reached a grim conclusion: the Ten Tails was functionally immortal, and no matter how much damage they did, it would never die. The only way to end the battle was to incapacitate it. To do so, they drained the Ten Tails of its chakra, and sealed it inside Hagoromo. Then, using a powerful jutsu, they sealed the Ten Tails' empty husk inside the Moon.

"The battle over, the brothers planned how to rebuild the world and heal it from the damage their mother had caused. Hagoromo stayed on Earth, while Hamura and his followers traveled to the Moon, in order to watch over what it used to be their mother, as well as other possible threats from beyond the stars.

"Despite their power, Hagoromo and Hamura considered themselves human, and despite having the means to prolong their lives indefinitely to live forever, they choose instead to age and die like humans. That means that something had to be done with the Ten Tail's Chakra Hagoromo sealed inside him. So, when Hagoromo's life was about to reach its natural end, he released the Ten Tails' chakra, split it in nine parts, gave them shape and a mind of their own, and became the Tailed Beasts you know today."

"That's exactly what the Nine Tails told me!" Naruto excitedly interrupted.

Naturally, all eyes were drawn to him.

"Naruto, you shouldn't reveal so casually your status as a jinchuriki," Gai said in a jarringly serious and chiding tone.

"S-Sorry," Naruto stammered.

"Naruto-san's status as a jinchuriki does not matter to us. But it seems that it matters for this situation in particular," Nori calmly reassured, before her eyes rested on the blond. "You said the Nine Tails told you this story before?"

"Yeah... well, a very summarized version. He didn't told me the name of the Sage of the Six Paths or that Kaguya lady. But he did told me about the Ten Tails," Naruto explained. "Also, I think the Ten Tails' lifeless husk might not be sealed inside the Moon anymore."

Takuya and Nori paled. "What do you mean by that? Elaborate, boy." the latter requested.

"The Akatsuki can summon it. It's called the Demonic Statue of the Outer Path. They use it to seal the Tailed Beasts they capture there," Naruto told them.

"What? Naruto-kun, if you knew that, why didn't you tell us about it?" Hinata asked, sounding almost hurt.

"Yes. Any information regarding Akatsuki should always be shared," Neji insisted.

"Sorry again! The source wasn't exactly the most believable!" Naruto defensively replied. "But it's not that I kept it a secret from everybody! Mom and Dad know too!"

The two priests paled even further. "But if they're doing that... no! They can't be trying to revive the Ten Tails! Nobody would be stupid enough to do that!"

"Father, we're obviate something. Only a bearer of the Rinnegan can unseal the Demonic Statue, and there hasn't been one since the Sage himself. Clearly, somebody in this Akatsuki group has one."

"Nonsense! If a second Rinnegan bearer existed, we would know it!" Takuya protested.

"While I don't want to suggest anything about your ability to gather information, evidence suggest otherwise," Lee argued, trying to sound as polite as possible.

"In that case, it's a good thing the Byakugan Princess is here. We're going to need her power in order to counter this threat," Takuya replied, sweating a little.

"My power? I help as much as I can, but what can I do on my own against Akatsuki? Especially against somebody with a Rinnegan?" Hinata asked.

"You'll know soon enough. Father, resume the tale, please," Nori requested.

Takuya nodded, and cleared his throat again. "Before we continue, I think it's important to establish the source of Kaguya, Hagoromo and Hamura's power. By eating the fruit of the Shinju, Kaguya's chakra turned into we call Divine Chakra, or Six Paths Chakra. A kind of Chakra way more powerful than normal human chakra. Naturally, her sons inherited said kind of chakra as well."

"So that's why the Sage is of the 'Six Paths', right?" Haku ventured to guess.

Takuya nodded. "Exactly. Said chakra is what allowed Hagoromo to develop his Rinnegan, as well as plenty of other powers we normal humans can only dream of. Now, our tale here diverges into two branches. Hagoromo's life on Earth, and Hamura's life on the Moon. I'll begin with the former.

"Hagoromo tasked himself with the quest of bringing peace to the world. To do so, he created the Ninshu, a set of religious and philosophical beliefs whose goal was to use chakra to bring humanity together and give them a better understanding of each other, which would lead to eventual peace. However, he knew that it would take generations for such thing to happen, and since he chose to live and die like a human, he would never live to see this.

"Hagoromo, however, had two sons, and he had to chose one of them to carry on his legacy once his life came to an end. His older son, Indra, inherited the Sage's Yin Half of the Six Paths Chakra. Said half allowed him to develop the Sharingan, and he's indeed, the very first Sharingan user, and the ancestor of the Uchiha Clan," Takuya explained.

"Whoa! Do the current Uchihis know this?" Naruto asked in shock. "I mean, they're pretty much direct descendants of the Sage of the Six Paths!"

Takuya just shrugged. "I don't know, more than likely not. Now, pay attention young Uzumaki, since this part will be of interest to you. The younger son, Asura, inherited the Sage's Yang Half of the Six Paths Chakra. Said half allowed him to develop Wood Release, and he's the progenitor of the Senju and Uzumaki clans."

"WHOA!" Naruto echoed, this time even louder. He sounded really giddy. "So does this mean that I'M a descendant of the Sage too! And mom, and Kaida and Hagane!"

"Yes you are. Though I doubt very few people will take those claims seriously, as valid as they are," Takuya replied, rolling his eyes a little. "May I continue?"

"Yeah, sorry," Naruto sheepishly replied.

"The older son, Indra, believed that the key to peace was power. Somebody, or a group of people, that should wield power in order to stop conflicts and punish those who start them. The younger son, Asura, believed that the key to peace was through love and mutual understanding. As you can see, Indra's beliefs were a parallel of Kaguya's failed system, while Asura's embodied the cores of Ninshu. Naturally, Hagoromo chose Asura as his successor.

"However, such choice didn't come without repercussions. Hagoromo thought that Indra would accept his decision, and didn't foresee how displeased he was. Feeling he was claiming his birthright, Indra attacked Asura with the intent to kill him. That would be the beginning of a blood feud that would last generations, since, as Indra failed to kill Asura and Hagoromo, he promised that his descendants would carry his hatred, and would never stop until Hagoromo and Asura's legacy was a thing of the past.

"That's what we called the Uchiha's Curse of Hatred, which had and will lead them to a quest for power, and the extermination of those who are descended from the younger brother, Asura."

The mind of the Konoha ninjas collectively traveled back to the night the Uchihis pulled their coup d'etat on the village. Was this the result of Indra's curse, or it was a mere coincidence? So far, these revelations lend some credence to the former.

Hinata raised her hand. "Uh, excuse me... you said it was the Ying Half of the Six Paths Chakra what causes the Sharingan to awaken?"

"Yes. The Yin half of the chakra is the one tied to the emotions and thoughts. So, when an Uchiha feels intense emotions, it causes the Yin Chakra to strongly react, and it manifests in the Sharingan. When an Uchiha experiences an even more intense emotion, it causes it to evolve even further into the Mangekyo Sharingan. Are you aware of its existence?" Takuya asked. All of them nodded. "With the Senju, it's a similar process. Yang Chakra is the one tied to the body, but unlike the Uchihis, a Senju or an Uzumaki won't be able to use Wood Release unless they're born with an exceptionally powerful chakra, such as the case of Hashirama Senju."

"Wait, what's so special about Wood Release? I thought it was just an elemental combination just my own Ice Release," Haku asked.

"It might be at first glance," it was Nori who replied. "But becomes clearer when you think about it. Tell me, Haku-san, what's the origin of the Six Paths Chakra?"

"The Divine Tree," Haku automatically replied, before the realization dawned upon him. "Wait, don't tell me..."

"Yes. Wood Release isn't just summoning a bunch of trees. You're channeling the raw power of the Shinju itself. That's why it has the ability to bind and control the Tailed Beasts," Nori explained.

"I have a question," Tenten asked. "So... what would happen if an Uchiha and a Senju or Uzumaki had a child together? That child would have both the Yin and Yang halves of the Six Paths Chakra, right?"

Takuya nodded. "Exactly. Albeit the virulent hatred both clans had for each other prevented from such thing to while the kid would be powerful, the parents should also be strong in their respective halves of the Six Paths Chakra for the resulting child to reach its full potential. And in that case, the kid should be able to awaken the ultimate from the Sharingan: the Rinnegan itself."

The revelation led to another silence, as the Konoha ninjas pondered those words. Naruto's thoughts, however, were leading him to a grim conclusion: he suspected that one of the Akatsuki might be an Uzumaki, and now had the confirmation that one of the Akatsuki also possesses the Rinnegan. Now, he was told that a powerful Uzumaki has the potential to develop the Rinnegan if they also have strong Uchiha ascendancy. How did this happen?

Nori's eyes rested on Hinata. "Now that you have understanding of the working of Six Paths Chakra, you'll understand better your role as the Byakugan Princess. Father, tell them about Hamura-sama."

Takuya nodded. "Hamura and his many followers traveled to the Moon. There, they built a small civilization, whose purpose was to watch over the Demonic Statue of the Outer Path, preserve the historic knowledge of Kaguya and the Otsutsuki Clan, and watch for more threats from beyond the stars, like Kaguya herself.

"Like his brother, Hamura had Six Paths Chakra, and this allowed him to manifest a higher form of the Byakugan: the Tenseigan."

"Wait, what? The Byakugan also has an evolution?" Neji asked, sounding visibly agitated, a far cry from his usual stoicism. "How is that our clan isn't aware of such a thing!?"

"Such knowledge had to be kept a secret for the safety of your clan, until the time was right. If you let me finish my story, I'm sure you'll understand," Takuya replied, a little annoyed at the constant interruptions. "Like his brother, Hamura also had two children, though they were girls: his eldest was named Kalika, and the youngest was named Shiva. Like Indra an Asura, Kalika and Shiva inherited the Yin and Yang halves of Hamura's Six Paths Chakra respectively. "

"That means that only Kalika developed a Byakugan, right?" Hinata guessed.

Nori shook her head. "No. The Sharingan was a byproduct of the Six Paths Chakra. The Byakugan, however, is something Kaguya already possessed before eating the Divine Fruit, and both of Hamura's daughters inherited it. The Ying half enhanced Kailika's Byakugan, while the Yang half boosted the power of Shiva's chakra as a whole. Their descendants inherited these powers as well,. Why Hagoromo developed a Rinnegan instead of a Byakugan, is something we have no answer for."

"Exactly," Takuya agreed. "Like Hagoromo, when Hamura's life came to an end, he had to choose an heir to lead the Otsutsuki Clan. His choice was Kalika, and before dying, he transferred his chakra into her, allowing her to develop the Tenseigan, something Kalika herself also did with her own heir once her life came to an end. And thus, the Tenseigan became the symbol of the leader of the Otsutsuki Clan.

"Eventually, the Otsutsuki Clan was reorganized into two groups: the Main Family, composed by the leader and their close family members, which ruled over the clan, and the Branch Family, composed by pretty much everybody else, including Shiva's descendants. However, tensions began to rise, as every generation passed. As they kept watch over the Earth, they saw how Hagoromo's gift of Ninshu was perverted into Ninjutsu, and used as a weapon to wage countless wars. Branch Family members believed that they should do something about it, but the Main Family refused to interfere. But despite their superior numbers, they couldn't change anything since they couldn't match the power of the Tenseigan.

"And thus, the Branch Family started to work on a weapon that would equate the Tenseigan in power. Once said weapon was finished, they declared war on the Main Family, which were then crushed. The then current Otsutsuki Clan head was killed before he could pass on his Six Paths Chakra. The Branch House members, which possessed the Yang Half of the Six Paths Chakra, sought to obtain the Yin-enhanced Byakugan from the Main House, however, they found an obstacle they were unable to overcome: the Caged Bird Seal."

Once again, Neji was taken aback. "Wait a minute. The Main Family wore that seal?" he incredulously asked.

"Yes. Its original purpose was to make sure no Main House Byakugan ever fell into the Branch House, so they wouldn't be able to obtain the Tenseigan. That way, when a Main Family Member died, their Byakugan would be destroyed with them. And they made sure they weren't captured alive," Takuya explained. "Now, the ensuing war decimated both families, and the few Main House members managed to escape the Moon and reach Earth, with several Branch House members they took prisoner.

"Their original plan was to force said Branch House members to transfer their chakra into the current heir, so a new Tenseigan could be created, but in the end, they decided against it, since there was the problem of the Branch House family's superweapon, and thus, decided that a new beginning was in order.

"The Otsutsuki survivors realized that they had to cut all ties to their past if they hoped to escape the Branch House's purge, and have a chance to regroup. The first thing they did was to change their clan name to Hyuga, which as you know is a reference to the Sun, to hide their ties to the Moon. But that wouldn't be enough. The newer generations had to forget about their past entirely so they wouldn't become targets, but doing so would imply to destroy all the knowledge they had accumulated during the centuries. And thus, a solution was devised.

"The first Hyuga Clan head created the Order of the Moon Acolytes, which would safekeep all the Otsutsuki knowledge, as well as the Yang half of the Six Paths Chakra they managed to extract from the captured Branch House members. The Hyuga Clan would continue with the Main House/Branch house division, albeit with a single, but meaningful change: the Caged Bird seal would be carried by the branch house members, and it would be modified so Main House members could inflict great pain upon them with a single hand seal. That way, a new uprising could be averted.

"From that point onwards, the Hyuga became a nomadic clan that traveled the world, until less than a century ago, when they joined Konoha," Takuya said. "Let's say that made our mission to keep track of your clan considerably easier. As for ourselves, our secret order thrived in the shadows, waiting for the right moment until a new Tenseigan could be created again."

"And that moment... is now?" Hinata asked.

"Yes. We knew that the Otsutsuki clan that remained on the Moon slowly declined, and hoped that the clan would die out, and thus the problem would solve itself, and a new Tenseigan wouldn't be necessary," Nori told them. "But even if the Otsutsuki clan is reduced to a single member, said member is still in possession of that superweapon, and is planning to use it to finish what his ancestors started so long ago. And after the Hyuga are gone, the rest of the world will follow suit."

"And... you want Hinata-hime to be that bearer, right?" Naruto asked. He didn't need them to reply.

"But... why me? Why not Neji-niisan?" Hinata protested. "He's much stronger than I am. The Tenseigan would be better in his power than in mine."

"Neji-sama would be a fine candidate, but unfortunately, the new Caged Bird seal might be a danger for the process," Nori countered, shaking her head. She then turned at Neji with an apologetic expression. "Sorry, Neji-sama, but the stakes are too high to take such risk."

"It's okay. It's not a power I desired to begin with," Neji replied, letting out a weary sigh. While he spoke the truth, he was upset that that seal had robbed him of such chance to begin with. "Besides, it's obvious that Hinata-sama was fated to have this power bequeathed to her."

"If it's as urgent as you say, then I'll do it," Hinata sated, albeit some insecurity could be noticed in her voice. "What should I do?"

"Follow us," Takuya said as he stood up.

He went to the other end of the temple, and moved a candelabra to the side. It produced a clicking noise, instantly opening a secret door on that wall, leading to a dark and narrow passageway. Wordlessly, the high priest walked in, and everybody else followed in. After a few minutes, they finally emerged from the other side of the passageway, into a different chamber.

Like the main instance, there was a hole in the ceiling that allowed light to illuminate the place, even if the sun was no longer in the sky, the moon took its place. The only thing worth noting in the chamber was a rather large pool of water, which reflected the moonlight.

"What is this place?" Hinata asked.

"This is what we call the Moonwell," Nori began. "Before I explain any further, Hinata-sama, Neji-sama, would you kindly check the water with your Byakugan?"

The two Hyuga complied, and when they did so, Hinata gasped. Neji's reaction was far more subdued, but couldn't completely hide his surprise.

"The water is teeming with chakra!" Hinata noted.

Takuya nodded. "Yes. The Yang Half of the Six Paths chakra. Anyone who will enter this pool and does not possess at least either half of Six Paths chakra will have their own chakra drained and die. However, if somebody who does enter this pool, they will absorb the chakra of the water."

"Hinata-sama, you now must enter the pool. When your inherent Yin Half chakra mixes with the Yang Half of the pool, they will merge into Six Paths Chakra, and your Byakugan will become a Tenseigan," Nori instructed the Hyuga to do so.

"Wait, what if you're wrong? What if Hinata doesn't have that kind of chakra and she dies?" Naruto worriedly asked.

"I understand your doubts, Naruto-san, but you must understand the importance of this. If we weren't sure Hinata-sama wouldn't survive the process, we wouldn't have asked her to do it," Nori replied.

"Okay, I'll do it," Hinata stated, sounding now more determined. "If this power is necessary to face our future enemies, and I'm the only one who can bear it, I'll take it then."

"Good," Nori said in approval. "Neji-sama, watch over her with your Byakugan to make sure that the process happens as it should."

Neji nodded, and kept his Bloodline Limit activated.

Taking a deep breath, Hinata entered the pool. Contrary to what she was expecting, she didn't feel anything when her skin touched the water, other a bit of cold. She walked to the center of the pool, where the water covered up to her waist, and waited for something to happen.

"So... what do I do now?" Hinata asked.

But before anybody had the chance to answer, the pool's water surface erupted into a massive wall of purple flames, engulfing Hinata.

"AAAAAAAAAAHHHHHHHHH!" Hinata screamed from behind the fire.

"HINATA!" Naruto yelled, as he dashed towards the pool, before he was stopped by Takuya.

"NO! Don't do it! Not only will you interrupt the process, but you'll die!" Takuya urged, as he struggled to contain the blond.

"Get out of my way! Hinata needs my help!" Naruto said, before finally pushing the man aside.

"Naruto, stop," Neji calmly said.

"Huh?"

"Hinata-sama... she's in no danger," Neji stated, a bit in awe. "In fact... the chakra of the pool is being drained into her body."

"Finally. After so many generations... a new Sage of the Moon will be born," Nori said in awe and expectation.

...

Somewhere Beyond Time and Space

When Hinata opened her eyes, she was no longer in that underground pool illuminated by the moonlight. She found herself in the middle of what appeared to be an ancient palace.

"Hello, Byakugan Princess. I've been waiting for you," an elderly male voice said.

Hinata turned around, and saw an old man looking at her. Said old man was dressed in a white robe similar to that wore by Takuya. The man had pale white skin and light gray hair. Two small horns grew from his forehead. Eight black spheres the size of grapefruits floated behind his back on a circle.

But the man's trait that drew Hinata's attention the most were his eyes. His eyes were light blue, with dark blue pupils, and glowing white floral patterns that overlapped with each other that slowly spun around the pupil.

A realization of who this man was dawned upon her with the force of a giant sledgehammer.

"You... you are..." Hinata stammered in shock.

"My name is Hamura Otsutsuki. Nice to finally meet you, Hinata Hyuga," Hamura courtly greeted her. "There's much we need to talk about."

Author's Note: Dun dun duuuuuuuuuuun! Hinata met Hamura Otsutsuki and awakened the Tenseigan! What will happen now?

Like I said at the beginning, I've been dying to get to this arc. Mostly because Hinata finally gets the Tenseigan (seriously, I was so pissed when The Last didn't gave her one despite being imbued with Hamura's chakra).

You know, besides that part, I also enjoyed a lot writing all the backstory of the Otsutsuki. While the part with the Senju and the Uchiha was more or less the same, I had a lot of work to do with the Hyuga, since we know pretty much nothing about their origins. Not helped the fact that Kishimoto's mythology for the series makes almost no sense, so I had to make an herculean effort in order to create a backstory that was both compliant to canon, as well as being coherent. Hope I succeeded. So, what we have here is what TVTropes would call Fan Wank. And Fan Wank of an epic magnitude.

Regarding Kurenai, yeah, she said goodbye for the time being, but don't worry, she will be back to active duty once she delivers the baby. I'm not going to do the same thing as canon and have her retire being so young. And even then, I'll make sure to give her enough screentime during the breather chapters.

Funny thing, I was planning to introduce a replacement for Kurenai, which would be Yakumo Kurama, that girl from one of the last filler arcs pre-shippuden. However, I realized that introducing her in an arc that's mostly about Hinata and the Hyugas really didn't work, so I had to cut her out, and decided that while Kurenai is on maternity leave, the Assault Squad will stay a three man squad.

And this is the second chapter that isn't betaread due my usual beta being unavailable. So I think it's time to ask for a new beta. So if you're interested, send me a PM.

Anyway, I hope you enjoyed the beginning of this arc. Tell me your thoughts in a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Byakugan Princess, Part II

Author's Note: Damn, I wasn't expecting the last chapter to have such a good reception! 27 reviews the very same day I posted it, plus eleven more reviews during the next two weeks! Oh boy, this story is much closer than I thought to the 2000 review mark!

Also, a clarification regarding the last chapter I forgot to mention. You probably noticed that I didn't mention anything regarding reincarnation. That's because in this story, Naruto and Sasuke aren't Indra and Asura's reincarnations. I never liked that "plot twist", so away it goes. The Rinnegan in this story is awakened the way it was explained in the previous chapter.

Anyway, enjoy this chapter:

Chapter 57

The Byakugan Princess, Part II

or

The Princess' many suitors

...

"Hamura Otsutsuki..." Hinata dumbly repeated, as her brain was trying -and failing- to understand that she was talking not so much to a living legend as much as a living myth. If he was living to begin with.

"Yes. That, I am," Hamura replied. "And if you're able to talk to me is because you, my descendant managed to form Six Paths Chakra inside you. Must say, it feels nice being able to talk to somebody else again after so many centuries of quietude."

"Are you... are you alive?" Hinata fearfully asked.

"Hmmm... you could say that I am... but in the same way, I'm not," Hamura answered. Noticing Hinata's growing confusion, he added: "I know those two concepts are hard to reconcile. While my body stopped working a long time ago, my essence is permanently tied to the kind of chakra that now courses through your body."

"I... see," Hinata said, not fully understanding it, but deciding to let the issue go, since it wouldn't lead anywhere.

"Tell me, Hinata Hyuga, what do you know about the history of our common family?" Hamura asked.

Hinata nodded, and told Hamura an abridged version of what Nori and Takuya had told her and the others a few moments ago, culminating with the visit to the Moonwell.

"Good, that will save us an explanation," Hamura satisfyingly said. "Though you'd understand that, with this new power, you'll have to carry on several duties."

"I do, but I have a question," Hinata replied. "Why me? What did I do to deserve this power?"

Hamura smirked a little. "Why the self doubt? Do you find yourself unworthy of it?"

"I think there may be others more suited to wield this power than I am. While I came a long way, I'm... not strong," Hinata admitted. "Meaning... it is okay for me to just have this power handed to me? Aren't others who deserve it more than I do?"

"Hinata, tell me. If you had a great power, what would you do with it?" Hamura asked.

Hinata felt a bit slighted that Hamura had ignored her woe, but she decided it was for the best to answer his question.

"I... I'd do what I've always done. Use it to help others, to the best of my ability. I would also try to not get lost in that power either. After all, power corrupts, and absolute power corrupts absolutely," Hinata told him.

"Then there you have it. You're a good person, therefore this power will be good in your hands," Hamura casually said.

"You can't be serious," Hinata replied, a bit taken aback. "I'm sure a lot of people think the same way I do. And even then, I might be just saying this but deep down think otherwise. Power makes people change."

"Indeed. My brother and I were painfully aware of that," Hamura interjected. "We could have taken our mother's place, and rule over humanity forever. But her example was impossible to forget. That's why we tried to use our powers as little as possible, and try to live as any normal human would, even if we were far from normal. Our only regrets were not being able to do more with the time we had. Unfortunately, our descendants didn't live during her reign, and soon they forgot."

"Yes. Takuya-san and Nori-san told us how humanity used ninjutsu to wage wars," Hinata added. "And... still does."

Hamura nodded. "Yes, they did a good job preserving history and keeping secrets safe, didn't they? But even somebody as efficient as the Moon Acolytes make mistakes, and there were historic details that escaped them."

"Yes. They weren't aware of the current Rinnegan bearer," Hinata replied.

Hamura nodded. "Indeed. Feeling my brother's chakra among the living after such a long time was... surprising, to say the least. Sadly,

I can't say I'm happy with the event, given the way its current bearer is using my brother's power. But that wasn't what I was referring to."

"Huh?"

"The part in which the last Main House heir arrived to Earth, formed the Order of the Moon Acolytes and changed the Otsutsuki into the Hyuga clan... you see, this man did manage to awaken the Tenseigan, and was planning to use it to continue the fight against the Branch Family," Hamura revealed.

"He did?" Hinata asked in shock. "And... what changed his mind?"

"I did," Hamura told her. "Just like you're talking with me right now, I met this young man the moment he awakened the Tenseigan. I had to tell him that the bloodshed had to stop, that this wasn't the way. I don't like being authoritarian, but I was glad that my identity alone was all that I needed to convince him to drop the war."

"And what would have you do if he didn't obey you?" Hinata asked, a little curious.

"Nothing," Hamura flatly stated.

"Nothing?"

"What did you expect me to do? Like I told you before, I'm dead. My power no longer belongs to me," Hamura explained. "We old people may be able to guide and offer advice, but in the end, the younger generation must follow their own path and take their own decisions. All we can do is to have faith in that they will make the right choices."

"I see," Hinata said.

"I told him that the Otsutsuki Clan had to start anew. That's why he renamed it Hyuga. As for the Tenseigan, I told him that only somebody with a kind soul and an emphatic heart would be worthy of the Tenseigan. The Otsutsuki Clan was too blinded by their own power, and needed a better leader, somebody who would remind them of my brother's teachings. So I foretold a Byakugan Prince or Princess, that would lead the Otsutsuki Clan to a new golden age.

"And as I hoped, said princess was born fifteen years ago, Hinata. As the Moon Acolytes kept watch over your clan, they realized you were the person I was talking about, the one worthy enough to finally inherit my power after centuries of dormancy," Hamura explained. He stared at Hinata, and his rugged lips curved into a smile. "Was this explanation enough?"

"It was, Hamura-sama. Even if I can't help but feel overwhelmed at both this power and the responsibility it entails, I'll do my best to use it correctly," Hinata solemnly stated.

"That's what I was hoping to hear," Hamura replied. "Then I believe this conversation should reach its end. One last thing, though: some of my most misguided descendants also know about you. They will try to kill you or use you for their own purposes."

"Don't worry, Hamura-sama. I won't let such thing happen," Hinata assured the elderly man.

"One more thing," Hamura said, his expression growing worried. "There is another Tenseigan wielder. One who awakened it before you. I did try to convince him to follow the right path, but I was unsuccessful. I sensed a great darkness clouding his judgement."

"In that case, I'll make sure that person sees the light," Hinata stated.

"Good. Then go, my child. We shall see each other again in the future," Hamura finally said, before everything turned black.

...

When Hinata opened her eyes, she found herself back at the underground temple of the Moon Acolytes. The rest of the Konoha ninjas were looking at her.

"Oh good, she's waking up!" a relieved Tenten said.

Then, all of them gasped.

"Whoa..."

"Just look at that..."

"Is that...?"

"Huh...?" Hinata groaned, as she slowly sit up. Her head was throbbing, and was having a hard time thinking. Her encounter with Hamura Otsutsuki -which she was still trying to determine if it was a dream or not- occupied her mind. "How... how long have I've been out?"

"Quite a few hours. You got us quite worried," Naruto said, chuckling a little. "It's almost sunrise."

"Are you okay, Hinata-san?" Haku asked.

"A bit tired, but fine otherwise," Hinata replied, before noticing the looks of both concern and curiosity that her friends were shooting at her. "Why... why are you looking at me like that?"

Wordlessly, Tenten pulled out a compact mirror from a bag and handed it to Hinata.

"See it for yourself," Tenten cryptically said.

Hinata did so, and soon her reaction echoed the one made by her comrades. Gone was her lavender colored Byakugan, now replaced by the same eyes Hamura Otsutsuki had.

"Is this... the Tenseigan?" Hinata unsurely asked.

"It is," Takuya confirmed. "I have seen it on ancient pictures, but to see a real one myself, with my own very eyes... it feels unreal."

"How do you feel, Hinata-sama? Do you feel the power of the Tenseigan?" Nori excitedly asked.

"My head feels a bit lighter. But other than that, I feel just like always," the Hyuga admitted.

"It's okay. Your new powers may take some time to manifest, and you will take some time as well to master them," Nori reassured.

"That's why it's imperative to return to Konoha as soon as possible and begin your training."

"I already ordered our brothers and sisters to pack all our valuable goods and move to Konoha," Takuya added.

"Wait a minute! Are you planning to move to Konoha? As in, permanently?" Gai asked.

"Yes, that's the intention," Takuya answered. "We remained hidden to keep the secret of the Tenseigan safe. But since a new Tenseigan has awakened, our secrecy is no longer necessary. All that remains is to move all our knowledge to Konoha. Konoha is Hinata-sama's home, and as her followers, we shall go wherever she shall."

"I'm not sure what the Hokage will say about this..." Gai replied.

"Don't worry. Hokage-sama will be more than happy to welcome us to your village, if only for the wealth of knowledge that we bring with us," Takuya said.

"It's a good thing Hokage-sama decided to send an additional team. I'm more than sure our enemies will try to attack us once we leave the safety of our shrine," Nori commented. "Especially with all the treasures we carry with us."

"Wait a minute! You guys expect us to escort all of you all the way to Konoha?" Naruto asked in disbelief. "But there must be more than one hundred people here!"

"Not to mention all the things they want to take with them. Even with sealing scrolls, it will be quite the luggage," Haku added.

"You don't have to worry. We won't leave at the same time, but in small groups. The first one will be the one to carry our most valuable possessions," Takuya explained. "Nori, you go with them. I'll remain here and supervise. Once the shrine has been completely evacuated, I'll leave with the last group."

"Again, if you're expecting more ninjas to come here and escort you, you're going to need more money to hire them," Gai reminded them.

"Don't worry, Gai-san. Is in Konoha's best interest for the treasures of this place to reach the village. They're worth more than any amount of money we could gather," Nori insisted. "Hokage-sama will agree with me."

"If that's the case, then we should move as soon as possible. When will be the first group ready to leave?" Gai asked.

"I'd say an hour. Two hours at the very latest. In one case or another, then it won't be too long," Takuya replied.

"ALRIGHT! Come on guys! Let's make sure all of them reach Konoha in one piece, and in record time!" Gai enthusiastically yelled.

...

Many hours later, the Konoha ninja, accompanied by Nori and a few other Moon Scolytes, were heading back towards Konoha. Unfortunately, due the fact that this time around they were escorting more people, as well as a large cart loaded to the brim with scrolls of all sizes, meant that the journey back would go much, much slower. And that gave potential enemies better chances to attack.

Now out of their sanctuary, the acolytes looked clearly distressed, even more than Nori when they escorted her the first time around. It was the fear of somebody who knew they had a lot of enemies, and for the first time, they were in a vulnerable position. And the Konoha ninjas could sense that fear, which in turn made them become tense.

The Konoha ninjas positioned themselves in a surrounding formation towards the acolytes. Neji and Haku were leading the group -Neji had forbidden Haku and Tenten to stay close in a situation of potential danger- with Gai and Lee at each side of the cart, and Naruto, Hinata and Tenten in the back. Beside the acolytes, they also had the unsaid mission of protecting Hinata, given that awakening the Tenseigan left her both drained and a bit disoriented. At first she was able to hide this, but as the hours passed, her condition became more apparent.

"Hinata-hime?" Naruto asked.

Hinata turned his gaze at him, and smiled weakly. "Yes?"

"How do you feel?" Naruto asked, a little worried.

"I'm fine, Naruto-kun. Don't worry about me. Nori-san told me I'd take some time for my body to get used to this new power," Hinata reassured him.

"The sun will set soon. You'll be able to rest once we set up a camp for the night," Tenten reassured the Hyuga.

Hinata wasn't just talking about her eyes. Back when she was unconscious, when checking her chakra network to see if she was okay, Neji realized that Hinata's chakra reserves had multiplied tenfold. Her chakra reserves were still a far cry from Naruto's, but even then her chakra pools were those of a strong jonin.

"Wonder if I'll have to go through all those chakra control exercises again," Hinata wondered. "Because having my reserves expanded so suddenly is going to have side effects."

"Hey, maybe you've now enough chakra to use Shadow Clones! Trust me, once you get a taste, you'll wonder how can you live without them," Naruto excitedly assured her. Hinata giggled in return.

"I have a question," Tenten interjected. "Can you still use the Byakugan? Given that your eyes look all different now."

"If the Uchihas can use both the normal Sharingan and the Mangekyo Sharingan at will, I don't see how this could be different," Naruto stated, crossing his arms over his chest.

"I would think the same, but the Tenseigan doesn't seem to be like the Sharingan or the Byakugan. It's permanently on," Tenten said, taking a closer look at Hinata's new eyes.

"That's a good question. Let me check," Hinata went through the same motions she did when she had her Byakugan. Her eyes briefly flashed blue. "Yes! The Byakugan's still there!"

"That's great!" Naruto cheered.

"Plus there's the bonus of those creepy veins not appearing at the sides of your eyes anymore," Tenten added. "And no offense to you, Neji or any of your clansmen, but whenever you guys use your Byakugan and those veins start to bulge... ewww!" the odango haired girl said, as she shivered.

"None taken," Hinata replied. "Though, I feel I can now expand my sight way beyond my previous limits. Let me try..."

And indeed, Hinata's Tenseigan now increased her range so much, it was almost unreal. Looking around, she could see the forests, small mountains, rivers, lakes, towns of the Land of Tea. Then, rather than area, she focused on range, and looked to the north, to see if she could see Konoha, despite being hundreds of kilometers away, though she was unable to reach that far. Even the Tenseigan had its limits.

As she expanded her sight, something caught her eye. Leaves and branches moving. Focusing on the disturbance, Hinata could see that there were people jumping from one tree to another. It was clear that they were ninjas, but their chakra was... off. Almost as if they weren't human, she couldn't tell from such a distance. But what was most worrying was that they were heading in their direction. They were walking into an ambush!

"Everybody, listen!" Hinata shouted, drawing everybody's attention. "There's a group of ninjas that are heading towards us from the north! While I'm not sure, I'd say they're enemies!"

"Really?" Neji asked, activating his Byakugan. "I don't see anything."

"They're too far away yet, but they're heading in this direction. They'll be here in a few minutes," Hinata told them.

"What do we do? If we fight here, the acolytes might get hurt!" Tenten pointed out.

"Not to mention that their valuable scrolls might get damaged. You're right, Tenten, we need to get the fight far from them, but at the same time, make sure they're safe!" Gai stated.

Naruto bit his thumb, and started making hand seals. "Leave it to me, guys! Summoning Jutsu!"

Naruto slammed his hand into the ground, producing a large burst of smoke. Once the smoke dispelled, Naruto was standing on top of the same giant green toad he had summoned during the battle of the Crimson Citadel.

"Greeting, Naruto. What can I do for you?" Gamahiro asked.

"Gamahiro, I need you to take that cart, and all the guys dressed in white, and take them to Konoha as fast as you can. Can you do it?" Naruto asked, before realizing that he had to give him info about their situation. "We're in the Land of Tea, about two hundred kilometers to the south of Konoha."

"You can count on me, Naruto," Gamahiro said, as he grabbed the cart with his giant, webby hands as if it were a mere toy.

"Nori, get your people on top of Gamahiro! You'll be safe with him!" Naruto told her, before making a hand seal. Four clones popped into existence. "I'll also send four clones as additional escort just in case."

The acolytes were naturally unsure about the idea of riding on a giant toad towards Konoha, but at the ninjas' insistence, they climbed on his back.

"What do I do if I'm under attack?" Gamahiro asked.

"Ignore them. Just focus on reaching Konoha with the acolytes and the cart of scrolls in one piece. My dad will know what to do next," Naruto instructed.

Gamahiro nodded. "Very well. Everybody, hold tight, we're leaving!"

And thus, the giant green toad disappeared into the sky with a mighty leap, accompanied by the screams of terror of the acolytes that were on his back, and weren't expecting such a sudden takeoff. After a few seconds, Gamahiro landed with a thud a couple kilometers to the north, before leaping into the sky again. The second time he landed, he was so far nobody but Hinata could see him anymore.

"Summons can be useful for more than just fighting, you know?" Naruto said, clearly proud of his idea.

"Hinata, are those ninja still heading our way?" Gai asked.

Hinata nodded. "Yes. Gamahiro passed them, but they didn't pay him any attention."

"Good! That means that we can go all out without having to worry about harming the acolytes!" an excited Lee stated.

"What should we do? Should we wait for them here, or should we go and meet them?" Haku asked.

"For the small chance that they may not be enemies, let them attack first," Gai replied. "Naruto, Lee, with me. Haku, Tenten, move to the sides of the road each, and try to ambush them after they attack. Neji, Hinata, you'll cover our flanks and our backs!"

"Yes sir!" all ninja chorused in unison, as they moved to their respective positions.

As expected, the ninjas turned hostile, as both Neji and Hinata could see their chakra spiking up. They were getting ready to attack.

"Here they come!" Neji shouted.

A barrage of golden energy projectiles rained upon the group, forcing them to scatter while barely avoiding the incoming explosions. The group dispersed, the attackers revealing themselves. They were wearing dark brown cloaks under black pants and black long shirts. Beside the hoods they were wearing, they also had their faces completely covered in bandages, making it impossible -for the non-Hyugas- to tell what they looked like, or how they were able to see in the first place. Their forearms and forelegs were also bandaged. They were wearing a dark blue headband with a yellow symbol of a crescent moon and a sun.

One of the attackers, whoever, had his eyes exposed. He was also wearing entirely black clothes. He appeared to be the leader of this group.

Soon the mysterious attackers and the Konoha ninjas engaged in close combat. While the former were much greater in number, the latter had more skill and power on their side. And the number parts wasn't going to last long.

"Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

Naruto created a score of clones that quickly engaged the incoming enemies. However, the clones soon started to fall before the attackers' merciless skill.

"Damn, these guys are tough! My clones aren't even making a difference!" Naruto complained, as he made another group of clones to replace the ones he lost.

"What's with these people?" Neji asked, as he traded blows with two enemies. "My Byakugan can't see past these guys!"

"Mine can't, either," Hinata replied, as she struck her lightning-enhanced palm on the chest of one of those masked ninjas, to little effect. "And the Gentle Fist doesn't seem to do much damage."

"Then we'll use the strong fist!" Lee hotly exclaimed, as he delivered a flurry of punches and kicks to another of the ambushers. However, half his hits were parried, dodged or blocked, and the other half didn't make much effect on them either, other than pushing back.

"What village do these guys come from?" Tenten asked, noticing their headbands, as she cast a rain of explosive kunai upon a group of enemies. "Do you recognize that symbol?"

"Not at all!" Naruto shouted, as he dodged several of those weird golden energy blasts. "But then again, I don't know that many village symbols myself!"

"Wherever they come, they've been well trained!" Gai said, sending one of the enigmatic ninjas flying against a tree with a well delivered kick. "This is the kind of enemies I love to fight against! Those who give you a proper challenge, and a way to fan your flames of youth!"

"Yosh! You're so right, Gai-sensei! There's no point in taking pride in one's strength if one doesn't test that strength against worthy opponents!" Lee cheerfully agreed as resumed the fight with an even more vigor.

"That's fine, but should focus on finishing this mission rather than enjoining it," Haku replied a bit annoyed, while making several hand seals. "Ice Release: Certain Kill Ice Spears!"

Haku slammed both hands into the ground, and multiple giant spikes of ice emerged from below, impaling some of the mysterious attackers. However, despite the direct hit, they were still moving, and struggled to get rid of the ice spears.

" That one got his heart pierced by my ice attack, yet he acts as if it is a minor inconvenience... just what's with these guys, are they even human?" Haku thought.

"Watch out! More enemies incoming!" Neji warned.

Like the first wave, the new batch of enemies joined the fight by showering the Konoha ninjas with a rain of golden chakra blasts, fired with acute accuracy as to only hit their enemies and not their allies.

"Where are these guys coming from?" Neji asked, as he was on the verge of being overwhelmed. "Heavenly Spin!"

Neji turned into a spinning dome of chakra, succesfully repelling the attackers, but failing to do any lasting damage.

"Should we start opening the gates?" Tenten asked.

"Let's keep fighting. These guys must have some sort of weak point," Neji suggested, as he continued fighting.

What the Konoha ninjas didn't realize is that a good chunk of the second wave of enemies moved to attack Hinata, and little by little, isolated her from the rest of the group. Both Hinata, and of course Naruto were the first ones to notice this.

"Go help Hinata!" Naruto yelled, as he rushed towards her. "She's their target!"

However, before Naruto could help his girlfriend, the leader of the attackers landed in front of him, brandishing a sword made of the same golden chakra the strange ninjas used to attack.

"That was a bad move," Naruto darkly said, as he extended his hand, creating a Rasengan. He then rushed towards the masked ninja, and slammed the destructive sphere forward. "Rasengan!"

The enemy ninja used his golden chakra sword to parry Naruto's attack, and much to the blond's shock, it managed to resist the impact. The Rasengan exploded, and all that energy was pushed back, which in turn violently pushed Naruto into the same direction.

"Okay..." Naruto breathed out, as he pulled out his own Wind Blade, producing a blade of flame-like white energy the moment he channeled his chakra through it. "Let's do it your way," Naruto said as he engaged the silent ninja in a swordfighting duel.

That meant that Hinata had to continue to struggle alone against the growing horde of enemies. Not helped by the fact that she was still lightheaded, and was having a hard time molding chakra due her sudden expansion of her chakra pool, leaving her mostly with taijutsu.

"I can't hold them like this much longer..." Hinata breathed, taking a step back with each hit she dodged or parried, despite knowing that's what the enemies wanted. "I need to push them back, maybe with a Vacuum Palm Wall or a Heavenly Thunderstorm..."

Suddenly, as if to answer Hinata's distressed call, the Hyuga heiress felt an alien but pleasant energy forming inside her gut, a power unlike anything she had felt in her life. Ignoring reason and going with a gut feeling, Hinata spread her arms, and unleashed the power building inside of her.

The air shimmered for a bit, before Hinata's body cast a powerful shockwave in every direction. The shockwave violently pushed the attackers away, some of them being painfully slammed against the nearby trees, producing a sickening crunch upon impact. However, the damage wasn't as bad as what it seemed, since they got back on their feet to keep fighting, even if some of them hobbled and had difficulty moving.

" What is this...?" the confused bluenette thought. "Is this... the power of the Six Paths...?"

"What did Hinata do?" Haku asked, after witnessing her powerful repulsion wave.

"No idea, but it's a good thing she learned to do that," Tenten said. "Maybe is the power of those new eyes she has now?"

"If that's the case, let's hope she finds more hidden powers that can help us turn this fight around," Haku replied.

Naruto continued his fight against the lead enemy, trading blows, pushing back and forth, until his enemy made a mistake, delivering a swipe slower than intended. It wasn't a mistake big enough to capitalize unless you were an elite ninja. And fortunately for Naruto, he quickly took advantage of that. Moving aside, he delivered a swift vertical wipe that chopped off the hand holding the golden balde, followed by another quick strike to the neck, which separated his head from the rest of his body.

The ninja fell to the ground, motionless, while Naruto smirked in victory. The blond jinchuriki then noticed something strange. Despite cutting first his hand and then his head, there was no blood pouring from the severed zones. Inspecting the body and the head a little further, Naruto realized what was wrong with them

"The hell? This guy isn't even human!" Naruto exclaimed, much to everybody else's surprise. "It's some sort of... puppet!"

"What?" Gai asked in shock.

"That can't be right! There are no guys pulling strings on them, and they can use chakra!" Tenten protested, as she tried to hold back several of those mysterious beings.

"Well, whatever they are, they're not alive, and they're definitely not human!" Naruto exclaimed, as he joined his girlfriend in fighting the group that was surrounding her. "Try to destroy their heads! I managed to kill one of them by beheading him... it!"

With this new piece of information, the Konoha ninjas proceeded to adjust their tactics in dealing with them.

"I see. If they're not alive, then no wonder the Gentle Fist doesn't work with them. Even if they can somehow use chakra, nothing says that they must have a human chakra network," Neji inwardly realized. "If that's the case, then we're going to need a little more brute force..."

Neji jumped back a few times, putting some distance between his enemies and himself, distance they quickly tried to bridge. But that moment was all the Hyuga needed. He crossed his arms in front of his face.

"Gate of Opening: Open!"

Neji spreaded his arms outwards, releasing a powerful burst of chakra, as a faint green glow surrounded his body.

"So, it's okay for us to use the Gates now?" Tenten asked.

"In light of the new information, yes," Neji told her. His hands started to shimmer as he gathered copious amounts of chakra on them.

"Eight Trigrams: Sixteen Exploding Strikes! Two strikes! Four strikes!" Neji's palm strikes produced powerful chakra explosions that made them impossible to block. Each strike managed to seriously damage, mutilate, or downright completely disable the alleged puppets. "Eight strikes! Sixteen Strikes!"

"It seems that with just one Gate opened, Neji is doing rather well against these enemies," Lee observed.

"Okay then, Lee, let's go!" Tenten said, as she and Lee proceeded to imitate their teammate. "Gate of Opening: Open!"

Tenten and Lee joined their teammate, and with the additional boost provided by the first Gate alone, they started to trash their enemies and turn the tide in their favor. The masked ninjas noticed this, however, and changed their strategy. Some of them jumped backwards, and formed a circle around the battle. In perfect synchronization, they formed a golden chakra sphere between their hands, but rather than toss it as soon as it appeared, the sphere kept expanding as they spread their hands. Once they reached the diameter of their arms completely spread, they tossed the energy balls forward at the same time.

"Impressive... NOT!" Gai laughed, as he grabbed two of the puppet ninjas by their necks, and tossed them against a giant energy ball each, forcing them to prematurely explode.

Naruto had the same idea, except he simply used several clones to absorb the impact. Neji, Lee and Tenten opted to dodge them, Haku retreated to one of his Demonic Ice Mirrors, while Hinata used her newly found kinetic powers to deflect a couple aside.

This time, the ninja puppets opted for a different tactic. Half of them generated more giant sized golden chakra spheres, while the other half bombarded the group with rapid fire of smaller blasts. Naruto, however, rushed towards the puppet ninjas while quickly deflecting their incoming blasts with his Wind Blade. When he reached hand to hand combat, Naruto hacked the puppet to pieces, before moving to the next.

Their tactics overturned and their numbers decimated, the puppet ninjas opted to flee.

"Yeah, run away, you cowards! Next time, bring more of you, maybe that way you can be a little of a challenge!" Naruto shouted to the retreating foes.

"Naruto-kun, they're puppets. They aren't going to react to your taunts," Haku told the blond.

"I know. But it feels take that out of my chest, you know?" Naruto replied, with a foxy grin.

"Is everybody okay?" Gai asked. "If yes, then we should try and catch up with the giant toad, before more enemies show up."

"Alright!" everybody minus Hinata said in unison.

The Hyuga Heiress hadn't listened to Gai's command, and stared at the sky with an unreadable expression. The others took no time to notice this.

"Hinata-hime? Something's wrong?" Naruto asked.

"Somebody's coming," Hinata said. She raised her hand, pointing at an the night sky, illuminated by a half moon. "Somebody with a really powerful chakra."

"Yes... I'm seeing him too," Neji agreed. He tensed even more. "This chakra... Hinata-sama, his chakra is very similar to yours."

"What does that mean?" Naruto asked, not liking the sound of that.

Soon, even those without a Byakugan could see a figure standing on a golden floating platform with red railings was floating towards them. Once he was close enough, they could finally see who this mysterious individual was: an young man with soft facial features, shaggy white hair, and very pale skin. He was wearing a white, high-collared kimono with a black obi, with a pale green sash tied at the right shoulder. There were several black magatamas tattooed on his bare collarbone.

However, the man's most eye-catching features were his eyes. They were a pair of Tenseigan, just like Hinata's, except these ones glowed with a brighter gleam.

"Ah, the Byuakugan Princess. After so much time, it's great to finally see you in person. Allow me to introduce myself: my name is Toneri Otsutsuki," Toneri told Hinata, acting as if the rest of the group wasn't there.

"You have a Tenseigan too..." Hinata said in a whisper.

"Then that means that he must also have Six Paths Chakra, just like Hinata-sama," Neji observed. An enemy with such power was something not to be underestimated.

"Indeed. It's the power my family coveted. The power needed to destroy this corrupt world, and replace it with a better one," Toneri stated.

"Wait a minute, then you're the other Hamura-sama told me about! The one tainted by darkness!" Hinata said in realization, as she instinctively took a step back, closer to Naruto.

"Tainted by darkness?" he repeated. "Oh no, my dear Hinata. Is this world the one consumed by darkness. I am the light that shall purify it. And what did you say about Hamura-sama?"

"Hamura-sama talked to me when I awakened the Tenseigan. He warned me about another with the same eyes I possess," Hinata warily replied.

Toneri looked skeptical. "You said Hamura-sama appeared to you? Curious. I did not receive such a vision when I awakened my Tenseigan."

"It's the darkness of your heart that stopped him from reaching you," Hinata sharply replied.

"Hamura-sama is one of the most powerful beings who ever lived. Had such thing be true, he should have been able to reach me, darkness or not," Toneri insisted.

"Enough of that nonsense! What the hell do you want!?" Naruto shouted.

"A world of peace and justice, in which nobody has to suffer senselessly," was Toneri's reply, leaving Naruto a little flabbergasted. "But I presume you were expecting a more short term answer. That would be to take Hinata from this withering world, so she can take her rightful place in the next one."

"WHAT!?" Naruto asked, outraged, as he defensively stood between Hinata and Toneri.

"Hinata is the prophesied Byakugan Princess, a direct descendant of Hamura's eldest daughter, with a kind sould and an emphatic heart, that will lead the Otsutsuki clan to a new golden age," Toneri explained. Hinata felt a chill running down her spine. Those were the very same words Hamura had used. "That's why you must come with me. It's your destiny to join me in creating a new world devoid of wars, greed and misery, and a new lineage that will rule it once we're no longer here."

"Yeah, I don't see that happening anytime soon," Naruto coldly deadpanned. "Nor at all."

"Watch your mouth, jinchuriki. You have no idea who you're talking to," Toneri warned, his tone just as cold. "I wasn't talking to you, but to Hinata. What do you say?"

"Do you really need to ask?" Hinata incredulously replied. "I'm not going to leave my family and friends to join some stranger, much less one who wants to destroy this world!"

Toneri let out a sigh, and looked downwards. "I knew this would happen. You remained in this world too long, and thus you fell victim to its inherent corruption. That's why I arranged you to be brought to me when you were three years old."

"When I was three years old...?" Hinata repeated.

"The kidnapping by those Kumo ninjas! You were behind them!" Neji exclaimed, pointing an accusatory finger at him.

"Yes, it was me. But that's irrelevant now. Oh well, I believe it's not too late yet. You will see the light, even if I have to open your eyes by force," Toneri darkly said, as he made a hand motion.

His floating platform elevated into the air, as another horde of puppet ninjas appeared out of nowhere, leaping into mid air, as they summoned golden chakra orbs between their cupped hands. Another rain of fire awaited the Konoha ninjas, who took no time to scatter. Naruto, however, made the hand seal of his favored technique.

"Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

Another multitude of Naruto clones appeared from thin air. A good chunk of them were instantly destroyed by the initial barrage, but those who survived quickly went to engage the puppet ninjas. All but one of them.

"I bet he's the one controlling these puppets, somehow," Naruto guessed, as the clone grabbed him by an arm and started to spin. "So if I take him out, his puppets will go down with him!"

After building enough momentum, the clone launched Naruto towards the white haired man in the sky. As Naruto flew like a missile towards him, he extended both hands, a Rasengan forming in each one of them. In a few seconds, he would be in range to attack.

"You're dead! Double Ra-!"

Toneri merely raised an open hand against him, and Naruto was hit by an extremely powerful kinetic blast, that not only negated all his momentum, but sent him flying backwards, falling several hundred meters behind them, among a bunch of trees.

"NARUTO-KUN!" Hinata shouted in horror, before she turned her eyes at Toneri, casting him a bone chilling glare. "You will pay for hurting him."

"Somehow, I find that unlikely," Toneri replied, as he jumped off his floating platform, and slowly descended, as if he could somehow control the speed of his fall. "Now, you have to come with me, Hinata."

"Never!" Hinata replied, mimicking Toneri's earlier movement, and blasting him with a telekinetic push.

Like with Naruto, Toneri was hurled backwards, but Toneri was able to resist the hit, and remained still in mid-air.

"You may have the same eyes as I do, but not only mine are more developed, but my skill with them is far superior to yours," Toneri boasted, though his voice remained calm. "If you come with me, I can teach you how to use the power you now possess. Just imagine what we could do if we joined our forces."

"Sorry, but Hinata-sama said NO!" Neji's voice was heard, as Toneri was slammed by a white and brown blur, hurling him crashing against the ground. The Branch House Hyuga landed beside Hinata, and quickly went to check her. "Hinata-sama, are you okay?"

"Y-Yes. Thank you, nii-san," Hinata replied. "That was a good hit, but I doubt it was enough to put him out of commission."

"Yes, I thought as much," Neji said, as he turned around.

Like Hinata said, Toneri got back on his feet, and floated a few meters above the ground.

"You're fast, Hyuga. Even with my Tenseigan, I was unable to see you coming in time for me to react," Neji said, as he shook the dust from his robe. "However, you won't be able to land a hit like that a second time."

Neji smirked in return. "Is that a challenge? Gate of Life, open!"

As the third Gate opened, Neji's green aura glowed even brighter, and a powerful wind started to blow from his body in all directions. The Hyuga prodigy then vanished. However, the moment he did that, Toneri raised another palm, and blasted Neji backwards with another telekinetic shockwave, when the Hyuga was centimeters away from hitting him.

"That was close, I have to admit," Toneri smugly replied. "But my words were true. Now, Hinata, take a good look at the power of the Tenseigan."

Toneri clapped his hands together. The ground below their feet started to rumble, of huge chunks of earth were pulled upwards, floating around the last Otsutsuki in a surreal manner. Once he decided he had enough ammunition, his hands formed a hand seal, and the chunks of earth and rock fell towards the two Hyugas, though mostly towards Neji. Rather than dodge them, the two Hyugas met the incoming rain of giant rocks.

"Lightning Release: Thunder Palm!"

With a strike of her lightning enhanced palms, Hinata shattered a large rock into a multitude of tiny pebbles.

"Eight Trigrams: Mountain Crusher!"

Neji thrust both palms forwards, releasing a destructive vacuum wave that also shattered a couple rocks headed towards him into small shards, but the force of the attack also pushed those shards back to Toneri. With a dismissive hand wave, Toneri deflected the incoming shards sideways.

"Not bad. Let's see how do you do against this," Toneri stated, making another hand seal. A few rocks floating around him instantly shattered into tiny, sharp pebbles. The pebbles started to spin in a circle around the area Neji and Hinata were in. "Let's see how well you do against an attack that comes from every direction."

Toneri closed his hand into a fist, and the spinning pebbles rained upon the two Hyugas. They nodded to each other.

"Heavenly Spin!"

The Hyuga cousins turned into a spinning blue chakra dome each, easily deflecting the rain of the stone bullets.

"Impressive," Toneri conceded, sounding strangely pleased. "Besides your beauty, you're also really strong, Hinata. You'll make a great wife."

"I know. I won't be your wife, though," Hinata said, panting. Then, she suddenly fell on her knees, clutched her head, and started screamed. "AAAAAAAAAAHHHHH!"

"Hinata-sama!" Neji panicked, and grabbed her by her shoulder. She shot Toneri a murderous glare. "What did you do to her?"

"Nothing," the Otsutsuki nonchalantly replied. "Those migraines are a side effect of the Tenseigan developing. They will stop once it reaches full maturity. Anyway, I think I wasted enough time as it is."

Toneri raised her hand, and Hinata was telekinetically pulled towards him.

"I won't let you!" Neji shouted, as he blitzed towards the white haired man.

But Toneri already predicted this, and had already raised his other hand to blast Neji backwards with a telekinetic pulse.

"You think you can keep me away from my bride?" Toneri asked. His politeness was replaced by condescension. "For somebody with these eyes, you're nothing but ants. Let Hinata be where she clearly belong."

"Manipulated Tools: Rain of Fire!"

Multiple kunai rained upon Toneri, who forced him to release Hinata in order to evade them. But much to his shock, he realized that the kunai had explosive notes attached to them.

"Disappear!" Tenten said, as she triggered all the explosives at once.

Using a kinetic blast, Toneri launched himself into the air, barely avoiding the chain of explosions that, even if they wouldn't have killed him, would have left serious injuries.

Toneri panted, seeing how close he was of getting caught in that ambush. "That was close... huh?"

"KONOHA WHIRLWIND!"

Two green blurs appeared besides Toneri, both delivering a powerful kick to his face. Toneri's reflexes, however, were fast enough to let him see Gai and Lee's double teaming him, and raised his arms to block the attacks. Even then, the kicks packed so much power, he felt they left his arms on the verge of breaking.

"Don't dare to touch me!" Toneri yelled, as he blasted Gai and Lee away with a repulsive shockwave.

"Wind Release: Rasenshuriken!"

A loud, high pitched whirring noise alerted the Otsutsuki of a chakra shuriken flying towards him. He didn't need the Tenseigan to know that if he let that jutsu hit him, he would be as good as gone. Raising his hands, he projected the most powerful telekinetic wave he could muster, but much to his shock, while he was able to stop the shuriken's from going forward, he was unable to push it backwards, until it finally burst into a massive wind explosion, which hurled the Otsutsuki backwards, tumbling towards the ground.

"What!? What kind of power is that? With these eyes, there's nothing that could be able to challenge me!" Toneri angrily thought, as he hit the ground.

"You won't be able to stop the next one," a voice Toneri recognized said, as the same infernal high pitched whirl drilled his ears.

As he got back on his feet, Toneri saw that Naruto was back. For a reason he failed to grasp, his chakra had become incredibly more potent. He also noticed that his previously blue eyes were now yellow, and had some orange pigmentation around them. Naruto and a clone were now forming another of those destructive chakra shuriken.

"It seems these people are far stronger than they let on. With my undeveloped Tenseigan, my chances are low," Toneri regretfully thought. "You're really strong, Naruto. No wonder Obito-sama failed to capture you so far."

"Obito-sama...? Are you with Akatsuki?" Naruto asked, as he prepared his Rasenshuriken. Suddenly, a realization dawned upon him. "Wait a minute... !"

That moment of distraction was all what Toneri needed. Quickly raising his hands, he sent another kinetic pulse that knocked the Konoha ninja on their backs. Wasting no second, he turned around, and flew towards his platform, still floating high in the air. Once he reached it, he flew away, disappearing into the night of the sky.

As everybody got on their back, they looked around to see if the enemies have truly fled, and were they now safe. Relatively speaking.

"Just... what was all that about?" a slightly confused Tenten asked.

"Guys... I think I have an idea of what's going on..." Naruto replied.

Author's Note: So yeah, Hinata finally awakened the Tenseigan, but you probably deduced that already from the way the previous chapter ended. If you're disappointed in that Hinata only got some telekinesis out of the whole ordeal, don't fret. Hinata's Tenseigan powers will start out small, but will gradually develop as the story progresses. After all, it's not that Sasuke was able to create Perfect Susanoo right after awakening the Mangekyo Sharingan, right?

The same thing goes for Toneri. You'll probably noticed that he's weaker than he was in The Last. But just like Hinata, he will reach the level of power he had in The Last in due time. Otherwise, well, he would be able to wipe out Konoha all by himself with little effort.

Thanks a lot to my new beta, Grimlock987, for betareading this chapter.

Anyway, hope you enjoyed this chapter, with more action and less plot development. The next chapter will be the end of this arc. Let's say that there's going to be quite the big changes within the Hyuga Clan, hehe. And while you wait, give your thoughts on this chapter in a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Byakugan Princess, Part III

Author's Note: And with the last chapter, this story officially crossed the 2000 reviews! Thanks a lot to everybody who ever left a review, so you could help this story achieve such heights.

While not as popular as the one before, the previous chapter got a pretty good reception as well. I love how well received this original arc is turning out to be. Let's hope the third and final part is liked just as much. Enjoy:

Chapter 58

The Byakugan Princess, Part III

or

Setting Things Straight

As everybody got on their back, they looked around to see if the enemies have truly fled, and were they now safe. Relatively speaking.

"Just... what was all that about?" a slightly confused Tenten asked.

"Guys... I think I have an idea of what's going on..." Naruto replied. "I'm not one hundred percent sure... but that guy might be under Obito's mind control."

"Are you sure? If he was working for Akatsuki, he'd be more interesting in you than in Hinata-sama," Neji pointed out.

"You assume that the Tailed Beasts are Akatsuki's only target, my young student," Gai intervened. "Who says that they aren't after other sources of power, such as Hinata's new eyes?"

"Just great," Naruto said, letting out an annoyed snort. "As if I wasn't worried about Akatsuki going after me alone, they're not after my girlfriend. Just great."

There was a moment of silence, as the group of seven processes both Naruto's words, and what they entailed.

"So... what do we do now? Should we go back to the village, or should we rest and continue at morning?" Haku asked.

"For the time being let's rest. I'm sure all of us were already tired before this battle even began. By now, Naruto's toad should be close to Konoha, if he hasn't arrived there already. Let's set a campsite, and we'll continue our journey back tomorrow," Gai decided. "But before we do, let's see if we can salvage any of those ninja puppets that attacked us earlier. Knowing them will make us better prepared next time we have to face them!"

Everybody nodded. While Neji and Tenten went to retrieve and store the remaining puppets, the rest of the group went to find a good place to pass the night.

...

Next Day

Said decision turned out to be the most sound. After a good night of sleep, the seven Konoha ninjas were now properly rested and full of energy -even Hinata-, and were ready to resume their way back to their home. And just by noon, the Konoha ninjas triumphantly returned to their village. A quick talk with the entrance guards told them that the Moon Acolytes and all the scrolls they were carrying safely arrived last night, on the back of a giant toad.

While the first thing they wanted to do was to go home and rest, or tell their loved ones about the mission, duty came first, and they had to go to the Hokage's Tower, in order to give Jiraiya the report on how the mission went. One of the first things Jiraiya noticed was Hinata's new eyes.

"So... that's the Tenseigan?" the Hokage asked. Hinata nodded. "And what does it do?"

"So far, it allows me to control attractive and repulsive forces," Hinata began. She moved her hand, and pulled a pen that was in the table to it. She then made it float above her palm. "Though I believe that there may be more to the Tenseigan than this."

"I think so, if the explanation Nori gave me is of any cue," Jiraiya replied. "She pretty much stated it was a doujutsu on par with the Rinnegan."

"Wait... Nori told you about the Tenseigan?" Naruto asked.

"Of course. That's why I allowed this mission to begin with. If there was a chance that one of our ninjas could awaken a power that can give us an edge against the Akatsuki, I wasn't going to let that chance go," Jiraiya explained Naruto, his tone uncharacteristically serious. "Of course, I took some precautions. That's why I sent team Gai with you as an additional escort. Especially since you guys are one teammate down."

"Which was a good thing, in hindsight," Tenten added.

"During our journey back, we were attacked by a mostly unyouthful individual claiming to be an Otsutsuki who also possessed a Tenseigan," Lee spoke. "But fortunately, Tenseigan or not, our flames of youth burned too bright for him to beat us!"

"The man commanded an army of puppets. However, unlike those used by Suna ninjas, they were autonomous and could use chakra," Tenten said, as she placed a couple scrolls on the Hokage's desk. "Here are the ones we managed to retrieve."

"That sounds like our Chakra Golems," Jiraiya observed, as he took the storage scrolls and placed them inside a drawer on his desk.

"In a way, yes, but..." Naruto began, struggling to find the proper words. "But they could fool you into mistaking them for actual humans, you know? I only realize that they weren't made of flesh and blood when I wounded one, but blood didn't come out."

"I'd say the craftsmanship and technology behind such puppets is superior to those of the Uzumaki Golems," Hinata interjected. "Though thankfully, they are unable to absorb chakra, and are nowhere near as resistant or stout."

"Though those are indeed troubling news if the enemy counts with such assets," Jiraiya replied. "I'll send a letter to Suna so they can send some of their puppeteer ninjas here and help us studying these puppets."

"By the way, may I ask where are Nori and the other Moon Acolytes now?" Neji asked.

"They requested to stay at the Hyuga State as long as they remain in Konoha. I told them to talk with the leader of the clan to see if they were allowed to do that. If you want to see them, they will be there," Jiraiya replied.

"By the way, Hokage-sama, those aren't the only acolytes that requested to be escorted here. Almost a hundred more remain in their old hideout, as well as a good chunk of scrolls, books and other knowledge they claim to be of importance for both the Hyuga Clan and the village as a whole," Gai informed him.

Jiraiya nodded. "Understood. I'll send several teams to escort the rest of the Moon Acolytes. After this, you guys deserve some little rest."

"Thank you, Hokage-sama," Tenten gratefully replied.

"If there's nothing left to discuss, then you're dismissed," the Hokage finally said.

The seven ninjas nodded, and left the office.

...

As they exited the Hokage's Tower, the now dismissed ninjas went on their separate ways to enjoy their leisure time until they were summoned again for another mission. Hinata then walked towards Naruto, before the blond could leave.

"Naruto-kun?" Hinata asked.

"Yes, Hinata-hime?" Naruto replied to his girlfriend with his best smile.

Hinata looked away, and started to twiddle with her fingers. Naruto noted it was something she hadn't done in ages. In fact, he couldn't remember when was the last time she did that. Definitely sometime before they became boyfriend and girlfriend.

"I... there's something I want to ask you..." Hinata said, almost in a whisper.

Naruto guessed it had to be something big for such a regression in her behaviour. He gave her a reassuring smile. "You know you can ask me anything."

"I was going home... and, well... my clan is going to see my new eyes. And I'll have to break them the news about what Nori-san told us... if she didn't do it already," Hinata exhaled. "Would you like to come with me? I don't think I can do this alone."

"Of course," Naruto said, taking her hand. "You don't even need to ask."

Hinata smiled back. "Thank you."

...

Hyuga Compound

As the couple approached the compound's gate, they were greeted by a Branch House member that was on guard duty that day. He smiled upon seeing the two teens closing by.

"Hinata-sama, Naruto-san, welcome back to the-whoa!" Not even the Hyuga's legendary stoicism was able to mask the clansmen's reaction to their heiress' new eyes. "Hinata-sama... !"

"Yes, she has new eyes, she will explain it right now. Can you go and tell her mother that we're here?" Naruto asked, mildly annoyed, as he rolled his eyes.

"R-Right away, Naruto-san," the guard said, before heading inside the compound, with Naruto and Hinata following him at a slower pace.

To try not to draw attention to her, Hinata kept her eyes looking down, and kept them half closed, and relied on Naruto to guide her. As they walked, the blond noticed a couple of Moon Acolytes walking around the compound. It seems that Hikari had allowed them to stay with the Hyuga for the time being. He then saw the guard that had greeted them at the entrance walking towards him once again.

"Hikari-sama is waiting for you in main living room," the guard informed them. "Nori-san is currently with her. Do you want to see your mother in private?"

"Thank you. And no, it's okay. Nori-san already knows what I'm going to show her," Hinata replied, as she and Naruto walked in.

"Very well then. Hinata-sama," the guard made a polite bow before returning to his assigned post.

After a minute or so, they arrived at the main living room. And just as the guard said, both Hikari and Nori were there, talking about something, before the duo walked in. Hikari immediately smiled, and walked to greet her daughter and probably future son in law.

"Hinata! Naruto! So good to see you're back! Nori-san was telling me about-"

Hinata then raised her eyes to meet her mother's, and the older woman was stopped in her tracks, and gasped loudly, covering her mouth with her hands.

"Hi-Hinata..." Hikari mumbled, losing her composure for the first time in years. She took a better look at her daughter's face. "Your eyes..."

"I know, mother. Let's sit, there is much we need to talk," Hinata said, motioning to the nearby couches.

"Yes, Nori-san has been telling me-"

"Trust me, Hikari-sama, I barely told you anything," Nori interjected. "Listen to Hinata-sama. I'm sure that whatever she has to say, it will be mostly revealing."

"But before we begin, can you tell me where is Hanabi-chan?" Hinata asked.

"I think she should be training with her team at their usual training ground," Hikari replied.

Hinata turned at her boyfriend. "Naruto-kun, do you mind fetching Hanabi-chan and taking her here? Tell her it's an important issue."

"Of course! I'll be back with her before you realize!" Naruto helpfully said as he rushed out of the living room.

"I should be able to give you a rundown of the events of the past day by the time Naruto returns with Hanabi-chan," Hinata stated.

And thus, Hinata began her tale, with Nori adding something at times, or correcting Hinata when she stated something wrong: how the mission began, their arrival to the Sanctuary, what they learned about the Sage of the Six Paths, his brother, the Senju, Uchiha, Uzumaki and Hyuga, Hinata meeting Hamura himself and awakening the Tenseigan, and finally, the confrontation with Toneri, another Tenseigan wielder, with all what it entailed.

When Hinata was finished, Hikari was speechless. There were so many things to process... so many things she thought were nothing but myths and old wife tales.

"So, the Sage of the Six Paths is real," Hikari said, chuckling.
"Somehow, that's the least ludicrous part of this story."

"And we're his younger brother's descendants." Hinata emphasized.

"And the Tenseigan... to think that those people I heard about were actually right..." Hikari added, mostly to herself.

"You knew about the Tenseigan, mother?" Hinata asked, her curiosity piquing a bit.

"I did, but I didn't give it much importance. I thought it was a myth, like the Sage of the Six Paths," Hikari replied. "There were some members of our clan who tried to awaken it, some went so far they even lost their lives. One of your great uncles in particular, he dedicated most of his life to try to achieve it. Guess that, wherever he is now, he's possibly laughing while saying something like 'who is the crazy old man now?'"

"And most importantly... the caged bird seal, and the Main House/Branch House split," Hinata added. "Now we know where do they come from."

"Indeed. I never liked the way the clan was divided, and hearing its origins didn't make me like it much more..." Hikari admitted.

"Then why don't we change it?" Hinata asked her mother. "You're the Clan Head!"

"Being the Clan Head doesn't mean that I can do whatever I want," Hikari regretfully told Hinata. "However, I think we might have a chance now that-"

"I'm back!" Naruto happily chimed in. "And I brought Hanabi with me!"

"Naruto said that nee-chan had something important to tell me," Hanabi said, as her eyes darted towards her older sister. Naturally, she noticed Hinata's Tenseigan, and her reaction mirrored those of her clansmen. "WHOA! What the hell happened to your eyes!?"

Well, maybe a bit more brusque than her clansmen.

"Don't worry Hanabi-chan, you'll find out soon," Hinata gently said as she walked towards her. "Now, give me your hands, please."

"Okay...?" Hanabi unsurely replied, and complied. Hinata grabbed her hands, and both sisters were suddenly engulfed by an intense lavender aura, as Hanabi felt a huge power invading her body. "WHOOAAAAAAHH!"

"Don't worry, Hanabi-chan. This will hurt a bit at first, but it's for the better," Hinata said, in an almost regretting tone.

"Hinata-hime? What are you doing?" Naruto asked, midly concerned.

"Hikari-sama, what is she doing?" a distressed Nori asked, though she was already fearing the answer.

"Byakugan!" Hikari's Bloodline Limit came to life. "She's... she's transferring her Six Paths Chakra into Hanabi!"

"NO!" Nori shouted, as she rushed towards Hinata and tried to forcefully separate her from Hanabi. "Hinata-sama, you have to stop!"

Seeing the urgency in the priestess tone, Hinata stopped the flow of chakra. Hanabi moaned a little, before fainting into her older sister's arms.

"Why did you stop me? What's wrong?" Hinata asked.

"Hinata-sama, you can't do that! The Six Path Chakra in your body is what powers the Tenseigan! The less you have, the weaker it is!" Nori explained, still shaken.

"You didn't tell me this before," Hinata noted.

"Because I never thought that you'd do something like that! WHY did you do something like that?" Nori loudly asked.

Hinata's face hardened, and fixed a determined glare on the priestess. "Why, you ask? After hearing the true history of how our clan came to be, 'why not' would be a better question. The Otsutsuki clan kept the power of the Tenseigan for themselves, and look what happened. And our clan then continued those foolish practices. No, I won't hog this power all to myself. Besides, you said that only an Hyuga with a kind heart and an emphatic soul is worthy of the Tenseigan, and I like to think that Hanabi-chan fits those qualities. Besides, no one ever said that there can only be one Tenseigan wielder."

"Yes but... sharing that power dilutes it. You'll need the Tenseigan at its full power to face the enemies that are to come," Nori insisted.

"Can't my Six Path Chakra regenerate, like normal chakra does?" Hinata asked.

"Yes, but it will take some time," Nori replied.

"How long?"

"I couldn't tell. What you just did had no precedents. Weeks, months, years... who knows," Nori replied, letting out a sigh.

"I will find a way to accelerate the Six Paths Chakra regeneration speed, then," Hinata firmly stated. "But like I said before, there's no way I'm going to let our clan to continue with the same traditions that let it to its doom once."

"That's... very mature of you, Hinata," Hikari praised. "You know, all these revelations made me think. Given what Nori-san said about the wielder of the Tenseigan being the head of the Otsutsuki Clan... I think it may be the time for me to step down and let you take your place as the Clan Head."

"W-What!?" Hinata blubbered.

"That's awesome!" Naruto piped in.

"I understand it may feel overwhelming right now. You're still young, and had this strange power thrust upon you. But deep down, I believe it's the right choice to do," Hikari explained. She then grabbed Hinata's hand, and smiled. "And you won't be alone. You will have me to help you and guide you if you feel lost or don't know what to do."

"Thank you, mother. I promise I'll do my best," Hinata assured Hikari.

"Well, I think we should also start your training with the Tenseigan as soon as possible. My group alone brought plenty of books and scrolls that you will have to study in order to master the new power you now possess, Hinata-sama," Nori interjected. She then took a look at the unconscious Hanabi, resting on the couch, unconscious. "And Hanabi-sama as well, it seems."

"We better wait until she wakes up. That way we can start the two of them at once," Hinata suggested.

Nori nodded. "I see no issue with that."

"Meanwhile, I'll start making preparations for Hinata's announcement as the new clan head," Hikari replied. "I'll make sure the whole clan is gathered here for the afternoon."

"I'll be here as well to see such a moment," Naruto promised. "In the meantime, I should go see the Uchihas. They should know all the things pertaining their clan's history."

"Alright then, see you later, Naruto-kun," Hikari saw Naruto off.

...

Shisui and Shizune's apartment, a few hours later

Just like Naruto told Hinata, after leaving the Hyuga Compound, he headed directly towards Shizune and Shisui's apartment, and had them gather the rest of the clan -which were just Sasuke and Itachi-, before Naruto could tell them about the mission. All of them gathered in the living room. Shiro, however, was playing with some toys, isolated from the others by a baby fence -not that the baby minded being alone-, while a sleeping Shizuka rested on her mother's arms.

Just like Hinata before him, Naruto gave the Uchihas a quick rundown on how their mission went, and all they learned about the Sage of the Six Paths and his family, but focused mostly on the part with Indra and Asura, the origins of the Sharingan, and Indra's Curse of Hatred. The Uchihas listened intently, and didn't open their mouth until Naruto was finished, not even to ask questions.

"... so that's pretty much everything," Naruto finished. "Well, technically not everything. There's a bunch of stuff about the Hyugas, but I thought that you guys wouldn't find that that interesting."

There was a moment of silence, before anybody broke it to speak. Said person was Sasuke.

"The Uchiha is one of the most powerful clan to ever lived. But to think that we are descendants of the Sage of the Six Paths himself..." Sasuke said, his awe being hidden by his usual low-key tone.

"The fact that the Sage is an actual thing as opposed to a myth is just as amazing," Shisui followed.

"Guess that those who said that the Uchiha is a clan cursed by hatred had no idea how right they were," Itachi sourly said. "The part about Indra's curse was... troubling, to say the least."

"Do you think that curse is real?" Shizune asked, as she looked apprehensively at both her sleeping daughter and playing son, worried for their future.

"I'm not somebody who believes in curses, but that would explain a lot of things," Itachi regretfully admitted. "But we allegedly now have tangible proof of the Sage of the Six Path's existence, so the curse might as well be real."

"Are you thinking that it might be the responsible of pushing our clansmen into that suicidal coup?" Sasuke asked.

"Again, it's a possibility, one more probable than I'd like to admit," Itachi replied. "I can't help but wonder what kind of extent does this curse has over our very actions..."

"Come on guys, don't get so gloom! Even if there's a curse out there, you guys doesn't seem to be ruled by it or anything!" Naruto vehemently countered. He looked at Itachi and Shisui. "When the clan rebelled, you guys worked to protect Konoha," he then turned at Sasuke. "And Sasuke, if it wasn't for you, I'd be dead right now, and Akatsuki would have the Nine Tails in their power. That has to count for something, right?"

Naruto's unbridled optimism made Itachi smile a little. "Thanks for having so much faith in us, Naruto, but it's not as simple as that. My father served loyally to Konoha for decades as Chief of the Military Police, yet in the end he decided to lead a coup."

"But I'm sure it wouldn't have done it if Obito didn't manipulate him!" Naruto protested. "He's the real culprit behind that."

"Naruto-kun, even if that might be true, the Uchihas weren't forced or coerced. They attempted the coup on their own volition," Shizune softly said.

"Yeah, as much as I hate to admit it, they have nobody but themselves to blame for it," Shisui agreed with his wife. "And it's on us to pick up the pieces and rebuild the clan into something greater, that won't make the same mistakes of the past."

"You know, now that you mention it, the Uzumaki Clan's downfall was pretty similar," Naruto said, earning the attention of those present. "Uzushio wanted to be a Great Village at any cost and... well, it brought the wrath of two other Great Villages upon it."

"Maybe it's not something exclusive to the Uchiha and inherent to all of the Sage's descendants," Shisui said with a chuckle, maybe joking, maybe not. "You mentioned that the Uzumaki and the Senju were descended from the Sage's youngest son, right?"

"I don't remember hearing anything similar regarding the Senju Clan, so that might not be it," Itachi interjected.

"Naruto, you said that the Sharingan has a form even higher than the Mangekyo Sharingan, right?" Sasuke asked. Itachi shoot him an apprehensive look.

"Yeah, the Rinnegan. It awakens when the Ying Half of the Six Paths Chakra all Uchiha have is combined the with the Yang Half of the Senju or the Uzumaki," Naruto explained, before shooting Sasuke an intriguing look. "Why? Do you want to get one?"

"Sasuke..." Itachi tiredly said.

"What? It would be an useful tool against the Akatsuki. And you said one of the Akatsuki have it too, right?" Sasuke asked.

"So there may be more Uchihases in the Akatsuki besides Obito," Shisui guessed, sighing a little.

"Actually, I think they might be an Uzumaki," Naruto interjected. All of them looked at the blond in surprise.

"Come again?" Shizune asked.

"During our mission in Suna, we found out that Akatsuki also have access to Uzumaki sealing jutsu," Naruto began. "However, it was a kind of seal that required a lot of chakra to make it work. That's why it made me realize that said Uzumaki seals might not be stolen. Now, it's possible that this person, besides Uzumaki, might also have Uchiha ancestry. That's how he or she was able to awaken the Rinnegan. Do you guys know about any Uchiha who disappeared under mysterious circumstances, defected the village, or something along those lines?"

Shisui sighed. "None come to mind, but it could be just about any Uchiha. Until a couple years ago, we all thought Obito died during the Third War, yet it turned out it wasn't the case. Maybe an Uchiha faked his death in order to defect Konoha, met an Uzumaki, and had a child together that would awaken the Rinnegan."

Naruto slumped in defeat. "So nothing then."

"Itachi, you've been gathering information about the Akatsuki. Do you have any idea regarding this mystery?" Shizune asked.

"Just one, but it's not very reliable," Itachi replied. "I heard rumors that Akatsuki had infiltrated Amegakure. This is coupled with the fact that Hanzo the Salamander, Amegakure's leader, hasn't been seen in years, despite official word being that he's still the leader."

"Wait a minute, you think somebody ousted Hanzo the Salamander? As in, the same Hanzo who defeated the Sannin in their prime?" Shisui asked, incredulous.

"Somebody with a Rinnegan could have done it," Itachi countered. "But like I said, these are just rumors with no actual solid evidence to back them up. Gathering said evidence would require an infiltration in Amegakure."

Naruto nodded wordlessly. Silence briefly reigned over the apartment. That is, until a realization dawned upon Shisui.

"Hey, all of these stuff Naruto told us about... doesn't it sound similar to the Stone Tablet?" the one eyed Uchiha asked.

"Now that you mention, yes. I knew this sounded similar to me for some reason," Sasuke agreed.

Naruto, however, was completely lost. "Uh? Stone Tablet? What stone tablet?"

"It will be better to directly show you," Itachi decided. "Let's move this conversation somewhere else, shall we?"

The others nodded. Naruto raised an eyebrow.

...

Uchiha Training Ground, a few minutes later

"You still keep a private training ground?" Naruto asked, as he walked alongside the Uchihis through the field of grass, heading towards a small forest. "I thought you gave all the old Uchiha properties to the village as a compensation for the insurrection."

"We did, but Hokage-sama allowed us to keep this training ground," Itachi replied. "Given how far from the village they usually are, nobody would be interested in building anything here, so there wouldn't be any money to be made."

"We dug an underground chamber below this field to store all our clan secrets and knowledge, once we no longer had the compound," Shisui explained. "Though what we're looking for isn't underground."

"In fact, we're already here," Shizune announced.

The group were now standing in a small clearing surrounded by the middle of the clearing, surrounded by thick rope held by four stakes forming a square, there was a large stone tablet with several characters carved upon its surface.

"So, this is the stone tablet?" Naruto asked to no one in particular. Sasuke grunted something the blond took as a "yes". He tried to read the tablet's inscription, but was unable to do so. "Do you guys understand what it says? It's like a bunch of gibberish to me."

"Naturally. The cyphers of the Stone Tablet can only be translated by a Sharingan," Shisui replied.

"The Mangekyo Sharingan allows to translate it even further. And even then, there are still parts that not even the Mangekyo can fully read," Itachi continued.

"Which led me to believe that we need the Rinnegan to translate it completely," Sasuke finished.

"I see. And what does the tablet says?" Naruto asked.

"Mostly secrets regarding the Uchiha Clan, and the Sharingan," Itachi began. "How the Sharingan works, how the Mangekyo Sharingan can be achieved, how it can be used to put Tailed Beasts under one's control, as well as other powers."

"However, there's this line here, it says 'two opposing forces work together to form all things in the universe'," Shisui said.

"Sounds rather vague," Naruto pointed out.

"It is. This line has been the subject of much discussion among the Uchiha clan. Many thought that the two opposing forces were them and the Senju, and believed that if they stopped fighting the Senju and formed an alliance with them, happiness could be found," Shisui explained. "Madara Uchiha, however, believed it meant something else. Many of his clansmen thought that he was just blinded by his hatred of the Senju."

"However, the information you brought to us has shed a new light over the debate," Itachi interjected. "It's possible that this line alludes to the possibility of awakening the Rinnegan, by merging the Yin and Yang halves of the Six Paths Chakra Uchiha and Senju have, respectively."

"Thank goodness I'm not a Senju by birth. Having to raise two children that can awaken the power of a god..." Shizune shivered at the thought. "No thanks!"

"Think how well they would do in the Chunin Exams, though," Shisui joked, laughing a little.

"Then again, I believe in the first interpretation. When the Senju and the Uchiha buried the hatchet and formed Konoha, it was the best for everybody, right?" Shizune suggested, as her face became a little more solemn. "And... sorry for reopening old wounds, but when the Uchiha rebelled and tried to subdue their former friends and allies..." Shizune left the sentence unfinished, but the message was more than clear.

"Don't worry. If there's a silver lining to this, is that future generations of Uchiha will learn from their ancestor's mistakes, and won't have to go through the same suffering," Itachi replied.

"By the way, guys, where did you find this stone tablet? Who wrote it in the first place?" Naruto asked.

"Nobody knows. It has been in our clan since pretty much forever," Shisui replied. "Some said that it was the Sage of the Six Paths himself who wrote it to guide the Uchiha. It was believed to be just nonsense, but given what we now know... it may as well be true."

"Wonder if the Sage left another tablet for the Senju or the Uzumaki," Naruto mused. "Anyway, now that you know the history of your clan... what do you plan to do?"

"Probably the same thing we've been doing so far. Living our lives, becoming the best ninjas we can be," Itachi replied, shrugging a little. "And continue undoing the damage our fallen brethren did to the village."

"Though now that we know about the Curse of Hatred, we'll do our best to overcome it," Shisui added.

"Yeah. Plus, I refuse to let some old guy who died centuries ago to dictate my life, Uchiha ancestor or not," Sasuke firmly stated.

Naruto smiled a little. "Glad to hear that," Naruto then turned around, and realized that the sun was starting to set. "Whoa, I didn't realize it was so late! I have to go to the Hyuga Compound!"

"Late for a date with Hinata, Naruto-kun?" Shizune asked, giggling a little.

"Even better! Hinata is going to be named Head of the Hyuga Clan!" Naruto enthusiastically announced as he ran away.

"... say what?"

...

Hyuga State, an hour later

Hanabi stirred in the couch, blinking slowly, groaning as she slowly woke up.

"You're finally awake, Hanabi-chan," Hinata said, smiling. She was sitting on the couch besides her, with Hanabi's legs resting on her lap.

"I had the weirdest dream ever," Hanabi groaned as she sit up, rubbing her eyes with the back of her hand.

"What kind of dream?" Hinata asked, though she could imagine the answer.

"It had some weird old man with horns, and glowing eyes, kinda like yours," Hanabi explained, trying to recall the rather vivid dream. "He said something about how now I had a great power and that I had to be responsible with it. Sounds like a rather cliché line from a comic book."

"There's more truth to those words than what you think, Hanabi-chan," Hinata replied, as she handed her sister a compact mirror.

Feeling a bit agitated by such action, Hanabi opened the mirror and looked at her reflection. She yelped, and instinctively dropped the mirror. "My eyes! What happened to my eyes!? They're like-" she stopped, before noticing Hinata looking at her. "... like yours."

"Yes. Your Byakugan is a Tenseigan now. An ascended form that will grant you an array of new and powerful abilities," Hinata explained.

"Wow..." Hanabi said in awe. "And how did I manage to do that? Hey, wait a second! What you did before I fell asleep... !"

Hinata nodded. "Yes. I transferred some of my Six Paths Chakra so you could awaken it. While not much, your body will now generate more Six Paths Chakra so the amount you possess will match mine."

Hanabi tilted her head. "Six Paths Chakra?"

"It's a bit complicated. You see-"

That moment, the door of the living room slid open, and Hikari walked in. "Oh, Hanabi, you're awake already. And look at that, with a Tenseigan as well," Hikari smiled. "And just in time. The whole clan is gathered outside. Time to make the announcement."

"Announcement? What announcement?" Hanabi asked.

Hikari couldn't help but smile knowingly. "You'll see soon."

...

When Naruto arrived at the Hyuga State, there was a huge crowd of Hyugas formed in the front patio. However, despite his initial fear, he realized that the announcement hasn't been made yet, much to his relief. Even if deep down he knew Hinata would forgive him, he wouldn't, and he didn't want to miss his girlfriend's big day.

Naruto wasn't alone. He made sure to bring both Haku and Kurenai with him, so the whole Assasult Squad could be present for the announcement.

"You know, Naruto," Kurenai began. "When you told me Hinata was going to be made Clan Head, I was rather skeptical, but seeing this crowd, well, it supports your claims."

"You didn't see Hinata-san after we returned from our latest mission, did you, Kurenai-sensei?" Haku asked. The Genjutsu Mistress shook her head. "Let's say that Hinata came from that mission more changed than anybody else."

"We'll explain you after we're done with this, because you just can't imagine what Hinata is now," Naruto cryptically said, visibly enjoying his sensei's confusion.

At that moment, the murmurs of the gathered Hyugas -and few guests- came to a halt when the state's main doors slid open, revealing the current Clan Head Hikari, flanked by her two daughters. The murmurs began once again when everybody noticed the blue and white glowing eyes the Hyuga sisters were sporting now.

Hikari cleared her throat before she started speaking. "My esteemed clansmen, both Main and Branch houses, thanks for heeding my call and gathering here. There's an important announcement that I need to make.

"But before I do, I have to explain a certain series of recent developments, in order to give all of you the context of the situation. As you probably know by their presence, our clan is now housing a group of religious scholars known as the Order of the Moon Acolytes. Said Acolytes possess numerous hystorical records and tresures regarding our clan and its past. Among those, is the ability to elevate the Byakugan to a higher level, called the Tenseigan."

The murmurs became suddenly louder when Hikari made such announcement. Even if some Hyugas made questions regarding it, the Hyuga matriarch chose to ignore them.

"Before you ask, yes. My daughters have awakened the Tenseigan. So far, due their lineage, they're the only ones capable of doing it," Hikari continued. Her explanation wasn't entirely true, but felt it should be for the better to keep the whole truth of the Tenseigan under wraps for them time being. "Hinata and Hanabi now possess a power not just beyond any Hyuga, but beyond most ninjas as well. All they need now is proper training in order to master that power."

"We've recently discovered that our clan are descendants of another clan named Otsutsuki. Like us, they also had a Byakugan, and their family was structured into a Main and Branch houses. And their leader was always somebody who possessed a Tenseigan."

"And, to honor such ancient tradition, and due the fact that both my daughters have surpassed me in terms of power, I have made a decision. I hereby step down from my position as the Hyuga Clan Head. Now everybody, give a warm welcome to our new Clan Head, my eldest daughter, Hinata Hyuga!"

Naturally, the news weren't met with cheers and celebrations. Hinata wasn't popular among Main House members due her opposition to most of the clan's traditions and hierarchy. And even if she was popular among Branch House members, they still considered her too young to be a proper leader.

Hikari moved aside, and let Hinata take the spot she was occupying.

"Thank you, mother," Hinata then turned at the large group in front of her, made mostly of her clansmen. "Like my mother told you, we recently discovered the true history of our clan. They had similar customs and traditions as ours, in order to make sure a few members had absolute power over the rest. Said customs led them to their downfall, and we will follow the same path, if we don't change.

"After many centuries, our clan finally recovered the Tenseigan, a power that was lost during the Otsutsuki Clan's downfall in the past. And as its wielder, it's my responsibility to use this great power for the whole clan's interest and well being.

"And thus, my first decree as the new Clan Head is to abolish the separation between Main and Branch houses. Application of the Caged Bird Seal shall be banned for future members, and while I'm looking for a way to remove the existing seals, any Main House member that is caught using the Cage Bird Seal to threaten, coerce or cause pain to a Branch House member will suffer harsh consequences."

Naturally, the effect was immediate. While the many Branch House members started to cheer and sing the praises of their new clan head, most Main House members started to protest loudly.

"You can't do that!"

"You'll tear the clan apart!"

"This will end in a disaster!"

Suddenly, Hinata's eyes flashed white for a second, as she send a pulse of chakra. The air became much heavier, and everybody felt as if Hinata's eyes were piercing their very souls. Everybody was silenced upon realizing the sheer power the new Clan Head possessed. Hikari wasn't exaggerating. Opposing her wouldn't be wise.

"Do you question the decisions of our Clan Head?" Hikari smugly asked.

"But... Hinata-sama," a middle aged Main House member began, sounding more pleading than demanding. "The Caged Bird Seal is a crucial tool to stop our enemies from acquiring the Byakugan. What will we do then?"

"What other clans with Bloodline Limits do: push ourselves harder and grow stronger. The stronger we are, the less chances our enemies will have to steal our eyes," Hinata sharply said. "The Hyuga had always prided in being one of the strongest clans of Konoha. Let's show everybody that we can back those boasts."

"You can't do this!" another Main House member, a woman, protested. "Clan Head or not, you can't change our ancient traditions on a whim!"

"I think Hinata made it clear that there will be consequences for those who oppose her," Hikari replied the woman.

"So if we refuse, she will impose her will by force? What a tyrant your oh so meek and gentle daughter turned out to be when she got some power handed to her," the woman scoffed

Hikari was about to protest, but Hinata beat her to the punch. "Tyrant? Imposing my will by force? Isn't that what the Main House has been doing to the Branch House for generations?"

The woman opened her mouth to reply, but no words came from it. She closed it, hesitating, as if trying to come up with a proper argument to refute Hinata's claims. She mumbled something, but eventually shut up.

"That's what I thought. If any of you think I'm abusing my both authority and my new power, feel free to express your concerns to me. But before doing so, I want you to realize that this is how the Branch House members have felt their whole lives," Hinata replied, resting her eyes on them. "In fact, I don't see them complaining about my decisions or calling me a tyrant."

This made the Main House members realize that they were both outnumbered and overpowered. The Branch House was the majority of the clan, and if Hinata had their support, on top of the incredible power she now possessed, her rule would be pretty much uncontested.

"For the time being, that will be all," Hinata said. "More changes are bound to come in the near future. I know the Hyuga Clan values tradition, but hopefully in time you'll see that these changes are for the better, and you'll agree with me as well. You're dismissed."

The murmurs began once again as the crowd gathered in the patio started to slowly dissolve. Hinata's teammates, however, remained there.

"... was that Hinata? The same Hinata that has been my student?" a flabbergasted Kurenai asked. "She radiated so much..."

"Power?" Naruto finished.

"Confidence," Kurenai corrected. "I mean, Hinata did grew more confident over time, but such jump in attitude was quite the shock."

"Hinata-san always tried to put the more beligerent clan members in their place, and now she has the power to do so," Haku added.

"Don't worry. Deep down, she's still the same kind person we know and love."

...

A few minutes later, Hinata, Hikari, and Hanabi returned to the living room.

"So... how did I do?" Hinata unsurely asked.

"That was amazing! I've never seen you being so assertive!" Hanabi excitedly praised.

"Don't you think I exceeded myself?" Hinata asked once again.

"Not in the 're the Clan Head now, you should show them who's in charge," Hikari firmly stated. "By the way, I loved what you did with that chakra pulse. A really good way to let those idiots know who were dealing with."

"Speaking of which... mother, you still haven't told me what are my responsibilities now that I'm the one in charge," Hinata asked.

"Don't worry about that. For the time being, I'll continue doing the boring part of the job. All you have to do is to make sure change can finally happen within the clan," Hikari replied.

"By the way, mother, if you wanted the Caged Bird Seal gone, why you didn't abolish it yourself?" Hanabi asked.

"It's not that simple, sweetie. As you can see, most of the Main House opposed its abolition, and if a Clan Head tried to eliminate it by force, the whole clan would fall into chaos," Hikari explained.

"But with Hinata-nee-chan is different," Hanabi concluded. "Is because of the Tenseigan?"

Hikari nodded. "Though it's not just because of the power. Both you and Hinata are the first persons in literally centuries to awaken a higher form of the Byakugan that most of us thought it was just a myth. Your place in the clan is too important to earn your enmity. Imagine if the Sage of the Six Paths appeared and asked to be made Hokage. I doubt anybody would turn down such request."

"But I'm not the Sage of the Six Paths," Hinata protested.

"No, but you have the same eyes his brother once had, if what you and Nori-san told me it's true," Hikari cheekily replied. "Yes, some clansmen will call you a tyrant, but don't listen to them. You're doing something great, and you will have my support."

"And mine too!" Hanabi chimed in. "And if you feel that using your power against them is wrong... remember that I also have a Tenseigan, but I'm not the Clan Head." Hanabi said with an evil giggle, as she punched her palm for added emphasis.

"Hanabi-chan!"

"Joking! I was just joking! Sheesh!" Hanabi protested, holding her hands defensively. "I was totally not joking," Hanabi added under her breath.

"By the way, I saw your teammates outside during the announcement. How about if we invite them to have dinner for us, to celebrate your appointment?" Hikari suggested.

Hinata smiled warmly. "I'd love it."

...

Outskirt of Takigakure, a month later

Hidden within the thick forests that surrounded the Village of Takigakure, there was a large army that waited the order to move on. Said army was rather diverse, ranging from thugs unable to use chakra, ninja mercenaries, missing ninja whose strength ranged from Genin to low Jonin, and finally robe-wearing religious cultist whose entire skin was dyed in black and white, with skeletal patterns.

Commanding this army were two members of Akatsuki, Hidan and Kakuzu. They've been spending the last few weeks gathering this army to assault Takigakure. Most of them would die, but the Akatsuki cared very little for their eventual fate.

"The troops are ready to fight," Hidan said, as he walked towards his partner. "I can already smell all the blood that's going to be spilled today. Jashin-sama will be pleased."

"Make sure you and the lunatics that follow you do your job. And remember, do not harm the jinchuriki," Kakuzu stressed.

Hidan rolled his eyes, and groaned loudly. How many times did Kakuzu need to remind him that? As far as his tenure in Akatsuki go, he didn't kill any jinchuriki yet. Even then, the cultist decided not to answer that.

"Yeah, yeah, whatever," Hidan dismissively said. "So, this is your former village, right? I'm sure you can't wait to burn this shithole to the ground."

"While I try to keep personal feelings away from business, I'm going to admit that yes, I'm going to enjoy this mission in particular," Kakuzu confessed.

Hidan's grin formed a sadistic grin. "Then what are we waiting for?"

"Very well. Send the attack order."

Hidan couldn't repress a glee upon thinking in the incoming battle. Soon, the world will be one ninja village down, and Akatsuki will have one more Tailed Beast in their power.

Author's Note: And thus concludes the Byakugan Princess arc. I've been waiting to write and publish this arc since the moment I uploaded the first chapter, but alas, I just couldn't give Hinata the Tenseigan when she was still in the Academy. As you could see, this chapter was mostly exposition and characters recovering from the intensity of the two previous episodes. Still,

I hope you enjoyed Hinata's ascension to clan head, and how she started to make things better for the Branch House.

Next chapter will begin my take on the Hidan and Kakuzu arc, which will also bring back an old fan favorite, Fu! Who's also a favorite of mine as well. It's been a while since she last appeared, huh? Tournament arcs, like the Chunin Exams, are popular because they not only allow, but demand the author to use a lot of characters at once, and sadly, other arcs are much more restrictive, so sometimes several characters might go for quite some time without any major appearances or contributions to the story.

Thanks a lot fro grimlock987 for betareading this chapter.

So, what are your thoughts on this chapter and the arc as a whole? And what do you expect to see in the next arc? Tell me in a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Fall of Taki

Author's Note: Against my expectations, the Byakugan Princess arc was a success. I'm glad you guys liked it so much. Hell, some of you were even disappointed that it ended after just three chapters. I'll try to make sure all the future original arcs are just as good as this one.

So now, let's start a new arc with a returning fan favorite (and personal favorite): Fu! Who didn't appear since... chapter 31? She's been absent for almost 30 chapters? Damn, that's almost half the story so far! Good thing this arc will fix such thing. Enjoy :

Chapter 59:

The Fall of Taki

or

Clipped Wings

Takigakure

"It's not fair!" Fu whined to no one in particular.

The green haired jinchuriki was lying on a large branch of the village's Great Tree, looking at the sky through the small gaps left between the tree's leaves. She let out a loud snort, as if that somehow would relieve if her boredom.

She went through all the troubles of taking an S-Rank mission so she could get a several days permit afterwards, that she was planning to use to travel to Konoha, and get to see her friends again, and most importantly, her boyfriend. It's been three months since the last time she saw him, and while she enjoyed reading his letters, it was just not the same.

But then Shibuki said: "No, it's too risky letting you leave the village alone. And I can't afford an escort right now."

"Why don't you make up a reason to justify me sending me there?" Fu had suggested.

But Shibuki denied her request, saying along the lines of "I'm not going to make that mistake again", and that, since no Taki Genin team made it to the finals, there was no reason for any Taki ninja to be in Konoha. Meaning goodbye seeing the Chunin Exams, goodbye laughing with her friends, and goodbye making out with Shino.

She thought that earning a promotion to Jonin would show Shibuki her strength and thus result in more freedom, but how wrong she was. Despite her rank, she was never allowed to leave the village alone, not even for missions, which she always had to do under the watch of her babysitters -or "escorts", as Shibuki called them- despite the fact that she had grown way more powerful than most of the ninjas the village leader assigned as her squadmates.

What was the point of being a Jonin then? Sure, the Jonin paycheck was sweet, and allowed her to buy anything she wanted, but that's about it. No matter what she did, it would never stop Shibuki from treating her as a delicate porcelain doll that has to be protected at all time.

"I might as well ask Shibuki for a mission," she concluded. "Free days are rather boring if you have no friends to spend with."

Yes, that should do. Preferably, a mission that involved going to the Land of Fire. Maybe that way, she could take a small detour to Konoha, and pay a brief visit to her friends, and her boyfriend.

Little did she knew that her wishes were going to come true, and the price she had to pay for them.

Deciding to stop wasting more time, Fu jumped to her feet, spread her wings, and flew towards Shibuki's office. She didn't pay attention to the buildings and people below her - while watching the village from the sky was incredible the first few times, it ended up losing its awe. That's it, until several screams caught her attention.

"Huh?" she said, as she unconsciously moved towards the source of the commotion. She narrowed eyes. "Is that... a fight?"

Flying closer, Fu realized that she was right. There were several ninja invaders attacking her comrades, while others escorted the civilians to a safer place. She was unable to see where the invaders came from, since she was too high in the air to properly see their forehead protectors. At least, of those who carried them.

"Where did those guys came from?" she asked.

She got her answer when she saw that the enemy ninjas were coming from the lake, where one of the entrances to the village was.

" But said entrances are top secret, and only Takigakure ninjas know about them..." Fu thought, as distress started to manifest within her. She forced herself to stop wondering about how such thing could happen. She could care about that later. Now she needed to put a stop to it. "I think I should help them... no, wait, I should tell Shibuki first! Then he can alert the village of the attack!"

Flying as fast as he could, the green haired girl zoomed into the center of the village, and in a few seconds, she burst through Shibuku's office's -thankfully- open window.

"WHOA!" the young leader of Taki shouted, startled by Fu's sudden entrance. "Fu, what the hell!?"

"Sorry, but there's no time! We are under attack!" an alarmed Fu told him. "Come on, you have to mobilize everybody!"

"Shibuki-sama!" a Taki ninja burst into the office, kunai in hand, ready to attack anybody who would dare to harm his leader. "What was that noise? Are you alri- oh, it was Fu."

"Calm down, Fu!" Shibuki told her. "What are you saying about being attacked?"

"What does it need to be said? Enemy ninja are entering the village! They found about the secret passageways! Come on, come on, come on, come on, come on!" Fu urged, jumping up and down.

What Fu said was beyond unlikely. But she looked really distressed and frantic. And, eccentric as she was, she wouldn't lie about something so serious as an invasion for the sake of playing a prank. Shibuki's eyes rested on the ninja who had burst into the office shortly after Fu, who was still in the door.

"It seems that an enemy force had found one of the secret entrances to the village, and we're being invaded. Spread the news and make sure everybody's ready to defend the village. I'll join you shortly," Shibuki calmly ordered.

"Yes, Shibuki-sama!" the ninja obediently replied as he left the room, slamming the door behind him.

"Fu, how many enemies did you see?" Shibuki asked the mint haired girl.

"I didn't have time to count them, but they were a bunch! And more were coming from the lake, so there might be even more right now!" Fu stated.

"Okay. Knowing you, I was afraid that you'd rush into battle, but I'm glad you did the right thing, and came here to warn me first. Now, while we fight, find a safe place to-"

"NO!" Fu yelled, interrupting his leader. "Don't even dare to finish that sentence! Taki is my home, and I want to help to protect it!"

Shibuki sighed wearily. "Fu, we talked about this. You're too important for the village. If what you said is right, things are going to get dangerous, and you may die."

"I know that! But I'm a ninja, for Kami's sake! A jonin! Hell, I'm sure I'm even stronger than you! What's the point of letting me be one in the first place, if you aren't going to put my abilities to use?" the jinchuriki protested.

Shibuki sighed again. He had no time to waste arguing with Fu. And if he made her relent, deep down he knew she'd disobey him anyway and join the fight. Besides, she wasn't entirely wrong when she talked about her strength and skill.

"Alright, but make sure you stay at my side at all times, understood? I don't want you to go on your own and get killed," Shibuki warned her.

The green haired girl's previous outrage disappeared, replaced by her usual sunny disposition. She flashed him a confident grin as she gave him a thumbs up.

"You got it, Shibuki! We'll cover each other's backs!" Fu happily said. "Now, to battle!"

Shibuki didn't share Fu's almost careless enthusiasm and optimism. For some reason, the young Taki leader had a very bad feeling about this.

...

Kakuzu had disappeared to do some "intelligence gathering", as he called it, leaving Hidan in charge of leading the initial assault. Kunai and shuriken flew through the air, some of them hitting thin air, but most of them finding their marks. Invaders and defenders traded elemental ninjutsu while others engaged their opponents in hand to hand combat.

From what Kakuzu had told him, Takigakure was a very small village, but they managed to stay afloat thanks to the quality of the ninjas they produced, which were almost as skilled as those that came from the Great Villages, but could be hired at an overall considerably cheaper price. The downside, however, was that due their low number of ninjas they couldn't take as many missions as other more populated villages.

And so far, such thing was proving to be true. Despite the rabble Kakuzu had gathered, plus Hidan's own cultists outnumbering the Taki ninjas, they were having a very hard time pressing their advance.

"Come on, you weak-ass shitheads! Fight a bit harder! Janshin-sama demands it!" Hidan hollered, as he skewered a Takigakure Chunin with his three bladed scythe.

His commands fell into deaf ears, and Kakuzu's fools kept dying. Oh well, it's not that he cared about their fate. Kakuzu himself admitted that these thugs were mostly fodder whose purpose was to wear down Takigakure's defenses. Until Kakuzu returned, he had to make sure the plan went as followed. Hidan rushed forward, and leaped into the air. Several shuriken flew towards him, but he skillfully parried them using his scythe. He landed in the middle of a cluster of enemies, as he started to cut them down.

"Those cloaks... Akatsuki!" a Taki ninja pointed out in fear.

"They must have come for our jinchuriki!" another one cried.

"Then we won't let them! Come on, attack, all at once!" a third one, braver than the first two, stated, as he charged forward.

"Yes, come and attack me, you fucking heathens! Jashin-sama is thirsty for the blood of the nonbelievers!" Hidan shouted, as he laughed maniacally while skewering more Taki ninja coming at him. "Let's step up our game! Brothers, summon the Sons of Janshin!"

"Yes, Hidan-sama!" the Jashin cultists chorused at once.

Hidan's acolytes spread in groups of three and four, focusing on a single Taki ninja each, and isolated them, before ganging on them. But the cultists didn't kill them. They only hurt them enough so they wouldn't be able to defend themselves. However, those poor Taki ninjas would wish they were given a quick death instead, since once they could no longer fight, they were placed on their backs on the ground, and the cultist would use their own blood to draw demonic symbols around them in a circle. And finally, the cultist would weave the same chain of hand signs, completing the process.

"Demonic Summoning: Sons of Janshin!"

Suddenly, the ninjas used for the strange rituals were invaded by a nauseating feeling. As if something appeared inside them, and started to quickly grow. A massive pain got hold of them as whatever was eating their bodies from the inside out grew bigger, until they burst from their chests, killing them almost instantly.

The other Taki ninjas watched in horror how creatures that they've never seen before emerged from their deceased comrades' bodies, like a macabre childbirth. The creatures were of many sizes, ranging from as small as a housecat to as big as a tall person. Each of them had a different number of limbs, all of them ending in long, sharp claws. Some of them didn't have eyes, while others had multiple eyes all over their bodies. The only thing they had in common were their inky, dark blue skin, and their huge mouths full of razor sharp teeth.

"Behold, heathens, the Sons of our mighty lord, Janshin-sama!" a cultist screamed. "Let them fill your hearts with pain and terror, and rejoice!"

Without needing to be ordered, the demonic aberrations lunged in disorderly fashion at the Taki ninjas, who tried to protect themselves as good as they could. But between the numerical advantage of the invaders and the damage these abominations were doing, soon they found themselves forced to fall back.

"Yes! Now you'll see Janshin-sama in all his glo-" Hidan gloated, before he was being interrupted by a Taki ninja impaling his chest with a large sword. He shot the attacker an annoyed look. "Didn't your bitch of a mother teach you that interrupting someone who's speaking is rude as fuck?"

"H-How...? I impaled your heart!" the Taki ninja stammered.

"BECAUSE I'M FUCKING IMMORTAL!" Hidan yelled, as he pulled the sword out of his chest, and stabbed it into the Taki ninja's gut. "This knife's yours, by the way, I don't want it!"

"It seems you're having quite the time here," a deep, monotone voice said. Hidan turned around, and noticed Kakuzu standing besides him. "However, your fun has to end. I've located the jinchuriki."

"Oh well. As long as I get to use my ritual with something worthy of sacrifice, it will almost make up for the pain in the ass that it's not to kill the jinchuriki," Hidan replied.

"I'd suggest the leader of the village, but I need him alive, since the reward for his head is greater that way. However, I'm sure that god of yours will find any of his bodyguards worthy. From what I know, despite being the leader, Shibuki isn't a particularly strong ninja," Kakuzu told him. Hidan's unnerving grin was all the answer he needed. "Meaning that I'll take care of both him and the jinchuriki. You take care of the rest."

"Whatever. Can we go now?" Hidan impatiently asked.

With that last warning, both Akatsuki vanished in a blur, like two predators ready to hunt their preys.

...

Meanwhile, not far away from there, Shibuki, Fu, and other Taki ninjas -most of them Shibuki's bodyguards-, were fighting with all they had against the mercenaries, thugs and cultists that were swarming the small village.

"Water Release: Water Blade Jutsu!"

A sword made of pure water appeared in the young Taki leader's hand, as he engaged a couple missing-nin in melee combat, who were easily pushed back. "These thugs are nothing but rabble! There must be somebody leading the attack! If we take him down, we'll win half the battle!"

"Yes, Shibuki-sama!" his escorts chorused in unison.

"More enemies incoming!" one of the Jonin, a middle aged broad man with a thick moustache warned, pointing to a group of thugs coming towards them. "Ninjas and... what the hell is that!?"

Along with the enemy ninjas, there were what appeared to be some kind of near skeletal, inhuman inky creatures with sharp teeth, claws and either lots of eyes across their bodies, or no eyes at all.

"I'll take care of it!" Fu happily said as she leaped into the air, while wounding her fist back. "Takigakure Whirlwind!"

Fu landed in the middle of the arriving group, her fist slamming into the ground. The force of the impact alone produced a shockwave in every direction, which in turn created a powerful tornado around her, hurling the enemy ninjas and monsters away in every direction.

Unlike the human opponents, the inhuman monstrosities recovered rather quickly from Fu's initial assault, and quickly stood back to their feet, and charged at the jinchuriki, letting out high pitched, inhuman screeches.

"Want for more? Suit yourself!" a small tornado enveloped Fu's fists. "Hurricane Punch!"

Fu punched the first of the Sons of Janshin with such force, it was literally vaporized, producing a loud booming noise. The Wind Chakra, as well as the force of the punch created quick but powerful bursts of wind that knocked the other demons back. Undeterred by their siblings' death, the rest of the demons charged again, with predictable results.

"Whoa, that bitch's strong!" a loud voice said.

"Indeed she is. So you better get ready, since that's the jinchuriki," a deeper voice replied.

Everybody froze when the newcomers revealed Fu's jinchuriki status so casually. Suddenly, two men wearing Akatsuki cloaks landed in front of them. Remembering Naruto's words about the organization, Fu instinctively took a few step backwards, closer to Shibuki and his group.

"I mean..." the Akatsuki with the red scythe narrowd his eyes at Fu. "That's a girl, right? Because damn, she's so fucking jacked, she almost looks like a dude."

"Look like a dude? I'll show you-!" Fu snarled as she stomped forward, but she was grabbed by the shoulder by a fellow Taki ninja.

"Remember, Hidan, leave the Jinchuriki and Shibuki to me. Do with the others whatever you please," the masked Akatsuki reminded his partner.

"Hey, I think I know you... you're Kakuzu, our village's most infamous missing-nin!" Fu said, pointing a finger at him.

"K-Kakuzu? It can't be!" Shibuki cried, as fear started to creep into his body. If Kakuzu was the leader of this attack, then things would get way harder than Shibuki had expected.

"After you failed to assassinate the First Hokage, you murdered the village elders and stole Taki's secret kinjutsu!" Fu recalled, sounding oddly excited. "There's only one reason you came back here!"

Kakuzu chuckled under his mask. "So, it seems today's youth still know about me. I should feel flattered. That's right, girl, I'm back, and that's because-"

"You regret your past crimes and want to ask for the village's forgiveness!" Fu finished.

A moment of silence followed Fu's optimistic statement. Kakuzu blinked a few times, not knowing how to answer that.

"Kakuzu... is she mentally retarded?" Hidan asked.

This seemed to snap Kakuzu back to reality. "No, girl, none of that it's true. This village betrayed me, all what I did next was a fair retribution. And my reason to be here is to capture you and extract the Tailed Beast sealed inside you."

"Of course, if Akatsuki lead the attack, they're clearly after Fu," Shibuki thought. "But they're smart. They brought a large attack force so we're forced to divert our ninjas to defend the village, and they have an easier time capturing Fu. It also explains how do they know how to access the village."

"Kakuzu? Impossible! Somebody that old can't still be a ninja!" a Taki ninja with red short hair cried.

"He can, thanks to the forbidden jutsu he stole when he left the village," Shibuki explained. "I don't know exactly what it does, but he can harvest the heart of his defeated enemies to both prolong his lifespan, stay in his prime, and acquire their strenght."

"I see that you're well informed, Shibuki-kun," Kakuzu replied.

"Shibuki-sama, you need to take Fu to a safe place. We'll hold the Akatsuki as much as we can," one of the Jonin, a woman holding a large sword with blond hair tied in a short ponytail told Shibuki.

"I can't ask you to do that! Kakuzu is by far the strongest ninja this village has ever produced! And we don't even know what his partner can do!" Shibuki protested.

However, his warnings fell on deaf ears as one of his Jonin, a man in his thirties with a buzzcut, dashed forward. "Go now! I'll create an opening!" the man said, tossing a shuriken, and making several hand seals. "Shadow Shuriken Clone Jutsu!"

The lone shuriken turned into several dozens. Hidan, however, smirked, and tossed his scythe forward. Using the thick cable it was attached to, he made it maneuver and spin so it would easily deflect all the shuriken away.

"Damn, now I have no choice!" Shibuki cursed inwardly as he grabbed Fu by the forearm, and started to run, pulling her. "Come on Fu, we need to leave!"

"Whoa, wait!" Fu protested, as she allowed herself to be dragged by her leader. "Aren't we going to fight?"

"They're after you! We need to take you to a safe place!" Shibuki told her.

"You're open right now!" the woman with the large sword said, dashing forward. Her sword started to glow with a blue light as chakra was channeled through it, before she made an slashing motion. "Flying Chakra Blades!"

The released chakra took the shape of crescent shaped energy blades that flew at the Akatsuki. However, Hidan merely smirked, as he easily jumped above the incoming attack, while pulling the cable down. His scythe came down towards her, however, she was able to parry it with her long sword.

"Himiko!" the Taki ninja with the buzzcut replied.

"I'm okay, Tadashi!" Himiko replied, as she struggled against the scythe. "Quickly, attack him now!"

The redheaded Jonin was about to do so, until he noticed something. "Hey, where did Kakuzu go?"

Meanwhile, not far away from there, Shibuki was taking Fu to one of the secret emergency exits the village had for evacuations. The fact that no enemies were coming from that direction meant that the Akatsuki weren't aware about it. They managed to make it out of the village, and were heading the edge of the island lake.

"Shibuki, we should stay and fight! If we help the others, we can-" Fu protested.

"No, it's too risky!" Shibuki replied. "We cannot allow them to get their hands on you! You're too important! I need to protect you at all costs!"

Unfortunately, their escape was cut short by Kakuzu violently landing in front of them, opening a crater, and raising a large cloud of dirt and dust when his feet hit the ground.

"Protect her? Please. From what I know about you two, she's the one who needs to protect you," Kakuzu said in a condescending tone, as he walked towards them.

"Fu, stay behind me!" Shibuki insisted, as he took a step forward.

"No!" Fu protested once again. "He's right! You're no rival for him! But if we fight together, we might have a chance!"

"If I'm allowed to give my opinion, you should listen to her, Shibuki-kun," Kakuzu interjected. "Not that it will change the result of this fight, but it's indeed the most intelligent way of dealing with me."

Suddenly, much to Kakuzu's surprise, Fu vanished behind his very eyes. The Akatsuki barely had time to jump away before Fu's fist came down, hitting the ground, opening a large crater that send chunks of rock and dirt everywhere.

"You are... ridiculously strong," Kakuzu observed.

"You have no idea!" Fu replied, as she sank her other fist inside the former Taki ninja's gut. However, Kakuzu burst into smoke, leaving a log in his place, which instantly shattered upon receiving the brunt of Fu's attack. "Shit!"

The ground beneath her fist cracked, and Kakuzu burst from below just as fast, hitting Fu's lower jaw with a powerful punch. The mint haired girl was sent flying backwards in an arc, before landing with a thud.

"But I'm still stronger," Kakuzu confidently stated.

"FU!" Shibuki cried, as he dashed towards Kakuzu, his water sword above his head. He brought his sword down upon the unmoving ninja in a vertical slash, but much to his shock, Kakuzu caught his makeshift weapon with just one hand. "What?"

Kakuzu's hand darkened, and squeezed the water sword with greater force, making it burst into dozens of water droplets that splashed both Shibuki and the ground below.

"You should know that Earth beats Water. Though with the gap between us, elemental advantages become irrelevant," Kakuzu said, as he delivered a brutal kick to Shibuki's gut, sending him flying a few meters backwards. "This was even easier than-"

The masked Akatsuki was interrupted mid sentence by another equally brutal kick, this time to the side of his head, which also send him flying a few meters, before painfully landing on the ground. After getting on his feet, Kakuzu saw that it was Fu who had attacked him.

"You are even stronger than I had initially assessed," Kakuzu admitted.

"I'm even stronger than that," Fu said, as she rubbed her pained jaw.

"I find that doubtful. But then again, I do not seek to kill you, and beating an enemy while holding back makes the fight complicated. However, I wouldn't be the best bounty hunter in the elemental nations if I lacked skill," Kakuzu said, as he made several hand seals. "Earth Release: Earth Dragon Bullets!"

Mud started to gather in front of Kakuzu, and it took the shape of a dragon head. The dragon opened its jaws, and fired a quick barrage of mud bullets. Fu then deployed her wings, and flew high in the air. The dragon head continued firing mud bullets at her, but her flight gave her more room to dodge than an earthbound target.

"And she can fly too. This task is becoming more complicated by the moment..." Kakuzu groaned.

Meanwhile, Shibuki managed to get back on his feet. Despite the brutal kick, he could still fight, even if he was sure he had a broken rib.

"One hit... that's all what he needed to take me out," Shibuki moaned in pain, as his hand reached his ninja tool pouch. "He's right. The difference between him and me is too big. Fortunately, I have the means to bridge that gap!"

In his hand there was a vial with a glowing blue liquid.

"The boost from this amount of Hero Water should be enough to deal with Kakuzu, with the backlash not being so big as not to survive it..." Shibuki said to himself, as he downed the contents of the vial in one go.

The effect were almost instant. He felt all the pain disappearing from his body, being replaced by a powerful wave of energy. He felt his bones strengthening, and his muscles swelling up a little. His chakra became so strong, it manifested in the form of a blue aura all around his body. Yes, with this power, he and Fu would be able to take down Akatsuki.

"KAKUZU!" Shibuki yelled as he dashed towards the Akatsuki. While some might think it was stupid to waste the surprise factor like that, the young leader wanted to draw his attention away from Fu.

"Oh? You're still alive?" Kakuzu nonchalantly deadpanned, as he moved his body a little, so his back pointed to neither Fu nor Shibuki. However, he was forced to focus on Shibuki the moment the young man assaulted him with a flurry of punches and kicks. While unrefined and not that hard to block or dodge, they moved much faster and packed far more power than before. "What? How did you become so strong all of sudden, kid?"

"With the only thing you weren't able to steal before you defected!" Shibuki replied, as he delivered a high kick to Kakuzu's head.

The Akatsuki blocked the kick with his forearms, but it had enough force to push him sideways. He had barely time to notice a shadow falling over him.

"Takigakure Whirlwind!"

Kakuzu jumped back before a green haired meteor could crush him. Like it did before, Fu's punch opened a crater the moment it hit the ground.

" Now is my chance!" Shibuki thought, as he moved backwards, closer to the edge of the lake as his hands flied through hand seals. "Water Release: Water Dragon Jutsu!"

A massive, serpentine dragon made of water rose from the lake's surface. It let out a distorted growl, before it lunged at Kakuzu. Fu deployed her wings once again, anf flew into the air to avoid thw attack. Kakuzu replied by making hand seals of his own.

"Earth Release: Earth Dome Jutsu!"

Dirt and stones gathered around the Akatsuki, quickly forming a dome around him, which was finished just in time the water dragon found its mark, collapsing into a massive torrent that left the entire area wet and full of puddles. The dome, however, was left untouched.

"Damn, not even with the Hero Water I can overcome the elemental disadvantage..." Shibuki cursed.

"Let's bring you out of your shell, shall we?" Fu shouted from above, as she slammed the rock dome with both feet, shattering it into a multitude of pebbles. However, rather than Kakuzu, she only found a hole. "Dammit! He escaped underground again!"

"I have an idea! Fu, let's force him out by flooding the tunnel he just dug!" Shibuku suggested, as he ran towards the hole.

Fu nodded, and the two of them started weaving hand seals as well.

"Water Release: Water Gun!"

The two Taki ninjas expelled a stream of water from of each of their mouths, quickly flooding the tunnel Kakuzu had dig. If he didn't come out, he'd drown.

Suddenly, the earth started to shake. That definitely wasn't the effect the two Taki ninjas were expecting. Suddenly, powerful streams of water burst from underground as if they were geysers, startling them into stopping.

"What... what the hell is going on?" Fu asked in shock, as she took a step back.

The jinchuriki noticed too late the ground trembling under her feet, and she was hurled into the air by a powerful stream of water.

"FU!" Shibuki yelled.

The mint haired girl deployed her wings once more, and managed to escape the stream of water. She panted a little, spitting the water that had flooded her respiratory system. And that moment was all what Kakuzu needed to strike. Fu didn't even see the Akatsuki appearing besides her, and found herself at the receiving end of a rather savage punch that send her flying against the ground. But when she hit the ground, she didn't stop there. The force of the punch keep pushing her towards the edge of the island, leaving a furrow behind.

"Fu! Are you okay?" Shibuki asked, as he rushed towards her. However, he was stopped in his tracks when several kunai with explosive tags attached to them landed in front of him. "What?"

The young Taki leader managed to jump back in time before the tags detonated, producing a chain of loud explosions. When the smoke of the explosions dispelled, there were several missing-nin of several villages.

"Kakuzu-sama, we came here to help!" a missing-nin from Ame said.

"Yeah, the situation in the village is pretty much under control!" another one from Kumo confidently added.

"What do you want us to do?" an Iwa missing-nin asked.

"Good job. It seems the money I spend on you was a good investment. Keep that man busy, but make sure he lives. Meanwhile, I'll secure the girl," Kakuzu said in a deadpan tone, as he walked towards the bruised Fu, who was trying to get back on her feet. "Stand down, jinchuriki. You've already lost."

"That's... that's the best you have?" Fu laughed weakly as she got back on her feet. She wiped a trickle of blood that came from her mouth.

"Girl, you only experienced a fraction of my true power. I recognize that you're strong, but my experience as a ninja far outstrips yours.

Don't make this harder than it should be," Kakuzu said, as he continued walking forwards.

"Fu! You have to flee!" Shibuki shouted, as the various hired missing-nin engaged him at once.

"There's... there's no way I'm going to do that! Taki is my home, and I'll defend it!" Fu stubbornly shouted back.

"And you will defend it, but not this way! Don't let Akatsuki get their hands on your power! Go and look for help!" Shibuki pleaded, as he felt the effects of the Hero Water slowly banishing.

"I'm not going to abandon you, Shibuki!" Fu yelled, as she tried to fight back the tears.

"You won't," Shibuki replied, as he parried a kunai blow from the Ame missing nin. "Fu, you're a ninja. You know what you have to do."

Fu didn't reply. Her sight shifted back and forth between Shibuki and three approaching Kakuzu. He was right, she did know what to do, even if deep down she didn't want to admit it. She wiped the tears from her eyes, and her face reflected a look of determination, looking as if she was ready to fight.

"A last stand against me? Brave, but foolish," Kakuzu observed.

Fu clapped her hands together. "I will fight against you, and I will beat you," she said, as her hands formed a single seal. "But it won't be today. Hiding in the Scale Powder Jutsu!"

Fu released a huge cloud of glittering power that blinded Kakuzu and all the missing-nin in the area. Taking advantage of the distraction, Fu turned back, deployed her wings, and flew away. At that moment, the effect of the Hero Water vanished, and Shibuki fell on his knees, not being able to fight anymore. He was quickly apprehended by two missing-nin.

"Lock Shibuki up in a safe place. The rest of of us, come with me. We have to catch that girl," Kakuzu ordered.

"But, Kakuzu-sama... she's flying," the Kumo missing-nin weakly protested.

"I can see that," Kakuzu deadpanned in return. "But she won't be able to fly forever, especially with those wounds and bruises. Now keep your mouths shut and come with me! I pay you to follow my orders, not to question them."

"Y-Yes, Kakuzu-sama!" the present missing-nin chorused, as they all ran after their employer, ready to hunt the fleeing jinchuriki.

...

As Fu flew, she didn't look back. She knew that if she did, she'd turn back and try to help Shibuki and the rest of her comrades. She hated everything so much. Feeling so impotent, the Akatsuki bringing her village to its knees so easily, what would happen to Shibuki...

She pushed those thoughts out of her mind, and focused on her mission: reach Konoha. Once there, she could ask her friends for help in driving the Akatsuki away. She had to cover a lot of distance, but with her wings and natural speed, it would be no problem.

" Fu," a voice said in her head. A voice she hadn't heard in quite some time. "What are you doing?"

"What do you think I'm doing? I'm going to Konoha and get some help!" Fu answered the Seven Tails.

" You know, you could have used my power. That way, you could have defeated those Akatsuki," the Seven Tails replied.

"Not falling for that one again. I still remember what happened the last time I tried to do that," Fu bitterly replied.

" It's the only way. You won't reach Konoha in your current state. Besides, they're chasing you," the Seven Tails pointed out.

"Unless those guys learn to fly in the next hours, I don't see them catching me," Fu replied.

" No, but they will wait until you get tired and can't fly anymore. I'm trying to heal you, but I will take some time. There's not enough luck in the world that can take you out of this," the Seven Tails insisted.

"Why do you care about me so much all of sudden?" the mint haired girl snapped.

" Because I know what will happen to me if those Akatsuki get their hands of you. I felt what happened to Isobou and Kokuo. I wasn't sure myself, but Shukaku confirmed it. I don't plan to get sealed back into the Demonic Statue," the Seven Tails replied, sounding almost scared.

"Demonic Statue? What are you talking about?" Fu asked.

" There's no time to explain. If you're foolish enough not to use my power in such dire situation, guess that I have no option but do the next best thing," the Tailed Beast cryptically said.

"And that would be?" Fu asked.

But she got no answer.

...

Konoha Stadium

Like two and a half years ago, a good chunk of Konoha's population, as well as many foreigners, were gathered in the village's stadium to watch the finals of the Chunin Exams. This time, however, instead of a tournament of one on one fights, the Hokage decided to break the mold, and make team fights instead. Most of the teams were from Konoha, but there were a couple from Suna, and another two from Kiri, participating in an Exam hosted by Konoha for the first time in more than two decades.

Currently, the second fight of the tournament, between two Konoha teams, came to an end as the last member of one of the teams fell to the ground, unable to continue fighting.

"All members of Team Masaru are no longer able to fight!" the proctor, Anko Mitarashi, declared. "Team Yamato moves to the semifinals!"

"We did it, guys!" Kaida happily said as she high fived both her brother and Hanabi.

"I can already feel that Chunin Vest around my body," Hanabi gushed.

"We're doing good so far, but we better not get overconfident," Hagane wisely noted. "The best way to ensure a promotion is to win this tournament."

"Yeah. Besides, mom will bet a lot of money on us, and if we lose just like Naruto-niisan did during his exams..." Kaida shivered upon thinking what her mother's reaction would be.

"We may have to become missing-nins," Hagane solemnly noted.

"Come on, Tsunade-sama may have a gambling problem, but he wouldn't do anything too bad if we lose after she bets on us, right?" Hanabi asked. The Hyuga grew nervous upon seeing the look her teammates were giving her. "... right?"

...

"Those children better win their remaining fights, or they shouldn't even bother to return back home," Tsunade stated, as she gripped her many betting tickets on both hands.

Alongside Tsunade was Shizune, with Shiro and Shizuka respectively sitting on their laps. Naruto and Hinata were also with them, watching and enjoying the fights. Many Hyugas were sitting on previous rows.

"I wouldn't worry about them losing, Tsunade-sama. They were already strong before, and now that Hanabi has a Tenseigan, I find doubtful that they will find any team that will give them a challenge. Not even veteran ones," Hinata said in an assuring tone.

"How can you be so sure? You only started training with it for a couple weeks, right?" Shizune asked. "Hanabi didn't look that different to me."

"It might not be obvious to the naked eye, but her new power it's still there. It manifests in a more subtle way. You'll probably noticed that her blows pack more power than they did before," Hinata explained.

Naruto was idly following the conversation, until he felt something. A pull. Knowing what it was, he let himself be pulled in, and soon he found himself inside the Nine Tail's seal.

...

"Do you want something?" Naruto asked. "Because I'm having a good time watching the Chunin Exams with my family."

" Your entertainment will have to wait, brat. I've received a distress call," the Nine Tails began. "From the Seven Tails."

Naruto's bored expression immediately changed into one of shock. "Fu!"

" Yes. It was short but from what the bug told me, Akatsuki is after her. They invaded her village, and is currently on the run. You better hurry. You got lucky you were able to save the tanuki's host, but you might not be so lucky this time," the fox warned him.

Naruto nodded. "I will. Thanks a lot for telling me."

The Nine Tails snorted dismissively. "Keep your gratitude for somebody who might appreciate it. I only warned you because it's of my interest that the Akatsuki don't capture anymore of my siblings."

"Whatever you say, you furball," Naruto replied with a cheeky smile, before leaving the seal.

...

The moment Naruto returned to the real world, he found his girlfriend staring at him in concern.

"Naruto-kun?" Hinata asked, mildly worried. "Are you okay? You look tense."

"It's the Nine Tails. He told me Fu is in danger. The Akatsuki are after her. We have to save her!" Naruto stated.

Hinata emphatically nodded. "Okay, let's fetch Haku. By the way, do you know where Fu is?"

"The fox didn't tell me. Somewhere between Taki and Konoha, I think."

"That's... a lot of ground to cover. We'll need a tracking team to find her. Is Kakashi-sensei's team in Konoha?" Hinata asked.

"If they are, they should be in their usual training ground. I'll go fetch them, you get Haku," Naruto replied. He stood up and looked at Tsunade and Shizune. "Mom, Shizune-nee-chan, we need to go. Akatsuki is on the move again, and another jinchuriki is in danger."

"I understand. Take care," Tsunade said. "Before you go, you should warn your father about it."

"I will," Naruto said, as he made a Shadow Clone.

...

Meanwhile, in the Kage Box, three Kages were watching the fights. The first was Rasa, looking a bit bored, since so far none of the Suna Genin had fought yet. Just like the other time he was in Konoha, he brought Baki and Maki as his escorts. Sitting in the middle was Jiraiya, escorted by Shisui Uchiha and Neji Hyuga. And lastly, to the left of Jiraiya was Mei Terumi, escorted by Chojuro and Ameyuri.

"Your children are truly a sight to behold, Hokage-dono," Mei praised.

Mei hadn't changed that much since the last time Jiraiya had seen her, when she came to Konoha to hire some ninjas to boost her rebel forces. That's it, unless one ignored the rather large round belly that she now sported.

"Wonder if mine will be just half as good as those three are," Mei said, as she lightly patted her pregnant belly.

"With you and Zabuza as their parents, I doubt they'll be a weakling," Jiraiya said with a light chuckle. "Speaking of which, where is Zabuza? I thought you'd bring him with you."

"I planned to, but I had a better idea," Mei replied, her mouth forming a slightly malicious smirk. "You see, Zabuza-kun wants to become Mizukage after me, so I decided it would be a good idea to let him get acquainted with the job while I'm out."

...

Meanwhile, in Kirigakure, Zabuza was trying to make sense of the loads of paperwork that occupied most of Mei's desk. One of Mei's assistants entered the office, carrying another large stack of paper.

"Zabuza-sama, here are the mission solicitations that need to be approved or rejected," the assistant said, as he added the papers to the growing pile. "And don't forget that you have a meeting with the ANBU commander regarding the upgrade of equipment. And after that, there's the the meeting with the Guild of Merchants regarding the safety of the trade routes..."

As the assistant droned all the duties that awaited Zabuzza, the swordsman stopped what he was doing, and let his head hit the desk.

"No more paperwork and meetings... no more paperworks and meetings..." Zabuzza cried, as tears of despair streamed from his eyes.

...

"Yes, I'm completely sure Zabuzza-kun is adapting perfectly to the job," Mei stated, almost repressing a laugh. "By the way, Hokage-dono, given the outstanding abilities your children possess, didn't your clan or your wife's clan pressure you to have more?"

Jiraiya shook his head. "I have no clan, and before we had Hagane and Kaida, Tsunade was the last Senju alive. Besides, Tsunade had them at a rather late age, so we decided it was for the best not to have more. And between those two and Naruto, we had our hands full."

"So lucky," Mei said, letting out a longing sigh. "People think that having a Bloodline Limit is a gift, and in a way it is, but they're unaware of everything that it entails, such as the need to pass it to the next generation. Do you know that the only reason I exist is because my three older siblings failed to inherit both my parents' Bloodline Limits? My oldest brother only has Steam Release, while my older sister and second older brother only have Lava Release."

"Yes. Some research shows that very few human beings have the proper physical condition to handle two Bloodline Limits," Jiraiya replied.

"And now, they expect me to do the same. You have no idea how much pressure my clansmen put on me to get married as soon as possible. 'When are you going to marry, Mei-chan, you're already pushing thirty', 'You know, Mei-chan, if you marry too old, you won't be able to have children', 'Mei-chan, when your older siblings were your age, they already had at least one kid'," Mei said in a mocking tone, before her face turned red. "Well, sorry for not marrying and having children as soon as you wanted, mom, but I was busy leading a FUCKING REBELLION!" Mei yelled, as she slammed both fists on her chair's armrests, earning a few looks from Jiraiya, Rasa and their escorts. Mei's face reddened, this time of embarrassment rather than anger. "Uh, sorry. I'm usually not this emotional. The pregnancy and all that..."

Rasa scoffed, and rolled his eyes. Jiraiya let out a hearty chuckle. "Don't worry. You should have seen Tsunade-hime when she was pregnant. Between that and not being allowed to drink... looking back, I'm amazed our house managed to survive her with such little damage."

"Dad!" a loud voice yelled.

Naruto Body Flickered into the Kage Box, startling all those present not from Konoha.

"What's the meaning of this?" Rasa asked, outraged. "Your father may be the Hokage, but you can't be here!"

"Sorry, Kazekage-san, but this is important. I need to talk with dad about the Akatsuki," Naruto quickly replied.

"Akatsuki? Where?" Mei asked.

"In the Land of Waterfall. They're after Taki's Jinchuriki," Naruto explained.

"Naruto, how do you know about this?" Jiraiya questioned.

"The Nine Tails told me. By the way, I'm a clone. My team and I are going to see if the Animal Squad is here so we can track and rescue Fu before Akatsuki does," Naruto stated.

Jiraiya let out a sigh in resignation. "If they are not, at least one tracking team should be available. I made sure to leave one in standby in case something like this happen. Alright then, consider this an official Konoha mission sanctioned by the Hokage. Take care. I'll try to send you reinforcements as soon as I can."

The Naruto clone nodded, before dispelling a burst of white smoke.

...

An Hour Later, Forests of the Land of Fire

Fortunately for them, Kakashi's Animal Squad was on Training Ground Seven, doing their morning routine training. Since none of them had any friend or relative taking part in the Chunin Exams, they had no interest in seeing them.

The moment Naruto explained the situation, they were immediately on board. Kiba, Tamaki and specially Shino were really close with the Taki Kunoichi, and weren't going to let anything bad happen to her. Using the scent of one of the letters she had sent to Shino over the past years, Kiba and Akamaru managed to track her scent. As expected, they were heading northwest, to Takigakure.

"Kiba, how long until we reach Fu?" Kakashi asked.

"A few hours. Maybe more. She's too far away!" Kiba shouted, as he tried to go faster.

"Naruto, did you got any more messages from Fu's Tailed Beast?" Tamaki asked.

Naruto shook his head. "Not even one. I hope we aren't too late."

"Fu's strong. She will resist until we can lend her a hand," Shino confidently said.

Naruto couldn't help but admire Shino's ability to remain calm in such situation, as well as maintaining a positive attitude. The blond didn't know what he'd do if Hinata was in such situation. In fact, he did remember when Hagane and Kaida were kidnapped by Orochimaru's minions almost three years ago, and despair had been eating him from the inside out.

Maybe Shino was also feeling that way, except that he was much better than Naruto at hiding it. Aburames were known for being almost impossible to read.

"Alright, I know Fu is a friend of yours and you're rather tense, but I need you to keep a cool head," Kakashi advised. "We've never faced an Akatsuki before, so be careful."

"Hey, Naruto's squad killed one and drove his partner away. They can't be that tough," Kiba mentioned.

"Underestimating them wouldn't be wise, Kiba-kun. The two our team fought were rather powerful, and we needed a lot of help to take them down," Hinata recalled.

"Besides, you guys are a tracking squad. You didn't see as much combat as we did," Naruto added.

"We'll see that once the fight begins!" Kiba heatedly replied.

"Will you stop you two? Why don't we focus on saving Fu?" Tamaki interjected.

"Tamaki-san is right. Our priority is to help her, not to beat the Akatsuki," Shino continued. Despite he sounded in his usual monotone, his words were coated in some harshness.

Neither Naruto nor Kiba said anything. Following Tamaki's advice, they decided that it would be better if they focused on rescuing Fu. But in order to do so, a clash with the Akatsuki would be inevitable.

" I don't care how many of them are, or what kind of strength they do possess," Naruto decided with determination. "I won't let Akatsuki harm another jinchuriki ever again."

Unfortunately for the blond, he wouldn't be able to keep that promise for long.

Author's Note: Dun dun duuuuun! Fu is being chased by the Akatsuki and Naruto and his friends rush to save her! Will Fu survive, or will she join the ranks of Han and Yagura? The answer to that question is within the chapter itself, meaning that if you paid attention, you should know already.

Besides Fu, I was also dying to get to this arc because of Hidan and Kakuzu, two of the most interesting Akatsuki members in both powers, personalities and dynamics. I hope my writing can make them justice. Unlike other arcs like Kazekage Resuce or Sasuke and Sai, the original Hidan and Kakuzu arc was pretty good, and making it better is going to be an uphill battle.

As you can see, Fu wasn't the only familiar face to make a return. Even if her presence is going to be pretty small, Mei is back, with an "expansion pack". Yeah, Mei and Zabuza are an item now. You know, I always found Mei being unable to get married ridiculous, not only because given that being super hot, smart, skilled and holding a big position should make men to fight to death to be her husband, but as I highlighted here, Mei has TWO Bloodline Limits, and thus her clan would pressure her to get married and have as many kids as possible in order to pass said Bloodlimits. So in this story, Mei's lack of romance is due her dedication to overthrowing Yagura's regime, and later being busy both leading and rebuilding her village. I hope you find my interpretation better than what we got in canon.

Thanks a lot for grimlock987 for betareading this chapter.

Next time, while not the conclusion of the arc (this one is going to be longer than the Byakugan Princess Arc) we'll see if Fu is captured or not. In the meantime, don't forget to review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Calm Skies

Author's Note: I have the feeling that readers were expecting this chapter more than any other. Can't imagine why. Anyway, enjoy:

Chapter 60:

Calm Skies

or

Time to counterattack

Forests of the Land of Fire

"Well, do you plan on using my power yet? Because frankly, I can't see how the situation can get any worse," the Seven Tails deadpanned. "And not even my luck is going to be enough to get you out of this."

"Shut up already!" Fu shouted out loud.

Despite not wanting to admit it, the situation was dire. Kakuzu managed to take her down from the sky with a powerful long range attack involving both fire and wind. Once down, one of the first things the Akatsuki did was to rip her wings out of her back. While they would regrow after a good night of sleep, she was now deprived of her greatest asset for survival.

It was then when his goons moved for the kill.

She was now in the middle of a thick forest, cornered against a cluster of trees, with no escape route. If she was at her best, she could easily crush them, but so far, she only managed to keep them at bay. She was too weakened to offer proper resistance.

She noticed an Iwa missing-nin making several hand seals.

"Earth Release: Rock Crusher!"

A shadow alerted Fu of the three giant boulders that suddenly appeared above her, before gravity pulled them down.

"They're probably expecting me to dodge them, and another one will attack me while I'm vulnerable," Fu thought, as her muscles tensed while she prepared to counterattack. "They're in for a surprise then!"

Even if she could no longer fly, the Taki kunoichi shot into the sky with a mighty leap, shattering an incoming boulder with a powerful punch, and another one with her other punch. She then spun mid air, and kicked the last boulder back to the Iwa nin.

"Shit!" the Iwa missing-nin cursed, as he ran away before being crushed by his own attack.

While Fu was busy, a Konoha missing-nin made hand seals on his own in order to capitalize Fu's predicament.

"Fire Release: Phoenix Sage Fire Jutsu!"

A volley of fireballs flew towards Fu as she fell to the ground. Of course, that didn't mean that the Taki jinchuriki was helpless in the slightest, as her hands quickly formed several hand seals in return.

"Water Release: Water Wall!"

Fu expelled a massive amount of water from her mouth, which formed a circular wall around her, successfully absorbing the volley of fireballs flying at her, resulting in a cloud of smoke that blinded both sides from each other.ç

"Good, this steam curtain should give me a few seconds to breathe," Fu thought.

"I know I'm being repetitive, but you could-" the Seven Tails piped in.

"Shut up! I'm not using your power! I know what happens when I do! Sure, I could defeat these guys easily, and even the Akatsuki as well! But then what? I couldn't stop you from going on a rampage!" Fu angrily replied. "I'm not letting innocents die because of you!"

"At the cost of your own life? How heroic. Too bad you aren't only putting your life on the line," the Tailed Beast dryly replied. "And if you haven't noticed, these guys are merely wearing you down. The Akatsuki is still watching from afar. And once you're weak enough, he'll move and end this fight in one hit."

"Oh, he's going to need more than just one hit if he wants to-"

"Everybody, attack at once! Even if we can't see her, she's still there!" one of the missing nin shouted. "I can hear her somewhere inside the cloud, rambling about something!"

"You... you weren't speaking out loud when you were talking to me, right?" the incredulous Seven Tails asked. "RIGHT!?"

Fu laughed awkwardly. "... perhaps?"

"How did you last this long it's beyond me. Next time I hear Gyuki complaining about his human, and I'm going to suggest a trade and see how-"

The Tailed Beast's rambling was interrupted by a volley of fireballs, watery missiles, rocks, kunai and shuriken appearing from the cloud of steam, flying directly at her.

"OH SHIT!" Fu yelled as her hands scrambled to form the correct right seals. "Wind Release: Great Breakthrough!"

Fu blew a massive gust of wind that was able to push back the kunai and shuriken, and even dispelled the water attacks. However, not only it failed to stop the stone projectiles, but it magnified the power of the fireballs coming at her.

"This is going to hurt," Fu whimpered.

"YOU DON'T SAY!?" The Seven Tails sarcastically replied.

The rocks and fireballs found their mark, resulting in a massive explosion that hurled Fu into the air, as well as taking down several of the trees behind the jinchuriki. The mint haired girl fell back to the ground with a loud thud, as Kakuzu's thugs cheered in victory. Fu, however, managed to summon enough strength to get back on her feet, if barely.

Perched on a tree branch, Kakuzu was looking the ongoing fight, carefully analyzing Fu's strengths and weaknesses. His information already stated that the girl was powerful beyond belief, but it wasn't until he saw Fu's extraordinary resistance and toughness that he understood the whole extent of it.

"It doesn't matter now. After a whole day of flying, then fighting for so many hours, she can barely stand. There's no reason to drag this any longer," Kakuzu decided, as he jumped from the tree branch, and landed on the ground below. "Everybody, stand back. I'll deal the final blow. I can't risk you lot accidentally killing her."

The others nodded, and followed Kakuzu's instructions, while he dangerously came closer to claim his prize. Fu tried to back away, but she tripped, and fell flat on her butt.

"So this is it... it's too late to use your power?" Fu weakly asked, as feelings of primal fear and desperation crawled on her back.

"Girl, even I'm amazed at how much luck I can bring," the Seven Tails cryptically answered.

"Uh, what do you-?" Fu was about to ask, before several whistles could be heard.

Multiple arrows made of chakra rained upon Kakuzu, which was forced to stop, and take a few steps back.

"What the...?" the Akatsuki wondered aloud, before a loud, sharp whirring noise filled the air.

"Wind Release: Cyclone Vortex!"

A massive tornado came from above, catching the Akatsuki off guard, and violently hurling him against a tree, which was instantly snapped in two. Amazingly, the Akatsuki didn't appear too hurt by such a brutal onslaught, and got back on his feet without much difficulty.

Several ninja landed around her in a protective formation. It took her a few seconds, but she ended up realizing who they were.

"Alright, hunt's over, you jackasses! So scram unless you want to get your butts kicked!" Kiba shouted, with Akamaru barking in agreement.

"Yeah, if you want to get your dirty hands on her, you'll have to go through us first!" Tamaki added, as three blades appeared on both of her gauntlets with a 'snikt' sound.

The missing-nin snarled at the newcomers, as they cautiously stepped back.

"You sounded like you were having a good time hurting my girlfriend," Shino coldly said, as he spread his arms. Swarms of beetles emerged from both his sleeves. "Let's see if you're that bold now that the numbers are more even."

"Alright, we'll leave hand to hand combat to you three, we'll cover you from behind," Haku said, as he and Hinata tensed their chakra bows, producing another arrow each, which was pointed at Kakuzu.

"Guys... you came!" Fu squealed, trying to hold back her tears.
"Lucky Seven is really worthy of her name!"

"Thank goodness we reached her in time. A few seconds late, and Akatsuki would have claimed another jinchuriki," Naruto said, sighing in relief. His expression then turned sharp with determination the moment his golden eyes rested on Kakuzu. "So, you want to see if you can finish the job? Please say yes."

"Whoa!" Hinata said in shock, almost taking a step back.

"Hinata-hime? What's wrong?" Naruto asked his girlfriend.

"That Akatsuki... I don't know what's with him, but his chakra system and his organs... they look like nothing I've seen before!" Hinata replied in shock and even some horror, unable to tear her sight apart from Kakuzu.

"Explain," Kakashi instructed.

"His body... is a jumbled mess of multiple organs, held together by some sort of wires. I'm seeing several hearts... and his chakra network looks like several networks intermingled together... is he even human?" Hinata wondered aloud.

"You have a keen eye, girl," Kakuzu mentioned. "You look like a Hyuga, but that's definitely not a Byakugan. What are those eyes?"

"It's a long story. One I'm not keen on sharing with a mortal enemy," Hinata harshly replied, as she fixed a hard stare on the Akatsuki. First Sasori, and now this man. Where did Akatsuki find these inhuman freaks?

"Kakuzu-sama, what do we do?" a missing-nin from Kumo asked, his fearful tone clearly indicating he wasn't expecting such huge opposition.

Kakuzu reviewed his options. Even if he fought with all he had, sacrificed both his hired thugs and even some of his hearts to retrieve the girl, the odds weren't that good. Among this group of Konoha ninjas, he only recognized Kakashi Hatake, somebody skilled enough to give him a hard time, and the jinchuriki of the Nine Tails. Then there was the Hyuga with the weird eyes, which gave the Taki missing-nin very bad vibes. The other four looked unremarkable, but underestimating them would be a mostly unwise thing to do.

He also noticed the blond's appearance. Their data stated that the Fox's jinchuriki had blue eyes, yet his were golden. And those markings around his eyes, could that be... senjutsu? If that was the case, he was seriously outmatched. Even with Hidan at his side, it would be a battle really hard to win.

"You win this round, jinchuriki," Kakuzu conceded. "But know this: your village is pretty much in our hands now. You have three days to come to us peacefully. For each passing day past that limit that you fail to show up, we will kill ten Takigakure inhabitants, ninja or civilian. For your people's sake, I hope we do meet again soon. Everybody, fall back!"

The hired missing-nin were relieved that their leader had chosen to retreat to fight another day. Almost in unison, they all leaped away, and disappeared among the trees, followed by Kakuzu.

"Fu!" the Chunin of the Animal Squad shouted, as they rushed to hug her.

"Guys, you have no idea how happy I am to see you!" Fu gushed, as tears fell down her cheeks.

"You're hurt. Let me heal you," Shino offered, as he placed a hand on one of her visible wounds, which started to glow with a green light.

"Fu, that Akatsuki said that your village was his. Can you explain what did he mean?" Kakashi asked, shedding his usual nonchalant tone for a far more serious one.

Fu nodded, and as Shino healed her, she told the Konoha ninja about Takigakure's attack, how those two Akatsuki and their army had pretty much crushed what resistance they had put up, mostly to get their hands on her and extract her Tailed Beast. She wasn't sure if Shibuki was still alive, but she hoped for the best.

"Akatsuki is far more powerful than we feared if they were able to take down a ninja village with such ease and celerity," Haku grimly noted. He remembered far too well the massive efforts the Kiri rebellion had to make in order to have a chance at conquering the city.

"It would be in any other village's case, but in Takigakure, not so much," Shino interjected.

"Huh? Why do you say that, Shino?" Naruto asked.

"Takigakure is one of the least populated ninja villages," it was Fu who replied. "And as such, most of our ninjas are always out doing missions in order to bring money to the village. That means that we don't have that many people protecting the village in case of attack."

"If that's the case, how is that your village hasn't been invaded before?" Haku asked.

"Because our village is actually hidden. Every way to enter the village is a fiercely guarded secret," Fu mentioned.

"It's true. Not even I have been considered trustworthy enough to be made privy of such secrets. Whenever I came to the village, I was told to put on a bag on my head as a ninja lead me both inside and outside," Shino explained.

"Wait, then how do your potential clients can ask for missions, if they can't even enter the village?" Kiba asked.

"We do have several outposts on nearby towns that take mission requests which are then sent to the village for their approval," Fu explained. "It may sound bothersome, but Takigakure has a pretty high rate of S-Rank missions successfully completed."

As Fu finished her brief explanation of how her village worked, Shino had also finished healing her.

"Okay, I healed most of your injuries, but it would be better if you were checked at a hospital, just in case. Can you stand up?" the Aburame heir asked.

"Yeah, thank you," Fu replied, as she got back on her feet. Then, almost all Konoha ninja minus Shino and Kakashi flinched and gasped. "Huh? What's wrong?"

"Just... WHAT THE HELL DO THEY FEED YOU!?" Naruto screamed.

While Naruto's reaction might seem exaggerated, it was far from unwarranted. Everybody remembered Fu as the short, scrawny girl whose massive strength was deceptive. It wasn't the case anymore.

Fu had grown. A lot. Now that she was standing up, they could see she pretty much towered above all her Konoha friends, standing a full head taller, and even had a few centimeters on Kakashi. And that was far from her only change. Her previous scrawny build had vanished, replaced by a far more muscular one, and while not as curvaceous as Hinata or even Tamaki, she still retained a feminine figure. Her affinity for extremely revealing white clothes remained the same, though.

"Wow, now that I get a better look at you guys... you got so short!" Fu observed, almost giggling. "I thought it was just Shino, but it seems that you Konoha guys need to eat more greens!"

"Sorry to interrupt this moment, but we need to take Fu back to Konoha. You can talk and do some catch up later," Kakashi interjected.

Nobody could deny the truth in those words, as they all nodded, and headed towards Konoha.

...

Takigakure, a few hours later

Hidan took a deep breath, and exhaled, moaning a little. He was in such good mood. He didn't remember when was the last time he witnessed such a blood spilling of this scale, and he was going to savor every second of it, make sure the sight of the corpses everywhere, burning buildings and overall wanton destruction would be burned into his retinas for the rest of his life.

Jashin-sama was happy, he could feel it in his heart. He had ample opportunity to use his Curse jutsu with powerful ninjas, the kind of sacrifice his god valued the most. In turn, Hidan's strength had multiplied, and would remain at that level in the foreseeable future.

The Takigakure defenders had surrendered already; those who were alive were on their knees with their arms on the back of their heads. Who would have guessed that taking over a village was so easy?

"Hidan-sama?" one of his cultists asked, as he walked towards him. "The village is now secured. Those who refused to surrender have been killed or managed to escape."

"Good. You did a good service to Jashin-sama, acolyte. You should feel proud," Hidan praised the cultist.

"Thank you," the acolyte said, making a slight bow. "What shall we do with the prisoners? Should we sacrifice them?"

"Tempting, but for the time being, let's keep them alive. I'd like to have some stock for the future," Hidan instructed. "Besides, I know for a fact that Kakuzu would get mad as shit if I decided to do something like that without asking him first, and I don't want my good mood to be ruined by one of his fucking dressing downs. Lock them down somewhere safe."

"As you wish, Hidan-sama," the acolyte replied, as he went to communicate Hidan's instructions to the rest of their forces.

At that moment, a group of ninjas entered the village. Everybody was startled for a bit, but relaxed upon realizing that they were part of their own forces, lead by the other Akatsuki.

"Speaking of the devil, he took his sweet time to get his sorry ass back," Hidan said, as he walked towards his partner. "Oi, Kakuzu!"

Kakuzu didn't greet Hidan. The Jashin high priest noticed that Kakuzu looked dour. Well, dourer than usual, since that mask made the Taki missing-nin a bit hard to read. The fact that he didn't appear to have the jinchuriki with him probably had something to do with it. He was holding something in one of his hands.

"Hey, why the long face?" Hidan asked in an irritatingly teasing tone. "No jinchuriki? Did she escape you, uh? Hehe!"

Kakuzu narrowed his eyes at Hidan, and clenched his fists. But refrained himself from attacking.

"Yes, the jinchuriki escaped, regrettably so. She was somehow able to call for reinforcements from another village," Kakuzu told his partner. He then took a look at the ravaged village. "It seems like things have gone well since my absence."

"They would have gone better if you did your job and caught the fucking girl," Hidan needled him, before deciding to ask about the item Kakuzu was carrying. "What the hell is that?"

Kakuzu showed Hidan what appeared to be a pair or rather large insect wings. "I managed to tear her wings apart. Though I admit I don't know if she can regrow them."

"Hehe, you did brought something of the jinchuriki after all. Too bad that shit's worthless," Hidan laughed. Upon seeing Kakuzu's scowl, he decided to change the topic. "But yeah, the village is pretty much ours now. I ordered all our prisoners to be locked up. It is okay with you?"

"Yes, you did good," Kakuzu nodded. "Even if the jinchuriki escaped from our grip, we still have this village and a good chunk of its inhabitants under our control. She will return, sooner rather than later."

"You know she won't return alone, right?" Hidan told him.

"I'm aware of the possibility. In fact, I already met some of the ninjas that she'll probably bring with her in an effort to take the village back," Kakuzu replied.

"And what are we going to do then? Should we ask help from Akatsuki?" Hidan asked.

Kakuzu shook his head. "No. She will make the mistake of thinking that we care about keeping this village. We'll use that for our advantage. Is the Takigakure leader alive?"

"Nobody touched him since you ordered it. How is more money going to solve anything?" Hidan asked, rolling his eyes.

"I wasn't talking about the bounty. Well, not yet. I noticed that the girl was quite attached to him. Listen, Hidan, this is what we're going to do..."

...

Konoha, a few hours later

The sun was starting to set when the group of eight finally arrived at Konoha. Exhaustion started to wash over their bodies, as they finally allowed themselves to relax, knowing that, for the time being, danger had finally passed.

"I think it's too late to give the Hokage the report of our mission, so we'll give it to him tomorrow," Kakashi decided, before his eye rested on Fu. "Now, I think that the first thing to do is to send you to the hospital to check that you're okay, or get you fixed if there's something that's not."

"I feel fine," Fu happily replied. "I really don't need to go."

"It's better not to take any chances. Come on, I'll walk you there," Shino offered.

Fu let out a defeated sigh, and slouched childishly. "Okaaaaay..."

"As for you, Naruto, the moment you see Hokage-sama, you should tell him of what had transpired in Taki. We're going to take decisive actions against the threat of the Akatsuki," Kakashi told the blond.

Naruto nodded in return. "I was planning to. Thankfully Taki is an ally of Konoha, so this won't be seen as meddling into another village's affair."

"Technically speaking, that's not the case anymore," Haku interjected. Upon seeing Naruto's confused stare, he elaborated. "Just like how Kiri's old alliances were nullified when Mei took over, Taki is now under Akatsuki's control. Their alliance with Konoha is void until the previous regime is reinstated."

"Even then, I doubt any village will take us attacking a village occupied by Akatsuki as a pretext for war," Naruto replied. "If they do, they'd be pledging their support to the organization."

"A fair point. But there's still much to discuss before we decide what to do," Kakashi replied. "We'll talk about this tomorrow. Now try to get some rest all of you."

And the silver haired Jonin Body Flickered away, leaving a poof of smoke behind.

"Let's better do what Kakashi-sensei said. After running so fast toward Taki, and then back to Konoha, I'm kind of tired," Kiba mentioned. Akamaru yawned emphatically.

"Then it's a good thing we didn't have to fight, or else you'd be so exhausted, you wouldn't have been of any help," Tamaki sneered, giggling a little.

"Even asleep, I sure can be of more help than you at your best," Kiba fired back. "Come on Akamaru, let's go home."

Tamaki just stuck her tongue at the Inuzuka, before she let out a yawn. "I think I'll go home as well. See you later, guys."

With Tamaki gone, the Assault Squad was left alone.

"You know, sometimes I wonder when those two are going to get together," Hinata commented, letting out a giggle.

"I know, right? Their constant bickering is starting to get stale," Haku added.

"Huh? What are you talking about?" Naruto asked his teammates.

"Kiba-kun and Tamaki-san," Hinata replied.

"Those two? Getting together?" Naruto asked in disbelief. "But they are constantly arguing!"

"Yeah. But deep down, they do care a lot for each other. They're simply afraid of confronting their mutual feelings," Hinata explained. "When they met, their animosity was genuine, but as soon as they got to know each other better, those feelings changed. They're simply too stubborn to admit it."

"None of the couples I know ever behave that way," Naruto pointed out.

"Maybe not at the beginning, but some started out that way. They won't argue as much once they move past that childish phase," Haku added as well.

"Well, I'm so glad that Hinata-hime and I were never that way. Otherwise, it would have suck," Naruto said.

"Just like how not all persons are the same, not all couples are the same either. We did start out as friends, but that doesn't necessarily apply to everybody," Hinata told him. "Anyway, I think I'm heading home. I have to apologize to Hanabi-chan for leaving in the middle of her fight. I also have to ask her how did it go."

"Oh damn, the Chunin Exams! I totally forgot about that!" Naruto sheepishly admitted. "I better do the same with Hagane and Kaida. Maybe I should buy them something just in case."

"Your little siblings seem to demand a lot from you," Haku observed. "I'm kind of worried about the time Seiichi-kun grows up."

After that, the three members of the Assault Squad went their separate ways.

...

The next day, just like with their own Chunin Exams, the promotion ceremony took place in front of the Hokage's Tower. So far, only one team was found worthy of being promoted to Chunin, and to no one's surprise, it was that composed by Hanabi, Hagane and Kaida. The three of them were proudly standing in the podium, holding their diplomas and flak jackets.

"Despite their youth and relative lack of experience, these girls and boy have proven in front of everybody that they're more than deserving of the Chunin rank! Let's give them the congratulations they deserve!"

The public loudly cheered and clapped, as the newly minted Chunin smiled and waved at them. before they finally stepped down and joined the crowd, heading towards their respective families. Hikari, Hinata, and a group of other Hyugas were expecting Hanabi.

"Look mother, Chunin on my first try, just like nee-chan!" Hanabi proudly announced.

"In fact, you managed to become Chunin a year younger than I was," Hinata pointed out, smiling. "Then again, of the two of us, you're the one with the most talent, Hanabi-chan."

Hanabi crossed her arms, and frowned. "Yeah, sure. I know you only said that to make me feel better. You don't have to. I'm not a baby, you know? I'm aware of how strong you are, even before the Tenseigan."

"But Hanabi-chan, for mother and I you'll always be our baby," Hinata said, giggling.

Hanabi stuck her tongue at her sister, before she went to show her trophies to the rest of the Hyugas gathered there. Hinata, meanwhile, shook her head.

"Hanabi-chan's so blinded by her admiration towards me, that she can't see how much farther than me is she going to go," Hinata said.

"No matter how much stronger than you Hanabi becomes, she'll never stop kissing the ground you walk. You're an amazing big sister, Hinata," Hikari praised her, making Hinata to blush a little.

"Well... I try," Hinata sheepishly replied.

"Especially after you passed her half of your Six Paths Chakra so she could awaken a Tenseigan as well," Hikari recalled. "She will never forget such a gesture, no matter what."

"I felt it was the right thing to do. I meant everything I said when you appointed me as the new clan head," Hinata firmly replied.

"By the way, how is the training with the Tenseigan going?" Hikari asked.

"Slowly, but we're progressing," Hinata replied. "We're still having some trouble with the flight, though."

"Flight is a very rare ability, so you won't find many teachers," Hikari pointed out. "As far as I know, there's a jutsu used in Iwa that allows one to fly by making reducing your weight. However, it's a fiercely guarded secret that's only taught from one Tsuchikage to the next. There may be another jutsu that allows one to fly, but I don't know any other."

"Wait... I do know somebody who can fly," Hinata's lips formed a smile. "In fact, we rescued and brought her to the village not long ago. I think she'll be more than happy to lend Hanabi-chan and I a hand."

Meanwhile, Hagane and Kaida were showing their diploma and flak jackets to their parents (Jiraiya was now among the crowd), Shizune, Shisui, their kids, and finally Naruto.

"It's a pity you had to go on that mission, Naruto-niisan, if you could had seen us," Kaida said.

"All Chunin Exam matches are recorded. I'm sure Naruto will be able to see you once Hokage-sama gives us a tape of it," Shizune pointed out.

"In fact, why don't I ask dad about it now? That way, we can see your matches tonight all together," Naruto suggested with a smile, as he looked at Jiraiya.

"Sure, I'll ask for a copy of the tapes. Being Hokage, there shouldn't be any problem," Jiraiya said with a shrug.

"That would be great!" Kaida agreed, nodding fervently.

"Alright then, it's settled," Naruto replied. "Say, dad, why don't you go to the tower to get the tape, and since we're at it, we discuss the Taki job more thoroughly?"

Jiraiya nodded. "Yes. Now that the Chunin Exams are finally over, I can spend more time and resources on working on the Akatsuki threat. Come on, let's go."

After bidding Tsunade, Shizune and all the kids a "see you later", Naruto and Jiraiya headed to the tower, while the rest went back to their respective homes.

...

Hokage's Tower, Ten Minutes Later

Naruto thought that Jiraiya would take him to his office, but was surprised to see that they actually headed for the council room. There, three people were already waiting: Hiruzen Sarutobi, Rasa, and Mei Terumi.

"Kazekage-dono, Mizukage-dono, sorry for making you stay longer than you intended, but there's an important issue that needs to be addressed, and think it's to your interest," Jiraiya began, sounding ominous. "We got recent news that Takigakure has been invaded and taken over by the Akatsuki."

Both his fellow Kages and his predecessor Hokage reacted immediately. Shock was more evident in Rasa and Mei's faces, while Sarutobi merely frowned.

"C-Come again?" Mei asked, almost choking.

"That's... unbelievable..." Rasa added. "I know Akatsuki is powerful, but to think that they can topple a ninja village like that..."

"If I remember correctly, Takigakure had a jinchuriki. The only of the minor villages to have one," Hiruzen recalled. "What has been of them? Do Akatsuki have yet another Tailed Beast?"

"Thankfully no," it was Naruto who replied. "Fu, the jinchuriki, managed to contact me through the link of our Tailed Beasts, and we could save her before it was too late. She's now in Konoha, under our protection."

"If Akatsuki knows that, then this village is also a target for them," Mei somberly noted.

"Konoha's might is much greater than Taki. If they plan to attack our village, they're in for a nasty surprise," Jiraiya firmly stated, angry at the notion of Akatsuki daring to do such a thing.

"I wouldn't be so confident. Akatsuki is growing bolder with each passing day. If they can take down a village, even a minor one, I wouldn't assume they can't do the same with our villages," Rasa noted.

"The difference is that while Suna and Kiri don't have jinchuriki anymore, Konoha now houses two," Mei added.

"It's not the same," Naruto interceded. "Takigakure has a very low number of ninjas compared to our villages, and thus their defense force is much smaller as well. To compensate, their defenses rely mostly on their secret entrances. If somebody finds out about those entrances, well, getting an invading force into the village wouldn't be that hard."

"Even then, it would be wise if we reinforce our own defenses, just in case Akatsuki does dare to attack us," Hiruzen noted. Jiraiya nodded in return.

"Anyway, you can imagine the reason for which I requested your presence here," Jiraiya said. "We can't allow a village, now matter how small, to remain under Akatsuki's control. Konoha is coordinating a counter-attack with those Taki ninjas who escaped the invasion with their lives, or those who were away on missions while the invasion happened. I'd like for Suna and Kiri to lend us a hand, if possible."

A deafening silence fell upon the council room. Rasa was the first one to break it with a heavy sigh, before opening his mouth to speak.

"In another time I would have declined," Rasa admitted. "My loyalty is to Suna and Suna only, but given what Akatsuki did to us, and that if it wasn't for Konoha, my son would be dead, I think I can't decline such requests."

"Think that, by helping us weaken Akatsuki, you'll be protecting Suna from their threat," Hiruzen told Rasa.

Rasa, however, let out a snort. "Akatsuki already took what they wanted from Suna. I seriously doubt that they'll come after us again."

"That's an unwise line of thought, Kazekage-dono. After all, what do you think it will be of Suna, as well as pretty much every ninja village, once Akatsuki fulfill their goal and capture all Tailed Beasts?" Hiruzen asked.

Rasa's face lost all color upon thinking in such scenario. He gulped uneasily. "You make a fair point, Sarutobi-san. Suna will help you in your fight against this threat."

"I'm glad to hear that," Jiraiya said, as he turned his sight on the pregnant Mizukage. "How about you, Mizukage?"

"Given how much Konoha has done for Kiri, I have even less reason than the Kazekage to turn down such request," Mei admitted, smiling. "Not to mention, Sarutobi-san's words hold a lot of truth. We can't let this issue snowball to a point beyond no return. Though keep in mind that, due the distance between our villages, moving Kiri ninjas all the way to Taki might take us a considerable amount of time. When is the counterattack due?"

"As soon as possible. Probably in less than a week's time. We already have a strategy to draw the Akatsuki out of the village, making the counterattack easier," Jiraiya stated.

Mei pondered the Hokage's words. "Very well then. Even if I can't promise that my forces will arrive in time, I'll also send help in the form of food, medicine and other supplies for Taki once the Akatsuki have been ousted and they begin rebuilding."

"Very well, thanks a lot for both your help, Kazekage-dono, Mizukage-dono," Jiraiya said, as both he, Hiruzen and Naruto bowed before them.

"Alright. In that case, I should better return to Suna and prepare our forces for the operation," Rasa stated.

"And I'll do the same as well," Mei replied.

"Alright. Then we can consider this meeting finished. I presume you'd want to return to your home villages as soon as possible," Jiraiya correctly sensed. "I'll start planning the counter-attack with my councilors immediately. I'll send you a toad messenger once we're ready to strike.

The other two Kage nodded, before they stood up and left the room.

...

Training Ground 8

Hinata and Hanabi were standing in front of Fu. The green haired jinchuriki's smile was wider than usual. She cleared her throat before she started to speak.

"Hello, and welcome to Fu's Fantastic Flight lessons! My name is Fu, but you may call me... Fu-sensei, hehe," the bubbly girl giggled. "It has a nice ring to it, don't you think?"

Hinata and Hanabi looked at each other awkwardly, before a pair of Tenseigan rested on Fu again.

"Okay... what do we do first, Fu-sensei?"

"Let's start with some warm up exercises!" Fu brightly stated, as her two insect-like wings protruded from her back. "First, deploy your wings!"

Once again, the two Hyuga sisters stared at each other awkwardly, until Hanabi raised her hand.

"Yes, mini-Hinata?" Fu asked.

"My name is Hanabi," the annoyed Hyuga youth corrected. "And... we don't have wings."

Fu reacted as if she had a bucket of cold water splashed at her. "Say what?"

"What Hanabi said. We don't have wings," Hinata repeated.

"Then how can you fly?" Fu asked, almost indignant.

"We don't know, we just... can?" Hinata unsurely said.

Then, to prove her words were true, both Hinata and Hanabi's feet stopped touching the grassy ground, as the two sisters elevated about half a meter above it. Fu opened her eyes very wide as her iris shrunk. She then came closer to the floating sisters, and carefully inspected them.

"Amazing..." Fu said in almost a whisper. "You two are clearly floating..." she moved to inspect their backs. "... but you have no visible wings. This is unbelievable!"

"Can you still teach us how to fly?" Hanabi asked.

"Sure!" Fu cheerfully said, her previous amazement vanishing as if it was never there to begin with. "Though your lack of wings threw me off. I'll have to restart my teaching plan from scratch... oh well, improvising is always more fun!"

Hanabi leaned towards Hinata. "Nee-chan, do you think that this girl is qualified to teach us?" the younger sister asked.

"She may look a bit loopy, but Fu-sensei is a very strong kunoichi, and a Jonin. I'm sure we're in good hands," Hinata reassured Hanabi.

"Okay, first of all we should- OH MY GOD, A SQUIRREL!" Fu yelled, as she started chasing the rodent. "Come here, squirrel! I want you to become my pet!"

"... she's the only one who knows how to fly, so she'll have to do," Hinata said, letting out a defeated sigh.

...

Takigakure

On a safe room protected against potential spies, Kakuzu and Hidan were in front of an astral projection of the Akatsuki leader, and that unnamed woman that was always by his side.

"So, you managed to take over your former village, but the jinchuriki escaped, am I right?" the leader asked. Kakuzu's silence was all the answer he needed. "Disappointing."

"Oh come on, we took over a fucking village, give us some slack!" Hidan protested, throwing his hands in the air. "How is this different from what you guys did with Hanzo?"

"Because the world at large thinks that Hanzo is still alive and in charge of Amegakure, and thus nobody suspects that our village is under Akatsuki's control," the woman harshly replied. "On the other hand, you embarked on open warfare. Upon seeing what we can do, the other villages will watch out for us."

"You talk as if that didn't happen already," Kakuzu replied.

"Everybody knows our involvement in the Kirigakure Civil War, as well as the village's previous state. Not to mention the ruckus caused by the abduction of the Kazekage's son. Han's capture was easy to hide due his self-imposed isolation, but we won't be able to do the same with the other jinchuriki. Besides, I promised that I'd increase Akatsuki's resources, and I brought a whole village."

"The jinchuriki is more valuable than any village, Kakuzu," the leader replied, fixing a hard stare on him. "Do not let your love for money deviate from what should be your mission. I really hope you have a plan to capture her."

"I do. I told her that for every day that passes before she surrenders to us, we'll start killing her fellow villagers in small groups," Kakuzu mentioned. "Hidan here is more than happy to carry such threat."

Hidan nodded fervently. "So many sacrifices for Jashin-sama... I can't believe we didn't do this before."

"I already anticipated that she'll bring reinforcements to Konoha in an attempt to retake the village. When she appears, taking advantage of the chaos of the ensuing battle, Hidan and I will isolate her and capture her," Kakuzu explained.

"You seem to be really confident in your plan," the woman noted.

"Aren't you afraid of losing the village while you're capturing the jinchuriki?" the leader asked.

"You yourself stated that the village comes second to the jinchuriki. And even if such thing happen, the other villages will think that Akatsuki is weaker than they thought and that there's nothing to be afraid of, prompting them to lower their guard, and making catching future jinchuriki all the easier," Kakuzu explained.

There was a moment of tense silence as the leader pondered Kakuzu's words. He seemed to agreed, as his head moved in a nodding gesture.

"Very well. Given that you two proved to be competent in the past, I'll leave it to you two to fix the mistake you made. I hope to hear from you two soon," the leader ominously said, as he and his female partner's projections disappeared.

Kakuzu exited the safe room, followed by Hidan. The two thugs guarding it stood to attention when their boss walked past them, but quickly relaxed and went to do something else once the new leader of Takigakure no longer required their services. After that, the two Akatsuki exited the building they were in, which was Shibuki's old residence.

"Man, what a dress down leader-sama gave us," Hidan said, sounding amused, as he shook his head. "Are you sure that that bitch is coming back? If I were Konoha, I'd lock the jinchuriki up somewhere safe, toss the key into a river, and kill everybody who knew about her."

"Yes, that would be the wisest thing to do," Kakuzu would never imagined he'd indirectly call the religious fanatic 'wise'. "But given the way Konoha manages its jinchuriki, it won't be the case. She'll want to take part in the counterattack, she will argue that her strength and power are needed to beat us, and those Konoha fools, following feelings over reason, will let her. Then, we will capture her and let this wretched village burn to the ground."

"Leader-sama did make a good point there. Things didn't go according to the plan the last time. Why are you confident they will go now?" Hidan asked.

"The jinchuriki being able to call for help from Konoha being so far from the village was something I would have never foreseen. This time, however, will be different. Now it's our enemies' turn to move," Kakuzu answered. "I had much time to study both Konoha and its current Hokage. I know what they will do. If our goal was to keep this village, then I'd worry. But snatching the jinchuriki will be easy if you do what I say."

"We are always doing what you fucking say," Hidan dryly replied, rolling his eyes.

"Because I'm the one with the most experience. Even if it wasn't the case, I'm also the one with the most common sense," Kakuzu coldly replied, narrowing his eyes at his silver haired partner.

"Yeah, yeah, whatever. Your plan sounded all nice and shit, but how are we going to isolate the jinchuriki from the rest of the attack force?" Hidan questioned, raising an eyebrow. "Because I doubt that they be willing to leave her alone."

"I'm counting on that. That's where the previous leader of this village, Shibuki, comes to play. When I fought the two of them, I noticed they were pretty close. While they don't look to be related, they treated each other as if they were family. " Kakuzu stated.

"How the fuck does he have to do with this? Do you plan to use him as a hostage or something?" Hidan asked.

"Yes. I'm not going to force the jinchuriki to trade his life for hers, since I know such thing won't work. However, she will more than likely try to free him. But most of the forces will be preoccupied with taking the village back. So we'll take Shibuki away from the battle, to a battleground far away from the village, and we'll make sure no reinforcements can reach her," Kakuzu explained.

"Even then, if she's as retarded as to take the bait, she won't come alone," Hidan pointed out.

"No, she won't. But we should be more than able to deal with any rabble she's assigned as an escort," Kakuzu replied. He then handed Hidan something. "Take this."

Hidan looked at the item puzzled. "What the hell is this?"

Kakuzu explained Hidan what the item in question was.

"I see. But I don't think I'll need it. As long as Jashin-sama is with me, my enemies will never know victory," Hidan boasted.

"I don't doubt that. But keep it with you just in case," Kakuzu said in a warning tone. "Now, one last thing: the jinchuriki of the Nine Tails, a loud mouthed brat, will be more than likely one of the jinchuriki of the Seven Tails' escorts. He's a powerful master of Senjutsu, but I doubt he'll be able to bypass your immortality. I need you to deal with him, but I need you not to kill him either."

Hidan rolled his eyes, and snorted in annoyance. "I'm starting to get sick of this no killing rule..."

"The rule is just for the jinchuriki. You can go broke for the rest for all that I care," Kakuzu dismissively replied.

"In that case, I better prepare some worthy sacrifices to appease Jashin-sama beforehand," Hidan decided.

"Do as you wish. I'm going to prepare the village for the imminent attack, as well as the battlefield where we'll capture at least one jinchuriki," Kakuzu said, before he and his partner went their own ways.

Author's Note: Fu did survive this encounter. I can already hear all your collective gasps of relief.

Though it's not that she came out of this unscratched. Her home village now belongs to Akatsuki, and the man she loved like an older brother is now their prisoner, and they plan to use him as bait for her. And while Fu might enjoy some peace in the next chapter, soon she'll have to address Kakuzu's threat and head to Takigakure in order to help her people.

Thanks to grimlock987 for betareading this chapter.

Not much else to say here. Just tell me your thoughts on this chapter in a review, since reviews make me really, really, really happy.

Training for the Dangers to Come

Author's Note: I love how everybody's enjoying Fu's return. Well, here's more Fu goodness for you to dive into:

Chapter 61:

Training for the Dangers to Come

or

Teaching is not as easy as it looks

Hokage's Tower

It was early in the morning, and Naruto knew that his father wouldn't have any kind of meeting until at least two hours. However, when he arrived at his office, he found through Jiraiya's secretary that it wasn't the case, as somebody was already in the office discussing something with the Hokage.

"But... who the hell requests a meeting with the Hokage this soon?" Naruto asked, a bit frustrated.

"... you did?" the secretary, a middle aged woman with graying brown hair, replied. "And if you're wondering no, I'm not allowed to disclose such information with anybody. Not even with his son."

Naruto huffed, and crossed his arms. "And how long until dad's free again? This is kind of important!"

"Everybody who wants to meet the Hokage thinks they have important matters to discuss," the secretary snarked at Naruto.

Fortunately, the blond didn't have to wait much, and in a few minutes, the door to the office opened, and the last person Naruto was expecting his dad would see this soon in the morning walked out.

"Ino?" Naruto asked, confused.

"Oh, hello, Naruto. Sorry if you wanted to talk with your dad and I made you wait. He's free now," Ino said with a friendly smile.

"What are you doing here?" Naruto asked. He sounded more curious than demanding.

"I was giving Hokage-sama the report of my latest mission," Ino replied, as if stating something obvious.

"At this hour?" Naruto asked, scratching his temple. There was something fishy about Ino, but couldn't tell what.

Ino merely shrugged. "The sooner I do it, the sooner it's out of my hair. Anyway, I should get going, I have plenty of stuff to do today. See you later, Naruto!" Ino happily waved him goodbye as she left the office.

Naruto shrugged, and entered the Hokage's office, where Jiraiya was sitting by his desk.

"Oh, hello, Naruto. What can I do for you?" Jiraiya asked.

"I came to ask you something. But first, what was Ino doing here?" Naruto asked.

"She was giving me the report of her latest mission. Nothing you should worry about," Jiraiya added, noticing that Naruto's encounter with Ino left him a bit uneasy. "Anyway, what do you want to ask me?"

Naruto took a seat. "It's about Fu."

...

Land of the Waterfalls, undisclosed location

Kakashi was leaping from one tree branch to the other, as he was heading towards his destination. He looked at the sun, at his highest point in the sky, indicating it was high noon. The Copy Ninja felt satisfied with how fast he had managed to reach the country that hosted one of their former allies. Though with some luck, said alliance should be restored.

"Okay..." Kakashi mumbled, looking around. "This is the zone, but I have no idea where I should go..."

The silver haired Jonin continued to move forward, expecting to see some patrols or sentries that may direct him to the place he should go. He wondered if he should summon his tracking dogs and have them find the place for him.

His thoughts were interrupted when his uncovered eye saw multiple kunai flying at him from higher tree branches. Fast as lightning, Kakashi pulled a kunai of his own, and while jumping backwards, deflected the incoming knives he was unable to dodge.

"Ah, I was wondering where you'd guys show up," Kakashi nonchalantly said as he let himself fall to the ground below.

Two ninja wearing Takigakure headbands emerged from the canopies, a woman in her twenties with light blue hair tied in a ponytail, and a tall man about ten years older than her, with undercut black hair, a moustache and a small goatee. The man started to make hand seals.

"Water Release: Syrup Shot!"

The man expelled a stream blue jelly-like liquid from his mouth, which immobilized Kakashi and glued him to the ground when it hit his body.

"Yakari, now!" the man stated.

The blue haired woman nodded as he leaped at Kakashi, doing hand seals before winding her fist back.

"Fire Release: Combusting Fist!"

Yakari's fist burst into flames, before punching Kakashi with it, producing a considerable fiery blast. However, when the smoke caused by the explosion dispelled, there was only a charred log behind, much to her shock.

"Oh, shit! Where is he?" the Taki kunoichi asked.

"Right here," Kakashi said, not dropping his nonchalant tone, as he appeared behind the mustachioed man, and placed a kunai on his throat. "Whew, you guys know how to treat a guest, don't you? With such a warm welcome, no wonder Hokage-sama send me to deliver a mere message."

"Who are you? What do you want?" Yakari angrily asked, as she leaped into a branch close to Kakashi and the male Taki ninja.

"My name is Kakashi Hatake. I've been sent here by Jiraiya, Hokage of Konoha, in order to inform the Takigakure Resistance -which I presume you two are members of- about the incoming attack on your village to drive the Akatsuki out."

There was a moment of silence, as if the two ninjas were trying to discern if Kakashi's words were true, or if it was a trick by their enemy.

"Taeshi?" Yakari asked her partner.

Taeshi nodded, making sure not to touch Kakashi's kunai. "He... he's telling the truth."

"Oh, a sensor type, I see," Kakashi said, as he removed the kunai from Taeshi's throat. "Now that everything's been clarified, can you take me to your base camp? Like I said before, I have a message that I have to deliver to whoever is in charge of the Resistance. And no, I can't tell you the message to you two. My orders explicitly said the Resistance leader, or leaders if there's more than one," Kakashi clarified, before the two sentries had the chance to protest.

"Alright, it seems that you're telling the truth. We'll take you there," Taeshi said, as he started to look for something inside his ninja tool pouch.

"Sorry for attacking you, Kakashi-san," Yakari apologized, as she made a slight head bow. "But you have to understand our situation, with our village lost-"

"Don't worry," Kakashi said, dismissing her apology with a hand wave. "I know what you guys are going through, and I think I wouldn't be too trusting with strangers if I were in your shoes."

"Before we go, however, you must put this on your head," Taeshi said, as he handed Kakashi a black cotton bag. "Nothing personal, but all non-Taki ninjas, even allies from other villages, can't know the location of our base."

"Of course. I can't believe I wasn't expecting it," Kakashi said, as he took the bag and placed it on his head. "Guess I won't be able to enjoy the sights this country has to offer while you guys take me there. Pity."

Taeshi carried the blinded Kakashi piggyback as he and his partner headed towards their base camp. After about fifteen minutes - Kakashi was sure they made several detours so he'd have a harder time remembering the way with his other senses, they arrived the base camp, and the silver haired Jonin was allowed to see again.

Kakashi found himself entering campsite. It was exactly as he imagined: several rows of camping tents, some bigger than others, a few piles of crates containing what he guessed would be supplies of the both the battle kind, such a kunai and shuriken, and necessary goods like food or medicine, torches scattered around -all of them unlit, given that it was daytime-, and Taki ninjas doing a variety of activities, such as menial tasks, talking, sparring, sharpening their weapons, and so on...

The Copy Ninja saw a small group of Taki ninjas walking towards him. Leading them was a square-jawed man with spiky black hair. For some reason, he had the feeling he had seen this man somewhere.

"Yoro-sama," Yakari began. "This is Kakashi Hatake, from Konoha. He brings news from his village."

"Very well then. Welcome to our camp. This pretty much what the true Takigakure is now," Yoro told Kakashi, as he spread his arms in an enthusiastic manner.

"Thankfully, things won't stay like this for much longer. Hokage-sama has ensured the cooperation of both Sunagakure and Kirigakure. With three Great Villages joining forces, retaking Takigakure will be child's play," Kakashi explained, as he gave Yoro an -eye-smile.

Yoro smiled in return, letting out a sigh of relief. "It's really good to hear that. Morale will improve a lot when our comrades hear we're going to have such a huge support."

"Hokage-sama knows the threat of Akatsuki, especially since his oldest son is a jinchuuriki," Kakashi told him.

"Oh, speaking of which, what happened with Fu? I heard rumors that she managed to escape to Konoha, but we were unable to confirm them. Is that true? Is she in Konoha? Is she alright?"

"Fu is alright, you have nothing to worry about her. We're taking good care of her," Kakashi said in a reassuring manner.

Yoro chuckled. "Heh, good luck with that. Fu can be quite the real handful, despite her age and rank. She didn't grow up, she just became bigger."

"Oh, now I remember," Kakashi said in realization. "You were one of the two ninjas that came with her during the past Chunin Exams held in Konoha, right?"

Yoro laughed awkwardly. "I can't believe you still remember that. I thought that Fu would get all the spotlight, given that Kegon and I faked our defeats during the preliminaries."

"I usually have very good memory for faces," Kakashi stated. "I knew that there was something suspicious about you two, but when I heard that you were Jonin..."

"Shibuki-sama was afraid that sending Fu to another village unprotected would be too risky. That's why he sent us with her," Yoro explained.

"Wait, doesn't Fu had her own teammates or sensei? Why did you have to go through such charade that the Hokage ended up finding out anyway?" Kakashi asked.

"Well, Fu... she doesn't have a squad in the traditional sense of the word," Yoro replied, sounding uneasy.

Kakashi raised his only visible eyebrow. "Elaborate, please."

"Fu had some trouble adapting to her squadmates. Between her... exuberant and eccentric personality, status as a jinchuuriki, and closeness with our village leader, she always ended up on bad terms with her teammates. She went through four different teams before we finally give up and decided to give her personalized tutoring," Yoro explained.

"I see. It wasn't just one of two things, but several elements that gave her a hard time making friends and connecting with others," Kakashi pointed out.

Yoro nodded. "Which was a pity, since Fu is one of friendliest persons that ever walked this world. We were glad she able to make friends during her short stay in Konoha. If she wasn't a jinchuriki, I'm sure Shibuki-sama would have let her go there for a visit from time to time."

"Though it's no coincidence that the people she ended up befriending were the friends and former classmates of Naruto Uzumaki, our village's jinchuriki. They more than likely were able to see past her status and judge her by the strength of her character."

"Knowing that she's okay in Konoha will also act as moral booster for our troops. We're the only minor village with a jinchuriki, and she's like a symbol of pride for all of us," Yoro stated.

"Soon you'll be proud of her, though not for the beast that hosts inside her body, but by the actions she will take to help liberate the village," Kakashi thought.

...

Training Ground 8

"One of the requirements for a proper flight is to create a shield of chakra around your body, but mostly your face," Fu explained. "Not only to protect your body from the cold of higher altitudes, but also to stop dirt floating in the air to get into your eyes, as well as not accidentally swallow insects. Unless you like to do that, I'm not one to judge. Albeit Shino-kun isn't going to like if you do such a thing..."

As Fu's mind drifted into one of her rather usual aimless ramblings, Hinata and Hanabi followed their teacher through the sky. Right now, they were only slowly flying in circles as they learned the basics of proper flight.

The Hyuga sisters were rather surprised to learn how many things there were to flying. Fu made it look so easy, but that was only the years of experience showing. The chakra shield was only the tip of the iceberg: they had to learn how to sense wind currents in order to maximize their speed, how to jump from one wind current to the next, choose the proper attitude to fly depending on what speed did you want to go, adapt their stomachs to resist height-induced stomach sickness, and many more things. They would take a lot of time before they could reach Fu's level of expertise.

The mint haired girl interrupted her own ramble when she noticed that Hinata and Hanabi were struggling to keep her pace. She stopped mid air.

"Uh, am I going too fast?" she asked them.

The sisters stopped in front of her. At the very least, they had mastered how to remain in mid air stationary. Fu guessed it was their lack of a need for wings that allowed her to master rather quickly something she still had trouble with.

"Flying while keeping the shield active is far more complicated than I would have guessed," Hanabi admitted, her older sister nodding in agreement.

"Eh, it's like those chakra control exercises. Fighting somebody on a wall or on water was hard at first, but you get the hang of it with enough practice," Fu nonchalantly explained, as she shrugged. "So, you want to take a rest?"

Hinata looked at Hanabi, who looked back at her pleadingly.

"Yes, please. It would be appreciated," Hinata replied.

Fu's mouth formed a cheery smile. "Alright then!"

And with that, the three kunoichi landed on the ground. Fu's wings disappeared into her body. Hinata and Hanabi started to pant, as if they just made some brutal training exercise with Maito Gai.

"My, my, look at how exhausted you look!" Fu said, sounding so bright it was borderline obnoxious. "I'm not that strict of a teacher, am I?"

"No, but this... is, well... it's way harder than it looks," Hanabi replied between pants. Then, she smiled. "But it's really cool!"

"I know, right?" Fu replied, just as excited. "Those landwalkers will never know the amazing feeling of seeing the world from so high above. That's why, when I met Shino for the first time, I HAD to share such an experience with him. Occasional screaming aside, I think he enjoyed it."

"Hey, nee-chan, maybe you should take Naruto to a flying date!" Hanabi happily suggested.

"Now, that's something I wouldn't mind trying," Hinata said, as her lips formed a smile while her mind imagined the possibilities. "Though I don't think I'm strong enough to carry Naruto-kun into the air for long..."

"Oh, don't worry, I have the best solution! Just follow the same training Shibuki gave me, and soon your arms will be as thick as mine!" Fu proudly boasted as she flexed her rather impressive biceps.

"That's... tempting, but I think I'm going to pass," Hinata replied, trying to sound as polite as possible. "For the time being, let's stick to the flight, okay?"

Fu shrugged. "Your loss."

"Hey!" a new voice called.

The three girls turned towards the direction of the newcomer, and saw a smiling Naruto walking towards them.

"Naruto-kun!" Hinata said, as she ran at him with renewed forces. She wrapped her arms around his neck and greeted him with a kiss on his lips.

"Hello, Hime," Naruto happily replied. "So, how's the training going?"

"Slow, but we're progressing," Hinata replied. "Did you come here to see us train?"

"Yes, but that's not the only thing," Naruto said. He then looked at the mint haired girl. "There's something I want to talk with Fu about."

Fu perked up upon hearing her name. "Oh, and what that would be?"

"I was wondering... are you able to tap into your Tailed Beasts' power?" Naruto asked.

Fu's smile instantly vanished, replaced by shock, then by another smile, except this time, it was far more subdued. She averted her gaze, looking at her feet.

"Wow, you don't pull any punches, do you? Hehe," she laughed weakly. "To answer that, no. I don't know how to use the power of my Beast."

"Did somebody in the village teach you how? Or have you ever practiced on your own?" Naruto asked.

"Naruto-kun, stop," Hinata gently requested. "Don't you see that you're making her uncomfortable? Such topic clearly troubles her."

Naruto sighed. "I know, Hime. But this is important," the blond stated, before his eyes turned back at Fu, who rubbed her arm as she continued averting eye contact.

"The answer to those questions are 'no' either," Fu replied. "After, well... you do remember what happened in my fight against Gaara almost three years ago, right?"

Naruto nodded. "It's something hard to forget. Did that experience make you fearful of the Tailed Beasts' power?"

Fu nodded. "I lost control. The Tailed Beast took over. And if the pale redhead didn't knock me out... who knows what would have happened. I brought great shame to both Shibuki and my village with such display."

Both Naruto and Hinata were taken aback, even if they managed to hide their reaction. Hearing Fu, somebody so carefree who gave the impression that she didn't have a care in the world about whatever other people think of her, admitting feeling ashamed, then that past event had to affect her way deeper than what she let others believe at that time.

"From that day onwards, I swore that I'd never let that incident repeat again. And that means no more using Lucky Seven's chakra, other than the wings," Fu said in determination, as she raised her sight and looked at Naruto directly in the eye.

"I see. And is there anything I can do to change your mind in that front?" Naruto asked, as she tried to give Fu a reassuring smile.

Fu raised an eyebrow. "Why do you want me to do that?"

"Think about it. Akatsuki are after us, and we're going to need every resource at our disposal to fight them. Using our Beasts' chakra would can give us the edge against the enemy in battle," Naruto told her.

Fu looked unconvinced. "What kind of control do you have over the Fox?"

Naruto chuckled awkwardly. "Eh, not much. I can use his chakra to some degree, usually to one or two tails, if I push it. And even then I tend to have a hard time keeping in control."

The mint haired girl crossed her arms over her chest. "So you have the same problems as me. And you expect me to learn to use the power of Lucky Seven when you can't do the same with the Fox?"

"In my case, I have something else that serves as a replacement: Sage Mode."

"Sage Mode? Never heard of that," Fu replied.

"It's not an art many people are able to master. Long story short, you can draw nature's ambient energy and mix it with your own chakra. As a result, your body gets a massive boost in strength and endurance, and ninjutsu becomes far more powerful," Naruto explained. "The requirement to learn Sage Mode is that you need to have a rather large chakra pool in order to properly mix nature energy with your chakra. The larger your reserves, the easier you'll master Sage Mode."

When Naruto and Jiraiya went to Mount Myoboku to learn Sage Mode -or in the white haired man's case, to perfect it-, Naruto took a little more than a week to master it, and about half of that time was spent trying to understand how nature energy worked. Naruto even figured out a way to work around the Nine Tails making merging with Fukasaku or Shima impossible by using Shadow clones.

Naturally, Jiraiya was half amazed, half indignant, and wholly shocked, to see Naruto mastering Sage Mode in such a short amount of time while he struggled.

It was later revealed that the reason Naruto had such an easy time with nature energy was his colossal chakra reserves. It was like dissolving a spoonful of sugar in water; you'd have a hard time dissolving it on a few drops of water, but no problem with a large bucket. That's why large chakra reserves were a must to master Senjutsu.

So with that information, Jiraiya trained as much as he could in order to expand his chakra reserves until he got an acceptable level of control. Now, he only needed to merge with Fukasaku alone in order to activate Sage Mode, and could also use clones to gather nature energy like Naruto did.

"That sounds like fun! Why don't you teach me Sage Mode instead? I have pretty huge chakra reserves!" Fu excitedly suggested.

"I want to learn that too!" Hanabi piped in. "My chakra reserves got a boost after I awakened the Tenseigan!"

"And I'd love to teach it to you, but it's not that easy," Naruto replied, making the two girls to pout a little. "In order to be able to draw nature energy, you first need to get a taste out of it."

"How did you do it then?" Fu inquired.

"The toads of Mount Myoboku have some special oil that, when applied to the skin, makes your body draw nature energy on its own," Fu opened her mouth, but Naruto interrupted her. "And before you ask, no, you can't use that oil. The oil evaporates in a few seconds if it's taken out of Mount Myoboku. I don't know why."

"Maybe we could go to Mount Myoboku then?" Hanabi asked, almost pleading.

Naruto shook his head again. "Only toad summoners can go there. And before you ask to become one, I find that unlikely. Summon tribes almost never accept more than two summoners at once."

Both Fu and Hanabi slumped in defeat, letting out depressed sighs.

"With so many obstacles, there's little wonder as for why there are so few Sages out there," Hinata commented.

"Besides," Naruto said, looking at Hanabi. "Why do you want to be a Sage so much? You already have the Tenseigan. From what I heard, it's a power beyond our wildest imagination."

"Duh, so I can have both," Hanabi replied, as if stating something obvious. "I'll do whatever it takes to be a kickass kunoichi like neechan!" she proudly stated, before throwing two quick punches into the air.

"I think you should focus on learning how to use the Tenseigan," Naruto said good naturedly. Then, he looked at Fu. "And you should try to learn to control your Tailed Beast's chakra. To some degree at least."

Fu let out a sigh. "Okay, you win. You're no fun, you know that?"

"Oh, I'm plenty of fun!" Naruto replied, with a wide grin.

"So, who's going to train me to do it? You?" Fu asked.

"No, me!" a new male voice said, as Jiraiya landed behind Naruto, and started to make poses. "The Toad Sage of Mount Myoboku! The author of the successful Icha Icha Series! Konoha's Powerful and Handsome Fifth Hokage! The Legendary Sannin, Jiraiya!"

"Hokage-sama?" Hinata asked.

"Were you hidden near here all the time until you got a cue to come out?" Hanabi asked in disbelief.

"So what if I did? There's nothing wrong with being a little theatrical!" Jiraiya protested.

"You're going to train me? Nice!" Fu chirped.

Jiraiya's brow furrowed. "Nice? A living legend like yours truly is going to train you, and that's all what you have to say?"

"That's... very nice?" Fu asked, looking as if she trying really hard to think something else. "Is that better?"

"Uh, with all due respect Hokage-sama, I know it might not be my place to ask, but aren't you supposed to be working right now?" Hinata asked, trying to sound as deferential as possible.

"And I am. I'm a shadow clone reinforced with fuinjutsu for increased durability," Jiraiya explained. "Anyway, let's get to the training already! You too, Naruto! It's been a while since we last trained you on the Nine Tails' chakra!"

...

Training Ground Three

After Hinata and Hanabi went home, Jiraiya took Naruto and Fu to another training field so he could start their specialized training.

"Okay, we'll invade Takigakure in a few days, so we'll only have time to teach you some basic stuff," Jiraiya's clone began. "First of all, tell me what do you know about your Tailed Beast."

Fu raised an eyebrow, looking a bit lost. "Uh... not much, honestly. Is it important?"

"It is," it was Naruto who answered. "The more you know about your Tailed Beast, the better you'll be able to use its power. Sometimes you'll need to ask for power. Others, you'll be able to take it by force. I mostly need to ask the Nine Tails for his chakra, but sometimes I'm able to do it without his permission."

"If you can do it without his permission, what stops you from doing it at all times?" Fu asked.

"Because when I do that, I usually do it unwittingly. If I'm overwhelmed by an intense emotion, like anger, I'm able to draw the Nine Tails' chakra. But I'm at risk of losing myself to the rage when doing it," Naruto explained.

Fu's eyes saddened. "Like what happened to me when I drank the Hero Water."

"Indeed. The water allowed you to tap into your Beast's chakra freely, but it also allowed it to influence you to a greater degree," Jiraiya interjected.

"In my experience, when it's the Beast the one who allows you to use their chakra, it's when there's the least risk in using it," Naruto added.

"Because you're in a calmer state of mind?" Fu guessed.

"Exactly," Naruto told her. Fu smiled and clapped childishly upon guessing it right. "That's why the first step is to try to create a bond with your Tailed Beast so they'll be willing to lend you their chakra."

Fu started to grow uneasy, as she started to rub her arm. "Uh... do you think that's a good idea?"

"Don't worry, I'm here if things go out of control. I have a set of sealing tags able to suppress Tailed Beast chakra," Jiraiya assured her.

"Well, we can try but..." Fu began, leaving the sentence unfinished.

"But?" Naruto asked.

"... but after the Chunin Exams, I kinda rebuffed all of Lucky Seven's attempts to talk with me. I don't think she'll be very eager to let it go."

Naruto was going to point out that it was thanks to her Tailed Beast that she was able to call for help and evade Akatsuki. But then again, it could also be the Beast saving her own skin. After all, he used a similar trick with the Nine Tails in order to get his chakra.

"Okay, now, let's try to make contact with your tailed beast. Given that we have two jinchuriki, I'll like to try something that I have been thinking. First of all, sit in front of each other with your legs crossed." Jiraiya instructed. Naruto and Fu did so. "Okay, now hold your hands."

"Uhh..."

"Eh..."

This time, the two teens weren't as obedient. Both of them started to feel a bit uneasy. Jiraiya just rolled his eyes and groaned.

"Come on, I know you two have a significant other, but I'm only asking you to hold hands, not to kiss!" an exasperated Jiraiya snapped. Naruto and Fu quickly obeyed the Hokage. "Okay, now close your eyes, and try to synchronize your chakra with each other. As you do, think in your Tailed Beast, and let your chakra drag you to them..."

...

Jiraiya's voice started to sound more and more distant, as if the Sannin was slowly walking away. Naruto was already aware of what was going on, but it was something new to the green haired girl.

"Hokage-sama? What do we do now?" Fu asked, but got no response. "Hokage-sama?"

"He's no longer with us. At least not in this place. Open your eyes," Naruto instructed.

Fu did so, and gasped. She was no longer on the grassy training field, but some sort of... she was unable to find the word that properly described the place. It was some kind of large chamber made of a nondescript light brown material. Several torches on the walls provided some dim light to the place.

"Where are we?" Fu asked.

"Since you're a jinchuriki, a pocket dimension exists within you where your Tailed Beast is sealed. I presume this is such place," Naruto explained.

But much to the blond's confusion, Fu shook her head.

"No, I already talked to Lucky Seven before, and this place looks nowhere like where she's sealed," Fu replied. "Maybe this is your seal?"

"It's both, and it's neither," a new voice said, a voice that was foreign to Fu but familiar to Naruto.

"Nine Tails?" the Konoha ninja asked.

Wordlessly, Naruto and Fu started to walk towards the place the voice came from. Much to their surprise, when they reached one of the chamber's end, they saw two gigantic cell gates. The Nine Tails was in the one to the left, while the Seven Tails was in the rightmost one.

"Whoa! What the-?"

"Since you synchronized your chakra, the dimensions where we're sealed have been temporarily merged," the Seven Tails explained.

"Not that it's too big of a change for us, as you can see," the Fox dryly said as he flicked one of the heavy bars with one of his fingers.

"Hey, at least we now have each other to make us company," the giant beetle chimed in.

"I take that back. It's change for the WORSE," the Nine Tails grumbled.

"Awww, don't be like that brother," the Seven Tails whined.
"You must feel all lonely on that cage. I certainly do."

"I am. But then I think that it could be sealed with you or the rest of our dim-witted siblings," the Nine Tails fired back.

"Enough you two!" Naruto shouted. "We didn't come here to see you squabble."

The Nine Tails scoffed. "I couldn't care less about what you two came to do here."

"I do! What did you come here?" the giant beetle asked excitedly.

"Wow, this beast is almost as overexcitable as Fu. You'd think they would get along just fine," Naruto wondered. "We came here to try to fix things up between you two. I know that the Fox is a lost cause, but from what I see of you, there might still be hope."

"There is!" the Seven Tails happily chirped. Fu crossed her arms and looked away. It was obvious that the memory of the Chunin Exams was still in her mind despite being almost three years ago. "I'm willing to help her, but she doesn't want to. Not even when that Akatsuki guy almost got us."

"You already proved to me you can't be trusted! If that pale redhead wasn't as strong as he was, we could have killed him!" Fu protested.

"Oh come on, the boy had Shukaku with him, there's no way we could have make any permanent damage," the giant beetle feebly protested. "Besides... it was the first moment in a long time that I had some semblance of freedom, so I got a bit... carried away."

Fu, however, continued to give her Tailed Beast the cold shoulder.

"You should at least listen to her, she's willing to cooperate with you," Naruto advised Fu. "The Nine Tails only threatens to kill me and everyone I love at every opportunity."

"Yes, and you better remember those words, you puny human!" the Nine Tails growled, but Naruto ignored him.

"See?" he told Fu, as he rolled his eyes.

Fu still looked unconvinced, but decided to listen to her fellow jinchuriki.

"I guess I could give her another chance... since these Akatsuki guys are a rather big threat and I'm going to need more power..." Fu weakly conceded.

"See? That's the spirit! The next time we face that guy, use my power and tables will turn!" the Seven Tails happily claimed.

"I still have the feeling that you only want to have a chance to escape your seal..." Fu grumbled.

"Can you blame me?" the Seven Tails replied. "But don't worry, I have my priorities straight. It's not that I could keep a low profile in my true form... but anyway! If you don't trust me, just try using a little of my power. Enough to make a difference, but still not enough to let me influence you. Deal?"

Fu remained silent, but visibly conflicted. After she silently pondered her options, she reluctantly nodded in agreement.

"Alright. But the moment you step out of your bounds... !" Fu threatened, as she pointed an accusatory index finger at the caged beast.

"I get it girl! You won't have to worry, promise!" the Seven Tails said, raising all six arms defensively. "Okay then, let's get started!"

"Wait, you want to give me your power right now?" the green haired girl asked.

"Why not? That way you can get a taste after such long time. Plus even I was tricking you and was biding my time to escape - hypothetically speaking, of course!- you have that Jiraiya guy that can suppress my chakra," the Seven Tails explained.

Fu sighed. "Okay then."

"Yay! You're SO going to enjoy this!" the giant Beetle cheerfully said, as a wave of reddish-orange chakra emerged from her cage and enveloped Fu.

...

Both Naruto and Fu opened their eyes, and found themselves when they were before they were transported to that odd mental dimension, still sitting and holding both hands. The only difference is the reddish-orange aura that surrounded Fu's body.

"Given the results, I take it went well?" Jiraiya asked, snapping the two teens back into the real world.

They both stood up as Naruto nodded. "Yeah, the Seven Tails is far more reasonable than the stupid Fox."

"I heard that!"

"I know, I don't care,"

"Well, Fu, how do you feel?" Jiraiya asked.

Before answering, the green haired girl took a few seconds to contemplate her glowing hand, as if it was a new part of her body.

"It feels... oddly nice. It doesn't feel like that time in the Chunin Exams," Fu explained.

"There are many reasons for that. For once, you're using much less Tailed Beast chakra. You also aren't under the effect of the Hero Water either," Jiraiya explained. "Say, how about a spar against Naruto to test your new power?"

Fu enthusiastically nodded. "Yes!"

Naruto smirked. "Okay then, bring it on!"

...

Hyuga State, next day

Much to the Hyuga sisters' disappointment, Fu wouldn't be able to train them in the art of flying, since the green haired girl herself was undergoing some training of her own with the Hokage and Naruto on how to control her jinchuriki powers. Not that they didn't have anything to do, since their training to control the Tenseigan had just barely begun. They simply enjoyed flight practice much more.

Right now, the two sisters were in the state's ample backyard, practicing their telekinetic/gravity based powers -nobody really knew what those powers were- by stacking concrete blocks on top of each other, forming a tower. The point of this exercise was to test the limits of their power by lifting and manipulating large, heavy objects. Another similar exercise was to use lots of tiny bits of wood, which helped them refine their control by handling multiple small objects.

Watching over their training was Takuya, the High Priest of the Acolytes. Despite not having a Tenseigan -not even a Byakugan- the man proved himself to be a competent teacher.

"I've read the scrolls and books detailing the powers of the Tenseigan many times during my life. If I had one, I'm confident that I'd be able to master its powers with reasonable aptitude," the old man had replied when Hanabi pointed such thing out.

"Can I read those scrolls too? I'd prefer to choose what I get to train on," Hanabi said, as she lazily placed a block on the top of the tower, which briefly threatened to fall.

"Hanabi-sama, training can't be done in the order we wish. I know these exercises must be tedious, but the Tenseigan is no ordinary ability, and great skill honed through practice is needed in order to fully master it," Takuya patiently explained.

"There HAS to be a better way to learn this," Hanabi said as she stomped towards the small pile of books and scrolls that were resting on a bench, which Takuya was using for their training. The young, impatient Hyuga skimmed over the texts, until she found something worth her interest. "Aha! This sounds pretty exciting! Why don't you teach us how to do this?"

Takuya walked towards Hanabi, picked up the scroll the young girl was holding, and read it. A disproving expression appeared on his face.

"The Truth Seeking Ball? I think this is far too advanced for somebody who had just begun her training," Takuya said, shaking his head.

"Can I see what this 'Truth Seeking Ball' is?" Hinata asked, walking towards her teacher.

Takuya nodded and wordlessly handed the Hyuga Leader the scroll.

Truth Seeking Ball

Also called Truthseeker Orbs, this jutsu is the ultimate elemental combination, as they're composed of all five basic elements, as well as Yin and Yang. Across history, very few individuals managed to acquire this power, as it is not something a normal human being can attain, regardless of their strength, skill or determination...

While she found such description fascinating, there was something about it that made little sense.

"Wait a minute," Hinata said, as she stopped reading. "In order to combine two elements, one need to have affinity to said elements, and I know it's neither the case with Hanabi nor me. We had our elemental affinities tested. I'm just lightning, and she's just fire."

This seemed to amuse Takuya. "But you tested your affinities before awakening the Tenseigan, right?"

"Yes, but awakening it didn't change our affinities," Hinata replied. Seeing Takuya's expression, her confidence in her words faltered. "... right?"

"Why do you have to take my word for it? I'm sure you can see it for yourselves if I'm right or not," Takuya told them.

Hinata wordlessly left the backyard. She returned a couple minutes later with two pieces of Chakra Litmus paper, and handed one to Hanabi.

"Okay, let's see," Hinata said, as she and Hanabi channeled their chakra into the paper. "WHOA!"

Much to the sisters' shock, the paper quickly crumbled while turning wet, was sliced into multiple bits that turned almost immediately into dust, which ignited into small explosions as if it were gunpowder.

"W-What...?" Hinata dumbly stammered.

"So, do you believe me now, Hinata-sama?" Takuya asked, savoring the moment of validation. Hinata silently nodded.

"This... this... this is SO COOL!" Hanabi loudly cheered, as she threw both fists into the air. "All five elements! Just wait until I tell Kaida! She's going to be so jealous!"

While Hanabi continued cheering and planning all the cool things she'll do with all five elements at her disposal, Hinata continued to read the scroll. Once again, she stopped reading when she reached something that left her a bit puzzled:

Before any attempt to produce Truth Seeking Balls can be made, the user must have a certain level of mastery over the Tenseigan Chakra Cloak.

"Tenseigan Chakra Cloak? What is that?" Hinata asked.

"The Tenseigan Chakra Cloak is a state that brings to the surface the power of the Tenseigan. You need to awaken it in order to have access to most of its abilities," Takuya explained.

"Wait, but we are already using Tenseigan abilities without that mode!" Hanabi pointed out.

"Your kinetic abilities are nothing but a scratch in the surface. Or did you think moving objects from afar with your chakra was all the eyes of the Sage of the Moon had to offer?" Takuya asked.

"Then why aren't we learning how to use this mode, instead of working with concrete blocks?" Hanabi asked, her exasperation growing with each second.

"We're doing exactly that!" Takuya replied, who was also becoming a bit heated. "Six Paths Chakra is hard to control, and these exercises will help you in that regard."

"Takuya-san, maybe my little sister expressed it in a rash and impatient form, but I agree with her in this regard. Our chakra control is already good enough," Hinata softly said, trying to sound reasonable. "I was wondering if you could speed up our training. We're going to face powerful enemies in the near future, and we can't take a lot of time trying to master this new power."

Takuya crossed his arms over his chest, and pondered the Hyuga's words. When she put it that way, her request sounded more reasonable than Hanabi's lack of patience with a repetitive exercise.

"Very well then. I'll introduce you to the Tenseigan Chakra Mode, and I'll see for myself if you're ready to learn it or not," Takuya conceded.

"Way to go, nee-chan! I wish I had your way with words," Hanabi said, earnestly happy. Hinata giggled at her in return.

...

Training Ground Seven

The next day, Fu had asked the Animal Squad to go train with her, or at the very least, see her train, so she could show them the fruits of just one day of training with Naruto and Jiraiya. Given that the Animal Squad was temporarily lacking a sensei and didn't have any kind of schedule for today, they decided to tag along and spend some quality time with their seldom seen friend.

But what they saw wiped out completely whatever intention they were of training with Fu.

"I knew that she gotten stronger over the years, but this..." a dazed Kiba said. "This is too much..."

The three Chunin of the Animal Squad stared at the orange blurring forms of Naruto and Fu trading blows, moving so fast they were nearly impossible to track. Naruto was using his Sage Mode, while Fu was using the most basic stage of the Tailed Beast chakra cloak. Even then, it give her enough of a power up to push Naruto to fight seriously.

Though, given that it was a 'normal spar' to help Fu get accustomed to the Seven Tails' chakra, they decided to limit themselves to taijutsu only. No ninjutsu, or even kunai or shuriken. Naruto didn't use clones, and Fu's wings were hidden beneath her skin.

Every time the two jinchuriki traded blows, it would be accompanied by a loud thunderclap and a shockwave that raised some rather strong winds. And given that they traded several blows per second, for the onlookers it was like being in the center of a powerful storm.

"Watching them going like that, doesn't make you feel... inadequate?" Tamaki uneasily asked her teammates,

"Eh, maybe, but they're jinchuuriki, and Naruto is a Sage on top of that. They're on a completely different level we normal humans are unable to reach," Kiba said in mild resignation, shrugging.

"I'm sure that Kakashi-sensei would be able to fight either of them, and he's neither a jinchuriki nor a Sage," Shino pointed out.

"You guys just love to oppose me no matter what, right?" an annoyed Kiba asked.

"No. But if seeing them makes you feel inadequate, then maybe we should train harder. Even if we can't reach their level, at least we'll have the satisfaction to know that we're doing our best," Shino explained. "We might never be able to reach Fu and Naruto-san's level, but we can at least aspire to surpass Kakashi-sensei."

Nobody contested Shino's statement, and continued watching Naruto and Fu's bout in silence. They swore they could hear some giggles and laughs among the constant thunderclaps, as if the blond and the mint haired girl were having the time of their lives beating the tar out of each other. They spend like that for a few more minutes until the two of them put some distance from each other, in order to take some breath.

While the two jinchuriki were visibly panting, and their visible skin -a lot in Fu's case- had several bruises, the two of them looked ecstatic.

"We can't stop if you feel I'm going too hard on you," Naruto taunted.

Fu smirked in return. "Ha, asking to stop and making it look as if it's because of me. Give some credit, will ya?"

"So, how are you doing? Feel any different?" Naruto asked.

Fu looked at her hand, flexed her fingers before curling them into a fist, and threw a punch forward.

"I've never felt better. I can move so fast it's almost as if I weight nothing, yet at the same time I can hit really hard while my fists barely feel the impact!" Fu cheered.

"It's nice to see that you're getting the hang of Tailed Beast chakra, but try not to revel on it too much. Remember that the Tailed Beast will use it to trick you into letting her take over you," Naruto warned her.

"Yeah, yeah, I know! But don't worry, I'm not feeling any different," Fu reassured him.

"If the Tailed Beast chakra influenced you, would you notice it? Did you notice it when you lost control during your fights against Gaara?" Shino promptly asked.

The green haired girl opened her mouth to reply, but no words came from it. She tried to tell him that yes, she knew when something was wrong, but the truth was that it wasn't the case.

"Well... no," Fu was forced to admit. "But if I started to lose myself, I would notice that there's something wrong, right?"

"Sometimes yes, others not so much," Naruto replied. "There were a couple moments in which the Nine Tails' chakra completely overwhelmed me, and I thought that everything was okay. Tailed Beast chakra is at its most dangerous when you're overwhelmed by an intense emotion."

"So the key to control it is to remain calm?" Fu asked.

"It's a possibility. If you keep your head cool, the Tailed Beast won't be able to influence you," Naruto then looked at the Animal Squad. "Hey guys, why don't you fight against Fu now?"

"Fight against Fu while using Tailed Beast chakra?" Kiba incredulously asked. "No thanks, I choose to live!"

"Come on, guys, it will be fun!" Fu insisted.

"Then you and I have very different concepts of 'fun'," Kiba snarked.

"Listen, Fu won't go all out against you like she did with me. She'll have to remain calm while keeping the Tailed Beast chakra active. Such mental effort will stop her from fighting at her best," Naruto explained. "Plus it's three versus one."

"And I'll go easy on you guys, promise!" Fu happily added.

The three Chunin looked at each other unsurely. Well, Kiba and Tamaki looked unsure.

"Well, she said that she'll go easy on us. Plus we do this to help a friend in need," Tamaki said, though she clearly wasn't happy with the idea.

"And I know what you're going to say," Kiba said, looking at Shino. "So yeah, let's go with it. It might be good training for us as well."

As the Animal Squad Chunin walked towards Fu, Naruto cancelled his Sage mode and left them some space, taking their role of spectator. The four ninja adopted fighting stances, and the handicap spar began. Though it wasn't exactly clear who was the handicap for, given the difference in power between both sides.

As expected, the fight was nowhere near as fast paced and brutal as when Naruto was fighting her. While Fu was clearly in control of the fight, she wasn't overwhelming the three Chunin, and fought with less wild fighting style. She kept her eyes on her opponents, dodged their attacks with quick movements, and then she would deliver a single, precise strikes.

Not that this strategy worked all the time, not even close, especially against opponents that, unlike her, weren't holding back. Kiba and Tamaki managed to land quite a few hits on her, and on more than one occasion the jinchuriki found herself unable to avoid her boyfriend's long range jutsu.

"Dang, this is much harder than I thought!" Fu complained, as she briefly struggled against Tamaki, before disengaging her and jumping backwards, narrowly avoiding a claw swipe from both Kiba and Akamaru.

"You're used to rely on strength and reaction instead of thought and action," Shino stated. "Such things will only take you so far. Eventually, one must learn to think before they act. And against superior opponents, the time to think will be severely limited."

"Eh, I've always been a 'going with the flow' kind of person," Fu shrugged, as she resumed the fight.

"Keep going like that, Fu! You're doing great!" Naruto praised, as she gave her a thumbs up.

So far, the green haired kunoichi was doing fine with the most basic level of Tailed Beast chakra while remaining in control of her emotion. But Naruto wondered if that would be enough to face the Akatsuki.

...

Training Ground Twelve

While Naruto helped Fu train with the Animal Squad, Hinata was doing the same with her little sister. The Hyuga Clan Head, and Hanabi's sensei, Yamato, were watching the young Hyuga fighting against both Senju siblings.

"Fire Release: Burning Palm!"

Hanabi's palms were coated in fire, as she dashed towards her female teammate, who jumped backwards while making several hand seals.

"Earth Release: Earth Style Wall!"

Kaida slammed both hands into the ground, erecting a wall with the Senju crest carved on it between herself and Hanabi. Hanabi's burning palm strike blew a hole in the wall, but the construct did its job in stopping her tracks. Her Tenseigan immediately saw Hagane, his body glowing with a white aura, leaping at her from behind, ready to deliver a flying kick.

Hanabi jumped into the air just in time to avoid Hagane's incoming kick, which shattered the wall Kaida had created. Staying mid air, she clenched her fists, causing the fire surrounding her hands to grow bigger.

"Now take this!" Hanabi said, as she began to thrust her hands downwards in a rapid way. "Fire Release: Eight Trigrams Phoenix Fire!"

Which each arm thrust, Hanabi released a small projectile of concentrated fire that produced a huge explosion when crashed against the ground. Despite the jutsu's widespread destruction, the twins' didn't falter.

"Brother, I need some senjutsu juice!" Kaida called.

"On it!" Hagane replied, as he jumped to her side, before bumping fists with her.

Hagane's white aura spread to Kaida. From above, Hanabi could see how some of Hagane's nature energy was being passed to his twin sister, and the two of them started to make hand seals.

"Water Release: Wild Water Wave!"

"Wind Release: Cyclone Vortex!"

Kaida's cheeks puffed, before releasing a massive stream upwards, while a tornado came from Hagane's hands. Hinata was a bit surprised to see one of Naruto's most used Wind jutsu being used by somebody else, but she quickly came to the conclusion that it was her boyfriend himself who taught it to him. The two attacks merged into a massive, spiralling water vortex, that engulfed and contained the explosions of Hanabi's jutsu, as it continued upwards, threatening to swallow the younger Hyuga.

Seeing no other options, Hanabi descended in order to avoid the twins' combined jutsu, which flew above her head, spraying everything below it.

"Wood Release: Deep Forest Emergence!"

Hanabi had been so preoccupied with avoiding the combined elemental blast that she hadn't noticed the white haired girl preparing her next move. Thick wooden vines emerged around her, and launched themselves at the young Hyuga.

"Haha, got you! Where's your Six Paths chakra now?" Kaida taunted.

A fiery aura surrounded Hanabi as she started to spin. "I don't need Six Paths chakra to avoid such an attack! Fire Release: Heavenly Firestorm!"

Hanabi turned into an spiraling column of flames that instantly burned all the emerging vines, while releasing several firebolts in every direction. When Hanabi stopped spinning, she was standing on top of a charred crater.

And the moment she stopped spinning was the moment the twins choose to attack her in close combat. While it was Hanabi's specialty, she was completely wide open due still spinning. And while in the past the fight would have ended here and there, Hanabi now had one last ace in the hole.

Quickly spreading her arms, Hanabi cast a kinetic shockwave that pushed both white haired Chunin backwards with incredible force, until a tree painfully stopped their momentum.

"Ha! Not even the two of you are even close to-"

But Hanabi's boast was interrupted by a couple of hands coming from underground grabbing her ankles, and pulling her down with incredible force, leaving her buried to the waist.

"What the hell?" she shouted, as she tried to use her kinetic powers to pull herself out. That's it, until a kunai touching her neck forced her to stop.

"I think victory is ours," Hagane, who was holding the Kunai to her neck, stated.

Kaida emerged from behind, and high fived her brother, before the two of them helped Hanabi out of the ground. The match now over, Yamato and Hinata walked towards them.

"If there's a lesson to be learned here is that powers matters little if you lack the skill to use it," Yamato stated. "Hanabi, while your Tenseigan gave you a massive boost, and I'm sure one day you'll become of Konoha's most powerful kunoichi, that day is still pretty far."

"Well, it was two versus one," Hanabi scoffed, as she crossed her eyes, and turned sideways. "Plus it's not that they're a couple weaklings."

"Hanabi-chan, the reason you lost was because you lost sight of your opponents. With your Tenseigan you should have seen that Kaida had created Wood Clones to distract you while she went underground," Hinata stated, sounding chastising, but not demeaning. "You need to take care of those kind of details now that you're a Chunin."

"Listen to your sister, Hanabi. Do not let an unique and strong power blind you as to neglect proper fighting skill," Yamato added, before looking at the twins. "That goes for you two, you know."

"Hey, I'm not relying on Wood Release that much," Kaida protested.

Hagane, however, took the criticism in stride. "Yamato-sensei isn't lecturing us to make us feel bad. Listening to our teachers is the best way to improve."

"Sensei's pet," Both Hanabi and Kaida seethed.

"Okay, okay, I don't want any bad blood here. Let's take a rest before resuming the training, understood?" Yamato suggested.

"Alright!" the three Chunin said in unison.

...

Hokage Tower

"Come in," Jiraiya said after hearing somebody knocking the door.

The door opened, revealing a lizard-masked ANBU.

"Hokage-sama, here's Kakashi's latest report regarding the Takigakure resistance," the ANBU sotically said as he handed the white haired Sannin a scroll.

Jiraiya nodded, took and unfurled the scroll before reading its contents. His lips formed a smile of satisfaction, furling the scroll again once he had read everything on it.

"Alright, it seems that all the Taki ninjas outside of the village at the time of the invasion had been finally gathered, and they stand ready to retake their home. They're waiting for our reinforcements," Jiraiya stated. "Which we will be sending immediately."

"Understood, Hokage-sama," the ANBU said, as he was ready to leave.

"Before you leave, find my son and his teammates," Jiraiya stated. "I want them to spearhead the attack."

"Very well, Hokage-sama," the ANBU replied, making a quick bow before leaving the office.

Satisfied, Jiraiya stood up, and walked towards the window behind his desk.

"Alright, Akatsuki, you thought you can do whatever you want with no one able to stop you," Jiraiya said to no one, as his gaze drifted to the village before his eyes. "We're about to prove you wrong."

Author's Note: So, following where we left it the last chapter, Fu continues to adapt to her new life in Konoha. This time, some jinchuriki bonding with Naruto, as well as some training to help her control her Tailed Beast. Speaking of which, I had a lot of fun writing Chomei's scenes, especially the ones in which she's with Kurama.

And Fu isn't the only one who trains. She herself continues to train Hinata and Hanabi in the art of flying, while they also learn more about the power of the Tenseigan. Some little foreshadowing there wink wink ;)

Some reviewers were sad they couldn't see Hagane, Kaida and Hanabi fighting in the Chunin Exams, so I decided to throw a spar between the three of them to show a bit more their powers and fighting style. Hope you liked it.

Thanks to grimlock987 for betareading this chapter.

Anyway, the action will resume next chapter as the good guys try to take Takigakure back from Akatsuki! Meanwhile, leave a review with your thoughts on this chapter! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Battle for Taki

Author's Note: Hmmm, the number of reviews the last chapter got was one of the lowest as of date, though the reviews themselves didn't point out if there was something wrong. Oh well, let's hope this chapter fares better. Enjoy:

Chapter 62:

The Battle for Taki

or

You Catch more Fu with Honey than Vinegar

"It's a pity we have to abandon this village," Hidan said, sounding a little saddened. "I couldn't even get started on the construction of the Jashin Temple."

"I thought there was already a Jashin Temple in the Land of Springs. Wasn't there where you were trained?" Kakuzu asked.

"Well, yes, but the temple was in in the middle of fucking nowhere. Jashin-sama would be mostly pleased if I build a temple to him in the heart of a ninja village. Oh well, guess that another slaughter will have to do," Hidan said, with his usual sadistic glee.

"Do as you wish," Kakuzu apathetically replied, as from their vantage point, they watched the activity going on in the village below them.

A messenger had arrived with the news that the Taki resistance, alongside reinforcements from Konoha and Suna, were heading towards the village. Kakuzu and Hidan, pretending they cared about keeping the village, had ordered everybody to put a defense and repel the invaders, even if they did know that the village was already lost and those poor idiots would die for nothing.

Well, not for nothing. Maybe if they managed to kill some enemy ninjas before going down, their lives would weaken Akatsuki's enemies even if just a little.

Even if he would never admit it, Kakuzu felt it was a pity he couldn't keep the village for longer. It was a place that he hated like no other, and having it under his control would have been his ultimate revenge.

"Anyway, I'll better get everything ready. You stay here and keep them busy. Try to kill some of them if you can," Kakuzu told him as he turned around, and walked away.

"How are you so sure the jinchuriki will come to us?" Hidan asked.

"I know how she thinks," Kakuzu confidently said, before Body Flickering away.

"I know how she thinks" Hidan mockingly repeated. "'I'm Kakuzu and I'm a fucking smartass that knows everything, yet doesn't worship Jashin-sama'. Oh well, at least he gave me the fun part of the mission..."

...

Meanwhile, not far away from there, said group of ninjas, about five hundred strong, were leaping from one tree branch to another, getting closer to Takigakure. The Konoha and Suna ninja would expect traps or an ambush the more they got closer, but the Taki ninjas told them that the Akatsuki wouldn't bother with that. The secret entrances to Takigakure were pretty much bottlenecks, and the defenders would use that to their advantage.

That's why they decided to send their strongest asset to deal with such situation first: Naruto Uzumaki.

The blond jinchuriki would infiltrate Takigakure on his own, create some ruckus with his clones and summons, and thus allowing the bulk of their forces to enter the village unimpeded. Right now, he was being led by a Takigakure Jonin, a blond haired man he remembered from the Chunin exams as one of Fu's teammates. Kegon was his name.

They stopped when they reached a small waterfall that fed into a lagoon.

"Here we are," Kegon announced.

"So... where's this secret entrance? Behind that waterfall?" Naruto guessed.

"It is," the Taki Jonin confirmed.

"That's kind of cliché," Naruto pointed out, crossing his arms over his chest.

"It's not a direct way into the village," Kegon replied, a little annoyed. "Behind this waterfall there's a grotto. Said grotto is pretty much a maze where you will get lost unless you know where to go," the blond Taki man handed Naruto a small scroll. "Follow the indications on this scroll, and you'll be able to reach an entrance at the edge of the lake."

Naruto nodded as he took the scroll. "Understood!" he replied, as he gave Kegon a thumbs up.

"Make sure you're quick, because the moment I return to the others and tell them you're inside, we'll wait only ten minutes to attack. Will you be able to clear a zone big enough for our forces to enter unimpeded in such little time?"

Naruto smirked confidently. "I'll only need five minutes."

"For the sake of our village, hope you can back those words up," Kegon replied. "Anyway, now you'll be on your own. Good luck."

And with that, Kego leaped away, leaving Naruto to his mission. Despite his initial impression, he had to admit that the secret entrance wasn't as lame as he thought. Without the scroll telling him where to go, he would have gotten lost in no time.

"Or maybe I could summon an army of clones and have them move around until one of them found the exit," Naruto thought, pleased with his idea.

The blond jinchuriki exited from a small hole in the ground that was hidden by several strategically placed bushes. From that point, he could see the village of Takigakure. Most of it was in the island in the middle of the lake, built around the roots of the Great Tree, with a single bridge connecting it to the mainland. There were also several clusters of houses built at the edge of the lake as well.

"Okay, those houses at the edge of the lake look like they're from civilians, so I shouldn't worry too much about them. Now, the best way to call their attention would be to attack the bridge. But how? This requires a clever, intricate plan like any other..." Naruto said, as he started to think for a couple minutes.

After doing some thinking, the blond Konoha ninja grinned, and made his trademark hand seal. One hundred Naruto clones appeared besides him in an instant.

"Everybody, charge! Seek the enemies, and kick their asses!" the original Naruto shouted.

His command was met with a chorus of "yeah!", "let's go!", "Let's show them our strength!" and, oddly enough, a couple of "I'm hungry!".

The Takigakure defenders, composed by mercenaries, cultists, and a few Taki ninjas that decided to defect to Kakuzu's side, were soon swarmed by a tsunami of orange and black.

"We're under attack!" a thug cried.

"The hell? Why do these guys look the same?" another one asked.

"They're clones, you idiot!" a cultist told them.

"Impossible! Nobody should be able to produce so many clones!" the first thug angrily fired back, as he destroyed a clone of Naruto.

"We can!" several Naruto clones replied in unison, almost indignant at the mere thought of casting doubt on their boss' abilities.

The flash attack of the Naruto army quickly pushed the defenders of the bridge back into the main village, with the clones following suit. Sadly, by that point, most of the ninjas guarding the village had been alerted of the invasion, and quickly run to face the army of orange clad clones, which quickly began to dwindle in number as kunai, shuriken and destructive elemental ninjutsu flied at them.

"Well, so much for the clones," Naruto said, as he leaped into the air, landing in the surface of the lake. He bit his thumb, and made several hand seals. "Guess I'll need to bring the heavy hitters. Summoning Jutsu!"

Naruto slammed his palm on the water, creating a giant cloud of smoke, as well as producing some waves due the water that has been displaced. When the smoke dispelled, everybody could see a gigantic toad, his rusty red skin covered in multiple warts. He was wearing a blue vest, had a short -to him- blade attached to his belt, and his lips were holding on a still smoking pipe.

The giant toad took a few moments to contemplate his surroundings.

"Naruto?" the giant toad asked, noticing the blonde standing on his head. "Is this the village you told me about!"

"Yup!" Naruto enthusiastically nodded. "Are you ready for the action, Bunta?"

Gamabunta, or Bunta, as he was sometimes called, unsheathed his blade to state his answer.

"I just hope it won't be just the two of us," Gamabunta stated, as he prepared to attack a group of mercenaries and Jashin cultists.

"Nah, we're just clearing the way for the rest to join us," Naruto reassured him.

"Good, because otherwise this would be kind of boring," Gamabunta said, as he leaped to the edge of the island in the center of the lake, creating a quake and producing more waves on the lake. "Come on, come at me, ants!" Gamabunta taunted, as he swung his blade at a group of enemies, some which avoided the swipe, others not so fortunate.

...

"Boy, you can heard the sound of the battle even from here."

The ten minutes long gone, the Takigakure resistance and their Konoha and Suna allies decided to move and attack. They were split in three groups, one for each secret entrance the village had. They would attack from three different sides in a pincer maneuver, and meet in the middle.

"I can believe that Naruto went on his own like that, the madman," Kiba continued, shaking his head. "The cocky bastard must think he can take on a village on his own."

Kakashi's Animal Squad was also taking part in the battle. Though rather than direct combatants, they have been appointed as Fu's bodyguards due their close friendship with the female jinchūriki, as well as their tracking skills just in case Fu disappeared, either on her own, or if she was abducted by the enemy. They were jumping from one branch to another like the rest of their group, while Fu flew above them.

"Naruto knows he isn't doing that. All he's doing is draw attention to him so we have a bigger window of opportunity to strike," Kakashi reminded him.

"Alright then, what secret entry are we going to use?" Tamaki asked.

"No one," Fu interjected before Kakashi could answer. "We'll attack from the air."

"Um... Fu? Maybe you can do that, but no one else here can fly," Tamaki uneasily asked.

Fu shot a smirk at the cat kunoichi, which sent chills down her spine. Then, without any kind of warning, Fu dived and, in one fell swoop, grabbed Shino, Kiba and Tamaki in a two-armed hug.

"Kakashi-san, grab onto me, I can't carry anymore people in my arms!" Fu told the silver haired ninja.

"Fu! Just... what are you doing?" the surprised Jonin asked in shock.

"The secret entrances take too much time. I prefer if we take a more direct route. And yes, I know that you guys are my escorts and I'm not going to leave you behind. But I will if you don't make up your mind!" Fu protested.

Seeing that the Taki jinchuriki was gaining altitude, Kakashi jumped and latched onto one of her legs. The additional weight added to the already heavy load didn't seem to hinder Fu in the slightest, as they continued to gain altitude. Kakashi silently thanked that this girl wasn't one of his students.

Fu continued flying as easily as if she wasn't carrying anybody, her eyes locked into the thick forest on a plateau that hid Takigakure. While those orange eyes usually shone with the glint of youth and happiness, now they reflected her determination and steel hard resolve to take back her home.

"Fu, I know this battle means a lot to you but..." Kakashi began.
"Shouldn't we attack alongside the rest of the group? If we arrive too early, we will find ourselves outnumbered and away from backup."

"Naruto should have taken care of that," Fu replied, as she pierced the forest that surrounded Taki, skillfully avoiding all the thick and lush branches without having to slow down. "Plus, we aren't going to take part in the main battle."

"We aren't?" Kiba and Tamaki asked in unison.

"Fu, you can't-" Kakashi was going to say before being interrupted.

"Our mission will be to find and rescue Shibuki," Fu firmly stated.
"You're a tracking squad, you will be able to track him, right? And taking advantage of the chaos of the battle, we'll take him to safety while the rest of our forces take back the city. Genius plan!"

Kakashi didn't share Fu's optimism.

"Fu, there's the chance that Akatsuki might be counting on you trying to rescue Shibuki, and thus making you leave the security of the bulk of the army," Shino pointed out.

"I already thought of that. But that's why you're also here, silly! You're also my escorts, right? So as long as you guys keep close to me, nothing will go wrong!" Fu excitedly said, as her lips curved into an innocent smile.

...

The bulk of the Taki Resistance and their allies took very little time to arrive at the village and join the battle, Thanks to Naruto drawing all the attention to him, the rest of the ninja could get into the village with little problem, and engage the enemies.

"Come on everybody! For Takigakure! Let's kick these invaders out of our home!" a Taki ninja shouted, with his comrades cheering back.

"Alright then, I think I can fight normally now. Gamabunta, cover us while we liberate the village!" Naruto said, as he jumped off of the giant toad, as he pulled out and activated his Wind Blade.

"You got it, brat!" Gamabunta replied.

Naruto landed in the water, and rushed towards the central island, eyeing the ongoing battles and wondering which one he should join.

"Naruto-kun!"

The voice of his girlfriend coming from above snapping him from his thoughts. Looking upwards, Naruto saw Hinata flying down at him. Haku was with her and, oddly enough, he was flying as well.

"Hinata-hime! Haku!" Naruto cheered, waving at them. "Good to see you're here! Now we can fight the three of us together!"

"Indeed. Let's end this battle as quick as possible so the loses for Taki and our forces are kept to a minimum," Haku agreed, as he landed near Naruto. Hinata remained floating above them.

"Um, Haku? Were you flying?" Naruto asked, scratching his head.

The Ice Ninja shook his head. "No. Hinata-san has become proficient in her abilities to share her flight with somebody else."

"So far I can only carry one person with me, but I'm working to expand that limit," Hinata chimed in. "That way, the Assault Squad can be a flying unit!"

"Neat idea, hime! Though for the time being, we won't need it," Naruto said, as he directed his eyes to the battle in front of them. "There doesn't seem to be any trace of the Akatsuki, and the ones defending the village are made of rabble. Thugs, mercenaries, and screaming cultists that look scary but aren't that though."

"Okay then. Let's clear the battlefield by the time the Akatsuki show up," Hinata agreed.

Suddenly, an ear piercing scream echoed through the village. The battle stopped for a few seconds, as everybody directed their eyes to the canopy of the Great Tree, where the scream had come from. Then, a mass of black creatures emerged from the canopy of the tree, and rushed to the battlefield, some of them running, those who had wings flying.

"What... what are those abominations?" Hinata asked in horror. With her Tensiegan, she could see them close. Ugly, nightmarish creatures with inky black skin, long, bony limbs, several maws full of razor sharp long teeth, multiple eyes across their uneven bodies, or no eyes at all.

"I don't know, but I have the feeling that they aren't on our side," Haku uneasily said, as his hand grabbed a handful of senbon from his ninja tool pouch.

"Oh no! Not those monsters again!" a Taki ninja cried in despair, taking a step back.

"You know those things?" Naruto asked the Taki ninja.

The fearful Taki man nodded. "The cultist summoned them when they first attacked us... but there weren't so many of them before!"

"Of course, it would be naïve on our part to think that this would be easy and that Akatsuki wouldn't have a nasty surprise in stock for us," Naruto said, sounding a bit annoyed, but he quickly lightened up. "But if there's no challenge, there's no fun! Hinata, Haku, let's focus on those creatures while the rest of our forces deal with the human opponents!"

"Alright!" the two of them chorused in unison, as they followed Naruto towards the incoming charge of demonic creatures.

...

Meanwhile, not far away from there, but far enough from the main battle, Fu and Kakashi's animal Squad had located the Akatsuki, and were heading towards their alleged location, with Shino leading the group. Given the threat Kakuzu made, Fu guessed that Shibuki wouldn't be far away from them.

"How do you know where they are?" Kakashi asked his quiet student.

"During our brief confrontation, I had a kikai beetle latched onto the Akatsuki that was chasing Fu. Said beetle is now releasing a pheromone only my hive of kikai can smell," Shino explained.

"Good one, Shino! I'll have to give you a really big reward for being so efficient!" Fu cheerfully said, winking at her boyfriend.

Shino blushed for a few seconds. "Err... that's very nice of you, but let's leave the celebrations for the moment the Akatsuki is defeated and Taki is again free of its grasp."

Akamaru then barked.

"Guys, Akamaru can smell him as well!" Kiba stated. "He says that he remembers the foul scent of his chakra. Wherever they go, they won't evade our senses."

"Alright then, everybody, prepare for an imminent fight! And Fu, stay close to us! I know what you must be feeling right now, but don't stray away, that's what Akatsuki wants!" Kakashi sternly stated, looking at Fu with his one visible eye.

"Don't worry, I won't let those bastards capture me so easily," Fu replied.

"We're heading out of the village," Tamaki mentioned.

And indeed, the others noticed that they were heading towards the forests west of Taki.

"I think they're moving," Kiba added. "My guess is that they know we're coming, and are taking us to a trap."

"Or they just simply want to isolate us from the rest of our allies," Kakashi stated. "Probably both."

All of them tensed up the moment they left the village and entered the forest. Now, they would be alone. Whatever Akatsuki had prepared, it wouldn't be pretty.

"Fu, do you know if there's something around here? Something the Akatsuki could use against us?" Tamaki asked the green haired girl.

Fu placed a finger under her lips, as she started to think if there is anything special about the forest, but nothing came to mind. She shook her head.

"As far as I know, there are nothing but trees. Kilometers and kilometers of trees," Fu replied.

"Remember that Kakuzu used to be a Takigakure ninja. It's probable that he knows secrets about the village and its surroundings many of the younger Taki ninjas such as yourself might ignore," Shino pointed out.

"If you say so," Fu replied, shrugging again. "Though I won't let my guard down."

"Too bad we didn't take Hinata with us. With those eyes of her, she could be able to see any potential trap in advance," Kiba said.

"Maybe in another life. But now, we'll have to do without an Hyuga to help us," Shino replied.

They continued leaping from one branch to another, until Akamaru started to bark.

"Kiba?" Tamaki asked.

"Akamaru said that they've stopped. I think they're ready to fight," Kiba explained the others.

"And so are we!" Fu firmly shouted, punching her palm.

They arrived to a clearing in the forest. In the middle of the clearing, lying on his side, with his arms and legs restrained by ropes, laid Fubuki, the former -hopefully not for long- leader of Takigakure. Fu couldn't help but gasp in shock upon seeing her leader and big brother-like figure.

"Shibuki!" she cried, while repressing her urges to speed towards him. Even she knew they were using him as the bait for a trap.

"Let's help Shibuki, but stay close to each other, and watch for any trap or ambush. It's not a matter of if, but of when," Kakashi instructed, as he uncovered his Sharingan.

The four members of the Animal Squad landed around Shibuki, each one of them facing to a different cardinal point, while Fu landed besides Shibuki, and quickly dropped on her knees, untied him, and checked if he was okay.

"Shibuki! Are you okay? Did those mean guys hurt you? Do you need something?" Fu hurriedly asked as she untied her leader. "Oh my Kami, you look awful! Shino, I need you to heal him a little!"

"Fu, you have to leave! They used me to lure you out of the village! The Akatsuki are here!" a panicked Shibuki stammered.

"We're already aware of that, Shibuki-san," Kakashi told him, without dropping his fighting stance. "By the way, do you think you can fight? We're going to need all the possible help."

As Fu helped him to sit up, Shibuki shook his head. "On top of the daily beatings I got from the guards, those bastards barely fed me. I can barely stand on my feet."

"Shino, go and heal Shibuki, I believe you have a spare soldier pill, right? Give one to Shibuki," Kakashi ordered. "With that, you should be able to provide us some assistance."

"Assistance that, in the end, will fail to make a difference," a new, raspy voice grumbled.

Everybody saw how Kakuzu and Hidan landed in front of them. They immediately turned towards their direction, but without leaving their backs uncovered. Who knows how many allies the Akatsuki still had.

"Hehe, you were right. Those retards fell right into our trap, despite being so fucking obvious what it was!" Hidan laughed.

"What is your trap, may I ask?" Shino asked. "You lured us to this clearing, but you didn't even ambush us. You blew the element of surprise by announcing your arrival. If this is a trap, it's a very poor one."

"Didn't your sensei teach you that a ninja must learn to see through deception, or, as more commonly said, appearances can be deceiving?" Kakuzu asked in a somewhat mocking tone, as his hands formed hand seals, before slapping Hidan's bare chest. "Five Purple Ray Barrier!"

Suddenly, Hidan started to glow with a purple light, and a purple colored beam of chakra fired from his body into the sky. Four other beams fired from different parts around their position. The four periferic rays started to curve towards the central one, until the five rays converged, creating a dome-shaped purple chakra barrier around the area.

"And now, the trap is complete," Kakuzu continued. "The Five Purple Ray Barrier is a secret jutsu of Takigakure they used back in my day to protect the village, but not anymore since I stole it. It's a powerful barrier that uses a human being as focal point and it slowly feeds into their life force. Once the focal point dies, the barrier will go down."

"Why are you telling us this?" Tamaki demanded. She was getting some really bad vibes from Kakuzu's overconfidence.

"Because I'm immortal, you dumb bitch! There's no way that barrier will go down until Kakuzu or myself decides to take it down!" Hidan shouted, laughing maniacally.

"Meaning that you're now trapped here with us, with no reinforcements, and no chance to escape. And if by some miracle you're able to kill Hidan..." Kakuzu said, as he briefly eyed his partner. "... you will have my eternal gratitude."

"Yeah!" Hidan cheered, before Kakuzu's words registered in his brain, and shoot his partner an indignant look. "... wait, what?"

"Enough chit chat, we have a job to do," Kakuzu said, as he started to make hand seals. "Earth Release: Earth Dragon Bullets!

A giant dragon head made of mud formed in front of Kakuzu. It opened its jaws, and fired a volley of mud bullets at the group of six, which jumped away in different directions (while Fu deployed her wings and took off to the sky).

"Let the slaughter begin!" Hidan hollered, as he leaped towards Tamaki, ready to strike her down with his scythe.

"Shit!" Tamaki cursed as she parried the powerful blow with her bladed gauntlets.

Still, Hidan was undeterred, and in his mad frenzy continued to deliver a flurry of furious swipes at the cat kunoichi, who could do nothing but defend while the demented cultist pushed her back with each swipe.

"Come on, little girl, put on a better show! Make your death worth something!" Hidan cackled as he continued to attack.

Suddenly, he heard a loud buzz, and looked upwards as a shadow was cast over the two of them. Much to his surprise, he saw a massive swarm of beetles angrily buzzing and flying at him.

"What the fuck!? Bugs? Like, fucking seriously?" the pissed Akatsuki shouted, as the swarm of insects forced him to disengage Tamaki and jump back.

"Fang Passing Fang!"

Suddenly, Hidan saw two drilling tornadoes flying towards him. The cultist was barely able to dodge them, shredding part of his Akatsuki cloak. When the tornadoes stopped spinning, they revealed to be Kiba and Akamaru, who landed between Tamaki and Shino.

"One with bugs, the other with a dog... just what kind of ninjas are you?" Hidan asked, almost indignant.

"The ones who are going to kick your sorry ass!" Tamaki replied, as her hands flew through hand seals. "Fire Release: Blistering Firecat!"

Tamaki breathed a stream of fire, which quickly took the shape of a giant cat, rushing on all fours towards Hidan.

"And I guess that you use cats, right? Fucking flea ridden pests..." Hidan said, making no effort in dodging the attack. The fire cat crashed against him, and he was soon engulfed by a fiery torrent of flames.

"Yes! Direct hit! Well done, Tamaki!" Kiba congratulated his teammate, who smiled proudly in return.

However, when the fires dispelled, Hidan was still there, completely unscathed.

"So, that was all?" Hidan mockingly asked.

Tamaki and Kiba stared at the Akatsuki in shock, their mouths wide agape.

"It seems he may be an immortal after all..." Shino observed.

Meanwhile, a few meters from the clash against Hidan, Kakashi, Fu and Shibuki engaged Kakuzu. Fu was engaging him in hand to hand combat, while Kakashi and Shibuki supported her from afar.

"You didn't learn anything from our previous duel, did you?" Kakuzu asked, as he and Fu traded blows. Whenever their fists clashed, a small shockwave was produced.

Fu gritted her teeth in irritation. "Things are different now! I have my friends backing me up!"

"And I do have my partner as well, for all what it's worth," Kakuzu nonchalantly replied, as he blocked a lateral kick with both arms. "But even if I was alone, the result would be the same. You only saw a smidge of my power."

"Show me your full power, then!" Fu challenged him.

Before Kakuzu could answer, the sound of a thousand birds chirping could be heard. The Taki Akatsuki disengaged Fu and jumped upwards, barely avoiding Kakashi's Lightning Blade coming from the side, before the Copy Ninja could skewer him.

"Word of advice, Kakashi Hatake," Kakuzu stated as his feet touched the ground again. "Assassination jutsu tend to work better when they don't make a noise so loud it can be heard in the entire continent."

Kakashi remained silent as the blue electricity coating his hand flickered away, and merely glared at the masked Akatsuki with anger filled eyes. Kakuzu ignored Kakashi and directed his stare back at Fu.

"If you want to skip the warm up and go directly into the heat of the battle, I'm more than happy to comply," Kakuzu replied, in an oddly satisfied tone. "Hidan!"

The scythe-wielding Akatsuki was busy fighting the three Chunin of the Animal Squad.

"The fuck you want, Kakuzu? Don't you see I'm busy murdering some brats?" Hidan hollered at him.

"The jinchuriki asked us to go all out on her," Kakuzu said, as he removed his cloak, and tossed it away, revealing a body full of stitches scars. "I'm going to do it."

Hidan's anger instantly evaporated, and a sadistic grin appeared in his face. The Jashin cultist disengaged the three Chunin, and jumped towards Kakuzu.

"Why didn't you say it before? I love when we go all out!" Hidan said in glee.

The three Chunin took advantage of the brief pause, and rejoined their sensei and the two Takigakure ninja.

"Hey, what the hell is going on?" Kiba asked.

"I'm not sure, but whatever they plan to do, we won't like it," Kakashi said.

Kakuzu then bent over, and everybody could see that there were four different masks sewn to his back. The masks then started to tremble, as if they tried to break from Kakuzu's body, which they did after struggling for some seconds. Turns out those masks were attached to four inky black beings made my a mass of pulsating threads. Upon escaping Kakuzu, they placed themselves in front of the two Akatsuki. More threads emerge from the huge gap that was now on Kakuzu's back, and started to stitch the skin together.

"I think I'm going to throw up..." Tamaki moaned, green to the gills.

"I remember Hinata saying that Kakuzu's body was nothing like she saw before. I guess this is what she meant," Shino deduced, remaining as impossible as ever.

"The number of enemies now matches our group. And we don't even know what those monsters even do," Shibuki observed, as he eyed the newcomers.

"Oh, you're going to find out really soon," Kakuzu said as he made three hand seals. The monster with the red lipped mask, which looked like a tiger, opened its mouth. "Fire Release: Searing Migraine!"

The thread monster exhaled a massive breath of fire that scorched the earth and burned any nearby plant or tree as it advanced. The Konoha ninjas jumped away, but the Taki duo decided to counter the attack.

"Fu!" Shibuki called, as he made several hand seals.

"I know!" the green haired girl replied, mimicking his actions.

"Water Release: Water Wall!"

Fu and Shibuki expelled two cones of water each at the incoming firestorm, Fu's packing more power than Shibuki's. A cloud of steam flooded the battlefield when the two elemental forces met, and Kakuzu's attack was nullified.

"Guys, are you okay?" Fu called.

"Yes! That was close, good one, Fu," Tamaki said from above, perched on a tree branch.

"I thought that man was an Earth Release user. An attack of such scale would have only been possible if the Akatsuki had a fire affinity," Shino noted.

"Double affinity then? Remember Sakura," Kiba pointed out.

"Your conjectures couldn't be any wronger," Kakuzu said, as he made the Ram seal. The monster with the bird faced mask opened its beak. "Wind Release: Pressure Damage!"

"Wind too? He can't have three affinities!" Tamaki protested.

The bird-masked monster released a monstrously powerful gale, that instantly dispelled the steam, tore apart tree branches and small plants, and naturally, blew away all the opposing ninjas, Fu included. With just those two attacks, Kakuzu had already doubled the expanse of the forest clearing.

"Ugh..." Kiba groaned, as he removed several branches from his body, as he tiredly stood up. "Just what's with this-"

"KIBA, LOOK OUT!" Tamaki screamed.

"DIE, YOU INFIDEL!"

Before he had time to react, Kiba saw Hidan leaping towards him, ready to cut him open with that three bladed scythe. Kiba managed to pull two kunai from his ninja tool pouch, and parried the hit. Like with Tamaki before, Hidan continued to deliver vicious swings. Kiba managed to defend himself, but Hidan's blows carried a lot of power, and his weapon had a greater range.

"Akamaru!" Kiba shouted.

Akamaru rushed towards his master with a loud bark, and leaped at Hidan. The startled Akatsuki disengaged Kiba and raised his scythe defensively towards the incoming dog. Akamaru clenched his jaws across the scythe's handle, trying to wrestle it away from Hidan.

"How you dare to touch the High Priest's Sacred Scythe, you flea ridden bitch!" Hidan hollered, as he tried to wrestle the scythe from the snarling dog.

"Keep him like that, Akamaru!" Kiba said, as he dashed towards them. However, much to his horror, he realized the fire monster was aiming another of those fire attacks towards them. "Oh shit!"

"Oh no, you won't!" Tamaki's voice said, as the cat kunoichi delivered a flying double kick to the monster's side, making it to release the fire attack into the sky. "You owe me one!"

Hidan, meanwhile, managed to retrieve his scythe from Akamaru's grasp, but as he did, he was unable to dodge Kiba lunging at him, ready to slash him with his elongated nails. His face and exposed part of his chest felt the pain of Kiba's slashed.

"God Dammit! What the fuck you think you-"

"Lightning Blade!"

Despite the initial sound, Kakashi's trademark jutsu hit its mark, and pierced the Jashin cultist's heart from behind, running him his arm through, his still electrified hand bursting from his chest. Hidan, however, looked more angry rather than in pain.

"You don't seem to understand what 'immortality' means, do you, you retard?" Hidan asked, as he grabbed Kakashi's hand, keeping him stuck.

"I had to test it to see if it was true," was Kakashi's answer. "After all, I'm not going to take the enemy's word for granted."

"Whatever, dude. Kakuzu!" Hidan hollered.

Another one of Kakuzu's monsters, this time one with a mask that looked like a horned demon, leaped towards them. Its body started to crackle with electricity as Kakuzu made the Snake seal. "Lightning Release: False Darkness!"

The demon masked monster opened its mouth, releasing a stream of lightning bolts at the startled Kakashi.

"This is bad!" the copy ninja distressingly though, trying in vain to pull his right hand from Hidan's chest. Before the lightning could strike, he used his left arm and, without the aid of seals, tried to use his signature jutsu once again. "Lightning Blade!"

With his electrified hand, Kakashi managed to swat away the lightning attack. Then, he felt that Hidan was no longer grabbing him, and pulled his hand from the hole he had made. However, Hidan spun over his feet, ready to deliver an horizontal spinning slash with his scythe. Kakashi jumped back, but wasn't fast enough, and the scythe slashed his chest, piercing his flak jacket, and drawing some blood.

"Yes! Hahaha... hahahaha... HAHAAAAHA! You'll make a fine sacrifice to Jashin-sama, copy ninja!" Hidan said, as he licked Kakashi's blood.

While Team Kakashi dealt with Hidan and some of Kakuzu's monsters, Fu hadn't lost sight of her initial goal, and flew to face Kakuzu once again. The masked Akatsuki didn't fail to notice the enraged jinchuriki.

"It's rare to see a prey seeking their predator with such energy," Kakuzu deadpanned as he engaged into another brutal hand to hand duel with the green haired jinchuriki. "Are you that foolish to believe that you have a chance against me?"

"I have more than a chance!" Fu yelled, as a tornado started to form in her fist. "Hurricane Punch!"

Fu's punch produced a powerful wind in every direction strong enough to push Kakuzu back. Before he could have time to react, Fu jumped and tried to deliver a roundhouse kick to the head. But Kakuzu's reflexes were sharper than she thought, and expertly grabbed her by the ankle. In a display of monumental force, Kakuzu then slammed Fu against the ground multiple times.

"Leave her alone!" Shibuku shouted, as he leaped at Kakuzu with a blade made of water in his hands.

Kakuzu merely chuckled Fu at Shibuki, who crashed against her, before they dropped to the ground with a loud thud.

"Not being able to kill you is rather irritating. But let's hope that can keep you two down enough time so we can get rid of the rest," Kakuzu grumbled.

Before Kakuzu could decide which enemy he should take out next, that decision was made for him when he was covered head to toe by an angry swarm of beetles.

"What the...?" Kakuzu asked, trying to swat the bugs away.

"You won't lay a finger on Fu while I'm here and I can fight," Shino said in cold anger, as with a hand motion, commanded his swarm to drain Kakuzu dry of chakra.

However, the swarm of beetles had the unintended effect of hiding Kakuzu while he made a hand seal. One of the thread monsters, the one with the turtle mask, leaped at them.

"Water Release: Roaring Waterfall!"

The turtle masked monster opened its jaws, expelling a massive cone of water wide enough to hit both Kakuzu and Shino with immense force. Shino jumped, as he recalled the swarm attacking Kakuzu, who made no effort to move and was engulfed by the incoming torrent.

"He didn't care about hitting himself with his own jutsu in order to get rid of my Kikai swarm..." Shino noted, as his brain tried to formulate a strategy. "Elemental blasts of such scale will wipe my swarm away in an instant... I didn't think I'd have to resort to this jutsu so soon, but guess that the quality of the enemy demands it..."

"You are an Aburame, aren't you? Very few clans use insects to attack enemies," Kakuzu noted. "If you were five years older, I could cash a nice bounty for your head. Such a pity, but I can't let you live. Please don't make it harder than it should be. I'm sure you already noticed that your set of skills will be of little use against me, so let's not drag this out. Time is gold, as they usually say."

"Trust me, the feeling is mutual," Shino coldly replied, as he made a singler hand seal. "Aburame Secret Art: Giant Beetle Growth!"

Several bursts of smoke exploded around Shino, creating eight beetles as large as Akamaru. Kakuzu, however, was unimpressed.

"That changes nothing. No matter what you do, you won't be able to land a hit on me," Kakuzu confidently said.

"Maybe," with a hand motion, Shino directed the enlarged beetles at the Akatsuki adopted a fighting stance. Then, much to his surprise, the beetles deviated their trajectory in the last second, flying to the sides. "But I'm sure she can."

Kakuzu noticed a shadow looming over him. Looking up, he saw an enraged Fu descending upon him, her fist ready to crush him into pulp. While her body was battered and had numerous bruises, she didn't look as she was unable to keep fighting.

"How did she recover so soon?" Kakuzu thought in frustration, as he instinctively raised his arms to protect himself. "Too late to dodge, I need to harden my skin!"

"TAKE THIS!" Fu screamed, as her fist hit Kakuzu's crossed arms, unleashing all her anger into that blow.

Fu felt like her fist was hitting solid rock rather than soft flesh, but she didn't mind. If Kakuzu turned into stone, she'll shatter him to bits. The force of the impact caused a powerful shockwave, while it also sank Kakuzu to his knees into the ground, cracks in the ground spreading from the penetration point. Fu the continued punching Kakuzu both arms, sinking him a little more with each hit.

Sensing its master cornered, one of the monsters quickly rushed to his aid. The bird, masked creature opened its beak as it charged a devastating Wind Release against the jinchuriki...

"No, you won't," Shino said coolly.

... if it weren't for the group of giant beetles slamming against the monster, latching onto him, and devouring its chakra as well. The monster didn't scream -it seemed it was unable to- but tried to struggle against its predators by wildly shooting wind bullets in random directions, failing to hit any of the enlarged insects, who wisely positioned themselves to avoid being hit.

"What!?" Kakuzu asked in shock.

The first creature failing its task, and being already defeated, it was the turtle masked monster who attacked Fu with a powerful stream of water, forcing the mint haired girl to fly away, and allowing Kakuzu to get out of the hole Fu had sunken him into.

"Inconceivable. How did I lose one of my hearts so soon, to these children!?" Kakuzu thought in frustration. "My greater experience should give me enough advantage to deal with these kids easily."

"Fu, Shibuki-san, are you okay?" Shino asked, as both he and Fu converged with Shibuki.

"I'm fine, but Shibuki doesn't look that hot," Fu said, before turning towards Kakuzu, and raising her fists in front of her face. "I'll keep the Akatsuki busy while you heal Shibuki, okay?"

"You need healing too," Shino protested.

"Not as much as Shibuki. Now heal him already!" Fu ordered.

Shino decided not to oppose his girlfriend anymore, as he started to heal Shibuki while Fu went back to engage Kakuzu.

...

Takigakure

"Lightning Release: Thunder Arrows!"

Flying above the battle that was taking place in the village, Hinata fired several arrow-shaped lightning bolts with her chakra bow at some of the Sons of Jashin -that's how the cultists called those horrible creatures- that entered her range. The arrows exploded in a splash of electricity, hitting every enemy in a small radius. Had she used her Lightning Release jutsu from such distance she could have hit her allies, who were fighting very close to the enemies.

"But with this weapon, I can shoot accurate attacks at the enemy without being afraid of hitting my allies," Hinata thought, as she floated over the battlefield. "Haku-kun, two coming from behind!" Hinata warned him.

Haku wordlessly nodded, and made several hand seals, before slamming his foot on the ground. Ice started to grow on the ground around him, suddenly generating multiple ice spikes that impaled the Sons of Jashin that tried to ambush him.

"Thank you, Hinata," Haku replied, as he weaved hand signs to pelt with ice blades a group of mercenaries and Jashin cultists in front of him.

"Hey, do you guys know where is Fu?" Naruto asked, as he sliced more Sons of Jashin with his Wind Blade. "I can't see him anywhere. Hinata-hime?"

Hinata nodded, and extended the range of her Tenseigan to cover the whole village. Still, she was unable to find her physical body nor her chakra signature. A worried expression crept on her face.

"I can't find her!" she said in horror.

"What? No, she has to be here! What are Kakashi-sensei and the other doing!?" Naruto shouted in frustration. "There's no way Akatsuki could have get their hands on her so quick!"

"Hinata-san, can you scan the area surrounding the village? She might still be around here," Haku suggested.

Hinata nodded, and did as she was told. As she inspected the surrounding forests, her desperation grew when no signs of human activity were found. That's it, until she saw some flickers of chakra coming from the west. Focusing her sight in that direction, she finally saw it.

"There's a domed chakra barrier in the forest to the west!" Hinata pointed out. "I can't see what's inside, but I have the feeling that both Fu, Team Kakashi and the Akatsuki might be there."

"In that case, we should go and help them. I believe the situation here is under control," Naruto said.

"Indeed, those horrible creatures are retreating!" Hinata pointed out.

And just like she said, the Sons of Jashin disengaging the Taki, Konoha or Suna ninjas fighting them, and run back to the Great Tree. However, they didn't look as if they were abandoning the fight, but more like regrouping to plan a counterattack -could those beasts think complex strategies?-. She was taken aback by what they did next.

"What...?" Hinata asked.

"Hinata-hime, what's going on?" Naruto asked

"They're merging! It seems that, since they have the same chakra signature, they can combine themselves and-"

Hinata's explanation was interrupted when Naruto, Haku and their allies saw a massive black mass rise above them. The mass took a vaguely humanoid form, with a massive top body, large, thick arms, short but stocky legs, and a featureless tiny stump in place of a head. The giant creature had multiple eyes of varying sizes across his body, as well as many mouths full of sharp teeth. Several small tentacles protruded from several parts of his body, constantly wiggling as if they had life on his own.

"What... what the hell is THAT!?" Naruto screamed upon seeing the abomination.

"Our secret weapon! Behold the power of our dark master, you unclean infidels!" a Jashin cultist said in joy. "The Wrath of Jashin! A colossal avatar of our God's will, that will purge this place of the unbelievers!"

The massive creature took a step forward, crushing a house under one his feet, and several ninja of both sides. This caused all the Taki, Konoha and Suna ninja to flee from that monsters' vicinity.

"We need to take that thing out of the village!" Hinata said.

"I know!" Naruto replied, as he leaped onto Gamabunta's head. "Boss, you think you can take that creature away from here?"

"I'll try, but I won't promise anything!" Gamabunta replied, as he went to engage the giant creature. "Try to get everybody else out of my way!"

Gamabunta leaped out of the water, landing in front of the Wrath of Jashin with a loud rumble that make the earth shake. The abomination set all its eyes on the gigantic toad, identifying it as the main threat. Moving one giant arm, the monster tried to slam Gamabunta, but giant toad proved to be more nimble than his size let on, fainted, and latched onto the creature.

"Hinata-hime, Haku, come on, we need to help the boss deal with this guy! Let's try to finish it as soon as we can so we can move to help Fu and the others!" Naruto cried.

Naruto's teammates nodded and jumped -or descended in Hinata's case- onto Gamanunta's head.

"Let's take this somewhere more private, shall we?" Gamabunta said, before leaping high into the air, with the Wrath of Jashin in tow. They cruised the skies at high speed, before falling down a kilometer or so away from Taki. The abrupt landing caused an earthquake and blasted a multitude of trees away, creating a clearing.

"Alright then, now I don't need to hold back anymore!" Gamabunta said with a glee.

"Neither do we," Naruto added, as he prepared his Wind Blade.

...

Back inside the Chakra Dome

Holding his bleeding, slashed stomach with one hand, Kakashi watched in confusion as Hidan licked the blood from his scythe, and changed. His skin turned pitch black with white motifs that somehow resembled human bones.

"The condition has been met. Not, let us begin," Hidan cryptically said as he pulled out a ritual dagger from within his cloak, and stabbed it on his palm. He used the resulting gush of blood to draw a circle with a triangle inside it around him.

"I don't know what the hell is he doing, but my instincts are screaming not to let him finish!" Kakashi thought, as he lunged at Hidan with one hand still holding his stomach, and the other firmly grabbing a kunai.

However, he was forced to cancel the attack when his Sharingan noticed the lightning monster coming at him, ready to fire an electric blast at the copy ninja, who jumped away to avoid it. Still, the monster persisted in his onslaught, and fired more electric bolts, forcing the silver haired Jonin to continue jumping.

Kiba and Tamaki had noticed what had happened, and decided to stop Hidan before he could finish whatever he was doing.

"Come on, Akamaru!" Kiba said, riding his large dog, as they charged at Hidan.

"He needs to stay still to finish whatever jutsu he's planning to do! We can't waste this chance to finish him off!" Tamaki said, leaping besides him.

Unfortunately for them, Kakuzu still had one more monster left, the one with the tiger mask that spewed fire. And fire did spew, a massive torrent of flames, forcing Kiba, Tamaki and Akamaru away from Hidan.

"... and done!" Hidan cried triumphantly, as he started to laugh. "Hahahaha, yes! Now, Jashin-sama, accept this measly sacrifice from this unworthy servant of yours!" Hidan said, almost chanted, as he raised the ritual dagger over his head.

"I need to stop him! He changed when he drank my blood, that means he created some sort of connection between us, and plans to use it in some way to cause me harm!" Kakashi distressingly thought as he tried to avoid the demon masked monster while rushing towards Hidan.

Kakashi's hand crackled with electricity, as he jumped over the demon masked monster. The pain in his stomach became greater the more he moved, made it even worse by all the blood he was losing. He only had a chance to top it. He forced his Sharingan to his limits in order to have a clear shot at the Akatsuki cultist.

"Lightning Release: Lightning Beast Tracking Fang!"

But he was too late.

"Now... SUFFER!"

Hidan brought down his dagger, piercing his flesh, causing him a great pain that flooded him with a perverse sense of joy and pleasure. And the silver haired Jonin felt that very same pain in his own flesh.

"KAKASHI-SENSEI!" Tamaki cried in horror.

Author's Note: Yeah, another cliffhanger that teases a death of a major character. I know, I suck a lot and you hope I die in a fire.

So! The battle for Takigakure's freedom has begun! But we all know that in the end, that battle means very little and the Taki ninjas will take back their home. The real question, though, it's if Akatsuki will be able to capture Fu, or the green haired girl and the Animal Squad (and Shibuki) will be able to survive against the Zombie Team, at least until help arrives.

And while the Assault Squad knows about their predicament, not only are they busy dealing with the Wrath of Jashin, but there's that pesy barrier they have to deal with.

Anyway, I hope you enjoyed all the action on this chapter. Tune in two weeks for the resolution. In the meantime, don't forget to review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Immortal Team, Part I

Author's Note: Well, this arc don't seem to be doing that good in terms of reviews, since we're reaching historical lows. I'm really hoping I'm not losing my touch, or that this story is becoming repetitive or stale. Anyway, let's hope that this chapter fares a little better. Enjoy:

Chapter 63

The Immortal Team, Part I

or

You Can't Kill What's Dead on the Inside

"So... any of you guys have any experience fighting giant monster... thingies with lots of eyes, mouths and tentacles, all in places that shouldn't have any of those?" Naruto asked as he eyed the Wrath of Jashin, whom had recovered from the shock of the landing.

"The answer may surprise you, but no," Haku deadpanned.

The Wrath of Jashin let out a thundering roar from all its mouths at the same time, as it charged at Gamabunta while raising one of its massive arms.

"Fortunately, that thing telegraphs its attacks way in advance," Hinata noticed.

The arm came down, and Gamabunta managed to catch it with his webby hands. However, it packed so much force, the giant toad was pushed backwards, crushing a few trees under him.

"His attacks might be easy to predict, but that doesn't make them any less painful!" Gamabunta loudly wheezed. "Come on, do something!"

"First of all," Naruto said, making his favorite hand seal, as he created two Shadow Clones. "Go collect some nature energy!" Obediently, the clones leaped away, and disappeared between the lush trees below. "So, anybody has an idea of how should we tackle something so big?"

"Let's go for the eyes, I think they may be its weak spots," Hinata suggested, as she readied her chakra bow. Haku did the same.

"Very well then! Let's go!" Naruto agreed, as he and his teammates leaped from Gamabunta towards the Wrath of Jashin. Naruto landed on its right shoulder, Haku on its left forearm, while Hinata stayed floating in front of its chest.

The tentacles that randomly wiggled weren't there for no reason. The moment Naruto and Haku touched the monster, nearby tentacles lunged at them, wrapping around their bodies.

"Oh no, you don't!" Naruto shouted, as he pulled his Wind Blade, and with a well directed swipe, cut the tentacle clean, releasing him at once. More tentacles flew at him, but they ended up sharing the same fate.

Haku, meanwhile, opted to make several hand seals. "Ice Release: Walking Winter!"

The Ice Ninja generated a powerful icy aura that quickly froze the tentacle restraining him. The tentacle frozen, Haku shattered it by slamming his chakra bow against it, breaking free from the appendage.

"Come on, before it has the chance to get us again, attack at once!" Naruto commanded. The others nodded.

"Lightning Release: Thunder Arrow!"

"Ice Release: Freezing Arrow!"

Arrows of lightning and ice impacted against two of the creature's many eyes. Naruto, meanwhile, stabbed his Wind Blade on a large nearby eyeball. The Wrath of Jashin let out a loud, thundering roar, as it thrashed wildly, trying to get rid of its comparatively tiny but painful attackers.

"Gamabunta, attack now!" Naruto shouted.

"You got it, brat!" the giant toad shouted, as he leaped into the air, unsheathed his katana, and delivered a vertical swipe. "TAKE THIS!"

Gamabunta's blade vertically bisected the monster from the stump where its head should be, right to the chest, but the blade didn't go down any further. Oddly enough, rather than blood or organs, Sons of Jashin started to pour from the cut, some of them falling to the ground, others trying to crawl back into the wound and repair it, and others remained on the monster's skin, not knowing what to do.

"The creature is gathering chakra! Watch out, it prepares to attack!" Hinata warned.

And just as the Hyuga Clan Head said, the Wrath of Jashin opened all its mouths at once, releasing streams of blue fire. As if it had life on its own, the fire flew in arcs towards the Konoha ninja and the giant Toad, who pulled his giant blade out of the monster.

"Ouch! Hot! Hot! Hot!" Gamabunta shouted, as the flames made him jump back. "My skin is not made to withstand fire!"

Naruto, Hinata and Haku tried to dodge it as best as they could. They noticed that, even if the flames they dodged crashed against the monster, its skin wasn't burnt, and the creature didn't appear to feel any pain.

"Goddamit, is this creature fireproof?" Naruto complained.

"I believe this is not normal fire," Haku conjectured, as he made several hand seals. "Water Release: Water Wall!"

Haku expelled a stream of water from his mouth to an incoming blaze of blue fire, which did nothing to stop it other than slow it down a little. Haku was forced to dodge once again.

"Indeed. The chakra of the flames doesn't look like normal fire chakra should. It is shaped like fire, but it's not fire," Hinata observed.

"But it still burns like fire!" Gamabunta loudly complained.

"Maybe the skin is fire resistant, but maybe the eyes are not! Let's try to direct the flames there!" Naruto suggested.

Haku and Hinata nodded, and the moment the next homing streams of blue fire came, they tricked them into hitting their eyes.

"GRAAAAAAARGH!"

And Naruto was right, much to his satisfaction. The creature's many mouths let out multiple high pitched growls of pain, as it trashed wildly in order to futilely fight the pain and those who were causing it.

"It worked!" Naruto cheered.

"I can see that. However, even if we destroy all the creature's eyes, I doubt we'll be able to kill it," Hinata pointed out.

"I know, but at least it won't use that attack anymore. Plus I have a plan," Naruto said. "I'll keep this guy distracted. Can you immobilize it?"

"Leave that to me," Haku volunteered, as he started to descend from the monster to the ground level. "Though I believe this may take some time!"

"We'll buy you that time, then!" Hinata exclaimed, as she and Naruto faced the Wrath of Jashin again.

...

Electricity from Kakashi's arm flickered away, as it was replaced by an intense feeling of pain. Blood started to soak the sleeve of his dark blue shirt, pouring from a gash that hadn't been there a second before.

"Kakashi-sensei!" Tamaki screamed.

"Just... what did that guy do?" a confused Kiba asked.

Using his ritual dagger, Hidan had stabbed his right arm, a deranged smile appearing on his face as he did so. He let out a soft, but demented laugh.

"Hahaha... the pain... it feels so good!" Hidan moaned, sounding like somebody who was experiencing the greatest of the pleasures. He pulled the dagger from his bloodied arm. "Shall we do it again?"

"Just like I expected, using my blood, he used a jutsu to create a link between us. Whenever he suffers an injury, the same happens to me. But since he's immortal, he can wound himself all what he wants without running into any risks. In fact, he looks as if he already did this plenty of times..." Kakashi thought, as he held his arm in pain. "But the question is... what can I do to stop him?"

"You know what, Kakashi? My jutsu allows me to shut down my pain receptors if I wish. But I don't want to," Hidan began. "Do you know why? Because I want to know what my victims feel as I slowly erode their lives away. And the pain... oh, the pain! Is there a more wonderful sensation?"

"Kakashi-sensei!" Kiba shouted, as he and Akamaru rushed to attack Hidan.

"No, stop! Hidan linked our chakra in some way! If you cause him any harm, said harm will go to me as well!" Kakashi warned his student.

"Heh, not bad. Most people only realize what's going on when they're about to die," Hidan praised the Copy Ninja. "Not that it's going to be of any help here either!"

"We'll see about that!" Kakashi shouted. Soldiering through the pain, Kakashi grabbed a kunai with his unwounded arm, and dashed towards the Jashin cultist. "Okay, I think I know how can I incapacitate him without causing lethal harm. I only need to-"

"Nuh-uh!" Hidan said in a chastising manner, as he drove his dagger into his right leg.

The silver haired Jonin felt an intense pain on his right leg, lost, balance, and fell to the ground facefirst.

"You may not know it already, Kakashi, but you're already dead. I'm merely toying with you, milking you for all the delicious pain in your body, until I have no more use for you, and I send your soul to Jashin-sama," Hidan gleefully said.

Kakashi tried to fight desperation and keep a cool head, something that was becoming increasingly difficult to do, due not only knowing that Hidan could kill him whenever he wanted to, but because the increasing number of bleeding wounds was making such task progressively harder.

"No jutsu is perfect, all of them have a weakness and ways to be countered, and this can't be an exception! Come on, Kakashi, think!" the silver haired Jonin desperately thought, as he tried to scan Hidan with his Sharingan. But, unfortunately, from his position, he could only see his legs, and that strange symbol he made with his own blood at the beginning.

A symbol he was standing over... could it be?

"Kiba, Tamaki, that Akatsuki is standing on a symbol he drew with his own blood! Push him away from it! Use shuriken with ninja wire!" the masked man commanded.

Hidan's expression when from sadistic smugness to utter shock in less than a second. And it was all what Kakashi needed to prove his theory right.

"The fuck!? How did you guess that!?" an indignant Hidan exclaimed. "You know what? Fuck it! You might have discovered how my jutsu works, but it was for naught, since I'm going to end this NOW!" Hidan said, as he prepared to stab himself in the heart.

"Not so fast!" Tamaki shouted.

Two shuriken with ninja wire attached flew at Hidan. Using the wire to maneuver it, the shuriken wrapped the wire around Hidan's arms, before Kiba and Tamaki pulled in opposite directions, immobilizing him. Kakashi suppressed a groan as he also felt like an invisible force was trying to rip his arms apart. His students noticed this, and hesitated for a second.

"Don't waver! Don't worry about me, I'll be fine! Focus on bringing Hidan out of that circle!" Kakashi insisted.

Kiba and Tamaki nodded, as they continued pulling Hidan back. The Akatsuki, however, despite offering no small amount of resistance, was being pulled back, slowly but surely.

"Goddamit!" Hidan shouted, as he was forced to take a step back, but wasn't fully out of the symbol. "Kakuzu! Lend me a fucking hand, you asshole!"

Meanwhile, at the other side of the clearing, Shino, Fu and Shibuki were fighting Kakuzu. Or more specifically, Fu was engaging Kakuzu in a brutal hand to hand duel while the men fought against the three remaining elemental creatures made of threads. Hidan's screams momentarily interrupted the fight, dragging their attention to the other battlefield.

"It seems that Hidan can't even finish the job himself," Kakuzu grumbled, as he caught a punch from Fu. "Why do I always have to babysit that moron?"

"Kakashi-sensei seems to be grievously wounded. If I don't help him, he might perish," Shino stated.

"Then go! Fu and I will keep Kakuzu busy!" Shibuki told him, as he made several hand seals. "Water Release: Water Bullet Jutsu!"

Shibuki expelled a stream of water from his mouth, to counter the turtle masked monster's own water jutsu, giving Shino a chance to escape.

Wordlessly, Kakuzu disengaged Fu, and rushed to intercept Shino, but the green haired girl wouldn't let him.

"I am your opponent!" Fu shouted, as she appeared in front of the rogue Taki ninja, blocking his way. "Don't even dare to ignore me!"

Realizing that he had no way to go past the jinchuriki, Kakuzu commanded his masked monsters to aid Hidan in any way they could. While the help arrived, Hidan continued to struggle against the two Konoha Chunin.

"You fucking brats! You won't interrupt the Jashin's scared sacrifice!" Hidan protested, as he struggled to remain within the symbol of blood.

"Akamaru, now!" Kiba commanded.

With a bark of agreement, the large white dog dashed at Hidan, and bashed him in the chest with his head. Added to the force pulling him back, the immortal Akatsuki fumbled out of the symbol, before he finally fell on his back.

"Alright then, just to be sure, let's check if my theory is correct!" Kakashi said, as he pulled out a single shuriken from his ninja tool pouch, and tossed it at the downed Hidan. The shuriken stabbed on his chest. No such wound appeared on Kakashi's. "Theory confirmed. Now, to make sure you can't continue that ritual..." This time, Kakashi pulled out a kunai with an explosive tag attached to it, and tossed it to the blood symbol.

"NO!" Hidan screamed.

Kiba, Tamaki and Akamaru jumped away in time before Kakashi detonated the explosive note, destroying the blood symbol, and leaving a crater in its place.

At that moment, Shino landed besides Kakashi, and started to heal all his wounds.

"I hope the time of my arrival wasn't too late," Shino stated.

"You couldn't have arrived in a better moment," a thankful Kakashi said. Then, his eyes grew wide upon seeing what was coming. "Guys, watch out! The other Akatsuki sent reinforcements!"

Kiba and Tamaki saw the three remaining masked monsters flying at them. While the two Chunin could deal with them without troubles, Kakashi and Shino would be like sitting ducks for them.

"Kiba, we need to protect Kakashi-sensei and Shino from those things, as well as the Akatsuki!" Tamaki urged, as she adopted a fighting stance.

"Agreed. I think that this is a good moment to use the new jutsu I've been working on for the past weeks. Shadow Clone Jutsu!" Kiba said, and a clone appeared besides him.

Tamaki was unimpressed. "A shadow clone? That's your new jutsu?"

"That's just the first part! Akamaru!" Kiba called his dog, who rushed to his side. Both Kiba and his clone rode on Akamaru's back -the additional weight was apparent on the dog's struggling expression-, before making the Tiger Seal. "Inuzuka Secret Art: Human Beast Mixture Transformation Three-Headed Wolf!"

Kiba, his clone and Akamaru disappeared in a cloud of smoke, revealing a large, white furred, three-headed wolf in its place. The three heads let out each a bark in unison.

Tamaki was still unimpressed. "So, your giant wolf transformation has three heads instead of two. Eh, guess that's an improvement," she said, shrugging a little.

The three heads shot her an annoyed stare.

"Okay, here they come!" Tamaki said, as the masked monsters hovered over them, readying their attacks.

...

Meanwhile, back to the forests surrounding Takigakure, the battle against the Wrath of Jashin continued. Haku had descended all the way down to the ground, and from his point of view, he could now truly appreciate how massive the colossal aberration was.

The Ice Ninja rummaged through his ninja tool pouch, until he found a soldier pill, and popped it into his mouth.

"Even with the pill, I might not have enough chakra to completely immobilize it... but I have to try it nevertheless..." Haku wondered aloud, as his hands flew through hand seals. "Here goes nothing... Ice Release: Encompassing Mantle of the Yuki-Onne!"

The temperature abruptly dropped to subzero levels, as the green grass and brown soil of the ground started to crystalize, soon becoming white and light blue ice. The ice quickly spread all around Haku, the trees, the rocks, and most importantly, the Wrath of Jashin's legs. Though Haku was directing all his chakra towards the latter point.

The giant monster seemingly realized what was going on, and tried to move one of its legs to crush Haku. However, he was too late, and both legs were frozen solid. But the monster didn't give up, and using his massive strength, tried to free its lower limbs. The ice started to crack.

"Oh no, you don't!" Haku said, making a hand seal, intensifying the cold of his jutsu, which repaired the cracks in the ice.

"Naruto-kun! Hinata-san! I'll try to hold it down as much as possible, but whatever you plan to do it, do it already!" Haku yelled from below.

Many meters above, Naruto was already in position, firmly on the handle of Gamabunta's weapon. His eyes were now yellow with orange eyeshadow, signaling that Sage Mode was now active.

"Okay Bunta, now, before it attacks! Hack it to pieces!" Naruto said.
"Haku, get out of the way!"

"You got it!" Gamabunta replied, as he began to wind his sword back.

"The monster is gathering chakra again! Watch out!" Hinata warned.

Pieces of flesh from the Wrath of Jashin's chest started to slip back, revealing a massive orange eye below. The eye started to glow with a crimson light for a few seconds, before it fired a chakra blast of the same color at Naruto and Gamabunta.

"Oh shit!" Naruto cursed.

However, Hinata got in the way between the crimson missile and its target, and using her telekinetic powers. It held it in place, slowing it down as much as she could.

"Naruto-kun... I'm trying to..." Hinata said, as she poured every ounce of her power into stopping that attack.

"Got it, no time to waste! Gamabunta, let's do it now!" Naruto called.

"Alright!" Gamabunta agreed, as he jumped in the air, and readied his sword for a downwards slice.

"Here it goes!" Naruto said, as he started channeling all his chakra into the giant toad's katana. The blade started to glow with a blue and white fire that swirled around it. "Sage Art: Majestic Destroyer Sword!"

This time, Gamabunta's katana sliced through the monster as easily as if it was made of butter. With two precise blows, the monster was split into three parts, which fell apart instantly, while at the same time releasing multiple Sons of Jashin, that tried to reform again.

"Naruto-kun, the monster will reform in a few minutes! Please tell me that your plan didn't end there!" Hinata pleaded.

"Of course it didn't!" Naruto shouted, as he jumped from Gamabunta's sword, and landed on the toad's head, and started making hand seals.. "I'm gonna need some oil!"

"Alright!" Gamabunta replied, as his dewlap swelled up, before releasing a stream of oil, covering the reforming monster under the sticky substance.

"Fire Release: Flame Toad Bullet!"

Naruto breathed a single fireball into the oil, igniting it, which instantly produced a massive blaze that consumed not only the Wrath of Jashin and all the smaller demons that formed it, but many trees around the area as well.

"Its chakra it's receding. I think that attack destroyed it completely," Hinata informed, as he scanned the creature with her Tenseigan.

"Alright then. Tell me when it's completely dead, and Gamabunta will put that fire out before it goes out of control," Naruto stated. "While Fu and the others might need our help, we can't leave this place with a forest fire waiting to happen."

Hinata nodded in agreement.

...

"These wounds are very deep," Shino noticed, as he healed Kakashi's gash on his right arm.

"Meaning that you will take some time to mend them, I know," Kakashi replied.

"No, I mean you're lucky to be alive. If the Akatsuki decided to forego toying with you and went for a vital spot... there would be nothing neither me nor any medic could have done to save you," Shino pointed out.

"Guess we must be thankful Hidan is so unhinged. His partner doesn't seem to be the kind of fooling around," Kakashi commented, before his eyes opened wide. "SHINO GET OUT OF HERE!"

Shino turned around, and saw one of the masked monsters looming above them. It opened its maws, and started to charge a fireball. However, before it could fire and turn Kakashi and Shino to ashes, the three headed wolf Kiba and Akamaru fused into blasted it with a sonic roar, making it to shoot the fireball in another direction where, thankfully, nobody was standing. The wolf then placed himself in front of Shino and Kakashi as if to protect them from further attacks, and growled menacingly.

The fire monster got back on its feet, and insisted on its attack. Opening its maws, it released a massive wave of fire at the same spot. The wolf took a deep breath, and countered it with a continuous sonic roar. The soundwaves and the fire pushed back and forth, with none of them gaining ground over the other.

Not far away from there, Tamaki was engaging Hidan, while Shibuki dealt with the Lightning and Water monsters. Though in Tamaki's case, she was mostly trying to dodge Hidan's scythe swings.

"Stop moving, you dumb bitch!" Hidan shouted, as he tried to skewer Tamaki.

"Fat chance. I know what happens if you manage to get a drop of my blood," Tamaki replied.

"It's going to happen sooner or later! I'm immortal, you're not! I can fight for as long as I want, while you will get tired, and when you do, you'll become my sacrifice! And then that silver haired bastard of a sensei of yours will go next!" Hidan screamed, before delivering a vertical slash.

Tamaki nimbly dodged it with a backflip, and the three blades stuck themselves into the ground. Hidan pulled, but the scythe didn't come out.

"Come on, this has to be a fucking joke!" Hidan loudly complained, as he struggled to pull the scythe from the ground.

"This is my chance!" Tamaki jumped backwards, retracted her claws, and made several hand seals. "Fire Release: Blistering Firecat!"

The cat kunoichi breathed a massive wave of fire, which took the shape of a large cat, and dashed towards the Akatsuki.

"Eh?" Hidan said, noticing the incoming fire cat, before chuckling. "You really have a hard time understanding what 'immortal' means, don't you?" Hidan laughed, before letting go of the scythe, and spreading his arms. "Your jutsu won't have any effect!"

The fire cat clashed against Hidan, exploding into a torrent of flames. And while such jutsu would have cooked any normal being alive, once the flames receded, Hidan could see that he didn't have a single burn in his body.

"Ha! What did I told you?" Hidan gloated, before realizing that Tamaki was nowhere to be seen. "Huh? Where did you go, you cat bitch?"

Meanwhile, Kiba and Akamaru were still trying to hold the fire monster off, but his continued sonic roar was starting to strain the three headed wolf, and the fire was slowly pushing the soundwaves back.

"Shino, leave me. I don't think Kiba will be able to hold that thing for much longer," Kakashi warned his student.

"Not until I'm able to heal you," Shino insisted.

"Shino, this is no time for-"

"DRILL CLAW"

Suddenly, a human tornado appeared out of nowhere, descending from above towards the masked monster still breathing a wave of fire. Noticing the threat too late, the fire monster was unable to move away, and the human tornado shredded the strange creature to black thread strings, and, oddly enough, blood and gore. And in the middle of all that mess, Tamaki stood, covered in some thread and blood. She smiled confidently.

"Another one down," she said with a satisfied grin. "And you guys are welcome."

The three headed wolf grinned in return as well. Kakashi sighed in relief. Shino didn't say anything, and continued healing the copy ninja.

Of course, the destruction of a second masked monster didn't go unnoticed to Kakuzu, who was still engaging Fu.

"What? Another one of my hearts down? Just how some brats offer such an incredible resistance?" the old Akatsuki thought, as he gave his two remaining monsters a mental command.

The creatures, who were targeting Shibuki, immediately left him, and dashed towards Fu, as they charged an elemental attack each.

"Fu, watch out!" Shibuki warned her.

Thankfully, Fu heard the warning, and her hatred of Kakuzu didn't trump her common sense. She disengaged the masked ninja, deployed her wings, and flew high into the air - albeit not too high, since the chakra dome didn't allow her to - before the elemental barrage of water and lightning could hit her.

The monsters placed themselves at Kakuzu's flanks, as if they were his bodyguards. Hidan, noticing what Kakuzu was doing, also fell back and jumped towards him in order to regroup. The Konoha and Taki ninjas did the same.

"Kakashi-san, are you okay?" Shibuki asked, as he went to check the silver haired Jonin, whom, Shino had finished healing.

"Yes, I'm fine. Not at one hundred percent, but I still can carry my part of the weight," the copy ninja said, as he was helped by Shino and Tamaki back on his feet. "Plus the Akatsuki didn't come out unscathed either. Good job destroying two of those things."

"But even if by doing so we've weakened the enemy, I'm sure they'd now fight with more caution, if not fiercy," Shino noted. "A cornered animal is at its most dangerous."

"Don't worry Shino. I will put those rabid beasts out of their misery," Fu stated, as she punched the palm of her hand.

At the same time, the Akatsuki were discussing the course of the battle, and what would be their next move.

"Just what the hell, man? How are you letting a bunch of kids kick your ass?" Hidan asked Kakuzu.

"The same could be said about you. You had the Jonin's life in your hands, yet you botched it instead of finishing the job," Kakuzu fired back.

"Hey, you fucker, what does-"

"There's no time to argue who's more at fault. The fact is, this fight is not going our way, and we must do something about it," Kakuzu stated.

"Okay then. What's your brilliant idea?" Hidan asked. Wordlessly, Kakuzu pulled out something from his ninja tool pouch. It was a small vial with a blue liquid inside. "You're so fucking weak. Are we going to resort to that already?"

"If you have a better solution, I'm all ears," Kakuzu replied in cold anger. "If not, shut up and drink your part."

"Fine. Whatever," Hidan lazily conceded, as he pulled out an identical vial from a hidden pocket within his cloak, as both he and Kakuzu downed their contents in one go.

Shibuki and Fu immediately recognized the liquid the Akatsuki had ingested.

...

Thankfully, it didn't take long for Hinata to confirm that the Wrath of Jashin had been completely destroyed. After that, Gamabunta put out the fires with a powerful water jutsu, before bidding Naruto farewell. After that, the members of the Assault Squad headed towards the chakra dome as fast as they could.

Right now, it was only a matter of destroying the only barrier that prevented them from helping their friends.

"Lightning Release: Thunderbolt!"

Hinata released a myriad of lightning bolts from her fingers, and crashed against the bright purple barrier. Multiple small blasts were produced when the electric attack clashed against the barrier. But when the smoke dispelled, the barrier was still there.

"No damage," Hinata pointed out.

"Maybe we can dig a tunnel that goes under the barrier?" Naruto suggested.

Hinata shook her head. "The barrier goes all the way underground, forming a perfect sphere. This is no normal chakra barrier. Whoever did this, they made a very good job."

"I could generate a Demonic Ice Mirror to the other side of the forcefield, but I'm afraid I have no way of letting you pass," Haku pointed out. The Ice Ninja then looked at Naruto. "Naruto-kun, do you think you could use a seal to dispel the barrier?"

"Hmmm..." Naruto grunted, placing a hand under his chin, as he started to think of all the seals he knew, which one could be of help. "Sadly, I don't think there is a seal specifically created to destroy a barrier, but..." the blond then pulled out a small book -that according to its cover, was about fuinjutsu- and started to furiously flip through the pages, as if looking for something.

"What is it, Naruto-kun?" Hinata asked.

"This!" Naruto replied, showing a certain page of the book to both his teammates.

"A... chakra dampening seal?" Haku asked, reading the headline of the page.

"Yes. The seal is used to reduce, or even suppress completely, the amount of chakra a ninja can mold and release. It's normally used on cuffs to stop criminals from using chakra," Naruto explained.

"And how is that going to help?" Haku asked.

"I'll create a sealing tag with this seal, and use it on the barrier. The amount of chakra will consume it immediately, but it will significantly weaken the area I place the seal on, which would make said area vulnerable to our attacks. Though it will only last a few seconds before the barrier reforms, so we must be quick," Naruto told them.

"That won't be a problem. How long do you think you'll take in making that sealing tag?" Haku asked.

"Five minutes, give or take," Naruto said, as he pulled out from a sealing scroll a brush, ink, and a blank sealing tag. He then made a hand seal, and created other two clones, as well as replicas of his sealing tools. "I'll make other two at the same time, in case the first one fails."

"Very well then. Be quick, Naruto-kun. Our friends are counting on us," Hinata told her boyfriend.

...

"Shibuki, is that...?" Fu asked.

"The Hero Water, yes. Of course, I should have expected that Kakuzu would get his hands on it, with the village under his control," Shibuki replied..

"Hero water? Is the same elixir Fu drank during the fight with Gaara, right?" Kakashi asked, vaguely remembering said event.

"Yes. It provides a temporary power boost. Due the backlash it causes to the body once the effects wear off, we usually drink it in small doses, and only in dire situations," Shibuki explained.

"But since one Akatsuki is immortal and the other has multiple hearts and a modified anatomy, they don't have to worry about such effects," Shino said, being more a statement rather than a question.

"I'm afraid so," Shibuki uneasily replied.

Once they drank their contents, they lazily tossed the vials to the ground, the soft glass shattering in pieces. The effect was immediate, and Hidan and Kakuzu were surrounded by a fiery blue aura.

"Oh yes! This is some good shit!" Hidan hollered, as he gripped his scythe with both hands. "Let's go!"

Suddenly, Hidan vanished and reappeared in front of a stunned Tamaki, ready to slice her in two with his scythe. The cat kunoichi was unable to react in time when the weapon came down, but thankfully, Kakashi, just as quick, parried the blow with a kunai. However, the blow packed so much strength, the silver haired Jonin was hurled backwards.

"The Hero Water made him really fast. If it wasn't for my Sharingan, I don't think I could have seen him move at such speed," Kakashi thought, as he managed to land on his feet on a large tree branch. "And the swipe was so powerful, the force pushed me back."

Then, in an instant, Hidan was leaping towards Kakashi, his scythe winded back. The Akatsuki had a demented grin on his face.

"Don't think I forgot about you! Your soul belongs to Jashin-sama!" Hidan screamed, as he delivered a horizontal chop.

Despite slashing thin air, the blow projected a crescent-shaped chakra blast at Kakashi, which bisected him horizontally, before slashing the canopies of several trees in its path. Hidan smirked upon seeing Kakashi's body sliced in two...

POOF!

... and his smile disappeared when, after a cloud of smoke, Kakashi was replaced by two halves of a sliced log.

"Godammit!" Hidan hollered, as he childishy stomped on the ground. "You won't be able to evade death forever, you fucking heathen!"

Turning around, he saw the real Kakashi regrouped with his students.

"Kakashi-sensei, are you okay?" Tamaki asked.

"Yes. Thank goodness I got that Body Replacement prepared in advance," Kakashi replied. "The Hero Water has increased Hidan's power exponentially. With his newfound speed and strength, I believe he won't even need that ritual to kill any of us. Don't face him, only I can match him now."

"Are you confident you'll be able to beat him in your current state? Even if I healed your wounds, you lost a lot of blood," Shino pointed out.

"Truth be told no, I'm not sure. But I'm our best bet. You did a good job destroying Kakuzu's monsters, try to get rid of the remaining two," Kakashi instructed.

"Yes, Kakashi-sensei," Tamaki said, as he watched her sensei facing the incoming Hidan. "Kiba, Shino, Akamaru, you ready?"

"I believe I am," Shino replied.

"WOOF!" the three headed wolf barked in agreement.

Meanwhile, Fu continued her one on one duel with Kakuzu. However, the effect of the Hero Water in the Akatsuki soon became evident, since the old Takigakure missing-nin moved much faster, and even if Fu was able to block his punches, they left her sore due the additional strength. Soon, her exposed skin was covered in bruises. And on top of that, Fu was barely attacking, and her fighting was limited to just blocking or dodging Kakuzu's attacks.

"I need to put some distance!" the jinchuriki said, as she deployed her wings, and flew high into the air.

Wordlessly, Kakuzu raised his arm, and shoot his forearm like a missile at Fu, which remained attached to the rest of the arm through multiple threads. Fu felt how a hand caught her leg in a strong grip, before being brutally yanked downwards. But not happy with that, Kakuzu raised and slammed her against the ground multiple times, before tossing her against a tree with such force, the tree was toppled.

"Did you have enough, jinchuriki?" Kakuzu asked, as he walked towards the downed green haired girl. "You're lucky I need you alive, or else you should would been dead already."

Groaning, Fu pushed the tree branches away, as she tried to shook off the pain and got back on her feet.

"Dammit... this doesn't look so good..." Fu lamented.

"Hey Fu, I think it's time to use my power, don't you think?" the Nanabi asked.

"I think there's no other choice. But I don't want you to try anything funny, okay? The situation is serious!" Fu chastised her Tailed Beast.

"You have my word I won't try anything," the Seven Tails agreed. Fu suddenly felt a rush of power flooding her body. "Now go and kick his ass!"

A reddish-orange aura enveloped Fu's body. She slowly felt the pain being washed away, as the bruises on her skin started to heal. Her muscles swelled up a bit, as the sheer energy she was releasing produced gusts of wind. A single tail of chakra formed behind her. Fu smirked. With this kind of power under her control, she could tip the balance back into her favor.

Wordlessly, the jinchuriki charged at Kakuzu, who resumed the fistfight. The strength of both combatants was so great, every punch produced a loud booming noise accompanied by a shockwave, and the two of them moved so fast, it was almost impossible to follow their movements. An expectator would only see a pair of blurs moving across the clearing, followed by booming shockwaves.

As they traded blows, their fists slammed into each other, producing a deafening boom, and a shockwave so powerful, it created a crater big enough to encompass the two fighters, before said shockwave pushed them backwards.

"According to our intelligence, you weren't supposed to be able to use your Tailed Beast power," Kakuzu pointed out.

"Your intelligence isn't very intelligent then," Fu mockingly replied. "So, you didn't plan for this, do you?"

"I admit I don't. But in the world of ninjas, plans rarely unfold as intended, and thus you need to develop a sharp mind in order to rethink your strategies as you go by. Otherwise, I wouldn't have lived as long as I did," Kakuzu calmly replied. "Trust me, girl, your power may match mine, but your experience is a drop of water while mine is an ocean, and that will end the battle in my favor."

"We'll see then!" Fu yelled before vanishing.

Kakuzu vanished as well, and their brutal duel continued.

Meanwhile, not far away from there, Kakashi continued his clash against Hidan, who pushed the copy ninja into the defensive, barely avoiding the onslaught of lightning fast attacks the Hidan cultist was putting the copy ninja through.

"Ha, you think that you can beat me being only on the defensive?" Hidan taunted as he delivered a flurry of slashes.

The silver haired jonin dodged them with an aerial backflip, landing on top of a large tree branch. Undeterred, Hidan leaped at him.

"He's right, I can't just defend. Even if he's immortal, I'm sure I can incapacitate him in some way," Kakashi said as he made several hand seals. "Fire Release: Great Fireball Jutsu!"

Through his mask, Kakashi breathed a massive fireball, flying in the same direction Hidan was coming. The cultist didn't even bother to dodge the Uchiha Clan's signature jutsu, and plowed through the fiery projectile.

"Weak!" Hidan laughed, as he prepared to cleave Kakashi. "... uh?"

The sound of a thousand birds filled the air as the Akatsuki saw Kakashi lunging at him, his right hand coated in electricity, ready to impale him. Even if he knew the attack wouldn't kill him, it would be the first step to incapacitate him.

"From this distance, and with such momentum, dodging is impossible," Kakashi confidently stated. "Lightning Blade!"

Or it would have been, if it wasn't for what Hidan did next. In the blink of an eye, Hidan stabbed his scythe in the ground, and used it to stop his momentum and spin around, safely dodging Kakashi, and leaving him wide open. Hidan quickly retrieved his scythe, and prepared to cut him in two.

"Nobody escapes Jashin's judgement, infidel, nobody!" Hidan screamed, as the scythe came down. "NOW DIE!"

"Vacuum Palm!"

A vacuum shell appeared out of nowhere, and blasted Hidan's scythe out of his hands. The scythe was sent flying into the air, before it fell to the ground, a few meters behind the Akatsuki. Taking advantage of the momentary confusion, Kakashi turned around, and tried to thrust his Lightning Blade at him once again, but Hidan proved to be too fast, and jumped backwards, avoiding the attack, and landing besides his weapon.

"The fuck!? What the hell happened?" Hidan angrily hollered.

"Kakashi-sensei!"

Much to his immense relief, the copy ninja saw the teen members of Kurenai's Assault Squad landing besides him. The copy ninja allowed himself to relax, and the tension and stress of the recent fight all washed over him.

"Thank goodness you arrived. I don't know about the others, but I don't think I would have lasted much longer against this guy," Kakashi said, panting a little.

"WHAT THE FUCK!?" Hidan screamed. "How the hell did you dipshits bypassed the barrier? It's still standing, I can feel it!"

"Your barrier was impressive, yes. But no barrier is impenetrable, keep that in mind," Naruto boasted, without giving any more details. Naruto then turned to the silver haired Jonin. "What about Fu and the others?"

"They're fighting Kakuzu to the west, not far away from here," Kakashi replied.

Hinata focused her Tenseigan on the direction Kakashi mentioned, and she quickly found the other members of the Animal Squad, Fu, and a man she didn't recognize, fighting against Kakuzu and two weird creatures.

"Found them! All of them seem to be okay, but they're struggling against the other Akatsuki," Hinata explained.

"Kakashi-sensei, what can you tell us about the Akatsuki?" Haku asked.

"This one is called Hidan, and his main power is immortality," Kakashi noticed the dubious looks the three teens were shooting at him. "Yeah, I thought the same, but he repeatedly survived multiple fatal hits without any kind of consequence. Don't let him draw your blood. If he drinks it, he can use it to create a link with you making you suffer all the wounds he does. He almost killed me that way."

"Don't let him get our blood, got it," Naruto nodded.

"The other... well, it's a bit hard to explain. His body is like nothing I've seen before. He seems to be made of threads that move on their own and keep his whole body together. He also commands four creatures that can use an element each. Though my students managed to kill two of them," Kakashi told him.

"This Akatsuki's chakra flares with such intensity, it's almost like looking directly into the sun," Hinata noticed after directing her eyes at Hidan.

"That's because both him and his partner drank vials of Takigakure's Hero Water. Said water can give your body and chakra a massive boost, but the backlash it causes after the effect disappears can be crippling, even fatal," Kakashi explained.

"But since one of them is immortal and the other has a bizarre anatomy, they can bypass that backlash," Naruto concluded. "Smart bastards."

"Alright then, what are we going to do?" Hinata asked.

"I believe Naruto and Haku should stay here and help me deal with his man," Kakashi suggested. "Naruto can safely fight him without the risk of drawing blood, while Haku has the necessary skills to put him down permanently, even if we won't be able to kill him. Your skills will do more good against the other Akatsuki."

"Understood. I better not waste anymore time. Good luck!" Hinata said, as she flew away towards the other battlefield.

"Alright, Kakashi-sensei, I guess you're in charge now. What do we do?" Naruto asked.

"Listen to me closely, because I don't think we'll have more than one chance to pull this off," Kakashi looked at Haku. "Haku, you will be key to ensure our victory."

The Ice Ninja nodded.

"Hey, stop whispering among yourselves! Whatever clever plan you might come up with, it won't work!" Hidan said, as he adopted a fighting stance. "Hey, the blond shit, aren't you a jinchuriki?"

"So what if I am?" Naruto defiantly replied.

"That means that I won't be able to kill you. Just my fucking luck. Oh well, guess that torturing you to the point of begging me to kill you will have to do then!" Hidan happily said, as he charged towards the trio.

...

Thanks to her ability to fly, it didn't take Hinata long to reach the other battlefield. A quick scan over the area, and she saw Fu fighting against Kakuzu, the two of them moving at an almost imperceptible speed, while Shino, Tamaki, Kiba and Akamaru (fused into a giant, three headed wolf) and a young Taki ninja she was unable to identify, were holding against two of Kakuzu's monsters.

Hinata focused her sight on the masked creatures. They were mostly made of some kind of weird thread, but they also had organs and blood vessels, even if arranged in a way that had nothing to do with the human body. And of course, they had chakra. Though she didn't need the Tenseigan to realize of that when one of the creatures opened its mouth, and released a torrent of water towards the Konoha and Taki ninjas, which were forced to jump backwards in order to dodge.

"Should I help Fu-san, or Kakashi-sensei's students?" Hinata internally wondered. "Those monsters seem to be connected to him in some way. Meaning that if the Akatsuki is defeated, they'll go down with him."

After all, it was a similar situation that the battle against Sasori. Kill the mastermind, and the minions won't be a threat. Even if pained her not to be able to help her fellow Konoha comrades, the Hyuga Clan Head flew straight for the brawl between Fu and Kakuzu. Her hands flew through several hand seals.

"Lightning Release: Thunderbolt!"

The moment Kakuzu showed an opening, Hinata shoot several lightning bolts at him from her fingertips. However, the Akatsuki's reflexes and movements were far greater than the Hyuga had anticipated, and quickly jumped backwards before her jutsu could hit him.

"He's fast! I thought I had a clear shot," Hinata thought.

"Uh? Oh, it's you! One of my Sky Sisters!" Fu cheered upon seeing Hinata.

"Hello, Fu-san. I hope you don't mind if I join you in your fight against this horrible man," Hinata said, as she hovered near her.

"Not in the slightest! But I should warn you, this guy drank the Hero Water, a treasure from my village, and now he's much stronger than usual, so be careful. I can take his hits fine, but I'm not sure about you," Fu explained, sounding a bit apologetic.

"That explains why his chakra burns with such potency," Hinata replied, then she smiled at Fu, before taking a fighting stance. "And don't worry. I won't be able to take hits as well as you do, but I'm very good at dodging them."

Fu grinned in return, and mimicked the Hyuga.

"Those eyes... so, you must be the new Hyuga Clan Head. The one who evolved the Byakugan to a higher level. The... Tenseigan, I think it's called, am I right?" Kakuzu guessed.

Hinata was taken aback by the Akatsuki's words. "How... how do you know that?"

"I have my sources. I knew those eyes were special the moment I saw them," Kakuzu guessed. "So far, you don't have much of a reputation to have a bounty on your head yet, but I'm positive I can get quite an obscene amount of money from those eyes in the black market."

"Many were those seduced by greed or power who wanted to get their hands on my eyes. And as you can tell, none of them were successful. You won't be any different," Hinata stated.

"I bet none of them had my vast experience. While I admit that the two of you are powerful, deep down you're nothing but children that only play to be ninja, and have no idea what life is like," Kakuzu said as his hands rushed to form hand seals.

"Earth Release: Crushing Avalanche!"

Several shadows loomed over the two kunoichi. Looking up, they saw in horror massive boulders falling towards them, prompting them to jump out of the way. But while they were doing so, Kakuzu fired his hands, which latched onto the girls' throats. The hands' skin blackened as they hardened into a stone-like substance, before the Akatsuki pulled his hands back, slowly dragging them through the ground.

However, before Kakuzu could bring them closer, Hinata's body crackled with electricity, before her body released a powerful electric discharge, shocking both Kakuzu and Fu, but forcing the former to release both of them.

"Sorry for that, Fu-san," Hinata said, coughing a bit, as she started healing her neck.

Fu said nothing, but gave her a thumbs up to indicate that it was okay, as she rubbed her sore throat.

"A lightning release user. Without my other hearts, that gives you something of an advantage over me," Kakuzu noted, but didn't sound overly worried. "Oh well, guess I'll have to fight a bit more carefully. This should be enough."

Suddenly, a multitude of threads started to burst from the scars of Kakuzu's body, wiggling as if they had life on their own. Kakuzu's hands once again flew through hand seals.

"Earth Release: Earth Clone Jutsu!"

Six moulds of earth formed around Kakuzu, growing and eventually taking the shape of perfect replicas of the Akatsuki. Without any word from the original, the clones charged forward.

"You'll need something better than that to defeat us!" Fu shouted, as she launched herself against the incoming attackers.

"Fu-san, wait! Don't rush in!" Hinata called her. "This is not good. It seems like the Tailed Beast's chakra is affecting her mind, albeit in a subtle way that doesn't make her realize of it. I better stick close to her."

Something that would become hard to do since half of the clones chose her as their target, and surrounded her, ready to attack. Hinata frowned, and after quickly making two hand seals, her hands started to crackle with electricity.

"None of these clones should withstand an lightning-enhanced palm strike," Hinata mused aloud, as one of the clones lunged at her. Moving aside to dodge the incoming punch, Hinata delivered a palm strike to the clone's chest, opening a hole in it, causing it to crumble into small rocks. "Just as I expected!"

The other two clones launched themselves at Hinata since she was now wide open, but the Hyuga proved to be faster than they anticipated, and with a backflip she dodged them as well. However, while she was doing so, she noticed something she hadn't seen before: chakra lines traveling underground towards both Fu and her. Following those lines, he realized they came from Kakuzu. Much to her horror, she realized the clones were nothing but a distraction. And Fu wasn't aware of this, as she happily fought against the clones.

"FU-SAN, WATCH OUT!" Hinata screamed.

"Huh?" Fu dumbly asked.

But it was too late. While Hinata was able to jump in time to avoid the mass of threads that came from underground, Fu wasn't so fast, and they tightly wrapped against her limbs. Kakuzu pulled the arm those threads came from upwards, tossing the green haired girl into the air. He then motioned down, violently slamming Fu against the ground.

"Fu-san!" Hinata shouted, as she dashed to help her friend. However, the clones that were fighting Fu, plus those Hinata didn't destroy got in her way. "Get out of my way!"

Pushing even more chakra into her hands, Hinata delivered a palm strike to a Kakuzu earth clone that not only shattered it on impact, but created a shockwave imbued with lightning that also destroyed a clone that was behind it. The Hyuga repeated the process with a nearby clone, but the others didn't fall to the trap this time around, and dodged the ensuing shockwave. They kept the distance, but made no move to attack.

"They want to keep me busy so I don't help Fu-san... I have to get rid of them as fast as possible!" Hinata thought, as panic started to crawl her spine. "Fortunately, I don't need to fight you!"

Hinata started to elevate into the air, as she flew above the Kakuzu clones. However, much to her shock, one of the clones pushed the other into the air, and dived at her feet first, ready to deliver a flying kick. With a quick hand motion, Hinata stopped the clone on his tracks with a telekinetic blast. However, while she was doing so, the other clone leaped from the ground, and rounhoused her in the face, making her fall to the ground.

As she stood up, she glanced at Fu for an instant. Much to her horror, she saw Kakuzu now lunging Fu against a tree with such a tremendous force, the tree was toppled down. He then slowly pulled the threads, dragging Fu closer to him. The Tailed beast aura had already vanished.

"Jinchuriki are prey hard to capture, but eventually all of them fall to Akatsuki," Kakuzu said to one in particular, as he was about to grab Fu.

"No! You won't get your hands on her!" Hinata said as she got up, but the clone's incoming punch forced her to jump backwards. Her hand crackling with electricity once more, she thrust her palm forward. "GET OUT OF MY WAY!"

The vacuum wave combined with electricity shattered the last clone into dust, as Hinata rushed past him in order to reach Kakuzu and Fu before it was too late.

However, something unexpected happened. The ground beneath Kakuzu's feet started to shake, and before he had any time to react, a black mass of beetles emerged from below, engulfing the Akatsuki completely.

"What the hell is this!?" Kakuzu shouted, as he futilely tried to swat the insects away.

And from within the swarm, Shino emerged, carrying Fu in his arms - and struggling with her upon realizing that her height and muscle mass mean she weighted quite more than he expected -rushing towards Hinata.

"Nice save, Shino-kun," Hinata praised he bug user.

"How is she?" Shino asked, as he placed the half conscious jinchuriki in the ground.

"Despite the beating she got, her wounds aren't that grave," Hinata stated, as she scanned her. "The Tailed Beast chakra is already starting to heal her."

"I'll speed up the process then. Try to cover us," Shino asked, as he started to heal the green haired girl.

Hinata nodded, as she placed herself between the two and Kakuzu, adopting a fighting stance.

"You won't get your hands on her again," Hinata firmly stated.

"I fought against ninja way stronger and more experienced than the likes of you," Kakuzu boasted. "While I admit that you're far stronger than I had anticipated, you're still below my level. This time, I'm going to fight without holding back."

Suddenly, the masked creatures fighting the rest of Shino's teammates and Shibuki disengaged them, and leaped towards Kakuzu. The monsters were re-absorbed into his body, but rather than keep them hidden like he did before, the Akatsuki merged with them, turning into a monstrous mass of thick black threads that appeared to be wearing a human body. Two masses of threads sprouted from Kakuzu's back, as if they were grotesque wings. The two masks appeared on each one of the 'wings'.

"Let's see how well you do against THIS!" Kakuzu said.

Author's Note: As many of you guessed, Kakashi didn't die, at least not until I solve the ongoing subplot with Obito and Rin. After that... well, anything is possible.

With the Wrath of Jashin and the battle of Takigakure mostly over (there are no named characters fighting in Taki, so I don't think it's that vital to show what's going on there) we can now fully focus on the fight against the Immortal Team. Naruto, Hinata and Haku were able to penetrate the chakra barrier, but again, like many of you guessed, Akatsuki revealed their hidden trump card, the stolen Hero Water.

Thanks to grimlock987 for betareading this chapter.

Next time, the conclusion of the Fu/Hidan and Kakuzu arc! Will Fu join the ranks of Yagura and Han, or will she survive? In the meantime, leave a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Immortal Team, Part II

Author's Note: So, due the fact that "True Potential", a fellow and admittedly better and more popular NH fanfic, is also doing an arc about Hidan and Kakuzu invading Taki in order to capture Fu, I've been asked if I'm copying TP or using it as an inspiration. I can assure you that, despite how similar both arcs are, it's nothing but a coincidence. I had this arc planned for months, and written for for weeks (in fact, the next two arcs are already fully written), even if I know some of you won't believe me.

Though I'm going to admit that True Potential as a whole, among other stories, was an inspiration for this fanfic. And its author's plea about featuring the jinchuriki more made me give them a more prominent role in the story.

Anyway, I'm pleased to say that the previous chapter got a higher number of reviews. Though I hope it wasn't because of me complaining about the lower number of reviews in the AN at the beginning. In hindsight, it was kind of lame for me to do so, and won't be doing that again.

Anyway, enough rambling, enjoy the Takigakure Arc's conclusion.

Chapter 64:

The Immortal Team, Part II

or

Trees are a girl's best friends

Shibuki, Tamaki, and the three headed wolf all landed near Hinata, Fu and Shino, facing Kakuzu's new form. The Akatsuki looked at the Konoha and Taki ninjas, and shot them an unnerving grin. Fortunately, Shino had already healed Fu, since they would need the green haired jinchuriki's power if they hoped to beat Kakuzu in this new form.

"Well... who wants to go first?" Kakuzu asked.

"Eww... just when you think that old man couldn't be anymore gross, he proves you wrong," Tamaki stated, as she made a grimace.

"His external appearance is irrelevant, is the power he possesses now what we should worry about," Shino interceded. "Why? Because if Kakuzu and his creatures were formidable opponents when fighting on their own, their power became even greater by joining forces."

"That's right, kid. The whole is greater than the sum of its parts. There are moments in which a numerical advantage is necessary, but given that you have destroyed two of my hearts... this form is the best approach," Kakuzu agreed.

"Not just that. He still is under the effect of the Hero Water, which now also extends to the creatures he merged with," Shibuki pointed out.

"You're correct once again. Now, let's see the extent of my new power," Kakuzu said, as he made a series of hand seals. The two masks at his sides opened their jaws at the same time.

"Oh shit..." Fu said, as she and everybody else tensed up. "Guys, prepare to run..."

As expected, the masks fired from their mouth a massive torrent of water and a barrage of lightning bolts. Everybody jumped aside in different directions, lest them be obliterated by the empowered elemental attack, which not only was stronger, but had a longer reach and wider radius of effect, doubling as a good means of defense.

"Fu! Let's go into the air! He won't be able to attack both us and the others in the ground!" Hinata suggested.

Fu nodded, deployed her wings, and joined Hinata several meters above the ground.

"You think yourself so smart, don't you?" Kakuzu mockingly asked, as he directed the stream of water and barrage of lightning towards the flying kunoichi.

"He must think we're the biggest threat, and thus wants to take us out first," Hinata realized, as she thrust her palm forward, releasing a telekinetic pulse forward.

Fu, meanwhile, formed seals at great speed. "Wind Release: Breakthrough!"

Fu blew a gust of wind from her mouth that, combined with Hinata's telekinetic blast, was able to stop Kakuzu's water and lightning attack, locking into a stalemate as both attacks pushed back and forth.

"Now that they're keeping him busy, let's strike!" Tamaki shouted, as she, Kiba and Akamaru, and Shibuki charged forward.

"Your naivety is almost adorable," Kakuzu stated.

Suddenly, dozens of black threads emerged from underground, as they tried to wrap the charging ninja, which were forced to jump back.

"Let's try ranged attacks!" Shibuki suggested, as he and Tamaki started making hand seals. "Water Release: Water Bullet Jutsu!"

"Fire Release: Blistering Firecat!"

Shibuki expelled a stream of water from his mouth -much smaller than those used by Kakuzu- while Tamaki breathed a wave of fire that took the shape of a cat which rushed at Kakuzu, leaving a trail of embers behind. The three headed wolf that was Kiba and Akamaru merged took a deep breath, and let out a powerful sonic roar.

This time, Kakuzu couldn't afford to treat the ground ninja as mere inconveniences, and was forced to redirect the stream of water towards their incoming attacks in order to cancel them out. However, that left only the lightning bolts to deal with Fu's wind and Hinata's telekinesis, which was unable to hold them back on its own, and was pushed back. Much to his annoyance, Kakuzu was forced to jump back in order to dodge.

"Well done guys! If we attack all at once from different directions, one of us will end up nailing him!" Fu cheered from above.

Kakuzu, however, frowned at the muscular girl's confidence.

"Let me show you how little that strategy is going to help," Kakuzu snarled.

Displaying frightening speed, Kakuzu dashed towards a startled Shibuki, who generated a water sword to defend himself. Tamaki and the three headed wolf charged from the flank.

"You're wide open!" the cat kunoichi said, as she was about to sink her metal claws into the Akatsuki's flesh.

"Am I?" Kakuzu mockingly asked.

The masks at his sides turned at Tamaki and the three headed wolf, and blasted the former with lightning and the latter with a powerful stream of water, pushing both of them backwards several meters.

"Kiba! Tamaki-chan!" Fu screamed, as she dived at Kakuzu while making hand seals.

"Fu, wait! That's what he wants!" Hinata said, trying to reach Fu, but she wasn't fast enough.

"So predictable," Kakuzu said in the same mocking tone, as several tendrils of threads shoot at Fu.

"Wind Release: Breakthrough!"

Once again, Fu expelled a gust of wind from her mouth, but her target wasn't Kakuzu, but the ground. Using the wind jutsu to alter her trajectory, Fu moved above the Akatsuki in an arc, safely dodging the tendrils, before winding her fist back, which started to swirl with chakra.

"Take this! Hurricane Punch!"

Fu slammed her right fist into Kakuzu's head with such force, not only sinking the Akatsuki into a crater, but producing a shockwave and a gust of wind that expanded outwards. Kakuzu's mass of threads that sprouted from his back started to wiggle.

"Foolish," he said.

The mass of threads shaped into several tentacles that quickly coiled themselves around the jinchuriki. However, before he could catch his prey, Fu was yanked backwards by an unseen force, and the thread tentacles only grasped thin air. The green haired girl found herself at Hinata's side once again.

"Whew, nice catch! That was pretty close," Fu told Hinata, chuckling a little.

"His chakra seems to fluctuate before using those strange threads," Hinata explained. "It may be the key to read his movements."

"If we can do that a few more times, I'll only need a few more hits to put him down for good," Fu confidently stated.

"While that may work, I believe we'll need a more effective strategy. His power is too great for a drawn out battle, we'll need to end this in one hit," Hinata told her.

"One hit, hmmm?" Fu said, as her face adopted a thoughtful expression. "Guess my punches alone won't do it. We'll need everybody here to strike at once."

"Indeed. Let's join up with the others and listen, this is what we're going to do."

...

Not far away from there, at the same time, Naruto and Haku assisted Kakashi with his fight against the crazed Jashin cultist. While the copy ninja engaged him in hand to hand combat and Haku aided the white haired Jonin from afar, Naruto made his favorite hand seal.

"Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

Two clones popped alongside Naruto. Without saying a word, both clones dashed in opposite directions, disappearing among the trees.

"Ha! You must be a pretty shitty ninja even if your clones run away from you, haha!" Hidan laughed, as he delivered a flurry of swipes at Kakashi, who dodged them as fast as he could.

Haku, meanwhile, made several hand seals.

"Ice Release: Ice Dragon Crystal Blast!"

Putting his hands together and casting them forwards, Haku generated a serpentine dragon made of ice that flew at Hidan while letting out a distorted roar, leaving a trail of frost above the ground he passed by. Hidan, however, wasn't impressed by Haku's jutsu. Grinning, he reared his scythe backwards, before delivering an horizontal swipe at the dragon.

"Take this, you piece of shit!" Hidan hollered.

The swing generated a crescent shaped chakra blast that not only shattered the ice dragon, it had enough power and momentum to force through it and reach Haku. The Ice ninja dropped to the ground, and the wave of chakra harmlessly passed above him. He saw how it cleanly cut a couple trees behind me.

"Such destructive power..." Haku mumbled in awe.

"Did you like that? Well, that's NOTHING compared to what I can do now!" Hidan laughed. "Get a load of this!"

Hidan dashed at Haku at an insane speed, brandishing his blue glowing scythe above his head. Haku had barely time to generate an ice sword on both hands, and used them to parry the blow, which predictably shattered his makeshift weapons, but stopped his momentum in order to give him time to jump back.

Naruto, meanwhile, took advantage of Hidan focusing on Haku to attack the Akatsuki from behind. He formed a Rasengan in his right hand.

"Now is my chance! Rase-"

But before Naruto could strike, Hidan vanished, and reappeared in front of him, scythe ready to skewer the blond to pieces.

"How can be so fast...?" the blond wondered as the scythe, glowing with chakra came down on him.

But before he could be hit, the chirp of a thousand birds filled the air, and the scythe was parried by an electrified hand. It took Naruto and Hidan a moment to notice that Kakashi had appeared between them.

"No matter how fast you are, I can anticipate your movements as long as my Sharingan can see them!" Kakashi boasted, as his other hand crackled with electricity and thrust it at the Akatsuki, who jumped back in order to avoid it.

"Thanks for the tip, idiot! Then I'll make sure to gouge your eyes out!" Hidan shouted.

"Ice Release: Crystal Blade Field!"

A crinkling sound warned Hidan of Haku's attacks, and jumped backwards once again before a row of large ice spikes could skewer him.

"So, that's your tactic, you pieces of shit? One of them attacks from the front, while the others try to catch me off guard? Or wait until I'm attacking you?" Hidan asked in rapid fire, before smirking. "Well, let's see if you can find an opening to attack now! DEMON CUTTER!"

Hidan dashed towards Kakashi with his scythe extended to the side, as he started to spin, becoming a razor tornado. Kakashi dodged the attack, but Hidan charged at him once again from the opposite direction.

"Ice Release: Ice Barrier!"

Haku slammed his palms into the ground, using it as a conduct to send chakra towards Kakashi's position. A wall of ice formed between Kakashi and the Akatsuki, but the latter managed to shatter it as if it was thin glass.

"My Ice Jutsu barely faze him..." Haku thought in resignation. He then perked up. "Thankfully, my Bloodline Limit is far from the only skill I possess... !"

While Hidan sometimes attacked Naruto and Haku, it was obvious Kakashi was his main target.

"This man seems to be determined to finish what he started with that ritual from before..." Kakashi thought. "Normally an enemy like this wouldn't be much of a problem, but with the Hero Water boosting his strength and speed, I don't know if we'll be able to hold out until the effects wear off..."

Hidan charged at him as expected, but much to the Copy Ninja's confusion, he removed his cloak, and tossed it at Kakashi. The silver haired man reacted by cutting it in half with a low powered Lightning

Blade, but after doing it, he realized that Hidan wasn't there anymore.

"So if I understood correctly, all I need is to blind you for a second you can't read my movements, right?" Hidan mocked from behind, as the scythe came down on Kakashi. "This time, you won't escape!"

But Hidan was unable to stab Kakashi, as an orange blur shot out of nowhere, delivering a brutal flying kick to his face, hurling the Akatsuki backwards until he crashed against a tree.

"What the fuck...?" the Jashin cultist groaned, as he pulled himself together. Even if he was immortal, the pain of that attack was very real.

"Sage Mode completed," Naruto stated, as he placed himself in front of Kakashi. "Leave this to me, Kakashi-sensei. My Sage Mode will tip the balance back in our favor."

"Sage Mode...?" Hidan asked, and noticed that Naruto's eyes were yellow with orange pigmentation around them. "Oh, so that's the Sage Mode that made that wimp Deidara to run away like the little bitch he is! Well, you'll find out that I'm nowhere near as cowardly!"

"Don't mistake common sense with cowardice. Soon you're going to realize why your friend decided to flee when he saw me," Naruto boasted.

"Hey, that fucker and I aren't friends, we're just co-workers!" Hidan protested. "And didn't you hear that I'm immortal? No matter how much power you get, you won't be able to kill me!"

"We'll see about that!" Naruto said, making a hand seal. A clone popped into existence. Naruto started to form a Rasengan, while the clone infused it with wind chakra. A whirring sound could be heard, faint at first, but growing progressively louder as the jutsu started to take form.

"Even then, I'm not stupid enough as to take the brunt of your attack," Hidan said, as he prepared to move, but much to his shock, his body didn't move. "What the fuck?"

Hidan started to feel very cold. Suddenly, ice started to grow all over his body, and in a few seconds, his entire body minus the head was encased in a block of ice.

"Thanks for lowering your guard," Haku said, as he kept his hands forming a hand seal.

"Ha! You think this little ice can stop me? I only need to break it with the force my my chakra!" Hidan boasted, as he started to release chakra in hopes of breaking the ice. "What the hell!?"

"You remind me of somebody who tried the same tactic against that, and predictably, it didn't work," Haku replied. He then turned at his teammate. "Naruto, go ahead. He won't move."

"The jutsu is ready!" Naruto said, as he reared the arm holding the wind shuriken back.

"What the hell is going on? How can this ice be so hard!" Hidan said as he futilely tried to overpower the ice with his chakra, but it felt like pushing into nothing. "Wait, if this is ninjutsu, how is that I can't feel the chakra in the ice? Oh shit, don't tell me this is a genj-"

"Wind Release: Rasenshuriken!"

Naruto threw his most powerful jutsu just as Hidan realized that the ice wasn't really there, and the Ice ninja was just playing with his mind. He send a controlled burst of chakra through his body, and the ice disappeared, but he had no time to avoid the incoming chakra shuriken.

"Shi-"

The Akatsuki's curse was cut short by a massive explosion that created a dome of powerful, razor sharp winds that would have shredded the body of a normal man to little bits. Even then, the pain was excruciating. And Hidan only enjoyed the pain when it was caused by his demonic ritual.

"So, Naruto completed Minato-sensei's jutsu..." Kakashi said in awe. He had heard from others beforehand of such thing, but this was the first time he saw it in action. It truly made the vanilla Rasengan look like an Academy grade jutsu. "Even if I failed to do it in the past, now that Naruto opened the door, I might be able to get it this time around..."

When the dome of razor winds dispelled, Hidan was lying on the middle of a large crater, but his body was unharmed. Slowly and trembling, he got up.

"S-See? It hurt like a bazillion fucking hells, but I'm not worse for the wear!" Hidan boasted, his voice stuttering a little from the massive onslaught. He spread his arms to show his lack of visible injuries. "Nothing that you can throw at me can harm me!"

"The purpose of that jutsu wasn't to harm you, but to distract you," Naruto pointed out.

"Distract me? From what-" Hidan was interrupted mid question as ice started to crept all over his body, slowly encasing him in an ice block. "Oh, I see. Another fucking genjutsu. How retarded do you think I am to fall for the same trick twice?" Hidan asked in a mocking tone, as he made a hand seal, and send a burst of chakra through his body. But much to his surprise, the genjutsu didn't disappear. He tried again, but the result was the same. "What the fuck?"

In no time, Hidan was completely encased inside a block of ice. A realization dawned upon him.

"This is not a genjutsu, this is a real Ice jutsu! Dammit, I need to break free!" Hidan distressingly thought as he began to release his chakra from his whole body in explosive bursts.

Cracks started to appear in the block of ice, but Haku made a hand seal, and those cracks disappeared. "Naruto-kun, Kakashi-sensei, now's the chance! Go before he breaks free!"

Naruto and Kakashi nodded, rushed at the frozen Akatsuki, and started to slap several sealing tags across the block of ice. Once they judged they had placed enough, they jumped back as they made the same hand seal at the same time.

"Sealing Trap: Activate!"

The seals started to glow, and chains of symbols appeared from the paper tags, spreading around the block of ice, forming a net. The seals, combined with the ice, put Hidan in a state of stasis.

"And done!" Naruto cheered.

"Did we incapacitate him?" Kakashi asked, a bit unsure. "He was still under the effect of the Hero Water, so it's possible that the sealing didn't take."

"He's no longer trying to break the ice," Haku helpfully added. "So I'd said we've won this round."

Naruto walked towards the frozen Akatsuki, and sneered. "What about that? Just because you're immortal doesn't mean that you're invincible!"

"Naruto, he can't hear you, you know," Kakashi pointed out.

"Don't take away my right to boast after a well earned victory, Kakashi-sensei," Naruto grumbled at the silver haired Jonin, as he crossed his arms over his chest.

Suddenly, despite none of them being sensors, the trio felt a massive chakra disturbance. Looking up, they saw the purple colored chakra dome that covered that part of the forest slowly breaking apart and vanishing.

"Hey, look at that, it seems that he was the one keeping that chakra dome active," Naruto pointed out.

"Unexpected. I never imagined this deranged Akatsuki would be skilled in barrier jutsu so complex and powerful," Haku pointed out.

"Skilled or not, that doesn't matter anymore. Naruto, leave a few clones here to watch over the Akatsuki, then let's go help my students," Kakashi asked.

Naruto nodded, and did as he was asked. He and Haku then followed Kakashi to where the other battle was taking place, hoping that they could reach in time to help their friends.

...

Shortly before Hidan's defeat, Fu, Hinata and Kakashi's students were still fighting against his partner. Kakuzu was still on the offensive, since doing otherwise would be a waste of the boost provided by the Hero Water, but his moves were more calculated than before, in order to stop his enemies from getting anymore hits and ending the fight as soon as possible.

"Lightning Release: False Darkness!"

Kakuzu's demon looking mask released a barrage of thunderbolts at the ground of Konoha and Taki ninja. Hinata stepped forward in order to take the brunt of the attack.

"Lightning Release: Thunder Palm!" Hinata's hands started to crackle with electricity, before she started to move quickly them forward in a pushing manner. "Protection of the Eight Trigrams: Sixty Four Palms!"

As Hinata's arms became blurs due the speed she was moving them, she was able to deflect Kakuzu's electric attack, giving the others a chance to counterattack.

"Come on everybody, let's go!" Kiba called, as he and Akamaru dashed forward, ahead of everybody else.

"Suicidal fool," Kakuzu growled.

Suddenly, multiple tentacles and tendrils made of threads burst from underground around Kiba and Akamaru, and moved to trap them.

"Tamaki!" Kiba called.

"Cat Claw Dash!"

A red and brown blur appeared out of nowhere, and slashed the emerging threads before they had the chance to tangle their prey, giving Kiba a chance to continue forward.

"Thank you!" Kiba said, not looking back, with Tamaki following him.

Kakuzu decided to intercept them mid charge, and dashed towards them as well. But when Kiba and Tamaki prepared to attack, Kakuzu nimbly jumped above them, avoiding their onslaught, and dashing towards a mildly stupefied Shino.

"Shit, Shino isn't that good in hand to hand combat!" Kiba angrily thought as he and Tamaki spun over their heels to pursue the Akatsuki.

Noticing what was happening, Shino jumped back several times to stop the gap between himself and the Akatsuki from getting any wider. He bit his thumb as he made several hand seals as quickly as his hands allowed him, before slamming his hands into the ground.

"Summoning Jutsu!"

Kakuzu stopped in his tracks -moving aside to also dodge Kiba and Tamaki coming from behind- as he waited expectantly to see what kind of creature the Aburame had summoned. And when the initial cloud of smoke dispelled after a few seconds, revealing...

... nothing.

Kakuzu snorted. "You Konoha ninjas grow more incompetent with each generation," he mocked, before making a hand seal. "Now die!"

Kakuzu shot multiple tendrils made of threads in every direction, trying to either catch or skewer the Konoha Chunin around him. They tried to jump away, but they were too close to him when he launched the attack, and the mass of threads penetrated their bodies, before they were pinned to the ground.

"You cost me two of my hearts already," Kakuzu menacingly said as he dug his threads deeper into their bodies. "So it's only fair that I take your hearts to replace them, don't you think so?"

"NO!" Fu screamed.

"Guys... attack now!" Kiba shouted, after coughing a bit, as he tried to stop the threads invading his body from ripping his heart out.

At that moment, Hinata, Fu and Shibuki lunged at Kakuzu from different directions. Kakuzu smirked under his mask.

"So, acting as decoys in order to force me to stay still. You must be so proud of such basic strategy," Kakuzu deadpanned. He then made a couple of hand seals. A neck made of threads formed under the masks, and moved away from Kakuzu. The two masks intertwined their necks several times, almost like forming a ribbon. "Take this! Double Elemental Release: Lightning Maelstrom!" Kakuzu shouted.

The masks then untangled at the same time they released bolts of lightning and a stream of water, forming a spiraling barrier of electrified water that stopped the other three ninjas in their tracks, and hurled them backwards.

"Like I said before, even if you have power and potential, your experience is pitiable compared to mine. Once I'm done with you three, catching the jinchuriki will be considerably easier," Kakuzu said in delight.

"You might have much more experience than us, but that also makes you underestimate your opponents," Shino asked, while he grabbed on the tendrils of threads and tried to pull them out of his body.

Suddenly, the ground started to shake, a little at first, but much stronger later. Then, without any warning, a gigantic rhinoceros beetle emerged from underground, hurling Kakuzu high into the air, while snapping the threads that connected him to the three Konoha Chunin.

"Now I believe it's your time to attack," Shino told the others.

Shibuki made several hand seals.

"Water Release: Water Shuriken!"

The young Takigakure leader created several water stars which flew at the Akatsuki. Hinata, meanwhile, unfolded her collapsible chakra bow, and fired several electric arrows at the flying Akatsuki.

Being unable to maneuver while he was mid air, Kakuzu could only wrap the mass of threads around himself in order to form an improvised protective cocoon to shield himself from the incoming projectiles, before finally falling to the ground with a loud thud. When he undid the makeshift cocoon, he saw that Hinata had somehow crossed the distance that separated them, and slipped into a fighting stance.

"You're within my field of divination. Eight Trigrams: Sixty Four Palms!" Before the Akatsuki could react, Hinata moved to deliver Kakuzu a series of soft put painful finger strikes. "Even with all his body modifications, he still has a chakra network, and thus he still has tenketsu. They might be arranged in a different way than a normal human, but as long as I can see them, it doesn't matter."

Kakuzu, meanwhile, tried to defend himself from the Hyuga's onslaught, but was finding to control both his chakra and the threads that made up most of his body increasingly difficult. He tried to move in order to block the hits, but Hinata's fierce attacks disrupted his motor coordination, and was unable to.

"This is bad! If she seals all my tenketsu, I won't be able to-"

"... sixty four palms!" Hinata shouted, as she finished her combo with a palm strike to the chest, pushing Kakuzu backwards several meters.

Breathing heavily, Kakuzu tried to stand on his feet. The effect of the Hero Water had vanished, unable to resist Hinata's onslaught. He tried to gather some chakra, but was unable to. Panic started to set as he realized he was defenseless against the Konoha and Taki ninjas.

"I need to reopen my tenketsu," Kakuzu realized, as he focused on a few of his sealed chakra points and tried to force them open. "If I can gather some chakra-"

"Quickly, attack now!" Hinata commanded.

Before Kakuzu realized, two human tornadoes flew at him from opposite directions. Instinctively, he aimed his masks at each of them, ready to blast them with water and electricity. But when the masks opened their mouths, nothing came out of them, realizing a second too late that he had no chakra, and a second too late to change course of action and dodge.

"Passing Fang!"

"Drill Claw!"

The two human tornadoes known as Kiba and Tamaki slammed against the masks flanking Kakuzu, shattering them, as well as shredding the external shell of interlocked threads, destroying vital organs, and a heart each. And before the Akatsuki could time to reflect on losing two hearts at once, a shadow loomed over him. Forcing himself to look up, he saw Shino riding the giant beetle he had summoned earlier, diving at him.

The Akatsuki was able to react in time and grabbed the beetle's horn before it could skewer him alive, but the force of the charge pushed him backwards several meters. Shino then commanded his beetle to go back into the sky. Kakuzu thought that he was getting ready for another charge, but what saw next told him otherwise.

The green haired jinchuriki was charging at him, holding a rather large tree -one of those toppled during the fight- with both arms, resting against her shoulder as if it was normal weapon. It was easy to guess what she planned to do with it.

"I'd say something witty now, but I'm way too angry for that, so just die already!" Fu shouted as he swung the tree as if it was a mere club against Kakuzu. The Akatsuki was hit with such force, it was launched high into the air, until it slammed against the forcefield he and his friend had erected either. The gravity did the rest, and Kakuzu's barely alive body fell to the ground.

A moment of silence happened as everybody gathered around Kakuzu -but kept their distance for obvious reasons- and stared at his fallen form.

"Is he dead? Did we win?" Kiba asked.

Hinata shook her head. "I can still see his chakra. But I'm afraid he won't live for much longer," Hinata helpfully said.

"Should we try to keep him alive and take him to Konoha? To have a live Akatsuki prisoner would be invaluable," Shino suggested.

Hinata shook her head. "In any other cases, I'd agree with the idea. But this man has proved himself to be too dangerous."

"Yeah, you saw what he can do. I doubt any of our cells in Konoha would be able to contain him for long," Tamaki agreed with Hinata.

"We kill him then," Kiba concluded. "Anybody willing to deliver the finishing blow?"

Fu grabbed the fallen tree again, and slowly dragged it towards Kakuzu. Despite the lack of words, the message was clear.

"H-how..." Kakuzu began, his voice sounding more like a croak. A pool of blood started to form around his broken body. "How ninjas... so young... could have beat... me..."

"It isn't obvious? You just forgot to take your pills, old man," Fu said with a dark scowl, before it was suddenly replaced by a sunny, bright smile. "Oh, I did it, a witty one liner! They do come better when you're calm. And here's another one: enjoy this 'natural remedy'!"

Displaying once again her monstrous natural strength, Fu raised the large tree above her head, before slamming it against Kakuzu's body with such force, it created a small shockwave, followed by a land tremor.

"I can't see his chakra anymore. He's dead now," Hinata confirmed..

"No shit, I could have reached that conclusion myself without needing to see his chakra," Kiba deadpanned, as he crossed his arms.

Suddenly, there was a loud noise coming from above. All of them instinctively looked up, and saw that the barrier that kept them trapped was breaking apart and dissolving.

"The barrier is gone! That means that Kakashi-sensei must have defeated the Akatsuki with the scythe!" Tamaki cheered.

"At the same time as we defeated this one. How convenient," Kiba observed.

"Now is not time for sarcasm. We should meet with Kakashi-sensei. I presume that Naruto-san and Haku-san aided him in the fight," Shino guessed, confirmed by a nod from Hinata. "They might be wounded and in need of medical assistance."

"Fu and I will stay here watching over the Akatsuki's body until somebody takes it away. Though I doubt he'll go anywhere," Shibuki told them.

...

A few minutes later, the two groups met with each other at the side of Kakuzu's defeat. They were all happy to see that they were okay and had defeated the other Akatsuki. It was quite a surprise when several Naruto clones appeared carrying a block of ice covered in seals with Hidan frozen inside.

"By the way, do you know how was the battle in Taki going before the Akatsuki lured you here?" Shibuki asked.

"I believe we were winning," Shino replied. "Though it's likely that without the Akatsuki leading and supporting them, the forces they gathered wouldn't be of much help against the combined might of several ninja villages."

"Yeah, not even summoning that giant monster was enough to stop us!" Naruto cheered.

"What giant monster?" Tamaki asked.

"There was a giant monster!?" Fu excitedly asked. "Come on, let's go back! If we hurry, I might be able to see it!"

"The monster no longer exists. Naruto-kun, Haku-kun and I destroyed it," Hinata told her.

Fu's face fell, as she slumped forward. "Damn..." she weakly cursed, as she kicked a pebble away, before Hinata patted her back sympathetically.

Kakashi then walked towards the group, holding a storage scroll.

"Alright, I already stored Kakuzu's corpse -or what was left of it- inside this scroll," Kakashi raised the scroll for everybody to see." And with his partner on ice, I believe we're already done here. Let's return to Takigakure and see how things are going there."

"Yes sir!" everybody chorused in unison.

As they began to walk away, Kiba noticed that Fu went back, and grabbed the uprooted tree she had used to smash Kakuzu, and rested it over her shoulder.

"Fu... what are you doing?" Kiba asked.

"I'm taking it home. It was very useful. I think I found my weapon of choice!" Fu happily said, patting the tree with her free hand.

"Your weapon of choice. You plan to fight with a tree?" Kiba incredulously asked.

Fu scowled at him, as she slammed the tree down for added emphasis. "Yeah. Got a problem with that?"

Kiba wasn't going to argue with a girl who could lift and swing a large oak as it was a mere club.

...

Half an hour later, the group arrived at Takigakure. Much to their relief, the battle had already ended, with Akatsuki's forces defeated. The Konoha, Suna and Taki joint forces had occupied the village, and were now putting out the fires that had been caused by the battle, taking the wounded to the makeshift infirmaries, and rounding up all the thugs, mercenaries and cultists that didn't die and were unable to run away once it was obvious that the battle was lost.

However, even if they had won, Shibuki and Fu couldn't help but feel a pang of sadness upon seeing how their once beautiful village was so ravaged, with damaged or completely destroyed buildings everywhere, craters and burn marks splashing the streets, and dust and debris everywhere.

"Our village... is ruined..." Shibuki moaned, as a tear fell down his cheek.

"Yes, but it's nothing that can't be fixed," Naruto interjected. "Look, it seems that most of the Taki population survived. That's the most important thing."

"Even then, what are we going to do now?" Shibuki asked.

"It isn't obvious? Start rebuilding," Kakashi pointed out. "Listen, we in Konoha are no foreigners to the concept of our village getting trashed. During the past decade and a half, we were attacked by the Nine Tails, had to put down an Uchiha upheaval, and fend off an invasion by Otogakure. But we always remained strong, rebuild and moved forward."

"Yeah! If we can do that, then so can you!" Kiba cheered.

"It's not that easy. Konoha is a Great Village, Taki is not. We don't have that many resources. We were never that strong even at our most powerful," Shibuki insisted.

"So? We will help you. That's why we're allies," Naruto stated with a smile.

"Hey, look, Shibuki-sama is back!" a Taki ninja noticed.

"Yes, it's Shibuki-sama!" another added.

"Not just him! Fu is also back!" a civilian man said.

"They finally defeated those horrible Akatsuki!" a civilian woman said.

Soon, a large crowd formed around the newcomers, that cheered Shibuki and Fu's names in unison. The young leader was amazed at how the gloomy post battle mood suddenly shifted in the opposite direction the moment they returned. Especially since, even if he helped taking down Kakuzu, it's not that his assistance was decisive.

"Shibuki," Fu said, managing to be heard among the cheers. She held both his hands, and looked at him into the eyes. "Even if we won and our home is ours once again, our job here isn't done. Like our Konoha friends said, we need to rebuild. And the people of Taki need a leader. We need you, more than ever. And if you think our village is weak, then work to make us stronger. And if you think your leadership isn't up to the challenge, then work to be better leader."

"Wow..." Shibuki said in awe, before chuckling. "When did you become so smart?"

Fu shot him a playful scowl. "What do you mean? I've always been smart!"

"Anyway, now that the battle is over, we should send a message to Hokage-sama so he can decide what to do next," Kakashi said.

...

Amegakure

Sitting alone on the edge of the top of tower, Pain, the Akatsuki leader, looked the industrial-looking ninja village below. It was his favorite pastime. He didn't know why, but looking over the village from such height was something enthralling to him. Maybe because there was a time in which said village made him feel small. And now, said village was under his control.

Much to his annoyance, Pain wasn't alone for long. And it wasn't his faithful companion Konan who disturbed his peace, but a spiralling vortex, from which a certain Uchiha emerged from.

"Pain," Obito stated, being one of the few people that didn't address him with the '-sama' honorific. In private, at least.

"Obito," Pain replied, as he stood back on his feet. "What do I owe this visit?"

"I came here to tell you several news. The first one is that Kakuzu and Hidan have been defeated, and Taki has been liberated," Obito stated. "Kakuzu has been reported dead, while Hidan has been neutralized and captured. He's being taken to Konoha as we speak."

Pain's stoicism didn't falter as Obito gave him the bad news. Two more members lost after Sasori's death was troubling indeed.

"I see. Anything else?" Pain asked.

"Yes. I'm planning to capture a jinchuriki myself," Obito stated. "Given the recent developments, I believe we shouldn't take this so slowly."

"Which one?" Pain asked.

"One from Kumo. I have a plan that will make at least one of them leave their hideout and go into the light, where they can be captured," Obito explained. "And I think it's about time we put our newest asset to use."

"Do you think it's a good idea? Doing so would draw even more attention to Akatsuki," Pain replied.

"More than it already has? Everybody knows we have three Tailed Beasts under our control. We kidnapped and nearly killed the Kazekage's son, and Hidan and Kakuzu took over a minor village. I believe the time for subtlety has long passed. We should try to capture the remaining jinchuriki as soon as possible, before the ninja villages decide to join forces against us," Obito explained.

"I find that unlikely," Pain stoically replied. "The Great Villages are too unwilling to let go of their grudges, and too willing to use them to restart wars. Even the current alliances are tenuous at best."

"Except it already happened. The reason behind Hidan and Kakuzu's defeat and Takigakure's loss was Konoha and Suna joining forces to liberate it," Obito replied. "And from what my informants told me, Kiri would have joined the battle as well if it wasn't for logistical problems."

"To have all villages united against a single enemy... would that be a way to peace better than the one we're walking?" Pain pondered, unclear if he was being rethoric or if it was a geniune question.

Obito shook his head. "The peace will last as long as there's a common enemy. The moment the threat goes away, old hatreds will resurface. That's the way it has always been."

"Thought so. Fortunately, this cycle of hatred has its days numbered," Pain agreed. "Though you'll have to excuse my skepticism in your ability to capture a jinchuuriki. All your efforts to get the Nine Tails ended up in failure."

"I know. My repeated attempts at capturing it made Konoha aware of our intentions, and increased their protective measures. That's why I'm going after a jinchuriki nobody has ever dared to touch," Obito explained. "I will be taking Kisame with me as well, just to be sure."

"Very well then. May you be successful in your endeavor," Pain told him.

"What about you? Don't you plan to capture any jinchuriki yourself? I know you're needed running the organization, but soon we will need the power of the Rinnegan," Obito reminded him.

"What you say is true, but it should be unwise to reveal all our cards yet," Pain replied. "Let the villages think that they can handle us before they realize how outmatched they are."

"Very well then. But try not to stay idle too long. The sooner we finish this, the less risks there will be," Obito replied. "I'll go and make the preparations for my trip."

And with that, Obito disappeared into a spiraling vortex, leaving Pain once again alone with his thoughts.

...

Three Days Later

As Jiraiya promised, Konoha, Suna and Kiri would lend their help in order to rebuild Takigakure. It would take a lot of time to leave the village in a state similar to the one it was before the Akatsuki arrived, but the morale overall was high. In fact, the Hokage himself went to see the village, and organize the rebuilding efforts.

"So, are you sure you want to stay?" Jiraiya asked Naruto. "The reconstruction could last quite some time."

"I've talked with Hinata-hime and Haku, and they both agree with me. We want to help Taki," Naruto confirmed.

"As you wish. I thought you'd prefer to something less long term in case Akatsuki shows up again," Jiraiya told him.

"Hey, with my Shadow Clones, we'll speed up the reconstruction efforts a lot! The village will be good as new before they realize of it!" Naruto cheerfully said.

As father and son were talking, they realized they were approached by Shibuki and Fu. They both had a solemn look in their faces, almost as if they were going to give Jiraiya and Naruto some sort of bad news. Upon getting closer, Shibuki was the first one to speak.

"Hokage-sama, let me tell you how grateful I am for the help you and the other villagers are providing to Takigakure," Shibuki said, making a slight bow.

"No need to thank me. We're allies, and allies help each other," Jiraiya said with a hearty chuckle.

"I know... that's why it pains me to do this," Shibuki said, averting his gaze. "To ask for more after all what you gave..."

"Come on, I'm sure it won't be that bad," Jiraiya reassured. "What do you need?"

"It will take time before Taki recovers some of its former strength. But even when before this invasion, we were unable to stop Akatsuki. If it wasn't for Konoha's timely intervention, Fu would be dead right now, and the Seven Tails in the Akatsuki's hands," Shibuki began.

Jiraiya and to a lesser extent, Naruto, started to see where this was going.

"What I want to ask you is... would you mind letting Fu stay in Konoha until this crisis passes? I'm afraid that she won't be safe here anymore," Shibuki asked, almost in a pleading tone. "Yes, I know I'm asking you a lot. You already have a jinchuriki, and another one would be like placing an even bigger target on your village. But honestly, I don't know what to do, and you're the only ones I can trust with this."

"I don't think there would be any problem. Keeping jinchuriki safe is of everyone's interest," Jiraiya admitted. "What about you, Fu? Are you okay with leaving your home?"

Fu nodded, though Jiraiya could see there was some regret in her body language. "It's not an idea I like, but given what Akatsuki did to my home when they looked for me..." Fu stated, as she rubbed one arm. "Though I can't help but feel guilty if something happened to Konoha because of me..."

"Akatsuki already has Konoha in its sights because of me to begin with, so there's nothing you should feel guilty about," Naruto stated, patting her on the shoulder.

Fu forced herself to smile, and nodded. "If you say so," she replied. "Albeit I'm not going to go immediately. I want to stay here and help with the reconstruction effort. I'm really good at lifting heavy stuff!" she happily added, as she flexed her biceps.

Naruto laughed awkwardly. "Yeah, Hinata-hime told me how you defeated Kakuzu..."

"And while I'm in Konoha, I can continue my jinchuriki training with you and Hokage-sama so when the Akatsuki send another pair of goons to get me, I'll be even better prepared," Fu added.

"Good to see that you're eager to continue. Anyway, it seems the situation here doesn't require my presence anymore," Jiraiya concluded. "So I'll be going back to Konoha."

"We'll better get going back. The sooner we get to work, the sooner we'll be able to return to Konoha," Naruto said.

Fu nodded, and the two jinchuriki left and joined their friends, already working hard on the reconstruction efforts, and enjoy their peaceful time together while it lasted.

And it wouldn't last for too long.

Author's Note: So Fu is safe, and she will be joining Konoha for the time being. Yay! Just like True Potential did in its latest chapter which was updated fucking YESTERDAY, yay!

You know, I had originally planned a different end. Shibuki would have died in the battle against the Akatsuki, and Fu would eventually become the new leader of Taki, with Shibuki returning later as an Edo Tensei zombie. However, that would keep her way too busy and I wouldn't be able to use her as much as I can, so instead I decided to have her move to Konoha (which, as explained in the last dialogue, makes more sense). However, that means I needed Shibuki alive in order to continue being Taki's leader and to officialy "hand" Fu to Konoha. Not to mention that my plan to have him return as a zombie would have no kind of payoff, due reasons I won't say since they're spoilers.

Boy, now it looks like I'm even copying True Potential's author's notes as well, given that DryBonesKing had a similar thought regarding Shibuki.

Though in all seriousness, if you haven't read True Potential, you totally should. It's an awesome fanfic worth of all the reviews and fame it has.

And yes, I'll say it again: unlike canon, Pain knows about Obito's true identity. A future arc will reveal the why of this change. Also, said scene should be a pretty big hint on what the next arc is going to be ;) (though there's going to be a breather chapter in between)

Once again, thanks to grimlock987 for betareading this chapter.

So, now that it's over, how did you like my take on the Hidan and Kakuzu arc? Tell me your thoughts in a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Wedding Bells Among the Chaos

Author's Note: I'm glad that, even if it was to a slow start, the latter half of the Hidan and Kakuzu arc got a better reception. Now, before we move onto the next arc, I decided that another breather was in order. Still, this chapter has some plot and character developments that I'm sure you'll find interesting. Anyway, enjoy:

Chapter 65

Wedding Bells Among the Chaos

or

Here comes the bride momentarily

A Month Later

There was a large gathering in the Sarutobi Clan's private training ground. However, training wasn't the reason all these people were meeting there, despite most of them being ninjas. In fact, rather than their usual attires, said ninjas were wearing more elegant clothes, the men wearing suits and the women wearing kimonos.

Yes, the kind of clothes one would wear to a formal, important event, like a wedding. More specifically, the wedding between Asuma Sarutobi and Kurenai Yūhi. After the latter revealed her pregnancy, the two of them decided to marry as soon as possible. In other circumstances, they might have taken more time to plan things out, but given the looming threat of the Akatsuki in the horizon, they wanted to jump right in.

Attending the ceremony were, as expected, the entire Sarutobi clan, Asuma and Kurenai's students, their ninja friends, and their respective students if they have them like Kakashi or Gai. There was also Jiraiya, Tsunade and their children.

The ceremony took place without any incident, but there were some whispers -that were quickly shushed- about Kurenai's rather noticeable belly.

When the priest declared them husband and wife, Asuma and Kurenai kissed for the first time as married couple, and the guests erupted in a chorus of cheers, whistles and applause.

...

After the ceremony, they moved to the reception, which also took place in the Sarutobi Training Ground, inside several large sunshade tents that the clan had rented for the occasion.

At that moment, Kurenai was having a talk with her three students. Neither of their drinks were alcoholic, the former because of her pregnancy, and the latter three because of their age.

"I'm glad you guys managed to come," Kurenai told them. "I was afraid that, with how busy you've been in Taki, you might miss it."

"Never!" Naruto energetically stated. "How could you think such a thing?"

"Yes. Regardless of the current state of our team, you will always be our sensei, and we will always be there for you," Hinata added.

"Speaking of which, now that I have the chance to ask... how are you doing without me?" Kurenai asked.

"We manage," Haku laconically replied. "We might not be in the need for a replacement, but I'm sure things will be easier once you come back to us."

"Because... you plan to come back, right? You aren't going to retire?" Naruto asked, a bit of worry dripping from his voice.

Kurenai laughed in return. "Of course not. I'm just thirty. Ninjas only retire at that age when they suffer crippling injuries. Once the baby is born and I get back in shape, I'll be with you. I mean, Shizune had two kids already, and she still a kunoichi."

"Speaking of which, have you think in any name for the baby?" Hinata asked.

Kurenai smiled at Hinata. "No, not yet. Why, do you have any suggestions?"

"Yeah, if he's a boy, call him Naruto jr.!" Naruto chimed in.

Kurenai laughed again. "I don't think I'll be able to survive with two Narutos in my life. Plus I don't want to give my future son such a burden by naming him after an amazing ninja like you."

"Bummer. But you have a point," Naruto admitted, then he chuckled. "I mean, Sasuke's parents named him after the Old Man Hokage's dad, which was one of the Warring States Period's most feared ninjas, and look what it did to him! All ego and no talent!"

"Better than be named after a piece of food!" Sasuke replied from the other side of the tent, sounding rather annoyed.

"Learn to take a joke!" Naruto shouted back. "Maybe he should have been named after somebody with a sense of humor."

"Then again, there's still a lot of time before we have to decide a name," Kurenai said, bringing the conversation back to the topic.

"Whatever name you end up choosing, at least try to be more original than Shizune and Shisui," Naruto pointed out. "And don't name the kid something like Kurasuma or Asurenai or something like that."

Kurenai laughed again. "Don't worry, above all things, I plan to give my kid a name with personality."

"What about the honeymoon? Do you know where you want to go?" Hinata asked.

"I'd always liked to visit the Land of the Moon. I heard is a really beautiful place ideal for such things," Kurenai said, before her face fell a little. "Sadly, with the current situation, we can't afford going that far away, so in the end we decided to go to the Land of the Hot Springs. Not as exotic, but it has a very nice resort, and it's close to the Land of Fire."

"My parents also went there for their honeymoon. They said it was a pretty nice place, so I'm sure both you and Asuma-sensei will have a nice time," Naruto said with a smile.

...

Not far away from there, the groom, now husband, was having a chat with his students just like her wife was doing. Well, the male ones at least, since Ino was somewhere else.

"Man, who would have guessed that the day we met, Ino was right about you, Asuma-sensei," Shikamaru pointed out.

"Yeah, why did you even deny being in love with her? It's not like Kurenai-sensei is somebody to be ashamed of," Choji added, as he put more and more appetizers on a trail he was carrying.

"If you want an answer... well, we both like to keep our personal and professional lives apart. And we don't like people asking about the former," Asuma replied.

"Let me guess: in your case, it was because being the son of the Third Hokage brought you unwanted attention?" Shikamaru asked.

"You could said that," Asuma agreed with a shrug.

"Hey there!" a new female voice chimed in. "What are you talking about?"

The men of the Tactical Squad turned around to see their only female member walking towards them, smiling happily. She had her arm wrapped around the arm of a pale, black haired boy in a suit with an uncannily neutral expression. On the other hand, the boy was holding a folder.

"Oh, hey, Ino. I had lost sight of you for a moment. I thought you left already," Asuma pointed out.

"Please, like I would ever leave a wedding so soon, especially the one from somebody so close to me," Ino replied with a hand wave. "Anyway, do you guys remember Sai?"

As if on cue, the pale boy smiled. "Hello there. Nice to meet you, Ino has told me a lot about you."

"Ah, yes, you've been hanging out with this guy a lot recently," Shikamaru noticed.

"Is he your boyfriend?" Choji directly asked.

"Eh, I think it's a bit too soon for that. So far, I tasked upon myself to make him a little more social. You know, being inducted into ANBU from such a young age can't be healthy," Ino said as she shook her head.

"How did you meet him, by the way?" Shikamaru asked.

"Sai went with us to the mission to liberate Kiri," Ino stated.

"Oh, I remember now!" Choji said in realization. "You're the guy Sakura punched out of the ship, aren't you?"

"Choji! Why did you have to bring that up!" Ino angrily chastised her rotund teammate.

"Sorry, but it was the only thing I remember from him," Choji said, shrugging.

"It's okay, I already put it past me. Ino told me that Sakura can have quite the temper, and my way with words wasn't as good back then," Sai softly said, widening his smile at the end. "Oh, by the way, I came here to bring you my wedding gift, since Ino told me is a custom to give a gift to the newlyweds. I don't have much money, so I decided to do something myself."

Sai then handed the folder to Asuma. The bearded Jonin opened it, and much to his surprise, he saw a picture of both him and Kurenai the moment they were saying the "I do" during the wedding. Despite being only a pencil sketch, it was amazingly realistic and life-like, almost looking like a black and white photograph.

"It looks really impressive, boy. Thanks a lot," Asuma praised, as he closed the folder and placed it under his arm. "But, if it's a picture of the wedding... when did you do it?"

"During the wedding. It was the only time I could have been able to capture the moment," Sai explained. "I had to miss part of the ceremony to do it, but sometimes you have to sacrifice something in order to obtain the better results."

"It's okay, kid. Your gift was really thoughtful and tasteful," Asuma praised.

"Thanks, but part of the credit goes to Ino. She was the one who suggested it," Sai stated.

"And with a good reason! If I didn't say anything, you would have bought him that booklet about how to cope when you stop smoking!" Ino said, mildly angry.

"What? You said that your sensei was going to stop smoking, so something like that would have been useful," Sai replied. "Or it's something that's just functional not a proper wedding gift?"

"See? I still have a lot of work to do with this guy," Ino said, shaking her head. She then smiled brightly again, and turned at Asuma. "But I'm so proud that you finally decided to drop such an ugly and unhealthy habit! Especially now that you're going to be a dad."

Asuma chuckled, as he sheepishly rubbed the back of his neck. "Haha, yes. Kurenai said that I either stopped smoking, or that she wouldn't marry me. Guess that the choice was obvious."

"Like I said, before, you sometimes need to sacrifice something in order to obtain something even better," Sai added with a smile.

"The way you talk it seems like you're speaking from experience, kid," Asuma noted.

"All ninjas end up sacrificing something during their careers, sooner or later," Sai replied with his unwavering smile.

"Yeah, I know that too well," Asuma replied, as he briefly reflected on how Hiruzen being the Hokage strained their relationship.

"Come on Sai, this is a wedding, let's talk about something less depressing and a bit more fitting with the situation, okay?" Ino asked, as he nudged him a bit.

"Alright," Sai agreed. He then turned at Choji and Shikamaru. "I see that most people came with a date, but you two seem to be on your own. Do girls find your appearances too ugly or your personalities too disgusting for staying with you?"

Asuma raised an eyebrow, and repressed a chuckle. The sound of Ino's hand slapping her face echoed through the whole village.

"While I don't need to justify myself on such issue, I do have a girlfriend. She's just from Suna, and she isn't here," Shikamaru pointed out. "And yes, I know that's something a lot of single people say in order to boast, but in my case is true. Ask anybody here."

"And while I don't have a girlfriend, I've been in touch from a girl from Kumo I met during the Chunin Exams. Though sadly I don't get to see her as often as Shikamaru sees Temari," Choji replied.

"Which isn't that much," Shikamaru pointed out.

"You know what? I take back what I said. You're no longer ready to interact with other people on a casual level," Ino stated, as he grabbed Sai's arm and dragged him away.

"It was nice to meet you," Sai stated, as he was pulled away by the embarrassed blond.

...

While some people have been watching with some amusement how Sai embarrassed Ino in front of her teammates with his sheer lack of tact, certain two people have been paying more attention to the exchange than most others.

"Your friend certainly spends a lot of time with that guy, don't you think so?" Sasuke pointed out.

"Indeed. I don't know why. Ino surely can do much better than him," Sakura replied. "She said Sai's pretty nice deep down, but not even she herself seems to be sure of it."

"Are you worried about her?" Sasuke asked, noticing Sakura's tone.

The pinkette nodded. "There's something odd about that guy. Something I can't put my finger on. And that's not counting on how little we know about his past. I'm afraid he might be using Ino for whatever purpose. The idea alone makes me shiver, and that's not even getting into what he might do once he no longer needs her."

"Vapid as she can be, Ino isn't a stupid girl. She might have a reason for spending so much time with that guy," Sasuke pointed out. "If the guy tries something, I'm sure she will see it coming."

"You seem to have quite a lot of trust in Ino," Sakura pointed out.

"She's a ninja, just like you and me. I don't think the Hokage gave her the Chunin rank for her pretty face," Sasuke pointed out. "Plus she can read minds."

"Even then, I think it would be good if we kept an eye on them," Sakura stated.

"Though I think there may be another reason as for why you seem to dislike so much Ino getting close with that guy," Sasuke pointed out.

Sakura placed her hands on her hips, and frowned a little. "And that would be?"

Sasuke shot her an uncharacteristic smirk. "You're jealous that Ino is getting a boyfriend before you."

"What!?" an indignant Sakura replied, a little louder than she wanted. "Here I am worrying about her wellbeing, and you bring up such nonsense!"

"It wouldn't be that weird. Ino and you have always been rivals. You always competed in everything, romance included. It's only natural that you'll feel that way," Sasuke told her.

"Well, what about you and Naruto? You've always been rivals as well, and he got a girlfriend for way longer than you!" Sakura said in a mildly accusatory manner, which Sasuke found worth a chuckle.

"Naruto and I may compete, but not in such topics. Besides, if I really wanted a girlfriend just to rub him in, I could have asked you or Karin -at least before she started dating Neji- out, and I'm sure you would have said yes," Sasuke confidently said.

"You know, this is one of those times in which your confidence in yourself comes out as more obnoxious than charming," Sakura replied, crossing her arms.

"So, if I asked you to be my girlfriend, would you say no?" Sasuke asked.

Sakura grew increasingly uncomfortable. She averted her gaze, as her face reddened. "It's... it's not nice to use my feelings for you in such a way, Sasuke-kun..."

Sasuke grabbed her by the shoulder, and forced her to look at him. "Why the bashful attitude? You never were afraid to let me know what you felt for me."

"Things change, Sasuke-kun. I know that by pushing my feelings, I was only pestering you and making you dislike me more. That's why I decided that it was best to let you be, and if you really returned my feelings, you'd give me a sign," Sakura explained.

"Huh. Who would have guessed that that annoying girl from the Academy would mature so much," Sasuke stated.

Sakura just chuckled. She wiped a strand of hair from her face "Guess we all do, sooner or later. Being closer to you helped to understand you a bit better. I also understood that, if I didn't step up my game, I'd also be the weakest link of our team, and that wouldn't endear you to me much. Not to mention, that I'd put yours, Karin's and Shizune-sensei's life in danger by not pulling my share of the weight."

"Again, another thing I would have never guessed I would see when we first became a team, but guess that life has a knack for challenging expectations," Sasuke noted.

"You were my inspiration. I took a page from Hinata's book and decided that I should look at you the same way she used to look at Naruto. I mean, look at her. She used to be so shy and withdrawn, and not that strong of a ninja, and after graduating she became such a powerhouse... and that was before getting the Tenseigan," Sakura pointed out.

"And what will you do, once you catch up to me? I won't be a good source of inspiration anymore," Sasuke asked.

Sakura let out a mirthless chuckle. "Catching up to you, heh. Who would have guessed you can crack jokes."

"With that attitude, you probably wouldn't," Sasuke said, sounding mildly chastising.

"You can't seriously believe that. I mean, with all the stuff you can do with the Sharingan..." Sakura began.

"Yeah, my clan has a Blood Limit. So what? Look at Tsunade and Jiraiya. They were born without Blood Limits, yet they became two of the most powerful ninjas who ever lived," Sasuke countered.

"Well, you have a point..." Sakura conceded, as she rubbed her arm.

"But what?" Sasuke asked. "You can always push yourself a little harder every day. Limits can always be surpassed. New heights can be achieved. That's what you've been doing so far, why you should stop now?"

"Who said I did stop?" Sakura asked, crossing her arms.

"Your quitter attitude," Sasuke replied.

"Quitter? I'd like you to see training with Gai-sensei," Sakura said, rolling her eyes, before shivering a little at the memory of the beginning of such torture. "Which I still do, by the way."

"The problem here is that you see a big gap between our level of skill and power, and think that since there's no chance of catching up to me, why bother trying? You probably feel pretty comfortable with the level you achieved. But then you realize that such thing may not be enough," Sasuke said. "It's good that you see me as an inspiration, but you shouldn't mistake it for a goal."

"You sound like you talk from experience," Sakura noted.

"And I do. Remember that even before the clan's downfall, Itachi and Shisui were the two strongest Uchihas the clan ever produced. And I felt very frustrated when I was unable to catch up to them, no matter how hard I trained. And in my case, it was justified since unlike you and me, they didn't have anything I did not," Sasuke explained. "Until I realized that I was looking at it the wrong way. I still look at Itachi and Shisui for strength, but I want to improve for my own sake, regardless if I catch up with them or not. Try to surpass yourself with each passing day, and you'll see real progress. And before you realize it, the gap between our power and skill level will be much smaller than you realize."

"Wow, that was... really inspirational," Sakura said in awe.

Sasuke smirked. "To be completely honest, I'm only paraphrasing what Itachi and Shisui told me once."

"That's really good advice. You're lucky to have them," Sakura sincerely said.

"Lucky indeed. Even after losing most of my clan, I still feel grateful for having them. I don't know what I would have done if I lost them as well," Sasuke wondered.

Sakura blushed a little, as she started to rub her arm. "Well... I now it's not the same since I'm not part of your clan, but as long as I'm here, you'll never be alone."

"I know. But that doesn't mean it can change in the future," Sasuke said.

"Wait, what? What do you...?" Sakura's words died in her mouth as the realization hit her like an sledgehammer to the gut. Her eyes were open wide, as her blush intensified. "Sasuke-kun! Are you telling me-"

"Listen, I have a responsibility to the Uchiha Clan," Sasuke interrupted her. "A few years ago we used to be more than one hundred, now, even with Shisui's brats, our numbers are still in the single digits. I can't let Itachi and Shisui do everything; I have to get married and produce children as well. And I can't marry anybody; the mother of my children must be a strong kunoichi, somebody worthy of the Uchiha name. However, that's not the only thing I'm looking for. I want my future wife to be somebody I can love, somebody who makes my life whole. And somebody I can make happy as well in return."

"Sasuke-kun... that's..." Sakura was at loss for words upon hearing the Uchiha's speech.

"... and I think that you can be that woman," Sasuke finished. "I'm not asking you to marry me on the spot. But I want to see if I'm right and you're that special somebody." Sasuke then sighed. "Sorry, I think I'm being too theatrical. I'm not good at this. What I want to ask you is... do you want to become a couple, and see what fate has for us?"

A star flashed in each of Sakura's eyes, as her brain processed the words coming out of Sasuke's mouth.

"You... you mean it?" Sakura asked, coming close to him.

"I wouldn't have asked if I didn't," Sasuke replied, rolling his eyes a little.

"Oh my god! Yes! Yes! A million time yes!" Sakura screamed, as she wrapped her arms around the Uchiha's neck.

Sasuke grew a bit uncomfortable as Sakura's over the top reaction drew the attention of quite a few people. Some muttered something to themselves while others snickered.

"You know, I think I made clear I wasn't asking you to marry me, just to go on a date and see if things work out between us," Sasuke stated, as he gently tried to push Sakura aside.

"Just let me dream, dammit!" Sakura said, still in the same elated tone, strangely enough.

...

Meanwhile, at another table, Kakashi was sharing a table with his students and Rin. However, his students got up to talk to other people, leaving the two members of Team Minato alone.

"Look at them, married already," Rin said with a chuckle. "I knew that there was something more than friendship between them back then, but seeing them married... it feels unreal."

"You can't help but still see them as they were, can you?" Kakashi asked. Despite the wording, he didn't mean to sound accusatory.

"I can't help it. When I heard your names, I picture how you looked before my death. Such disconnect is hard to reconcile," Rin stated.

"I know what you mean. When I think about Obito, I can't help but think in that annoying boy that wanted to become Hokage," Kakashi told her.

"And who had a crush on me. In hindsight, he wasn't exactly subtle," Rin said with a chuckle.

"He felt that since he was in the same team as you, his chances would be greater," Kakashi pointed out. "Which isn't that rare to happen, as Kurenai and Asuma were part of the same team as well."

"Maybe if things were different, Obito and I would have been an item, who knows," Rin said, before directing her eyes towards the newlywed couple, now happily engaged in a chat with Shizune and Shisui. "Still, I'm happy for them. They deserve each other. I can't wait to see how their baby looks like."

"Oh, that means that we have to make them a gift when he or she is born," Kakashi said, sounding a little annoyed. "Man, after it took so much thinking to find that perfect wedding gift, now I'll have spend more sleepless nights thinking in a proper gift."

"Kakashi, your wedding gift was a book on how to stop smoking, plus several boxes of nicotine patches," Rin deadpanned. "That's hardly an A-Class wedding gift."

"Hey, Asuma said Kurenai forced him to drop smoking, so I decided I could give him something practical," Kakashi replied, not sounding ashamed in the slightest. "Though a gift for a baby is going to be a little trickier."

"Oh, I already have an awesome idea," Rin proudly said.

"Oh? What is it?" Kakashi asked, interested.

"So you can take that idea for you? Sorry but no, Copy Ninja," Rin replied, emphasizing the last two words.

"Aw, you hurt me, Rin," Kakashi mockingly replied. "Come on, I promise I won't copy you."

"Very well then. It's a crib," Rin stated. "I know it's not something overly original, but I'm sure they'll appreciate."

"A crib, huh? A nice gift. Practical as well. Though some cribs can be a bit expensive," Kakashi warned her.

"Oh, I don't plan to buy a crib, Kakashi. I'll make one from scratch with my... special talents," Rin replied, smiling widely.

"So, you got a better hang of it?" Kakashi asked.

"Once we have some privacy, I'll show you how much I progressed since the last time you saw me fight," Rin proudly said, sounding almost like a boast.

"Um, excuse me, I'm not interrupting anything, am I?" a new female voice asked.

Kakashi and Rin turned around to see Ino of all people standing in front of them.

"Sorry, I couldn't help but hear your conversation. You were talking about a gift for Asuma-sensei and Kurenai-sensei's baby, right?"

"That, we were," Kakashi confirmed with a single nod. "Why? Do you want advice from us?"

"Yes. You see, I didn't have to think in a gift for the wedding since my clan provided all the flowers for the ceremony for free, but sadly I can't cheat like that again," Ino said, chuckling a little. "So I was wondering, do you mind I borrow Rin a little for some girl talk?"

"Uh, sure. Do you mind staying alone, Kakashi?" Rin asked.

Kakashi replied by pulling one of his many Icha Icha novels. "I know how to make the best of solitude, so don't worry about me."

"I can't believe he brought one of those smutty books to a wedding of all places," Ino disapprovingly said, shaking her head. "Anyway, come on Rin! I want to take a break from this multitude, plus the weather's great for a walk."

"Alright then. See you later, Kakashi," Rin said as she got up, and followed Ino outside of the large tent.

...

"You know, when I was a Genin, I asked myself, 'what kind of dumbass hires a team of ninja to babysit?' Shouldn't it be better just to hire some civilian teen to do the job?" Shisui began. "But now that I have kids myself, I see how easy and practical it is."

"Not to mention fast," Shizune chimed in. "It might be a bit more pricey than hiring a civilian babysitter, but the advantages are surely worth every additional ryo."

"It's kind of funny when you think about it. We can't take care of our kids because of our job as ninjas, so we hire lower ranked ninjas to do that job for us," Shisui said with a chuckle.

Kurenai and Asuma were now having a talk with Shizune and Shisui about their experiences with their kids. After that, they also had planned to ask Yugao and Hayate.

"So... I'm taking your life changed a lot since you got kids, right?" Asuma asked.

"Oh, absolutely. Though it's not as bad as it may seem at first sight. I mean, yeah, you don't have as much free time you used to have..." Shizune began.

"You need to spend much less money on yourself and more on the kids," Shisui continued.

"The sleepless nights when the kids feel like crying for no reason..."

"The constant battle of making them eat their food..."

"And 'battle' isn't an euphemism! Somedays our kitchen ends up in a state comparable to the battlefields of the Third War!"

"And pray they don't get sick! It's all of the above multiplied by ten, plus a stream of vomit!"

"Not that they need to be sick to throw up for some reason..."

Shisui noticed that color was starting to disappear from the newlywed couple's faces. "Uh, honey? I think we're scaring them."

Realizing Shisui was right, Shizune laughed awkwardly. "But don't worry! All of that stuff will be meaningless compared to how much a kid will brighten your life!"

"We hope so, hehe," Kurenai said, laughing a little. "We know that taking care of a kid is a serious endeavor, but for a moment you made it look as it was more an arduous chore than anything."

"Though, a kid also gives you perspective, you know what I mean?" Shizune asked. "I mean, we're ninjas. We risk our lives with each mission. I can say that all of us here are not afraid to die to complete a mission, or to save a comrade, or something like that. But when you have this little one at home depending on you, and wonder what's going to be of him or her if this time you don't return..."

"Yeah. I know I worried my father when I started my career as a kunoichi, but I believe this is worse. I mean, if I died, even if it would have been devastating, my dad could still take care of himself. But if it was him who died..." Kurenai said.

"Yes. That's why we agreed that I'd take a job that entails less risk and does not require me to leave the village for a long periods of time. If something happened to Shizune -pray it doesn't- our kids would still have me," Shisui explained.

"Plus at least one of us will be in the village if an emergency happens," Shizune continued. "We agreed it would be him since he mostly did solo missions or with temporary teammates. I'm the Jōnin-sensei of a team, so I wouldn't be able to do it without leaving them."

"Which makes me wonder, do you guys plan to do anything similar?" Shisui asked. "I'm bringing this up because, unlike us, the two of you are Jōnin-sensei. The two of you take risky missions that make you spend time away from the village."

"While I don't plan to retire, I think I may give Naruto command of the Assault Squad permanently. That way I won't be so bound to the team, and I'll be able to take some time if the situation calls for it."

"Well, you have it easier. Your students are either Jonin or Special Jōnin, and from what you told me, they all soon will be the former. Hell, I wouldn't be surprised if one of them took a team of their own," Asuma stated.

"Hinata has expressed interest in doing such a thing, but she herself admitted that, even if she got the rank shortly, she doesn't feel ready for the task, and think she could use some more experience," Kurenai told the others.

"Wait, isn't Hinata like, the new head of her clan?" Shisui asked, scratching his head. "I mean, clan heads are usually pretty busy. I don't know where is she going to find time to do both things."

"It can be managed," Asuma interjected. "My father was the Jonin-sensei of the Sannin while he was also head of the Sarutobi Clan and Hokage. How did he manage to do all that, I'll never know. But it sure as hell didn't leave him any time to spend with his family," the bearded Jonin said, some bitterness leaking from his voice.

"Asuma..." Kurenai said, as she squeezed his hand with her own.

The bearded Jonin breathed deeply as he forced himself to calm down. He eyed his father the former Hokage, chatting with his fellow clansmen and other guests.

"I know, I know," Asuma apologetically said. "I like to think I put all the bad blood between my father and I behind, but some things are hard to forget. If anything, I want to make sure my relationship with my kid is better than the one I had with father."

"You know I'm on the same boat. My father never approved of me being a kunoichi. He felt such career wasn't befitting of a woman," Kurenai said.

Shizune raised an eyebrow, her face becoming indignant. "Really? What a bunch of nonsense."

"Indeed it was. My father was a very traditional man," Kurenai stated.

"No, being traditional is following some outdated customs because they're part of your clan history or something like that. Women have been ninjas since the foundation of the Great Villages," Shizune stated.

During the Warring State Period, women were often barred from becoming ninjas. The reason was that due the absurdly high mortality rate of the era, all clans agreed that women should be away from danger, and produce and raise children. They were basically glorified baby factories. With the advent of the Village System, the mortality rate greatly decreased, and it became more acceptable for women to become ninjas or other high risk jobs.

Of course, not everybody was ready to embrace social progress enabled by this new era, and in some places, while not banned, women were discouraged from being ninjas.

"My relationship with my father wasn't the best either. I think that was one of the reasons Asuma and I clicked so easily. A bit said if you think about it," Kurenai sadly chuckled. "Sometimes I wish I had at least tried to make things up with him before he died during the Nine Tails attack."

"I know what you mean. It's not until you lose somebody that you realize that you could have been a bit more understanding to them," Shisui solemnly agreed. "Their memory... it's like a wound that will never heal."

There was a moment of silence following the usually cheerful and laid back Uchiha's unusually serious and deep statement.

Kurenai forced herself to smile as she pushed the bitter memory of the last time her father was alive away. "But enough of such gloom talk, okay? Today is a day of celebration. I want everybody in their best mood."

...

At another part of the large sunshade tent, Jiraiya, Tsunade and their two youngest children were also enjoying the reception.

"Enjoying the wedding, kids?" Jiraiya asked the twins.

"I dunno. I preferred Shizune-nee's wedding. There were less people, and we knew most of the guests," Kaida complained with a shrug. "I don't even know who most of these people are."

"Because we were Shizune-nee's family," Hagane pointed out. "And the groom's family were just two people at the time."

"Yes. A good chunk of the guests are the Sarutobi Clan and Kurenai's family, even if the latter is much smaller than the former," Tsunade pointed out. "Though you should have seen our wedding. It had even less people."

"Less? But you guys are like living legends! I'm sure lots of people would have loved to attend!" Kaida said, visibly surprised.

"And they wanted to attend, make no mistake. But weddings are special and meaningful events, and thus you want to share them with your loved ones, not a bunch of strangers. You see neither your mother nor I had any family left by the time we were married."

"I had Naruto," Tsunade pointed out.

Jiraiya rolled his eyes a little. "Yes, you have Uzumaki blood and all that, but your family ties aren't that close. Besides, Naruto wasn't even four at the time, so he hardly counts as a proper guest."

"And how many people did attend your wedding?" Hagane asked, putting the conversation back on track.

"Just Naruto, Shizune, Sensei, Itachi and Shisui," Tsunade replied. "Sensei was the one who conducted the ceremony. The reception was in our house, when we merely talked about various topics as we had some food with sake in the living room."

"I know I said I didn't like crowds, but that sound pretty boring for a wedding," Kaida said, crossing her arms.

"We like to think it was something intimate. Who cares if it wasn't something grand nor grandiose? It was a memorable day for us, and that's what counted," Jiraiya said.

"I can understand dad not having any family left since he was an orphan and all that, but mom is a Senju! Our clan founded Konoha! Where were the other Senjus?" Hagane asked. "I read a lot about our clan in history books, but they don't detail what happened to it."

"Yeah, I would want my wedding to have more people than you guys, Shizune-nee-chan and Naruto-niisan," Kaida deadpanned.

"Then you know what to do. Marry a guy with a pretty big family. Wanna know which are Konoha's biggest clans?" Jiraiya asked, chuckling.

"DAD!" Kaida protested, turning red. "I don't mean right now!"

"Kidding, kidding! I already knew that," the Hokage laughed, holding up his hands in defense. "Besides, after you were born, I passed a law to make illegal to date the Hokage's daughter until she's thirty, under penalty of death."

"Very funny, dad," Kaida said as she rolled her eyes.

"Funny, yeah..." Jiraiya laughed, as his eyes narrowed, sparkling with a dangerous glint.

"Hey, look at that, they're clearing the middle zone from tables and chairs," Tsunade pointed out.

"I guess it's time for the dance then," Jiraiya pointed out. Then, his face blanched as a realization dawned upon him. "Oh shit..."

Tsunade's face suddenly became sad. "We didn't have a dance in our wedding," she recalled, sounding melancholic.

"Oh god, here we go again," Jiraiya muttered to himself, before placing a hand on Tsunade's shoulder. "Well, like we just said, our wedding was pretty small, so there was no point it-"

"How the hell did we have a wedding without a dance!?" Tsunade asked, sounding far louder than she intended -but not caring at all-

"Well, it's all in the past and-"

"No! We have to make up for it! Come on, let's dance until our feet start to bleed!" Tsunade insisted, as she dragged Jiraiya to the dance floor. "Then I'll heal them, then we'll continue dancing until they bleed again!"

Jiraiya couldn't repress a groan. The same thing happened in Shizune and Shisui's wedding, and he knew that "dance until their feet bleed" wasn't an hyperbole.

"Uh, hime, this is Asuma and Kurenai's wedding. Shouldn't they start dancing first?" Jiraiya uncomfortably asked.

Fortunately, that question stopped her in her tracks. She huffed and crossed her arms. "Fine. But then we get to dance more than anybody!"

...

As Jiraiya had said, Asuma and Kurenai opened the dance, everybody else watching as they moved, holding each other in their respective arms. After a few minutes of solo dancing, other couples started to join as well.

"Let's dance slow. I don't want to accidentally step on you."

Hinata laughed in return, as she and Naruto danced. "Come on, Naruto-kun, you're not doing it that bad."

"If you say so," Naruto replied with a chuckle.

"Though we can go slow if you want to," Hinata said, bringing herself closer to Naruto, and slowing her movements. "Albeit..."

"Albeit?" Naruto repeated.

"I also want to dance slowly. So I can enjoy the moment the longest. Just the two of us, dancing like this. No missions, no Akatsuki, no friends dying... just the two of us..." Hinata said.

"Well, we can dance like this whenever you want," Naruto replied.

"No, we can't," Hinata replied.

"Huh?" Naruto dumbly asked.

"Well, technically we can, but it's not the same, you know? It's not the same dancing just because you want, than dancing to celebrate a special event like this one. Plus, it's not just us. All our friends are enjoying the moment too," Hinata pointed out. "Plus we'll have to go back to Taki and continue helping with the reparation efforts."

"Ugh, don't remind me," Naruto said, as he continued to dance. "Too bad you don't get to undo Akatsuki's destruction by punching them. Otherwise this would be fun."

"Come on, we're almost finished with that. It can't take more than a week to finish what's left," Hinata said in an encouraging clone.

"Besides, imagine how long we would have taken if you couldn't create so many clones."

"I think that's why I feel it's such a bother. With the clones' memories, it makes me feel as if I've been doing the job of a hundred people," Naruto said with a chuckle, which Hinata echoed.

As they continued to dance, they passed on another couple, Shino and Fu. The usually energetic girl had decided to dance slowly as well, something Shino would no doubt be thankful for. For the event, she had traded her usual scantily-clad appearance for an elegant red kimono with white floral patterns. The Kimono was loose enough that to hid her muscles, but it did little to hide her tall stature, especially compared to the much shorter Aburame. Some would say that they looked ridiculous, but those who knew them thought that they were adorable instead.

"Thank goodness we managed to save her," Naruto told Hinata. "A few seconds late..."

"But we did save her. Just like we did save Gaara. Try not to dwell on what could have been, It's not healthy," Hinata softly chastised.

"I know. But in both cases, we just barely did it. We need to be better prepared to face Akatsuki. We're bound to run out of luck sooner or later, and there are still four jinchuriki that need to be protected," Naruto insisted. "How's your Tenseigan training, by the way?"

"I'm progressing. Slowly but surely. I think I could go faster if I could be trained by somebody with a Tenseigan, rather than from old books and scrolls," Hinata told him.

"Not to put any pressure on you but... try a bit harder, okay?" Naruto said, trying not to sound imposing. "Look how much trouble Kakuzu and Hidan gave us, and I'm sure they aren't even among the better half of the Akatsuki. Not to mention the one with the Rinnegan."

"I know. I'll train even harder."

"Meanwhile, I'll see if I can get dad to train both me and Fu on using Tailed Beast chakra. That's the best weapon we have against an enemy of such power," Naruto stated.

"Naruto, shh," Hinata said, placing a finger on her lips. "You're getting carried away. Let's enjoy the moment, okay? There will be plenty of time for training and worrying about Akatsuki."

"Oh, right, sorry," Naruto stammered, as he and Hinata continued dancing.

"Now relax, and enjoy the moment," Hinata said, as she rested her head on his shoulder, before giggling. "And the company."

"Aw, the dance already started? I can't believe we missed it!" Ino's voice complained, as she and Rin entered the tent. "Where is Sai? There's no way I don't get to dance at a wedding."

"I think it's over there," Rin said, pointing to a corner of the tent.

"Ah, right! Thank you!" Ino said, as he headed towards the pale brunette, before turning at Rin one last time. "Oh, and keep in mind what we talked, alright?"

"I will, don't worry," Rin said, as she also went to find somebody to dance with.

"Huh. It seems that Ino and Rin became friends," Naruto noticed.

"Despite her somewhat blunt personality, Ino-san is a very outgoing and confident girl. Making new friends doesn't look like a challenge to her," Hinata pointed out.

"Hey, you have nothing to be jealous of. You also have lots of friends," Naruto pointed out.

"I know. I'm not the same super shy, stuttering girl from the Academy. But back then, I wish I could be as open as Ino-san was," Hinata said, before her eyes rested on Rin, trying to mingle with the crowd. "I think Rin has it worse than me, given the circumstances."

"I'm happy for Rin. Given what she went through, she needs a lot of friends to rely on," Naruto pointed out. "And together we will make her feel much better about her situation."

"Yes. Yes we will," Hinata agreed.

And the two of them, alongside the rest of the wedding guests, continued dancing and enjoying the night without any care.

...

Land of Lightning, Southern Border

At the same time the wedding reached its end, something else happened hundreds of kilometers to the north.

Standing over a stone hill, Obito Uchiha overlooked the scenery before him. A mostly rocky expanse, with a river crossing it, and patches of vegetation here and there, mostly near the river. There was a small town at the edge of river, and a Kumogakure outpost built at the base of a nearby mountain.

"I think this place will do," Obito said, as he removed one of his gloves, bit his thumb, and made five hand seals. "Wherever you're hiding, jinchuriki, this will surely force you to come out. Summoning Jutsu!"

And Obito slammed his hand into the ground.

Author's Note: So, Kurenai and Asuma finally married, yay!

Despite the lack of action, I liked this chapter, since it allowed me to focus on many characters that have been absent for quite some time, such as Kurenai herself (told you she would appear from time to time even if she is still pregnant) Team Asuma, Rin, or Sai. Speaking of the latter, I really enjoyed writing Sai much more than this around than in his previous appearances. Guess that he needed a good foil like Ino for his brand of insensitive comedy to work better.

Something I'm not proud of, however, is Sasuke and Sakura's relationship upgrade. I rewrote the scene quite a few times, and honestly, this was the best I could do. I'd like to blame Sasuke being a cold fish and not that good to work with romantic scenes, but then again, I did read quite a few fics in which Sasuke and Sakura's relationship is both interesting while keeping both characters truer to their core. Guess that, since SasuSaku is a couple that I'm mostly indifferent to, I simply didn't have the passion to give it more depth. Oh well, at least I took that out of my hair.

So, anyway, I hope you enjoyed this chapter full of comedy and fluff, because as the last scene shows, the heroes are for a wild ride. I think you all know what's going to happen in Kumo now.

Thanks a lot to grimlock987 for betareading this chapter.

The arc following Hidan and Kakuzu is the Itachi pursuit arc. But since neither Itachi is an Akatsuki nor Sasuke defected Konoha, what comes next is another original arc, but I'm confident that you guys will love it. In the meantime, don't forget to leave a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Cats and Foxes, Part I

Author's Note: I hope you all guys had a Merry Christmas. Enjoy the last chapter of 2018:

Chapter 66:

Cats and Foxes, Part I

or

Old Quarrels, New Disputes

...

It was a sunny morning in Konoha. Most people, both ninjas and civilians, were now flooding the streets as they headed towards their day jobs. Jiraiya, however, had been almost an hour in his office. Not working, mind you; working on his next novel. He used the clones for that.

Three days had passed since Kurenai and Asuma's wedding. The morning after the wedding, the newlywed couple left for their honeymoon to a resort in the Land of Hot Springs, the same one Jiraiya and Tsunade had gone for their own honeymoon many years ago. Going by Jiraiya's own experiences with the place, he knew Asuma and Kurenai would have a great time.

They weren't the only ones who left that morning. The Assault and Animal Squads, as well as Fu, returned to Takigakure to help finish the reconstruction efforts. According to the reports, they wouldn't take more than two weeks until they were done. Naruto had faith that nothing terrible would happen while he and his friends were away. And until that point, Jiraiya was sharing his adopted son's optimism.

Somebody knocked at the door.

"Oh come on, I wasn't supposed to have any meetings until ten!" Jiraiya groaned as he quickly hid the draft of his next novel. "Who's there?"

"It's me, Jiraiya. We have an urgent message from Kumo addressed to you," Jiraiya immediately recognized the voice of his sensei and predecessor.

That got Jiraiya's attention. Messages from Kumo were hardly good news. What would the Raikage want now? "Come in! Bring that message!"

Sarutobi entered the office and handed Jiraiya a scroll with Kumo's seal on it. Unfurling the scroll, the white haired Hokage read its contents, and the more he read, the more his face paled. He furled the scroll again and slammed it against the table.

"It is bad?" Hiruzen asked, with a bit of worry in his voice.

"ANBU!" Jiraiya yelled. Four ANBU wearing different animal masks suddenly appeared before him. "Bring Shizune's Medical Squad here, now!" he barked. "Bring me Rin Nohara as well!"

"Yes, Hokage-sama!" the ANBU said, aware of the urgency of the situation, vanishing in an instant.

"I take it is bad," the Hokage-turned-advisor concluded. "Let's hope it's not a repeat of the Hyuga Affair..."

"Not exactly the same, but it can be even worse," Jiraiya said, and to prove his point, he handed the message to Hiruzen.

After reading it, the former Hokage echoed his student's reaction. "This isn't bad... but catastrophic..."

Jiraiya slumped into his chair, and let out a tired sigh. "Of all the times for Naruto not to be in the village..."

...

A few minutes later, Shizune and her three students stood in front of the Hokage and Sarutobi. According to the ANBU, they were at their usual training spot, ready to begin their morning routine.

"Thank goodness they were in the village, or else it would have been a catastrophe," Jiraiya thought. Even if it would have preferred Naruto, the Medical Squad would work as well. Hell, it could work even better. "Good morning to you four. Sorry for calling you with such haste, but there's an emergency. Konoha has to undertake a mission that only you four can accomplish."

"What is it, Hokage-sama?" Shizune asked.

"You see, a few minutes ago we received a message from Kumogakure," Jiraiya said, as he handed the message to Shizune. As the young Jounin read it, Jiraiya continued talking. "The message says that a Kumo border outpost and a nearby village have been attacked and destroyed. The few survivors claim it was the Nine Tails who did it."

"What? That's stupid! The Nine Tails is sealed inside Naruto-niisan!" Karin protested. "And he doesn't know how to control his power to its fullest."

"And even if he was, Naruto has been in Takigakure for the past days! If that wasn't the case, Kakashi-sensei would have sent a message," Sakura added.

"What you said is true. However, we're contemplating another possibility. Sensei, why don't you tell them?" Jiraiya said, as both his and everybody else's eyes rested on the old man.

Hiruzen cleared his throat before speaking. "You see, I was there when Minato sealed the Nine Tails inside his son. I was unable to help, or even see it closer due to the barrier erected by Kushina prior to their deaths. Something I and a few others saw, and what most people don't know, is that Minato only sealed half the Kyuubi inside his son."

There was a collective gasp. Those present opened their mouths to ask questions, but Jiraiya raised a hand, and wordlessly ordered them to remain silent and let Hiruzen finish his tale.

"You see, I presume he did it because Naruto was a newborn baby, and he wouldn't be able to contain the whole fox himself. So using the Reaper Death Seal, he sealed half of the Nine Tails' chakra within himself, before sealing the other half within Naruto," Hiruzen said.

"But... if that's true, then the Nine Tails' other half should be within the Reaper's stomach, right? If I remember correctly, that's how that jutsu works, right?" Sasuke asked.

Both Jiraiya and Hiruzen nodded.

"Then there's no way the other half of the beast should have been able to escape the Reaper," Shizune said.

"Again, that's true. But remember that almost three years ago, when Orochimaru attacked Konoha, he used Impure World Resurrection to bring Minato back to life as an undead puppet," Hiruzen replied.

"Such thing wouldn't have been possible since his soul wouldn't be accessible. Yet he somehow managed to bypass that."

"And by doing so, he also rescued the other half of the Kyuubi's chakra, since it was bound to Minato's soul," Jiraiya continued.

"But you told me that you defeated the reanimated Minato, right?" Shizune asked.

"Yes. And by doing so, his soul returned to the afterlife, where it belongs," Jiraiya said.

"But... the Nine Tails, like every other Tailed Beast, it's immortal," Sakura said in realization. "And even if you manage to destroy one, they will simply be reborn again."

"Yes," Jiraiya confirmed.

"So, the Nine Tails' other half has been resurrected, and decided to attack the Land of Lightning?" Karin asked.

"Here's the thing. If it happened as you suggested, the ninjas in the border outpost would have seen the beast coming. But according to the few witnesses, the Nine Tails suddenly appeared out of nowhere, and attacked without warning," Jiraiya said.

"Which is exactly what happened when the Nine Tails attacked Konoha sixteen years ago," Hiruzen revealed. "This led us to believe that somebody had put the Nine Tails under their control and used it to destroy Konoha, which we later found was Obito Uchiha, believed to be dead back then."

"Wait, if Akatsuki got their hands on the Nine Tails, why did they use it to attack Kumo? Why don't they seal it with the others?" Shizune asked.

"We don't know. My guess is that they want to lure Naruto out into the open with it, so they can have both halves," Jiraiya said.

"If that was the case, why attack the Land of Lightning? Why not the Land of Fire?" Sakura asked.

"The Land of Lightning is hostile territory. We might not be at war, but we aren't friends nor allies either," Hiruzen pointed out.

"Clever bastards," Sasuke grumbled.

"Yes. We do suspect that this might a trap from either Akatsuki or Kumo -do not rule out such possibility- so Jiraiya and I decided not to recall Naruto for the time being," Hiruzen said.

"Still, given what we know, we can't afford to just hope it's a trap and that the Kyuubi's other half isn't roaming the world free. That's why I gathered your team. Sasuke, with your Mangekyou Sharingan, you'll be able to subdue the beast and put it under your control. Karin's Chakra Chains can be of help as well. Once you rendered it docile, Shizune will seal it. The best solution would be to bring the Fox to Konoha and seal it inside Naruto as well, but having a Tailed Beast released like that, even under Sasuke's mind control, would be too risky so you'll have to seal it immediately," Jiraiya explained, as his eyes rested on Karin.

The redhead was starting to feel uncomfortable. Not only Jiraiya, but Hiruzen also has his eyes fixed on her, looking at her with a mix of pity and fear. "Um... Hokage-sama? Sarutobi-sama? Why are you looking at me like that? You're not planning to-"

"Karin, the Nine Tails is a special kind of beast. Its chakra it's too intense, and the host needs to have a special kind of chakra powerful enough to contain it without letting the fox harm its host. So far, only the Uzumaki Clan fit those criteria," Hiruzen said, his eyes reflecting sadness. "Sorry, Karin, but we have no other options. You have to be the container of the other half of the Kyuubi."

Karin's legs suddenly felt very weak, threatening to make her fall, while her stomach churn.

"No... no..." she said, almost in a whisper.

"Listen Karin, I know I'm asking you a lot, but there is no other options. You're the best candidate to-" Jiraiya began.

"NO!" Karin shouted. "You... you can't make me do it! You can't! No, I won't do it!" The panic-stricken redhead said before she fled the office.

"I'll go talk to her," Sakura said, as she rushed after her teammate.

Jiraiya sighed again. "I knew this was going to be a massive headache..."

Then, an tiger masked ANBU appeared, followed by a certain brown haired teenage girl.

"Hokage-sama, here's Rin Nohara, as you requested," the ANBU stated.

...

Unlike Karin, Sakura wasn't a sensor, but after looking a bit around the tower, jumping from one roof to another, she quickly saw her red headed teammate slumped on a bench, looking miserable. Not without a good reason, Sakura was forced to admit. Rehearsing what she should say, the pinkette landed besides the Uzumaki girl.

"Karin! There you are," Sakura said.

"Leave me alone," Karin cried, not bothering to look at Sakura.

"Karin, listen-"

"No, shut up!" Karin snapped. "Don't even open your mouth! Do you have any idea of what the Hokage asked me to do!?"

Sakura bit her lip. Karin had all the right to be both angry and scared, so she had to choose her words carefully.

"Listen Karin, I can't even imagine what is it to be asked to do such a thing," Sakura decided not to pretend she could empathize with her plight. "But if Hokage-sama asked you to do this, it's because there's nobody else who can do it."

"Bullshit!" Karin angrily replied. "I know for a fact that Tsunade-sama has Uzumaki blood in her! Why didn't he asked her to be her vessel? Or one of their biological children? They're Chunin, just like I am!"

"You know it's not the same. Those children already have a target in their backs because of their blood limits. It would be unfair to make them carry an even bigger burden," Sakura replied, not needing to remind her friend of that rescue mission.

"You know, before arriving here, I spent all of my childhood running away from some unseen enemy," Karin began. She removed her glasses, and wiped the tears coming from her eyes. "Always alert if somebody looked at us funny. Never staying in the same place more than a week. Living on the road. And when we arrived at Konoha, I thought that I finally got away from that. Curse my Uzumaki blood! No matter where I go, it always ruins my life!"

Sakura bit her lip, and forced herself to remain silent. She spent the next few minutes wordlessly comforting the crying redhead by gently patting her back.

"I know you must feel scared but... look at Naruto," Sakura pointed out. "He's been a jinchuuriki all his life, and he turned out pretty good, don't you think so?"

"Y-Yes..." Karin forced herself to admit. She didn't realize that Sakura left out all the situations in which the Kyuubi made Naruto's life more difficult, either directly or indirectly, but Sakura was sure it would be for the better.

"And you have all of us to support you if such thing happens," Sakura said.

"If?" Karin repeated.

"You heard Hokage-sama. We don't know for sure if it's the other half of the Kyuubi. It may just be a farce of Kumo or Akatsuki in order to draw Naruto into hostile territory," Sakura confidently said.

"And what if you're wrong?" Karin asked.

"Like I just said, we will be there to help and support you whenever you need. And not just us, but I'm sure Neji, Naruto and the rest of your family will," Sakura stated. She then grabbed both of Karin's hands. "If you feel you can't do it, think in them, think in all the people you love, and love you. Think that you will do this to protect them to keep them safe, just like Naruto has been doing all his life."

Karin spend a few moments silent, slowly absorbing Sakura's words. After the pinkette released her hands, she put her glasses back on.

"What you said doesn't make me any less scared. Not at all," Karin began, then her face reflected an expression of determination. She closed her hand into a fist. "But you are right. It will be horribly irresponsible to leave half the Nine Tails like that. And if there's nobody else who can carry this burden... then I will."

Sakura smiled, and nodded. "That's the spirit! Come on, we need to go back to the Hokage Tower."

"No need for that," Shizune's voice said. Sakura and Karin turned around, and saw Shizune, Sasuke and much to their surprise, Rin Nohara walking towards them. "We already heard everything we need to know shortly before you left. Are you feeling better, Karin?"

"Not much," the redhead replied. "But I will do this if I have to."

"Don't worry, it's not near as bad as it may think. Look at Naruto," Shizune said, trying to ease the redhead with a smile. "And Hokage-sama plans to give you a huge compensation for this."

"I doubt any compensation can make up for me becoming a jinchuriki, but I'll make sure I enjoy it," Karin deadpanned.

"So, are you ready to go? Hokage-sama said that this mission was urgent and wanted us to leave immediately," Rin chimed in.

Sakura and Karin looked at their fellow medic-nin a bit confused.

"Hokage-sama assigned Rin as backup for this mission," Shizune explained, before Sakura or Karin had a chance to answer.

"No offense to Rin, but how is an additional medic going to help with out mission?" Sakura asked.

"I have special abilities that will be helpful in case we face the Nine Tails," Rin explained. "You'll see what I mean when the moment comes," the brown haired girl said enigmatically.

"Anyway, enough talking. As Hokage-sama said, this mission is an urgent one. I want you to meet me in the village's north gate in half an hour, understood?" Shizune asked.

"Yes ma'am!" the four other Konoha ninja obediently replied, before they went they scattered.

...

Less than an hour later, Shizune's Medical Squad was already on their way to the Land of Lightning. According to Jiraiya, they were set to meet a squad of Kumogakure that had been dispatched to investigate the incident as well. Said squad was expecting Naruto Uzumaki to be among them, so things would get tense when they saw that it wasn't be the case.

"So, what do you think? Did Obito really got control of that second half of the Nine Tails, or it's just a trick of Kumo? I'm partial to the latter," Sakura said, before the others had time to answer. "I did some research on Kumo, and the whole incident with Hinata wasn't the first time they tried to abduct one of our ninjas."

"Really? What did they try before?" Sasuke asked.

"They managed to kidnap Kushina Uzumaki, Naruto's mom," Sakura replied.

"Ah yes, Jiraiya-sama told us about that," Shizune stated.

"Everybody thought that there would be no way to get her back with the head start the kidnappers had, but Minato-sama managed to both track them and single handedly defeated the kidnappers. Many believe that that was the beginning of their romance."

"Indeed," Sakura nodded. "And as Naruto told us, his mother used to be the previous jinchuuriki before him, so it wouldn't be the first time they showed interest in the Nine Tails."

"It could also be because of her Uzumaki heritage," Rin piped in.

This got Karin's attention. "Uh, elaborate please?"

"Being an Uzumaki yourself, you know that your clan has some rather nifty perks, such as longevity, powerful chakra, and knack for fuinjutsu," Rin explained. "It's possible that besides the Kyubi, they also wanted Kushina-san to start their own branch of the Uzumaki Clan in Kumo."

Karin groaned in an exaggerated manner as she rolled her eyes. "Great, so if they find out I'm an Uzumaki, they'll want to get my hands on me. Great, just great. This mission keeps getting better," the redhead deadpanned.

"Listen, nobody's going to get kidnapped on my watch, got it?" Shizune energetically assured. "Our team is pretty powerful, so if they want to hurt one of us, we'll put them through a world of pain."

"If you said so..." Karin dejectedly replied, obviously unconvinced.

"You know, you should pray it's a trick from Kumo, given that the alternative is to fight an Akatsuki-controlled Kyuubi that we will need to seal inside you," Sasuke pointed out.

"Don't remind me," Karin groaned.

The Uchiha's expression then hardened as he continued talking. "I'm personally hoping for the latter option. Of the Akatsuki, Obito's the only one who can control the Tailed Beasts, meaning that he will be there. With how much powerful I've become over the past years, I'm ready to settle the score. He will pay for the Uchiha Insurrection and making me almost kill Naruto."

Rin's face turned contrite the moment Sasuke mentioned her former teammate. No matter how many times he heard all the evil deeds Obito had done, she was unable to reconcile them with the memory of the energetic, nice and clumsy boy she used to know.

"Guys, if we end up facing Obito..." Rin began, her voice quavering a little. "Do you think there's a chance we might be able to turn him back to our side?"

A deafening silence followed her question. A knot formed into the brown haired girls' stomach, made worse by the hateful glare Sasuke shot at her, before looking forward, and grunting.

"Sorry, I shouldn't have asked that..." Rin regretfully said.

"It's natural that you did. Obito was your teammate and friend, and you hate to see what he has become," Shizune replied, her tone being that of understanding. "However, Obito has committed multiple heinous crimes against Konoha and its inhabitants. We have proof that it was him the one responsible behind the Nine Tails' attack sixteen years ago that claimed the life of your sensei and his wife, as well as his participation on the Uchiha Insurrection and aiding Orochimaru in the invasion of Konoha.

"Even if Obito truly repented, his crimes are too grave for them to atone. Many criminals have been executed for much less than that. I know this is not what you wanted to hear, but the sooner you accept this, the sooner you'll be able to move on," Shizune explained.

"I... it's okay," Rin forced herself to admit. "Like I said, it was dumb of me to ask that. Obito might have brought me back to life, but he killed lots of other people as well."

"Are you sure you're ready for this?" Sakura asked. "There's a big chance that we might end up fighting him. If it's the case and you are not mentally prepared to face him again-"

"No, no! I'm fine! I can do this!" Rin insisted, as her eyes glinted with determination. "I need to do this!"

"Are you sure?" A skeptical Sasuke asked.

"Yes. When I came back, memories of my death stopped me from being a ninja. Then, I decided to face my fears and join the mission to Kirigakure, the very same village responsible of my demise. And after that... I felt I was able to leave that behind. If I'm to leave the old Obito behind, I need to face what he has become."

"That's very brave of you, Rin," Sakura praised.

"As lovable as your intentions are, you should be careful. He didn't try anything during these past years, but seeing you in the open away from the village, he might try to abduct you and lock you up out of his fear of losing you again," Shizune advised.

"Don't worry, I'm aware of that," Rin replied, nodding.

"If what you say it's true, maybe we could use that to our advantage," Sasuke suggested.

"Sasuke-kun! I don't know what are you thinking, but we aren't going to do something that puts Rin in danger!" Sakura angrily chastised her boyfriend.

"I didn't say anything about putting her in danger. But if his presence makes Obito lose focus..." the Uchiha replied. "Shouldn't we take advantage of that?"

"We'll see when the time comes," Shizune said, putting an end to the discussion. "Like Sakura said, we won't take any actions that endangers any of the members of this squad, got it?"

"Tch, whatever," Sasuke growled, as he continued his travel forward.

...

Moon, Toneri's Palace

"Your tea, Pain-sama, Konan-sama," a pale black haired child with creepy white eyes and an unreadable expression said as he placed the two cups on the small table between the two of them. The two Akatsuki were convinced that that kid wasn't human, or even alive to begin with. Though that wasn't relevant for them now.

Pain and Konan did their best to ignore the extremely luxurious and finely decorated living room they were now in. Having known nothing but the pain of war and misery, it was rather irksome to see firsthand the opulent lifestyle other people were lucky enough to have. Even then, they had to keep their grievances to themselves for the time being.

"So, Toneri Otsutsuki," Pain began, ignoring the tea brought to him. "While I can see that you have a lot to offer to our organization in terms of resources, I'd like to know better why are you interested in joining us."

"Your skepticism is reasonable, Pain-sama," Toneri said with a smile, taking a sip from his own cup of tea. "But the answer is simple. We both want a better world, one that reflects the true wishes of the Sage of the Six Paths. Isn't that enough?"

"In theory, it should be. But experience taught me that the jump from theory to practice isn't as clean as we always expect," Pain replied. "I'll be frank. Prior to Obito introducing you to us, we knew nothing about you. We didn't even know there were people living in the Moon."

"And I will be eternally grateful to Obito for keeping my people's existence a secret until the time was right," Toneri said, still smiling. "Though if you're still doubtful about my commitment and loyalty to your cause, feel free to test me as many times as you wish."

"You certainly have a helpful disposition. If it's genuine, that's it," Konan observed, as she drank from her cup of tea. "And trust me, a test will come in the future."

"Now, while I could ask Obito, I want to hear it from you first," Pain continued. "How did Obito know about you?"

"An understandable question to have," Toneri said with a nod. "But before I answer it, are you by any chance aware of a man named Madara? From the same clan as Obito, I think."

"Madara Uchiha. Yes. He was Obito's mentor. Though he no longer walks among the living," Konan answered. "It was thanks to him that Obito learned everything about the Sage of the Six Paths. And that Pain, as his reincarnation, inherited his eyes, and is the only one capable of bringing true peace to the world."

"In that case, that will save me some explaining to do. You see, Madara Uchiha came to our world many decades ago. I know this because my father told me, I wasn't born yet," Toneri pointed out. "Anyway, we never knew how Madara learned about our existence and our task, but he thought that, since we had a common goal, we should join forces. My then still living grandfather rejected his offer, since he didn't trust people from the Earth, even one that was a direct descendant of Hagoromo-sama.

"Even then, our family knew that this was an opportunity, and we made a deal with the Uchiha. If he could provide us with at least a pair of Main Family Otsutsuki Byakugan, he would consider his alliance offer," Toneri explained. "Of course, my family had no intention to ally with him. We knew about the Uchiha and how prone they are to war and violence, the very things we wanted to eradicate. But it was a golden chance to acquire a Tenseigan. Not that it mattered, since that was the last time we heard of him. Our spies on Earth told us that he died fighting his former friend Hashirama Senju."

"To my knowledge, there is no Otsutsuki Clan on Earth anymore," Pain noted.

"Not by that name, no. They're called Hyuga now," Toneri pointed out.

"Yet, when Obito came here with a pair of Byakugan, you agreed with the alliance," Pain guessed. "Why did you decide to honor the promise your ascendants didn't?"

"I have to admit, Obito's arguments left me defenseless, and I had no choice but to join forces with him. He proved to be a reliable benefactor, and an alliance with him and his organization was the most logical thing to do," Toneri explained.

"Even if it was Obito who brought you to us, Pain here is the leader of Akatsuki. Your loyalty should be to him and him alone," Konan interjected, as he glared at the white haired man.

"Of course, Konan-sama. Obito made sure to explain me in detail the hierarchy of Akatsuki," Toneri replied, and he looked at Pain in the eyes, and smiled. "I know exactly who I have to be loyal to."

"Good to hear that," Konan replied, but he didn't sound any more convinced.

"Besides, who should I follow other than the one who possess the eyes of the Sage of the Six Paths?" Toneri asked. "And I have Hamura-sama's eyes. And such as Hamura-sama was loyal to his brother, I will follow your guidance, Pain-sama. Together, with the combined power of our eyes, we will cleanse this world of evil and corruption and create a paradise of peace and justice."

"Indeed," Pain nodded. "However, even if I have his eyes, my current power is nothing but a fraction of the strength the Sage of the Six Paths possessed. That's why it's imperative to capture and gather all the Tailed Beasts as soon as possible. They're the fragments of my lost power."

"You can count on me for that, Pain-sama. While my eyes are still developing, once they mature, no jinchuriki will be able to stand before my might," Toneri assured. "But if such wait is unacceptable, I can hunt them whenever you command them. However, I should tell you that, in exchange of my power and vast resources, I have a request."

"A request," Pain repeated. "And what that would be?"

"There's a girl from Konoha, a Hyuga, who has the same eyes as I have. I want that girl," Toneri said. "I'm not asking you to capture her for me, but if by any chance you or your minions encounter her, please try not to kill her. I have no use for her dead."

"I won't promise anything. Akatsuki does not show mercy to those who oppose us. But I will keep your words in mind," Pain said.

"Still, if you worry so much about her, you should try to take her on your own," Konan interceded. "That's it, as long as we don't assign you any task to carry out."

"I would never think to do such a thing, Konan-sama," Toneri said, smiling at her.

Konan didn't smile back.

...

Land of Lightning, a week later

After a week of traveling and crossing both the Land of Hot Springs and the Land of Frost, the Medical Squad finally arrived at the Land of Lightning's southern and only border. It didn't take long to see both the ruins of what it used to be a rural village, and the remnants of a destroyed outpost.

"Alright, here we are," Shizune said, as the five of them set foot on potentially hostile territory. "Karin?"

The redhead nodded, closed her eyes and made a hand seal. "No one around save for four people in the destroyed outpost. All four of them ninjas with powerful chakra. One being specially strong even among them."

"That must be Kumo's group. Okay, let's get this over with," Shizune said, as she rushed towards the outpost, the other five Konoha ninja following behind her.

It seemed that the kumo ninjas had either seen or sensed them coming, given that they left the outpost and went to meet the Konoha ninjas in the open. They stopped once they were a few meters apart. All of them took some moments to study the four Kumo ninjas in front of them.

The one everybody guessed was the leader was a fairly tall man with dark skin and shaggy blond hair that covered one of his eyes. He was carrying a large sword on his back. Shizune recognized this man as Darui, one of Kumo's strongest ninjas.

Next to him was a white skinned blonde woman with her hair tied on a ponytail. Unlike her partners, she wasn't wearing the typical Kumogakure uniform, but a black and purple short sleeved shirt and black pants. Again, Shizune was able to identify this woman as Yugito Nii, the jinchuriki of the Two Tails.

"Fake or not, the situation must be dire if the Raikage dispatched two of his heavyweights," Shizune thought. "If a fight breaks out, this two might become a problem."

Shizune didn't know who were the other two. Another white skinned woman with blond hair, a stoic and calm appearance, and a comically large bust -Shizune couldn't tell if Tsunade's was bigger or not-, and a younger man, also white and blond, sporting a confident smirk.

"Welcome, Konoha ninjas," Darui greeted them in a polite tone. "My name's Darui. This one's Yugito Nii, and those two are Samui and Atsui."

"Greetings. My name is Shizune Uchiha. These are Sasuke Uchiha, Sakura Haruno, Karin Uzumaki and Rin Nohara," Shizune said, introducing her team in return.

"You took your sweet time to arrive," Yugito pointed out.

"We came as fast as we could. Konoha isn't exactly close to the Land of Lightning," Sasuke snapped.

"We requested the jinchuriki of the Nine Tails to be among you, yet I don't see him," Darui pointed out in a mildly accusatory manner. "Do you care to explain why?"

"Do you really think we're going to bring our jinchuriki, who's also the Hokage's son, to a country that's not an ally of our village?" Shizune replied with a question of her own.

"Then how can we discern if Konoha was behind this attack?" Yugito said, before waving at the destroyed village with her hand. "That village used to house two thousand people. Less than a hundred survived. All of them claim it was the Nine Tails who did it. And as far as we know, the jinchuriki of the Nine Tails is a Konoha ninja."

"We can assure you that, by the time you said the attack happened, Naruto was away on a mission," Sakura interceded. "In Takigakure, to be precise. You can ask them if you don't believe us. Hundreds of both Konoha and Taki ninja can confirm his alibi."

"We will, but that might not be enough for Raikage-sama," Darui pointed out. "Sorry for being this insistent, but a Tailed Beast attack is something that can't be taken lightly."

"Can we go to the attacked town? That way we'll be able to see the extent of the attack, and determine if it was the Nine Tails or not," Shizune pointed out.

"We already inspected the village, hot stuff," Atsui interceded. "And we reached the conclusion that yes, it was a goddamn Tailed Beast the one who did it."

"A second opinion won't hurt," Sakura pointed out.

Darui sighed as he shook his head. "Okay then, whatever. It's not like we're making any progress here. So drab," the dark skinned man complained, as he extended a hand towards the village, motioning the Konoha ninjas to go.

They nodded, and the two groups headed to the ruined village. Upon entering, Shizune had a flashback of the time she and Tsunade returned to Konoha after the Nine Tails attack. And while the destruction and death caused by the beast have been horrifying, they arrived two weeks after the attack, and much of the damage was in the process of being repaired.

It wasn't the case with this village. This is how Konoha could have ended that day if it wasn't for the Fourth Hokage. And much to her discomfort, the level of destruction was similar to that of Konoha after that fateful day.

"What are we doing here?" Samui asked, interrupting the Konoha ninja inspecting the ruined village. She crossed her arms over her rather large chest. "We do know for a fact it was the Nine Tails who did it. Can you please stop this charade already?"

"Hey, should we remind you that Kumo doesn't have the cleanest record when it comes to Konoha!" Karin snapped. "We still remember the time you kidnapped Hinata Hyuga, and Kushina Uzumaki several decades before."

Shizune, Sakura and Rin cringed upon hearing the blunt way Karin threw Kumo's dirty laundry back at them. Things were getting ugly, and fast.

Darui sighed, and took a step forward. "Listen, sorry if we're putting you in a tight spot, but this needs to be done. As you can see, somebody destroyed a village of the Land of Lightning and an outpost of Kumo. All witnesses say it was the Nine Tails. We just want justice for our victims."

"Yes, and the Nine Tails' jinchuriki is a Konoha ninja," Atsui pointed out. "Unless there's a second Nine Tails running around."

"Actually, there is," Sasuke bluntly stated.

"... say what?" Atsui asked.

"A second Nine Tails. Yeah. Do you think we were born yesterday?" Yugito asked, sounding upset. "The power of the Tailed Beasts is something that can't be replicated. Much less the most powerful of them."

"No, but their power can be split," Shizune pointed out. "The jutsu to do it is a forbidden one but-"

"Shizune-sensei!" Karin called, sounding panicky. Before Shizune or her other teammates could ask what happened, she continued. "Obito Uchiha is here!"

Sasuke's eyes grew wide open, as his hand instinctively gripped the pommel of his katana. "Are you sure?"

"Yes! I'd never forget a chakra like his!" Karin insisted. "And he isn't alone! He brought somebody else with him! Somebody whose chakra level is downright absurd!"

"Hey, cool off over there!" Samui interrupted. "What are you talking about?"

"Akatsuki," was Shizune's only reply, which was enough to make the four Kumo ninjas to tense up.

"And she's right," a new male voice said from above. Everybody turned around from direction of the voice, and saw Obito Uchiha, standing over the roof of a half collapsed building.

"This was a trap from the very beginning!" Darui said in realization, as his visible eye moved towards Yugito.

"Exactly. I was hoping that Naruto would be here as well, but I guess I'll have to settle for just one," Obito said, fixing his eyes on Yugito as well, before they moved towards Rin, and smiled. "Though it's very helpful of you Konoha bringing Rin back to me."

"Obito..."the distraught brunette said in a whisper.

"Rin isn't your property, you sick fuck!" Karin yelled.

"Listen, Obito is a Konoha missing-nin, so we'll take care of him," Shizune told the Kumo ninjas. "Yugito is his target. Take her somewhere safe while we keep him busy."

Darui nodded, as he motioned his comrades to move out. However, shortly after they started to run, they were cut by a massive torrent of water bursting from underground. A lone figure emerged from the water, a blue skinned man in Akatsuki regalia, holding a large sword.

"Now, now, you aren't planning to leave so soon, right?" Kisame said, giving the Kumo ninjas a menacing grin. "Not before you play a little with me, that's it."

Darui, Samui and Atsui unsheathed their swords. Yugito merely adopted a fighting stance.

"So, that was Akatsuki's plan. They didn't just want to lure out Naruto, but one of Kumo's jinchuriki as well," Shizune thought in realization. "Still, the odds aren't too bad. Obito and Kisame are powerful, but we do have power on our side as well, not to mention advantage in numbers and a copious amount of medic-nin. "

"Watch out for Kisame! Don't use ninjutsu against him, his sword can absorb it!" Shizune warned the Kumo ninjas. "We'll take care of Obito! We fought against him before, and know all of his tricks!"

"Thanks for the tip, hot stuff," Atsui said, taking a step forward. "You know, I always wanted to go against one of the Seven Swordsmen of the Mist. We will prove today that Kumo ninjas are the better sword fighters!"

Kisame chuckled, and rested Samehada on his shoulder. "Aren't you biting way more than you can chew, brat? But I accept your challenge. Come here, and see if you can prove your point."

Samui placed a firm hand on Atsui's shoulder. "Cool down, Atsui, he's right. Kisame Hoshigaki is one of the deadliest swordsmen alive. Only by working together we'll be able to take him down."

"Way to ruin my fun, sis. But whatever," the younger Kumo ninja said with a sigh.

"Don't do anything rash. Let's follow Darui-san's lead," Samui suggested.

"Alright, I'll take Kisame head on. You two stay back and protect Yugito. Feel free to assist me if I'm overwhelmed, but keeping Yugito safe is the top priority."

"Yes sir!" both siblings said at once.

"Wait a minute, I can fight you know! I'm no damsel in distress!" Yugito protested.

"Nobody says that you are, Yugito. Sorry, but Akatsuki is targeting you specifically, and it's our job to make theirs as hard as possible," Darui stated.

Meanwhile, the Konoha ninjas were doing similar plans to take down Obito.

"That bastard is mine, so don't get in the way," Sasuke said as he unsheathed his shoto. "Sakura, your combat specialty is melee, so you would be better against Kisame."

"Against Kisame?" Sakura repeated, her voice quivering a bit, as she eyed the scary looking blue swordsman. "Are you sure, Sasuke-kun?"

"I know you can do it. Plus you won't be fighting alone. While I don't trust them that much, I doubt those Kumo guys will turn on us on a situation like this," Sasuke told his girlfriend.

Sakura gathered all the courage she could muster, and nodded. "Alright then, I'll face Kisame. Stay safe!"

"Same goes for you, Sakura," Rin replied.

Obito smirked, as he drew out his own katana. "So, shall we begin?"

Sasuke replied to Obito's taunt by leaping at him at the same time he delivered an horizontal slash to the Akatsuki's throat, which unfortunately, phased through him. Just after Sasuke phased through Obito, he kicked the young Uchiha in the back.

"Poison Mist!"

While Sasuke attacked, Shizune followed him and leaped above the rogue Uchiha. Her cheeks puffed, before releasing a cloud of the familiar purple gas engulfed him. Sasuke, meanwhile, made several hand seals.

"Fire Release: Great Fireball Jutsu!"

Sasuke exhaled a massive fireball towards the cloud of poisonous gas, igniting it, resulting in a fiery explosion that destroyed the half collapsed building completely.

"He teleported away!" Shizune warned. Even if it was just a guess, it was a probable one. "There's no way he let that combination touch him. Stay alert!"

"Karin!" Sasuke called.

"On it!" the redhead nodded, as she closed her eyes and made a hand seal. She focused on finding Obito's chakra, which was nowhere to be seen, figuratively speaking. After a few seconds, it appeared. However, Karin paled upon realizing where Obito planned to show up. "Oh shit-"

"Karin, down!" Sasuke shouted.

Karin threw herself at the ground on instinct, as she barely avoided Obito's thrust from behind. She heard the whirring noise of a few shuriken flying above her, coming from the opposite direction. However, the steel stars failed to touch the Akatsuki. She got up, and quickly rushed back to her teammates.

"Give up. You can't defeat me," Obito said, spread his arms in a taunting manner.

"Did you forget your fight against Tsunade-sama and myself during the Uchiha Insurrection?" Shizune snapped back.

"You don't have any Sannin backing you up this time. Plus I was careless and made plenty of rookie mistakes. Mistakes I'm not planning to repeat here," Obito said, as he scowled. "This operation is to important for-"

"Amaterasu!"

For a split second, Obito was engulfed by a blaze of black flames, before they were sucked by a spiraling vortex.

Sasuke shivered from reliving the time he thought he had killed Naruto. He cursed upon seeing that he made himself relive such traumatic memory for nothing.

"See? That's what I meant. You guys got me monologuing, and got wide open. Thank goodness my reflexes are much better than they used to be," Obito said, smirking. Then he looked at Sasuke, and his smirk widened. "Trouble using the Mangekyo Sharingan, Sasuke? Still having flashbacks to the moment you awakened it?"

"Still? What do you mean, 'still'?" Sasuke angrily asked. "Is there a way to overcome it?"

"You don't know?" Obito said, before rearing his head back, and let out a mocking laughter. "Your brother or cousin didn't tell you it's possible? Of course they wouldn't. They wouldn't tell you something out of fear of 'corrupting' you."

"How it is? Tell me!" Sasuke demanded.

"You expect your enemy to help you? Really?" Obito asked, arching an eyebrow. Then, he smirked. "Oh well, I'll tell you because your reaction will be priceless. The key to stop the Mangekyo Sharingan from making you relieve the moment it was activated is to stop fighting it, and accept it."

"... what?" a dumbfounded Sasuke asked.

"It's exactly like I say. I remember reliving Rin's death every time I used my power. Which was a lot of time, because as you can see it's so useful. But it took such a toll on my sanity. It was then, when I realized the truth. Painful as it was, Rin needed to die," Obito stated in an odd solemn tone.

"What?" Rin asked in disbelief. "If my death was necessary, then why you went through the trouble of reviving me?"

"I said your death was necessary, not you had to remain dead," the Akatsuki punctualized. "When I saw you jumping in the way of Kakashi's Chidori, my eyes were opened. I realized the cruelty of the world we live in. How bad things happen to good people like you and me. And how in order to change the world, drastic measures are to be taken. Only when I accepted those facts and stopped feeling regret for not being able to save her did the flashbacks cease.

"That's exactly what you have to do, Sasuke. You're afraid that next time Naruto, or somebody else, a friend, a loved one, might die for real. You need to detach yourself from those feelings, accept the power you now possess."

"And become a psychopath like you? No thank you!" Sasuke replied. "There has to be another way to stop the flashbacks. And if there isn't one... I will live with it then!"

"You say that now, but after circumstances force you to rely on the Mangekyo more and more, you'll make anything in order to make the nightmares stop," Obito said with a cruel smirk. "I knew that you weren't going to follow my advice, that's why I decided to share it with you. But ask yourself this, why do you think people said our clan is cursed by hatred? This is why. No power comes without cost. At least, not for the Uchiha."

After that last monologue, Obito resumed the fight against the Konoha ninjas. At the same time that fight happened, Sakura rushed towards Darui, engaged in a sword fighting duel with Kisame, at the top of a mass of water the Akatsuki had generated earlier, while Samui and Atsui stood protectively at Yugito's flanks. Sakura pulled out a sealing scroll, unfurled it, and unsealed some of its contents: a pair of brass knuckles made of chakra conducting metal, with fuinjutsu seals carved into it. Sakura immediately grabbed both weapons, and channeled chakra through them. Two huge fists made of pure chakra appeared around them.

"Alright, it's punching time!" Sakura said, as she leaped at Kisame from the side.

However, even if he wasn't a sensor, thanks to his vast experience, Kisame's battle sense was sharp enough to notice when an enemy was about to ambush him. He quickly disengaged Darui and jumped backwards a second before Sakura's fist could touch him.

"SHANNARO!"

Even if she hit thin air, her punch carried so much force, it projected a shockwave that completely blasted a half destroyed house into tiny pebbles.

"Damn, failed by this much," Sakura complained, before she looked at the surprised Darui. "Sorry for coming uninvited, but I thought you might appreciate the help."

"I certainly do, but I thought that you'd prefer to help your comrades," the dark skinned man assumed.

"My fighting style focuses mostly on punches, which makes me better suited to deal with an opponent that can absorb ninjutsu," Sakura pointed out.

"Hard to argue with that logic. Shall we continue?" Darui said, smiling a little.

"It will be a pleasure," Sakura said, as she directed her eyes towards Kisame, and smirked. Two fists of chakra appeared around her real ones, and dashed again.

"You think that just because you're a melee specialist you're suited to fight against me? Your overconfidence is insulting!" Kisame said, as he dashed forward to meet Sakura, with Samehada ready to strike.

As the Akatsuki and Konoha kunoichi met in the middle, Kisame delivered a diagonal blow. However, much to his surprise, Sakura aborted her attack, and fell on her knees, sliding through the watery surface past Kisame, and avoiding Samehada swing.

"What!?" the Akatsuki shouted.

"You're wide open! Sorry pal, but this is your end!" Darui said, as he was leaping towards the indeed wide open Kisame, his cleaver crackling with electricity.

However, from the water, a clone of Kisame formed just in time to stop the Kumo ninja's blow. The clone was sturdy enough to resist the attack.

"As long as I have water, I'm never wide open," Kisame boasted, before making a hand seal. Three more clones emerged from the water. "Make sure the jinchuriki doesn't use the fray of the battle as a cover to escape!"

The three clones nodded, jumped from the water, and landed at different points surrounding the three other Kumo ninjas.

"Goddammit, why didn't we think about escaping before?" Atsui said in frustration.

"And leave Darui here on his own?" Yugito pointed out. "Come on, what are we doing? If we fight all of us together, we can defeat these guys!"

"Cool down, Yugito. Darui ordered us not to interfere until he was in trouble. And so far, he and the Konoha kunoichi are doing pretty good," Samui pointed out.

Meanwhile, the rest of the Konoha ninjas continued battling Obito. The rogue Akatsuki's hands flew through hand seals as a spiraling vortex formed around his right eye.

"Fire Release: Blast Wave Wild Dance!"

Obito released a stream of fire that the vortex shaped in the form of a spiral, expanding outwards wide enough to engulf all the Konoha ninja. Rin, however, took a step forward and formed several hand seals of her own in order to counter that attack.

"Water Release: Water Wall!"

Rin's cheeks puffed, before expelling a large amount of water, forming a torrent that put out the incoming flames, generating some clouds of smoke when the two elemental attacks clashed.

"You truly grew strong Rin. Your water jutsu never had such a scale," Obito said in amazement.

Sasuke appeared behind Obito, no doubt after using the body flicker, and delivered an horizontal slash to his back. Much to his frustration, the blade once again failed to hit him.

"You never learn, don't you-AARH!" Obito hissed, as he instinctively clutched his midsection.

"Wait, did I hurt him?" Sasuke wondered, before something his Sharingan had noticed sunk in. "I swear I saw a flicker of black flames there..."

Obito turned around, counter attacking with his own katana as well. The two Uchihis engaged in a short duel of sword fighting, until another vortex formed around Obito's right Sharingan.

"Take this! Burn and disappear!"

Much to his shock, the vortex expelled in a stream the very same Amaterasu flames that he had absorbed before. Sasuke jumped around, dodging the deadly stream of fire, until Obito had no more. After that, Sasuke rejoined his teammates.

"I was right, it was Amaterasu," Sasuke deduced. "When he used his intangibility, the Amaterasu he had absorbed hurt him. Which means that his ability to turn intangible and store and release objects through vortex might be linked... hell, they might be one and the same. His teleportation as well. But in order to so, I need to do one last test..."

As Sasuke mused about his new findings, Obito prepared to counterattack.

"Wood Release: Nativity of a World of Trees!"

The ground below them started to rumble, as multiple green wooden vines emerged around Obito, and launched themselves at the Konoha ninjas. Rin and Karin prepared to repel the attack, the two of them weaving the same sequence of hand seals.

"Earth Release: Crushing Avalanche!"

Multiple rocks of varying sizes -albeit the ones summoned by Rin were bigger- appeared above the incoming vines, before falling down and crushing most of them, as the name of the jutsu implied. Even if they didn't stop the attack, they were able to slow it down considerably. And Shizune was going to take advantage of such opportunity.

"Corrosive Cloud!"

The leader of the Medical Squad released another cloud of poisonous purple gas from her mouth, this one having a darker shade than the attack she used before. The moment the gas entered in contact with the vines, the latter started to wither and crumble in a matter of seconds, much to Obito's surprise and anger.

"Do you like my new poison? I prepared it specifically for you. No amount of regeneration will save you from it," Shizune taunted.

"I see you didn't spend these past years lazing around. But for your poison to work you still have to hit me with it. And tricking me with a clone won't work this time, I can assure you that," Obito replied, unable to hide his anger.

The cloud of corrosive gas ate through the vines as it advanced. Seeing no other option, Obito teleported away.

"His chakra signature disappeared!" Karin warned the others.

"Okay. Stay alert and warn us when he shows up again," Shizune told Karin.

"I think I know how his power work, and how we can bypass his intangibility," Sasuke said, taking advantage of Obito's temporary absence so he couldn't hear his plans.

"Really? That's great!" Karin beamed.

"We used to think that his intangibility, store and release objects from a pocket dimension and teleporting were different abilities, but they might be just one. We can take that to our advantage. However, in order to do so, I need Rin to do something," Sasuke said, looking at the brown haired medic-nin. "I need you to let Obito capture you with his ability."

"WHAT!?" Rin replied in shock.

"That's NOT great!" Karin protested.

"Sasuke-kun! What did we say about putting Rin in danger!?" Shizune scolded him.

"I know, but no one here can do it. I know I'm asking a lot, but I need you to trust me on this. If this works, we will deprive Obito of one of his biggest advantages," Sasuke argued.

"And if it doesn't work?" Rin asked.

"I don't know. But it's possible that we won't be able to get you back," Sasuke bluntly stated. "I'm not going to force you. The decision is yours."

"Obito is back! There!" Karin pointed to the opposite direction Obito was standing, and indeed, a vortex was starting to form.

"Time's up. Like I said, your choice," Sasuke said, as he adopted a fighting stance.

It seems that Rin made up her mind, as she drew out two kunai, and charged at Obito, letting out a high pitched yell.

"Come on Obito, leave them alone! This is between you and me!" Rin shouted, as she prepared to attack.

Rin leaped at him, ready to slash the rogue Uchiha. Obito didn't make any attempt to defend himself, and used his intangibility to make Rin phase through him. Fast as lightning, he turned around and grabbed Rin by one of her wrists.

"Don't worry, I'll send you somewhere safe," Obito said, as a vortex appeared around his right eye, absorbing Rin.

"NOOOOOOoooooooo... !" Rin yelled as she was sucked into another dimension.

Obito turned at the rest of the Konoha ninjas, and smirked. "Like I said before, thank you so much for bringing Rin back to me. Now I can finally fight without distraction."

"Attack from range, or we might end up like Rin!" Sasuke said, as he pulled out a rather large Fuma Shuriken and tossed it at Obito.
"Karin!"

The redhead nodded, and made several hand seals. "Shadow Clone Shuriken Jutsu!"

Multiple Fuma Shuriken appeared along the original, flying towards Obito, who once again made no effort to dodge, and let the giant steel stars phase through him. He was about to taunt them once again, but suddenly, he felt the pain of sharp metal stabbing into his flesh. A trickle of blood came from his mouth, as he instinctively clutched his stomach.

"WHAT?" a bewildered Obito screamed, before he felt another stab.
"AAARGH!"

"It worked, we hurt him!" Karin cheered, pumping her fists.

"We didn't hurt him," Sasuke said, smirking at Obito. "Rin did."

"Rin? No it can..." Obito replied, as he vanished into his own spiraling vortex.

...

Obito's Pocket Dimension

Turns out, Sasuke was right. Obito didn't so much turn intangible, but somehow could phase parts of his body to another dimension. And as Sasuke expected, said parts were vulnerable in the other side. The moment Rin saw most of Obito's body appear before her, she drew out a kunai and stabbed it into his chest, then a second one for good measure, before he returned his body back to the real world.

A vortex appeared before her, meaning that Obito, the whole Obito was coming. She drew another kunai, and breathed out, trying to calm down. She only had one chance to carry out what she wanted to do, and no room for mistake.

"Rin! Are you-"

The moment her former teammate appeared, Rin tossed the kunai at him, aiming for his face. Obito managed to catch it thanks to his reflexes befitting an Uchiha. Just like Rin expected.

"I see that you have no-"

Once again, the Akatsuki was interrupted, this time by the kunai transforming into another Rin, with another kunai in her left hand. As fast as she could, Rin stabbed the kunai into the edge of Obito's right eye, while using her right hand to pluck said eye from its socket. Obito let out a deafening scream as both he and Rin were sucked back into reality.

...

Shizune, Sasuke and Karin saw Obito and Rin appearing once again, falling into ground, with Obito screaming as he held his bloodied empty eye socket, and Rin carefully held something in her hand.

"Rin!" Shizune said, as she rushed towards her. "Are you okay?"

"Yeah. A bit shaken, but okay," Rin replied. She then smiled at Shizune. "Tell your husband I got his missing eye back."

Shizune's eyes widened as Rin opened her hand, and saw a bloodied Sharingan on it. Wasting no time, Tsunade's first apprentice took the eye and quickly sealed it inside a scroll, which she hid under the folds of her kimono. She smiled back at Rin.

"Thank you, Rin. I'm sure Shisui will be very happy," a smiling Shizune told her.

"I could have gotten the other eye, but I think that depriving him of his ability to mind control people was better than the intangibility and teleportation," Rin replied, justifying the unsaid question.

"It's okay Rin. You did the right choice. Besides, had you gouged the other eye, you would have had no means to return," Sasuke reassured her. He then turned back at Obito, who was fuming. "But I think you made him quite mad."

And indeed, Obito was staring at the Konoha ninja, more specifically Rin, with a hateful frown and his teeth clenched in an angry snarl.

"I can't believe your betrayal, Rin. I brought you back to life! Is this your way of thanking me!?" Obito angrily asked.

"You were the one who betrayed me first, by turning on our village and murdering sensei!" Rin shouted back.

"Very well then, no more holding back," Obito took a drop of blood from his empty eye socket, and made several five seals. "If this is how things are going to be, then you and your new friends can die the same way sensei did! Summoning Jutsu!"

Obito slammed his hand into the ground, producing an explosion of smoke. However, the burst of smoke was much more powerful than with most summons, creating a cloud big enough to cover most of the village, with gale force winds blowing in every direction.

The smoke quickly dispelled, revealing the creature Obito had summoned: a giant fox with dark red fur, and nine tails. All the Konoha ninja could do was stare in awe and terror at the other half of the beast that once almost destroyed Konoha a decade and a half ago.

Author's Note: After so many chapters since his introduction, the other half of the Nine Tails finally makes his proper debut! Yeah, our heroes are pretty much screwed. Or not, given that they have Yugito on their side, but will the Two Tails be enough to tip the balance in their favor?

Also, sorry if some of you are a bit disappointed that Naruto and his team are absent and the focus is on Sasuke and his team instead, but I think that Naruto and Hinata needed a rest, and some other characters could get some spotlight for a change. Besides, this arc has more emotional impact with Sasuke rather than Naruto.

Also, even if she appeared here and there, Rin finally gets some action after the Kirigakure Invasion! Again, did I mention how much I like writing her? Because man, she was a character with so much potential, it was so sad that she only existed to die in order to make Obito a villain and give Kakashi even more things to angst about.

Even if it isn't part of the current plot, I also enjoyed a lot writing the scene between Pain, Konan and Toneri. Mostly because I love writing for Pain and I can't wait to write him in action scenes. Keep that conversation in mind, because what they discussed there (especially what Toneri said) will be very important for future arcs. Oh, and before you ask, no, Pain isn't aware that Toneri is mind controlled, if that wasn't obvious enough.

Thanks to grimlock987 for betareading this chapter. Speaking of which, he won't be able to betaread anymore, so once again I have to ask for somebody else to become my betareader.

So, that's all. See you in 2019, and I hope you have a Happy New Year! Remember: there's no better New Year's gift you can make me than a leaving a review on this story! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Cats and Foxes, Part II

Author's Note: So here we are, folks, first chapter of 2019. With this chapter, we also break the 600K words milestone, wohoo! Hope you guys enjoy it:

Chapter 67:

Cats and Foxes, Part II

or

And Sharks and Panthers too

"Fire Release: Mouse Hairball!"

Yugito expelled several blue fireballs from her mouth, which quickly took the shape of fiery mice, as they flew towards one of the Kisame clones surrounding her and her partners. The Kisame clone merely smirked, and swung his Samehada in order to block all the incoming projectiles, resulting in a series of explosions. But when the smoke receded, the Kisame clone was any worse for the wear.

"The hell? You're a clone, your sword isn't supposed to work just as good as the original!" Yugito snarled.

"I wouldn't be a very good clone if that was the case, don't you think so?" the Kisame clone replied with a taunting smirk, before he dashed to strike the jinchuriki.

"Okay then, if I can't use ninjutsu directly against this guy, I'll use it in a more indirect manner!" Yugito thought, dashing forward as well, making several hand seals.

Jinchuriki and Akatsuki met in the middle, with Kisame pretending to deliver a swing, before placing the sword between himself and Yugito as if it was a shield, just when the jinchuriki was ready to attack.

"Fire Release: Great Dragon Fire!"

"Do you think you can catch me off guard with such an amateurish trick? Disappointing," Kisame said, fixing a stare of contempt on the Kumo kunoichi.

However, much to his surprise, the stream of fire coming from Yugito's mouth wasn't aimed at him, but at the ground, propelling herself into the air. Spinning her body, she placed herself just above Kisame, before letting gravity pull her down. She extended her arms downwards as her fingernails elongated into claws.

However, Kisame was quick to react to the strategy, and managed to parry the blow coming from above. He smirked at the jinchuriki, her claws now stuck inside Samehada.

"This is way to eas-"

But the clone was silenced by another Yugito, who impaled him from the front with her elongated claws. The effect of the blow was instant, and the clone dissolved into a puddle of water.

"Fire Clones. They never expect them," Yugito said, shaking her head, before she noticed Samui and Atsui still struggling against the other two clones.

"I think we should help those two," the clone pointed out.

"You took the words from my mouth," the original replied as she and the clone dashed towards Samui and Atsui.

The Kisame clones didn't realize that Yugito and her clone were going towards them, and saw too late the cross slash aiming at them. The eviscerated Akatsuki clones dissolved in yet another two puddles of water.

"Thank you, Yugito," Samui told her teammate. "These were way more powerful than the average clone."

"Yeah, I don't know how Darui-sama and that Konoha girl are holding so well against the original," Atsui added.

"Because they aren't his target, and isn't fighting at full power. But when he does, they will be in trouble. Come on, we need to help them," Yugito insisted.

"But Darui-sama said-" Atsui tried to protest.

"I KNOW what Darui said, dammit!" Yugito snapped. "But we need to help him before-"

"SUMMONING JUTSU!"

Yugito froze, as a sense of overwhelming dread washed over her body. She could feel the Tailed Beast inside her shaking with a swirl of emotions. Turning around, she saw a massive cloud of smoke forming where the Konoha ninja were fighting that other Akatsuki, followed by a powerful wind that threatened to blow her away.

And then, the smoke cleared, and he appeared.

Time seemed to stand still as every Konoha and Kumo ninja stared at the giant nine tailed fox that had appeared in the ruined village. Their looks were either of terror, bewilderment, or shock. Or all three, in Atsui's case.

"The Nine Tails..." Samui said in awe.

"Guess that solves one mystery," Yugito dryly remarked, as she started to walk towards the beast. "Turn out those Konoha brats weren't lying when they said that there was a second Nine Tails running around."

"H-Hey! Where are you going?" Atsui told his partner.

"Where do you think, dumbass? I'm the only one who can deal with that monster," as Yugito said this, orange chakra started to burst around her body, forming an aura around it. "Now I want you to stay away from us. I can't fight and take care of you two, and I'd never forgive myself if you two got killed because of me."

"You can count on us, Yugito," Samui replied.

The Two Tails jinchuriki nodded in return, as she rushed towards the other Tailed Beast.

Speaking of said Tailed Beast, Obito was standing on its head, smirking down at the Konoha ninjas below him. The girls looked terrified, while Sasuke was shooting him an angry glare, as he gripped the pommel of his katana.

"Honestly, I have absolutely no idea how this is possible, since last time I checked, the blond brat still has the Nine Tails inside of him," Obito admitted, shrugging a little. "But hey, I'm not going to complain about something that benefits me. Now, Nine Tails, CRUSH THEM!"

The Demon Fox let out a deafening roar before raising his right paw. The Konoha ninjas snapped out of their terror and shock in time to avoid the paw coming down at them, creating a large crater and destroying several already ruined houses in a large area.

"Sasuke, it all depends on you! Use your Mangekyo Sharingan to tame the beast!" Shizune urged.

Sasuke nodded, doing his best to push back the memory of Naruto being impaled that was being forced into his brain, Sasuke's Sharingan changed into their advanced form, and locked eyes with the giant fox. However, when he tried to force his will upon the creature, another force repelled it back.

"Argh!" Sasuke grunted, as he winced, grabbing his head. "I can't!"

"Of course you can't!" Obito laughed. "As long as the Nine Tails is under my control, he's shielded from outside influences!"

"In that case, we'll need to take care of Obito first," Sasuke stated.

"Easier said than done. That will be hard to do with that monster trying to kill us!" a panicked Karin pointed out.

"I think this is my cue to play my ace in the hole," Rin interjected, making several hand seals, as she took a couple of steps forward. "Wood Release: Great Forest Emergence!"

Suddenly, the earth started to shake, and green thick wooden vines emerged all around the Nine Tails, wrapping themselves around his legs, tails and neck, immobilizing it. The effort of restraining such a large beast soon made itself evident in Rin, who winced and started to sweat heavily. Sasuke and Karin stared at Rin in awe.

"Wait, what?" the redhead asked. "You can use Wood Release? How? Why?"

"We can talk about that later! Come on, now is your chance!" Rin urged the others.

Shizune nodded, and she launched herself at Obito. The Akatsuki, however, jumped off the Fox's head before Shizune could catch him. He then pulled out a Fuma Shuriken. The steel star burst into flames before he tossed it against the Nine Tails, and made a hand seal.

"Fire Release: Shadow Clone Shuriken Jutsu!"

Multiple flaming shuriken appeared near the first one, all of them flying towards the Tailed Beast. Many of them embedded themselves into the vines restraining him, while others stabbed into the fox's flesh, not that Obito cared.

"Now's my chance!" Sasuke said, as he made several hand seals.
"Fire Release: Great Fireball Jutsu!"

Sasuke exhaled a fireball which flew towards Obito with flawless accuracy. The Akatsuki, however, turned intangible, and the fireball phased through him. More fireballs were shot, the effect was the same, and they disappeared into the sky.

"You might caught me off guard back then. But as long as I don't send anybody to my pocket dimension, my abilities should be safe to use," Obito confidently stated.

Rin gathered her chakra as she tried to repair the damage Obito had done to her vines, but it was too late, and after several snapping sounds, the tailed beast managed to break free. His eyes, morphed into Sharingans, shot a hateful glare at Rin, and moved to attack. But before he could do anything, he was rammed by another being of the same size. The clash of giants produced a shockwave that knocked all those nearby back

"What the...?" a confused Rin asked as she fell on her butt.

Both she and her Konoha companions saw a giant cat, made of what appeared to be blue and black flames. Her eyes were of different color, one green and another yellow. Two tails lashed at the end of her body.

"Yugito," Shizune said aloud, albeit mostly to herself. "Hokage-sama said she had full control of her Tailed Beast, but seeing it with my own eyes..."

"Stay away from us!" Yugito's voice boomed from the giant two tailed cat, as she wrestled the Nine Tails. "Even if you want to help me, don't! I don't want to put you in danger!"

"Ah, there it is, the longed prey. I knew that I did good in bringing my Nine Tails here, Yugito," Obito said, as he started to teleport away.
"Your Tailed Beast will be mine!"

Meanwhile, not far away from there, Darui and Sakura continued fighting Kisame. Even if the fight was going well, the two of them had the impression that the former Kiri ninja wasn't giving his all and was just merely toying with them, if his careless attitude was any indication.

"Hey, sorry for not believing you at first when you guys told us about a second Nine Tails," Darui said, as his cleaver clashed against Samehada. "For all that it's worth."

"Save the apologies for when we have won!" Sakura replied, trying to capitalize on Kisame being focused on Darui to land a punch, but the blue skinned swordsman skillfully avoided it.

"You're adorable, thinking you have a chance to win. When it was the boy and I, maybe you had a tiny little chance, but with that monster on our side..." Kisame laughed.

"We have our own jinchuriki to stop it!" Darui countered, as he delivered a swing the shark ninja avoided.

Kisame chuckled once again. "Tell me, brat, don't you think that's exactly what we wanted? Kumo is fiercely protective of their jinchuriki, but we knew you'd deploy at least one of them if an attack by another Tailed Beast was involved. We were planning for this. And you fell right into our trap."

"Soon you're going to see that plans don't always go as intended, specially one so dull as yours," Darui replied, as he reared his cleaver sword backwards. The wide blade started to crackle with electricity, as the Kumo ninja dashed forward.

Kisame received the onslaught with a smirk, as he expertly parried all of Darui's blows. With each blow of his cleaver, lightning bolts were released in every direction, but sadly those aimed at Kisame were absorbed by his bandaged sword, much to his chagrin.

"Not only that sword can absorb ninjutsu, but even when it's used in an indirect way, like being channeled through a sword," Darui noted, deciding it would be for the better a change of strategy.

"My turn then," Kisame's toothy grin expanded, as he raised his sword above his head. Thousands of droplets of water started to gather around Samehada from the air's moisture, forming a liquid mass around the weapon. "Water Release: Tsunami Sword!"

Slamming his sword into the ground, the water gathered by Samehada was released in the form of a brutal and massive torrent, that in no time flooded the entire village, including the zone where the two Tailed Beasts were fighting. Darui and Sakura used the rubble and half destroyed buildings as footing to jump above the incoming wave, before they landed on the water's surface with a splash.

As they did, they noticed that Kisame was leaping at them, Samehada raised above his head. Darui was about to hold his own in a defensive position to parry the blow, but Sakura beat him to the punch by jumping and, well, throwing a punch at the incoming Samehada. The resulting impact caused a powerful shockwave that pushed both ninjas back several meters.

"The power behind his water jutsu is unreal. My skills look pretty dull in comparison," Darui thought, as his brain tried to come up with a proper strategy, before he noticed Samehada. "I wonder how much power comes from him and how much from that sword. Regardless of the answer, taking that sword off the picture will improve our chances."

"You look thoughtful. Desperate to look for a way to beat my unstoppable power?" Kisame taunted. "Don't bother. Even the most cunning strategies are useless in the face of the overwhelming strength of a tsunami."

"Don't be so coky. I haven't show you yet my best moves," Darui said, as he sheathed his cleaver while starting making hand seals.

He leaned towards Sakura. "I'm going to attack now. Try to land a punch the moment you see an opening."

Sakura nodded. "Got it."

"More ninjutsu? I thought that you'd know it's useless by now," Kisame mocked. "But hey, I'm not going to interrupt an enemy when he's making a mistake."

"Storm Release: Laser Circus!"

Darui brought his hands forward, both indexes and middle fingers aiming at Kisame. A blue light orb formed around them, before it exploded in a multitude of beams of the same color that flew at the shark ninja. Kisame merely smirked, and placed Samehada between himself and the incoming attack for protection.

"So, you have a Bloodline Limit. Not that it's going to help-"

Suddenly, much to Kisame's shock, the beams changed their trajectory just before they were going to crash against Samehada, arching around it and Kisame, before blasting the Akatsuki's back.

"AAAARRGH!"

"I think that's my cue!" Sakura said, as she launched herself towards Kisame. She reared a fist back, which started to swirl with chakra, taking the form of an even larger fist surrounding it. "SHANNARO!"

However, Kisame wasn't as defenseless as she thought. The shark ninja managed to jump backwards as he made several hand seals.

"Water Release: Water Shark Bullet Jutsu!"

A gigantic shark made of water formed between Sakura and Kisame, opening its jaws to crunch the charging pinkette. However, Sakura's incoming punch packed so much power it shattered the elemental animal into tiny droplets, and still had enough momentum to keep forward. But the jutsu made it job, and softened Sakura's blow enough for Kisame to safely parry it with Samehada, even if it pushed him backwards a few meters.

"Not bad, definitely not bad," Kisame complimented, once he came to a stop. "But sadly not good enough to beat somebody of my level!"

With a swift motion of his sword, Samehada split Sakura in two...

... before she dissolved into water.

"The hell? Where did she-"

Kisame barely had time to react as Sakura burst underwater below him, her chakra-enhanced fist aimed for his chin. If Kisame didn't move, that punch alone would have separated his head from the rest of his body. But even if it didn't connect, the shockwave it produced was strong enough to hurl him even further backwards, making him drop Samehada.

"Yes! Well done, Sakura-san!" Darui praised as he rushed forward. His hand expertly caught Samehada before the falling blade could even touch the water. "This sword belongs to Kumo now. Let's see how well you do without-AAAGH!"

Much to the Kumo ninja's surprise, spikes sprouted from Samehada's handle, forcing him to drop the blade. Blood was pouring from the holes his now useless right hand had.

"Darui-san!" Sakura cried, as he jumped back towards him. "Quickly, give me your hand!"

"Are you a medic?" Darui asked. Sakura's answer came in the form of the Mystical Palm Jutsu. In a few seconds, the bleeding stopped and the holes were healed, making his hand look like it was never damaged. "Thank you. Wow, you're really good."

Sakura smiled at the compliment. "Thanks. Kumo might have the best swordsmen, but no village tops Konoha when it comes to medics."

"Good thing that you're on our side then," Darui said, still taking a look at his hand, before his eyes focused on Samehada, floating besides him. "Though apparently I'm not a good enough swordsman for that sword. If that thing is a sword to begin with."

Suddenly, as if Kisame was pulling an invisible string, Samehada flew towards him, and the blue skinned ninja casually caught his sword back.

"You're right, Samehada is more than just a special sword," Kisame said, grinning again. "It was created by the first jinchuriki of the Three Tails, using the chakra absorbing coral the Three Tails produces to build it. The result was a sword that could absorb ninjutsu and transfer it to its wielder. Eventually, due being made of living matter and all the chakra it consumed, Samehada became sentient and grew a mind of its own, though it still remained a weapon. It only obeys one ninja at once, and has its ways to punish little thieves that want to get their hands on it. Samehada will never belong to another ninja as long as I'm alive."

"Don't worry, that has an easy solution," Sakura replied, frowning at Kisame.

"Did I tell you that you're way over your heads trying to fight me? You have seen only an iota of my true power," Kisame taunted.

As Kisame, Sakura and Darui continued to fight, Yugito fought as the Nine Tails, transformed into the beast she was carrying inside. The scale of such battle made it all but impossible for the rest of the ninjas to intervene in much capacity. The Konoha and Kumo ninjas watching the battle discussed what they could do.

"Come on, there has to be something we can do to help Yugito," Atsui insisted.

"She told us not to interfere. The scale of this battle is way above us, so please cool down," Samui told her brother.

"I'm with Atsui here. Our power might be insignificant compared to them, but that does not make us useless. We can turn the tide of the battle," Sasuke interjected.

"Rin, do you think you can immobilize the Nine Tails with your Wood Release?" Karin asked, before she realized what she just said, and chuckled. "Wood Release... not happy to come back from the dead, she also has Wood Release of all Bloodlines..."

"I could try, but it's moving way too fast," Rin pointed out.

"For the time being, let's be cautious and watch. Sooner or later, an opportunity to intervene will present to us," Shizune stated.

"Or maybe we could try and create those opportunities ourselves," Sasuke said, as he bit his thumb before he started to walk forward while making hand seals.

"Sasuke-kun, wait! Don't do anything reckless!" Shizune asked.

"Doing something reckless is still a better alternative than doing nothing at all," Sasuke snapped, finishing the seal sequences, slamming his hand into the water surface. "Summoning Jutsu!"

From a cloud of smoke, a giant hawk emerged, flapping his wings as he took off, with Sasuke riding on his back. Sasuke commanded the bird to fly towards the two fighting tailed beasts. Shizune sighed, and shook his head.

"That boy's going to get himself killed," the older medic-nin said.

"Okay, Sasuke took the choice from our hands. We'll approach with caution and move when there's a chance to act, or if our side is losing."

"Whatever, just let go with the action already," an impatient Atsui stated, before Samui smacked him the back of the head. "Ow!"

"Thank goodness they aren't using Tailed Beast Balls, or else we could easily end up as collateral damage," Shizune pointed out.

"Tailed Beast Ball?" Karin repeated.

"It's a Tailed Beast's most powerful attack," it was Rin who answered. "The Tailed Beast gathers a lot of chakra in their mouth forming a ball, which is then released in the form of said ball that can explode upon contact, or in the form of an energy beam or wave for a more focused area of destruction."

"You know an awful lot about Tailed Beasts," Karin commented.

"It was because of Minato-sensei. He used to study them in a very thorough fashion," Rin explained. "Though the fact that Kushina-san was a jinchuriki does explain where that interest came from."

"If that's the case, then I guess it's because they're fighting too close to each other for an attack of such magnitude," Samui guessed. "If they do, there's a big chance they might hurt themselves."

"Not to mention all the unwanted attention that such attack would bring to this place," Shizune added.

"Wouldn't be that a good thing?" Karin asked. "If more Kumo ninja came to help Yugito..."

Samui shook her head. "We need quality, not more quantity. If Killer B-sama or Raikage-sama came, they could easily turn the tide of the battle. But other Kumo ninja would barely make a difference. If somebody sees this fight, it would be better if they warn Kumo about what's going on, rather than join the fight themselves."

"But by the time reinforcements arrive, it might be too late," Rin pointed out.

Meanwhile, above the two fighting giant beasts, Sasuke's hawk was flying in circles, as the Uchiha on top of it carefully analyzed the clash, Sharingan activated in order not to miss any detail, as small or insignificant as it might be.

"Cat Flame Roaring Fire!"

The Two Tails opened her jaws, and fired several large fireballs at the Nine Tails. The Fox, however, deflected said fireballs with a flick of his many tails, some of them being redirected into the sky, while others fell on both the ground and water around them. After that the Nine Tails charged at the Two Tails.

Yugito decided to return in kind and charge at him as well. However, just before the two could meet in the middle, the Nine Tails abruptly stopped and spun over himself, delivered a nine-tailed tail blow at the surprised jinchuriki, who was hurled backwards.

"Well done, Kyubi," Obito said, reappearing besides his subdued Tailed Beast. He quickly made several hand seals. "Wood Release: Deep Forest Emergence!"

Multiple wooden vines emerged around the still dazed jinchuriki, wrapping around her neck and limbs, immobilizing her and binding her chakra.

"That should take care of it. Now, let's deal the finish blow!" Obito said.

The Nine Tails opened his maws, and started to gather chakra into an ever expanding sphere. The Konoha and Kumo ninjas still in the ground knew the Kyubi was charging a Tailed Beast Ball, and if the attack hit, it would mean the end for Yugito. Sasuke had left before hearing the explanation on what that attack was.

Not that he needed it to know that it was bad news and, if it wasn't stopped immediately, the Akatsuki would win. Almost on instinct, the youngest Uchiha jumped from his flying summon, and aimed his fall towards the fox's face. He made a hand seal.

"Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

Sasuke wasn't stupid enough to use his real self as a human missile towards a Tailed Beast, not when a clone would do just fine. He then transferred all his momentum to the clone by pushing it downward the moment he appeared. In the couple seconds before the clone would hit his destination, he made several hand seals.

"Fire Release: Burning Man!"

The clone was surrounded by an aura of fire just before it crashed against the Nine Tails' left eye. The beast howled in pain, losing control of the forming Tailed Beast Ball, which exploded in his mouth, hurling him backwards.

"No!" Obito yelled.

"Atsui, let's release Yugito while the Nine Tails is incapacitated!" Samui suggested, as she unsheathed her tanto while rushing towards the immobilized giant cat.

"Alright!" her brother said, following Samui and unsheathing his katana as well.

"Now's our chance!" Shizune said, as she rushed towards the beast, with Karin and Rin following her. "Rin, try to subdue it now!"

Rin nodded, and her hands flew through hand seals once again.

"Wood Release. Deep Forest Emergence!"

More wooden vines emerged around the Nine Tails and wrapped around him, just like they also bound his two tailed sister. Though the damage caused by the failed Tailed Beast Ball wasn't as severe as it appeared, as the Kyubi had enough strength to trash against the restraining wooden vines.

"Karin, help her subdue him!" Shizune said.

Karin took a step forward, and made a hand seal. "Adamantine Sealing Chains!"

Multiple chains of chakra emerged from her back, and they wrap themselves around the Nine Tails' limbs, just like the wooden vines did, and combined their suppressing effects to subdue the angry monster.

The Kyubi trashed again, but his movements were much slower and sloppy, as he progressively became less and less active. The combined power of both jutsu was too much for him to handle.

"Very good! Keep going like that, girls!" Shizune cheered.

"Fire Release: Phoenix Sage Fire Jutsu!"

A volley of fireballs rained upon Karin and Rin, seemingly out of nowhere, blowing the two girls away, and in Karin's case, forcing her to release her chains from the incapacitated Fox.

"I won't let you interfere any further!" Obito said, as he landed in front of them. He then turned around, and started to throw more fire jutsu at the vines still pinning the giant Fox down.

...

Meanwhile, at the other side of the flooded village, Darui and Sakura continued their two on one fight against Kisame.

"Things are looking grim over there," Darui said, who had just glanced back to the two Tailed Beasts duking it out, before his visible eye rested on Kisame. "Sorry man, but I'm afraid we'll have to end this pretty quick. We're needed over there."

"I was having a lot of fun, but if you want me to end this quickly, I can do that as well," Kisame grinned, as he suddenly disappeared.

Darui tensed, as he gripped the handle of his cleaver. "Where did he-"

"From underwater! Watch out!" Sakura warned.

Both the blond haired man and pink haired girl jumped in time before a shark jumped out of the water, its jaws full of teeth wide open. Another one jumped immediately afterwards against Sakura, but the kunoichi managed to punch it in time, sending it skidding across the water surface, before it disappeared in a cloud of smoke. Another one met the same fate when Darui sunk his electrified cleaver into its flesh.

However, more and more sharks started to come out of the water, in greater numbers and higher frequency. It was becoming increasingly harder for the two ninja to keep up the pace. In no time they would be overwhelmed.

"I can see the bastard below us," Darui told Sakura, as he slashed an incoming shark. "Summoning more sharks. Hell, I bet these sharks aren't even real. He just plans to tire us out before delivering the finishing blow."

"In that case, we should ignore these fishes and go after him directly," Sakura suggested.

"I had the same idea," Darui asked. As he sheathed his cleaver. "Protect me for a few seconds, will you?"

Sakura nodded, and pushed her body as much as she could in order to fend off the sharks coming from every direction. Fortunately, a few seconds is all what Darui needed to weave the necessary hand seals.

"Lightning Release: Black Panther!"

Darui's hands crackled with black electricity, which condensed into a mass of dark lightning that took the shape of a panther. The panther dived underwater headed for Kisame, but it was intercepted by several of the sharks he was constantly summoning.

"Damn, such a failure," Darui complained. "Reaching him underwater is going to be a challenge."

"Not that much. I have a way that will open a direct path to the Akatsuki, but it will only last for a few seconds," Sakura told the Kumo Jonin.

"Sorry for being skeptical, but what do you plan to do? Punch the water really hard so the shockwave creates a vacuum zone?"

Sakura smirked in return. "You just read my mind."

Dauri's visible eye widened. "Are you... are you serious?"

"You might want to take a step back," Sakura said as she leaped into the air, her fist wound back.

Darui did as Sakura was told. However, as he was the only one touching the water surface, now all the sharks were aiming for him. Unsheathing his cleaver once more, the Kumo Jonin went into the defensive.

"SHANNARO!" Sakura hollered, as she came down, her fist impacting against the water surface.

The effect was immediate. The force released by the impact created a shockwave that pushed all the water aside in every direction, creating a rather large "hole" in the water, with a genuinely surprised Kisame at the bottom.

"Damn. That girl looked pretty dull, but she packs quite the mean punch. If Konoha has more ninja like her, we might be screwed," Darui said, mostly to himself.

"Come on, attack, he's wide open!" Sakura shouted.

Darui nodded, and jumped into the hole the pinkette had literally punched in the water. Unfortunately for him, Kisame was able to shake off the shock and expertly parry Darui's blow with his much bigger sword. Before the Kumo ninja could force the blue skinned Akatsuki into the defensive, Kisame wasted no time and counterattacked with a series of rapid swings of his massive blade.

The dark skinned ninja replied by jumping backwards, while making several hand seals.

"Storm Release: Laser Circus!"

Joining his hands together, Darui fired another salvo of light blue beams at Kisame. The Akatsuki smirked and prepared to defend.

"You're not going to catch me off guard with your little light show again," Kisame confidently said, and when the beams were close to him, he delivered a very wide swing, Samehada absorbing them. "As I said-"

"You're wide open!"

Another Darui appeared before Kisame, his cleaver ready to slash the Akatsuki to bites. However, Kisame was fast enough to parry the clone's blow as well, and deliver another swing that knocked the sword out of his hands.

"You expected to catch me off guard with a clone? I'm starting to feel insulted," Kisame chuckled, as he delivered another blow to the clone.

But much to his surprise, the clone caught Samehada, wrapping his arms around it. Samehada grew several spikes in order to eviscerate the clone, but much to Kisame's shock, not only the clone did not dispel, but the spikes even failed to pierce him, as his skin was extremely hard.

"Now I got you," The Darui clone burst in smoke, revealing that it had been Sakura all along. Her skin was now a metallic brown while her hair was silver. "Did you forget about me already? Come on Darui-san, before the sword absorbs my Iron Skin Jutsu!"

"You don't have to tell me twice," Darui replied, as his hands flew through hand seals. "Lightning Release: Double Black Panther!"

Darui's hands generated a mass of the aforementioned black lightning, which took the shape of two panthers, ready to pounce on Kisame.

Seeing that there was no point in struggling, Kisame dropped Samehada and jumped away, just as the water started to fill the hole while it formed a whirlpool. The shark ninja decided to counter Darui's ninjutsu with one of his own.

"I don't need Samehada to beat opponents of your level!" he shouted, as his hands quickly formed hand seals, before thrusting them forward. "Water Release: Great Shark Bullet Jutsu!"

Kisame created a gigantic shark made of water before sending it towards Darui and Sakura.

"This jutsu can absorb the chakra of other ninjutsu and add it to its own power as if it was Samehada. I don't know what those black panthers do, but they won't touch me!" Kisame boasted, as his face formed a grin of confidence.

However, much to his surprise, the black panthers maneuvered around the shark-shaped missile, gracefully avoiding it.

"What!?" Kisame asked in shock.

"I'll take care of that!" Sakura said, placing herself in front of the shark bullet. She spread her arms wide, as two giant fists made of chakra appeared around her fists. "Cherry Blossom Thunderclap!"

Sakura slammed her fists together, creating a powerful shockwave forwards, which easily shattered the water shark bullet when crashed against it.

"Just as I thought. I can use my chakra enhanced strength to create shockwaves, but since they lack chakra, they can't be absorbed," Sakura thought, pleased with her deduction.

That moment, a lightning bolt fell from the storm clouds above, landing somewhere near the spot the rest of her teammates were fighting Obito and his Tailed Beast. Sakura saw that the Nine Tails was down, and smiled. She turned her sight back to the enemy at hand.

"Lightning Release jutsu packs a lot of power, but they're usually hard to control and direct. Black Lightning has no such problems. And as you're going to experience, it's also more powerful than regular lightning as well," Darui explained, enjoying Kisame's predicament.

Unable to defend or even dodge the attack, the two lightning panthers crashed against Kisame, engulfing him in an explosion of black electricity. When the electricity faded, Kisame was still there, his clothes and skin badly burn, but still in condition to fight. The Akatsuki extended his right hand, and Samehada flew to it.

"Hehehe... I'm going to admit, that hurt a lot," Kisame chuckled, sounding oddly nonchalant. "But these wounds will stay here very little. I can use Samehada for-"

Kisame was interrupted by a massive explosion coming from behind. Both him and his opponents forgot about each other for a moment, as their eyes were focused on the massive blast. The Akatsuki grinned.

"Oh look at that. It seems that Obito is finally done playing," Kisame laughed.

Sakura and Darui looked horrified at the other battlefield.

"Just... what happened over there?" Sakura cried.

...

As Darui and Sakura's fight against Kisame was winding down, the fight of the giants had been halted by both Rin and Obito incapacitating the other side's Tailed Beast with their wood release. Not that they were going to just leave things that way.

"Let's release Yugito!" Atsui said, as made a couple of one handed hand seals, as his other hand held his katana. "Fire Release: Burning Edge!"

Atsui's katana was coated in fire, as he dashed towards the giant incapacitated cat. He quickly started to slash the vines with his flaming blade, but they proved to be more resistant than their appearance suggested.

"Don't go all by yourself, let's work together!" Samui replied, as she made several hand seals, before unsheathing her tanto. "Lightning Release: Thunder Blade!"

Samui's tanto started to crackle with electricity, and the blond rushed towards the vines, cutting them in one swing each. Her brother, who was having more trouble, noticed this, and frowned.

"Hey, how the hell did you took so little to cut so many vines?" the indignant blond complained.

"Wood Release is a combination of water and earth, both elements weak to lightning," Samui replied matter-o-factly.

"Aw man, that's not so hot..." he complained.

Suddenly, more vines started to emerge, replacing the ones the Kumo siblings had cut.

"What the hell?" Atsui protested. "Aw come on! This is NOT so hot!"

"Quit complaining! If the vines regrow, we will cut them faster than they can regenerate!" Samui insisted, as she pressed on.

As the Kumo siblings liberated their jinchuriki, or at least tried to, Obito was doing the same with the Nine Tails. Unlike the Kumo siblings, Obito had to contend with the Konoha ninjas attempting to keep the Kyubi incapacitated.

"I never thought that you'd use the gift I gave you against me, Rin. Your disloyalty knows no limit," Obito said with an angry snarl.

"You never thought?" Rin replied, just as angry. "In what world would I approve of everything you're doing? All these meaningless deaths! All the suffering you're spreading!"

"Sometimes you need to cut a limb in order to stop a disease from infecting the rest of the body. Given that you're a medic, I thought you'd understand that," Obito fired back.

"Not before I did everything to save that limb first!" Rin shouted, as she dashed towards Obito.

The two former teammates engaged in a hand to hand duel. Due to his experience and height advantage, Obito thought Rin wouldn't be much of a challenge, but he was surprised by the brown haired medic-nin's skill and physical strength.

"All I need is to knock her out, and she won't be able to keep the Nine Tails incapacitated," Obito thought, as he ducked a roundhouse kick from his former crush. "I knew about her physical enhancements, but when did she become such a good fighter?"

As he was fighting Rin, he failed to see Shizune coming at him, who delivered a painful kick to his temple, sending him flying several meters to the side, skidding on the watery surface.

"Just as the other time. If he wants to hit us, he needs to be corporeal. There's our chance to hit," Shizune said. "We can take advantage of our numerical superiority."

"You think you're so clever, do you?" Obito said as he stood up, rubbing the spot Shizune had kicked in. "Let's see what do you think about your numbers after this! Wood Release: Wood Clone Jutsu!"

Several clones made of wood started to grow from Obito's body. Once fully formed, they split from his body, placing themselves in a circle around the Konoha ninjas, and adopting fighting stances. They counted nine clones in total.

"You're not the only one who can do that!" Rin replied, as she echoed Obito's actions. However, the brown haired girl was only able to produce three clones of herself.

Obito couldn't help but chuckle. "Even if you have the same power as me, my skill is far superior to yours. Take care of them while I release the Nine Tails!" Obito commanded.

"Oh no, you won't get away!" Sasuke yelled, as he leaped at the original. One of the clones jumped to intercept Sasuke, but the youngest Uchiha easily sliced him in two with a swing of his katana. "Fire Release: Burning Edge! Lightning Release: Thunder Blade!"

Holding his katana in one hand and his shoto in the other, the former's blade was coated in flames while the later's started to crackle with electricity. Obito started to weave hand seals, a chain that he had used before a couple times, and that Sasuke had memorized thanks to his Sharingan. He knew what attack would come next.

"Wood Release: Deep Forest Emergence!"

Sasuke was ready to destroy whatever wooden vines Obito threw against him, his senses looking for the first sign of the attack to come. Except, much to his surprise, the attack didn't come. Or better said, it did come, just not from the direction the youngest Uchiha was expecting.

Even more vines emerged around the Nine Tails. Though rather than wrap themselves against him, they started to pull the first vines Rin had summoned. And while the brown haired medic was busy fighting the clones, she was unable to direct chakra to keep her vines in place. In no time, the Nine Tails was free again.

"Didn't see that coming, Sasuke?" Obito mockingly asked, as he jumped onto the fox's head. "Ninjas nowadays seem to focus too much on power and forget about the subtle art of misdirection."

"Damn you..." was all what Sasuke could said, gritting his teeth. Looking up, he saw that his hawk summon was still flying above the Nine Tails in circles. He let out a whistle to call it down.

"No! The Nine Tails is free!" Shizune cried, as she was fighting the remaining clones.

"I'll subdue it again!" Rin said, as her hands started to form the same hand seals she used before. "Wood Release-"

"You think I will let you!?" Obito spat.

The Nine Tails delivered a wide swipe with one of his tails. The Konoha ninjas jumped in time to avoid it, but the sheer force of the swipe was so great, the shockwave it created as enough to hurl them backwards. Sasuke managed to jump onto his hawk's back, and even if it was caught in the burst of wind, the giant bird was able to maneuver around it much better.

"Alright, this ends here," Sasuke said, as he sheathed both his bladed weapons, as his left hand started to crackle with electricity. "The next jutsu will finish this fight."

Obito couldn't repress a laugh. "You're delirious, Sasuke. No jutsu, no matter how powerful, can subdue a Tailed Beast, other than Wood Release."

"You might be right, but it's worth a try," Sasuke said, raising his electrified hand towards the sky. "Do you think that if I gathered several dozen lightning bolts and threw them all at your pet, would he survive?"

"While I admit you have grown powerful over the years, no jutsu of your own can have the strength you claim. No human being could gather that much power," Obito countered.

"Oh, I'm aware of that. But if instead of lightning generated by my chakra, I merely used my chakra to redirect natural lightning towards you?" Sasuke asked.

Suddenly, a bad feeling washed over Obito. Looking up, he realized that the sky had turned really dark, with several lightning bolts jumping from one cloud to another.

"Where... where did those storm clouds come from?" Obito asked, a bit surprised.

"I admit this jutsu requires a bit of a setup. You know, all the fireballs I threw at you from below, that when you dodged, kept flying upwards into the sky? Yeah, they true purpose was to stir the clouds into storm clouds. The Two Tails' fireballs that you deflected into the sky were of real help as well," Sasuke explained. Suddenly, all the lightning in the clouds merged in the form of a serpentine dragon.

"The name of the jutsu is Kirin. Now begone."

Sasuke brought his hand down, and in a split second, the Kirin fell down, blasting into the Kyubi. The fox let out a loud and long howl of pain, before he succumbed to the power of several lightning bolts condensed into one, falling to the water with a loud splash. Obito was nowhere to be seen. Sasuke deduced that he had teleported away.

"My most powerful jutsu, the Kirin. Stronger than the Annihilation Nova, with only consuming a tiny fraction of its chakra cost," Sasuke reflected, as he examined the results of his attack. He then turned at the rest of his teammates, looking at the downed Tailed Beast with a flabbergasted look. "Quickly, seal the beast within Karin, before it wakes up!"

This seemed to snap the three women out of their stupor, who nodded and rushed towards Sasuke.

"Okay... how do we do it?" a nervous Karin asked.

"Like this," Shizune said, taking a step forward, while making a hand seal. "Eight Trigram Divination Seal!"

In a poof of smoke, Shizune summoned an octagonal platform with an altar in the middle, and eight lit candles on each of its corners.

"Now, Karin, lie down on the altar," Shizune instructed. The redhead looked at the altar, her lips quivering, but she didn't move. Noticing it, Shizune added: "Karin, everything's going to be okay. It's normal to feel afraid, but I promise you your life won't change that much. We're all here to support you."

"Karin, come on, we have no time!" Sasuke urged.

Letting out a sigh of defeat, she conceded and walked towards the altar. "I wish mom or Neji-kun were here. Alright, let's get this over with."

"Rin, immobilize the Nine Tails again. I'm not as skilled in sealing as Hokage-sama or Naruto-kun, and I'm going to need some time to do the ritual. We don't want it to wake up in the middle of the sealing," the oldest kunoichi told her.

Rin nodded, and walked towards the unconscious beast, ready to perform the same jutsu she had used several times before, and started making the hand seals.

"Wood Release: Deep Forest-"

Suddenly, the Nine Tails' eyes snapped open, and with a loud growl, quickly stood on its legs. It raised one of its paws ready to crush the shocked medic nin. Fortunately, Sasuke appeared before Rin and the fox.

"Everybody, behind me!" Sasuke yelled, as a giant, ghostly purple ribcage formed around the group as the same time the paw came down.

Even if Sasuke's Susanoo absorbed most of the impact, it was unable to withstand such a powerful blow, and Shizune's Medical Squad plus Rin were swiped away as if they were flies.

"Did you really think that jutsu of yours would be enough to subdue a Tailed Beast?" Obito mockingly asked, as he reappeared on top of the fox's head. "Pitiful. If you weren't so afraid of using your real power, the outcome of this fight might have been different. But there won't be any more chances for you. While I'm sure Rin will survive this attack, I can't say the same for the rest of you lot."

The Nine Tails opened his jaws, and started to gather chakra into an ever growing sphere. Everybody panicked. They were still recovering from the brutal blow the Nine Tails had delivered them. There was no time for counterattacks, and dodging an attack of such magnitude would be useless.

The Tailed Beast Ball charged, the Kyubi fired it forward. Sasuke tried to shake off the feeling of anguish washing over his body in order to summon another Susanoo for protection, but found himself unable to.

"This can't be my end... not like this..." Sasuke said, gritting his teeth in impotence.

But the end didn't come. Suddenly, a black and blue blur dashed between the Tailed Beast Ball and them. He didn't need his Sharingan to realize it was the Two Tails, or better said Yugito, who for some reason had decided to become a human shield and take the blast herself, being engulfed by the ensuing explosion, which was thankfully cushioned enough that the Konoha ninjas were merely hurled backwards a few meters by the shockwave.

When the explosion was over, the Yugito was no longer in her Two Tails form, but had reverted back to human. Her body was floating in the water, being rocked by the small waves created by the exploding Tailed Beast Ball.

"Just as expected," Obito smirked, as he landed besides the unconscious Yugito with a splash, and carried her over her shoulder.

Two voices cried as Obito did this.

"Yugito!"

"NO!"

The now one eyes Uchiha saw Samui and Atsui desperately rushing at him, their weapons drawn, ready to rescue their comrade. But in their haste, they didn't take into account the Nine Tails' presence, who, with a flicker of one of his tails, hurled the two Kumo nin backwards.

"I think we can assume the fight is pretty much over," Obito said, before making a hand seal, causing the Nine Tails to disappear in a cloud of smoke. "Farewell." A spiraling vortex appeared around Obito's eye, and the Akatsuki and his captured jinchuriki were gone in an instant.

A few seconds later, Obito reappeared behind Kisame, and spirited the other Akatsuki away.

...

For about ten minutes, nothing happened. Both Kumo and Konoha ninjas remained silent, at most exchanging questions like "are you okay?" and offering to heal wounds, mostly those from Samui and Atsui, who got several broken bones from the Nine Tails' tail swipe. They felt so lost and dazed, especially the Kumo ninjas. It was Rin who broke the silence.

"Why," she asked, her voice almost a whisper.

"Why what?" Samui asked back.

"Why did she save us," Rin replied. "Why did she take that attack aimed for us? She could have used the chance to escape. Now she's going to die, just because she wanted to save a bunch of ninjas from a non-allied foreign village that didn't know that much."

"Yugito didn't do it just to save you. She saved all of us," Atsui replied.

"What?" a confused Rin asked.

"A Tailed Beast Ball is no dull attack. If she didn't use her own body to shield us, the resulting explosion not only would have killed you, but all of us as well," Darui explained. "Sorry for rushing you, but how long until you finish healing them? We need to go back to Kumo and plan a rescue party."

"If Akatsuki plays their cards well, Obito is on his way to take Yugito out of Lightning Country," Shizune sourly thought, but decided to keep those thoughts to herself. Nobody would gain anything by demotivating the Kumo ninjas.

"Almost there," it was Sakura who replied, as she finished healing Samui's arm. "Broken bones can't be properly healed with medical ninjutsu alone. We patched you up as well as we could, but you should go to a hospital as soon as you return to your village and get proper treatment there."

"I see. Thanks for your help then," Samui replied. "And thanks for helping us against Akatsuki, even if in the end it was for naught. We'll make sure to tell Raikage-sama about how you fought alongside us."

"If it can help to ease the relationship between our villages, please do so," Shizune interjected, sounding almost pleading. "The threat of Akatsuki is too big for a single ninja village to handle."

"We will," Darui assured, before turning to his two remaining squadmates. "Alright, Samui, Atsui, let's go!"

And thus the three Kumo ninjas leaped away, rushing north towards their village.

"I think we should head back to Konoha as well," Shizune somberly said. The rest agreed.

...

Konoha, a few days later

On the way back, the mood didn't improve. They still felt the weight of the defeat at the hands of the Akatsuki. Even if they didn't have any personal ties with the jinchuriki, who wasn't even from an allied village, the outcome of the mission weighted heavily on them. They barely talked, and only traded words when necessary.

For some reason, Karin looked the gloomiest of them all, even more than Rin if it was possible.

"Konoha is up there," Shizune pointed out.

And yes, just like the medic Jonin said, the walls of Konoha could be seen in the distance. This seemed to lift the mood, even if it was just a little.

"Finally, home," Sakura said, letting out a sigh.

"Okay, I know you guys are exhausted, both physically as well as emotionally, so you can go home. I'll go to the Hokage Tower and give Hokage-sama the mission report," Shizune offered, something her subordinates greatly appreciated.

However, there was still one last obstacle they had to face before they could rest and put this disastrous mission behind. The moment they crossed the gates, they saw a certain blond ninja rushing towards them.

"Shizune-nee-chan! Karin-nee-chan!" Naruto cried before landing in front of them. "I arrived as soon as I got the message from dad regarding the mission! How did it go?"

The somber look on the Medical Squad and Rin's faces was all the jinchuriki needed to know their answer. Unfortunately, he barely knew half of the story, and once again, it was Shizune who took up as her duty to deliver the bad news.

"Naruto-kun... I was going to the Hokage Tower. Come with me and I'll tell you what happened. We have some bad news... news that you need to know," Shizune said, as she and an apprehensive Naruto headed towards the Tower.

...

A few minutes later, Sasuke returned to his apartment. As expected, Itachi wasn't there. It would be at least a week until he returned from that mission. Hopefully, his brother would be more successful than he had been so far.

At first, the youngest Uchiha merely dropped himself onto a couch, hoping to get some rest and put this mission behind him. But he found himself unable to.

"I don't get it," he said to no one in particular. "This wasn't the first mission I failed. I had no ties with the jinchuriki. I don't care what happens to Kumo or its ninjas," Sasuke said out loud. His hand clenched into a fist. "Then why does it hurt so much?"

Author's Note: Sorry to all Yugito fans who were expecting her to have a bigger role in the story, but alas, I just can't save every jinchuriki. At the very least, I hope you guys enjoyed her in these two chapters, were she gets to show a little of her personality and badassery. I was originally planning to have her being captured offscreen, but I a fellow Naruto writer convinced me not to make the same mistake as Kishimoto. Now I kind of regret not giving Han his own mini-arc as well, even if it would have made the story even longer.

Have to say, I was quite surprised how most readers reacted negatively at the prospect of Karin becoming the jinchuriki of Kurama's second half, which in hindsight makes me glad I changed my mind while I was writing this arc. The reason, thought, is that it would make Obito way too incompetent. Not only did he fail three times to capture a jinchuriki, but the one time he succeeded it would be at the cost of another Tailed Beast. And even then, he didn't come out of the battle unscathed, since he lost Shisui's eye (though gotta say, a lot of people enjoyed Rin gouging his eye out).

So yeah, not only Akatsuki scores another victory, increasing the number of Tailed Beasts they have to four (the other three are the One, Three and Five Tailed beasts, if somebody needs a reminder), but Sasuke came out of that mission a complete mess. The next chapter will deal with the fallout of this mission (meaning it also be pretty Sasuke-centric), and will close this arc for good, before we move back to Naruto's team once more.

Thanks a lot to Ookami88, my new betareader, for proofreading this chapter.

Anyway, while you guys wait for the next chapter, don't forget to leave your thoughts in a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Aftermath of a Failed Mission

Author's Note: With the Yugito Arc finally concluded, we can move forward with other issues. I'm glad how well received said arc was, even if in hindsight I should have put more focus on Yugito, given that she was going to die. Oh well, at least I have another chance to showcase her in the future when she returns as an Edo Tensei zombie.

Anyway, enough ramblings. Enjoy the new chapter:

Chapter 68:

Aftermath of a Failed Mission

or

Not All Cats Have Nine Lives

Amegakure

Despite the fact that he hadn't finished his shift yet, the Ame Genin known as Yudachi was in a bar having some drinks. He had an average appearance, with spiky brown hair, black eyes, and a scar crossing his face being his only distinctive feature.

His unprofessional attitude contributed in a big way to his status as Genin despite pushing thirty. Not that he would even admit it. Besides, today it was a rather slow day. Nothing would happen if he drank a little. Little did he know, that was going to change soon.

"Hey there, handsome. Are you alone?" a soft female voice said.

Yudachi was almost startled by the voice, he swore there was no other patron in the bar except him, yet that woman had sneaked upon him without him none the wiser. But those distressing thoughts were replaced the moment he laid his eyes on the new patron.

The woman was tall, with pale white skin and long, wavy black hair, full lips and onyx eyes. She was wearing a red spaghetti dress that came down her knees. Her red high heels accentuated her height.

"Cat got your tongue?" the woman asked, giggling a little.

"N-No," Yudachi replied, snapping himself from his stupor. "And yes, I'm alone. Well, not anymore, now that you're here, hehe."

"So, you're a ninja, right?" the woman asked, looking at her forehead protector.

"Indeed I am!" Yudachi proudly replied.

"I love ninjas," the woman replied in a sultry voice, licking her lips. "I love strong men in general, but ninjas are the strongest, don't you think?"

"Indeed!" the Ame Genin enthusiastically agreed.

"So, why don't we show me how strong you are?" the woman replied, caressing his facial scar with the tip of her finger.

...

He didn't know how it happened, but Yudachi didn't care in the slightest. Rushing to one of the rooms for rent in the upper floor - thankfully all of them were vacant-, the Ame Genin and his conquest started to passionately kiss and make out, while they removed each other clothes.

He didn't want to think about how lucky he was. He was never very popular with the fairer sex, so having a woman so out of his league throwing herself at his feet was like a dream come true. That woman had everything to make her perfect.

Her smooth skin...

Her wavy, elegant hair...

A body most women would kill for...

Those thick, wet lips...

Her deep crimson Sharingan eyes, staring into his very soul...

... wait what?

But by the time he realized of what had happened, it was too late. Yudachi felt his whole body succumbing to paralysis. He could still feel his limbs, but they refused to obey his brain's commands.

The woman merely poked his forehead with a finger, and he fell backwards like a tree whose trunk had just been chopped, the bed behind him thankfully cushioning his fall.

"You're under my genjutsu now. Resistance is futile," the woman said, and in a poof of smoke, she turned into a man. A Konoha Ninja. He didn't need a bingo book to know that this ninja was Itachi Uchiha, one of Konoha's deadliest assets. "Judging by your expression, you know who I am," Itachi said, as he wiped his lips with the back of his hand. "So now that we know each other, let's get to business. Specifically, you're going to tell me who's the one in charge of this village. I know it's an Akatsuki, but I need to know which one. And no, there's no way you can't convince me that Hanzo the Salamander still holds the position. If I were you, I wouldn't do anything to push my patience."

Yudachi cursed internally for letting himself fall for such an old trick. He knew that woman was dangerous the moment he displayed a level of stealth way above any civilian, but his hormones had silenced his instinct.

That was one of the reasons Yudaichi was still a Genin.

...

Konoha

Above the village of Konoha, three young girls soared the sky. While the first time they appeared surprised the shocked villagers from below, in time they got used to them.

"Boy, I can't believe that I lived most of my life without knowing the wonders of flying," Hanabi gushed, before spinning a few times. "WHEEEEEEEE!"

"I know, right? Once you know the skies, the land suddenly stops being enough," Fu agreed, smiling at the youngest Hyuga.

"And the view from here is spectacular," Hinata added. "And with the Tenseigan, even more."

"So, do you see somebody? Somebody we know?" Hanabi asked.

Hinata nodded and smiled. "Yes. Quite a few people. Some of our clansmen doing their daily tasks at the village. Some of my friends training..." her eyes drifted towards the Senju Park. "Oh, there's Naruto-kun!"

Fu chuckled. "Took you long enough to find him."

"It's not that hard. Naruto-kun has a very powerful chakra, and through my eyes finding him it's as easy as finding a bright star in the middle of the night," Hinata replied. She then noticed something odd about her boyfriend. He was just sitting alone in one of the park's benches. Naruto was somebody who tried to keep himself occupied at all times. If he wasn't with his friends or family, he was usually training. "I think something's wrong with him. He looks kind of gloom. Fu-sensei, do you mind if I take a moment to talk to him?"

"I'm not going to get in the way of love," the green haired girl replied with a sincere smile, as she flew away followed by Hanabi.

Hinata made her descend, before finally landing just a few steps in front of Naruto. The blond naturally immediately took notice of his girlfriend.

"Hey," Naruto greeted her, in a rather subdued manner.

"Hello," Hinata greeted back. "I was flying with Fu-sensei and Hanabi-chan, and I saw you from above."

"While I appreciate it, you don't have to interrupt your flight lessons just to tell me hi whenever you see me," Naruto replied, chuckling a little.

"I know, but greeting you is not the only reason I wanted to talk with you," Hinata replied, placing her hands on her hips. "What are you doing here, Naruto-kun?"

"I'm just enjoying the calm of the park. Is something wrong with it?" Naruto innocently asked.

Hinata let out a sigh, before crossing her arms over her chest. "Naruto-kun, both you and I know that you don't do calm. You usually have too much pent-up energy for that. Unless there's something that's draining your energy. Something emotionally exhausting."

Naruto chuckled again, except this time it sounded a bit sadder. "I just can't hide anything from you, can I?" Naruto asked, before moving aside and patting the space besides him.

Hinata took the hint and sat beside him. "Now, tell me what's wrong. Whatever happened, I'm sure it can be fixed. If not, you'll feel better after talking about it with someone."

"Okay. You see, yesterday afternoon, Shizune-nee-chan's squad returned from a mission. Rin was with them," Naruto began.

"Something happened to either of them?" Hinata guessed, worry seeping into her voice.

Naruto shook his head. "All five were fine, thank goodness. Sadly, that's the only good part of their mission. You see, while we were in Taki, they were dispatched to Kumo because the Nine Tails had been seen there attacking a village near a river..."

Before Hinata could ask about such impossibility Naruto explained about how the Fourth Hokage sealed only half of the Tailed Beast into Naruto, and the other half into himself, which was released after Orochimaru reanimated him with the Impure World Resurrection.

"And turns out Obito took control of the other half," Naruto explained.

Hinata's normally pale face turned even whiter. "But that's... that's horrible! If Obito decides to do the same with Konoha, or even other villages... !"

"And you know what? That's not even the worst part," Naruto added, much to Hinata's shock. "The whole thing was just a ruse to make Kumo deploy one of their jinchuriki, and capture them when they were in the open. They succeeded."

Hinata took her hands to her mouth. No wonder Naruto looked so gloom.

"I promised myself that I wouldn't let any other jinchuriki fall prey of the Akatsuki, yet another one went down, with me not even aware," Naruto said, curling his hand into a fist.

Hinata placed a hand on her boyfriend's shoulder. "Naruto-kun, while what had happened is indeed terrible, it's not your fault. You can't save everybody. You're not almighty."

"I know but... but I can't still feel guilty. Feel that I could have done more. If I wasn't busy helping rebuild Taki, maybe we could-"

"Naruto-kun, no," Hinata firmly said, interrupting him. "Don't think what could have been, or what could have you done. Focus on the future, and how to make things better. Don't torture yourself like that, it won't help anybody."

"There's also the fact... I didn't even get to know her," Naruto replied, as a single tear fell down his cheek. "Her name was Yugito Nii. She was a Jonin. Same age as Kurenai-sensei. And the Akatsuki will be slowly killing her by removing her Tailed Beast from within her as we speak."

"Naruto-kun," Hinata said. "I'm not going to say not to grieve, because grieving it's human. But try not to feel guilty over her death. You know, I used to feel like that regarding my father's death. Had I been stronger, maybe I could have helped defend the clan from the Uchihas and make a difference..."

"You were like eight at the time. No offense, but I doubt you'd make a difference," Naruto told her.

"I know. But the emotional, irrational part of my mind insisted otherwise," Hinata replied. "Just like it's happening with you."

A shadow passed above them. Looking above, they saw it was Fu and Hanabi, doing another lap above Konoha.

"Thanks for talking with me, Hime. Even if it's not much, I do feel a little better now. Though you'd better return to your flight lesson. I'd feel horrible if I distracted you from your training."

Hinata smiled. "Don't worry. You can talk to me whenever you want," the Hyuga Clan Head said, before saying her boyfriend goodbye with a kiss to the cheeks, and returning to the sky with her instructor and younger sister.

...

A few days later, Shizune and Shisui's apartment.

While Itachi was out doing his mission, Shizune and Shisui had asked Sasuke to spend some days with them until his older brother returned. While they knew that Sasuke was more than capable of taking care of his own, his Jonin-sensei had seen that the outcome of the mission had affected Sasuke far more than she had expected, and upon talking with her husband, they decided that it was better not to leave Sasuke to his own devices.

The younger Uchiha had turned down the offer at first, but after much insisting, he reluctantly agreed.

If there was something good that came out of that disastrous mission in the Land of Lightning was that Rin was able to recover Shisui's lost eye, and bring it back to Konoha. After that, Shizune wasted no time in placing her husband's lost eye in his empty eye socket. Naturally, Shisui's mood improved dramatically the next few days, the opposite of his younger cousin.

"Man, it feels so good not to rely on the Sharingan for depth perception anymore!" the formerly one eyed man happily claimed.

But much to Sasuke's chagrin, it seemed like Shisui's good mood was contagious. Or, more specifically, he wanted to infect Sasuke with his newfound cheerfulness and optimism -not that his cousin did not have obnoxious amounts of such traits before. And naturally, his wife was on his side, pressuring Sasuke to open up about his feelings.

"Sasuke, I know what you're feeling. I have failed my own share of missions in my life, and the guilt is unavoidable," Shisui insisted.

"And these cases, the best you can do is open up and talk to other people about it. I know that you're not to most extroverted person out there, but please make an effort."

"Yes, Sasuke. I was there. You gave your all in the mission, like you usually do. You have nothing to be ashamed of," Shizune continued.

"You're wrong, sensei," Sasuke replied. "I didn't give my all. I could have done better, but I was unable to. Shisui," Sasuke called his cousin, before locking eyes with him. "You knew there's a way to overcome the traumatic flashbacks every time you use the Mangekyo Sharingan, right?"

Shisui's good mood immediately evaporated, replaced by a similar gloom that plagued Sasuke.

"Obito told you, didn't he?" Shisui dejectedly asked.

"Yes, but that's irrelevant. The actual question is why neither Itachi nor you told me if you knew about it," Sasuke asked.

"First of all, tell me exactly what Obito told you," Shisui requested.

Sasuke complied, and told the oldest Uchiha about how learning to detach yourself from the guilt of the moment that awakened the Mangekyo Sharingan ends up pushing the flashbacks away.

"And can you blame me for not wanting you to know that?" Shisui asked.

"I can blame you for keeping information hidden from me," Sasuke stated. "I know it's a big price to pay, but had I complete control over the Mangekyo Sharingan, maybe this mission would have been a success."

"No mission is worth you losing away your humanity, Sasuke-kun," Shizune intervened. "Never forget that."

"Sasuke, trust me, you don't want to be like Obito. You might start with good intentions, but in the end you'll end up following the same dark road as him," Shisui seriously stated.

"That doesn't change that this is not the first time you and Itachi withhold information from me regarding the Sharingan," Sasuke spat back at him. "Do you trust me that little?"

Both Shisui and Shizune flinched upon hearing such an accusatory question. And deep down, Shisui had to admit there was a degree of truth there. He and Itachi had the best intentions. They didn't want Sasuke to be corrupted by the darkness that plagued the Uchiha clan. The Coup d'etat had been a real eye opener. But by not trusting Sasuke and giving keeping him in the dark they were risking losing him.

"I admit you're right, Sasuke," Shisui told him. "That's why I'm going to share you something Obito didn't tell you: there is a way to overcome the flashbacks that does not involve total detachment from your feelings."

"And you tell me that now?" Sasuke asked, still indignant.

"I didn't tell you because I thought that you knowing it wouldn't do you no good. I was afraid you'd misunderstood what I wanted to say and do something stupid," Shisui explained. "But you know what? It wasn't my place to decide that. You deserve to know it, and whatever you do afterwards with such knowledge, it will be on you."

Sasuke crossed his arms. "Alright then. I'm all ears."

Shisui opened his mouth to speak, but closed it again. He opened it again, but he didn't speak. He muttered something about this being far more complicated to put into words than he thought, before his eyes suddenly lit up, as if an idea dawned upon him.

"Shizune, this week I didn't pay Shunichi-san a visit, did I?" Shisui asked his wife.

"Unless you did it when I was out, then no, you didn't," Shizune replied.

"Alright then, I just had an idea. Sasuke, you're coming with me to visit an old acquaintance of mine," Shisui enthusiastically said, standing up. "Before you ask, yes, it has to do with the topic at hand. Knowing about Shuinichi-san will help you with your problems."

Sasuke raised an eyebrow. His doubtfulness was evident in his face, but decided to comply.

"Alright then, cousin. I'm seriously hoping this isn't some menaingless distraction or ruse to keep the truth from me," Sasuke warned in a rather icy tone.

"I'll swear on my life if it makes you feels better. Now come on."

...

Training Ground Seven

As usual, Kakashi's Animal Squad was training in their regular training ground whenever they didn't have any missions. What wasn't usual, however, was the intensity of the training that they were doing. Seeing the sheer power of Naruto and Fu, as well as their fight against the Akatsuki made them realize that while they were stronger than the average Chunin, they weren't strong enough to deal with the threat that was Akatsuki. And thus, they asked Kakashi to give them a more intense training.

"If that's what you want, I have no problem with it. Actually, I praise your desire to get better," the silver haired Jonin had said. "However, I don't want to hear you complain if I'm too hard on you. Killing or permanently crippling you are the only lines I won't cross for obvious reasons."

And boy, did the Copy Ninja stay true to his word. At first sight there was nothing that made you think Kakashi was anything out of the ordinary. His usually bored expression, relaxed pose and nonchalant attitude didn't raise any danger flags. But upon seeing him fighting, one could appreciate the saying "appearances are deceiving". And while his students had seen him fighting at full power against enemies, it wasn't the same as having to fight him themselves.

"Aburame Secret Art: Insect Tornado!"

A swarm of beetles emerged from under Shino's sleeves, and flew towards Kakashi with an angry buzz. Kakashi made several hand seals while quickly jumped backwards.

"Fire Release: Great Fireball Jutsu!"

Before Kakashi could exhale the fireball, Shino was already commanding his hive to move aside, in order to dodge the incoming fiery missile. However, the fireball still managed to kill many of his insects with residual heat. Jumping aside, the Aburame dodged the fire projectile.

"Now's my chance!" Tamaki thought, rushing towards Kakashi, before leaping at him with her claws facing forward. "Cross Slash!"

Despite appearing wide open, Kakashi easily dodged the cat kunoichi's assault. Undeterred, Tamaki continued her assault, delivering vicious swipes, that the Copy Ninja easily dodged.

"Damn Sharingan!" Tamaki cursed.

Kakashi then closed his left eye, and continued dodging her attacks just as easily.

"As you can see, no, it's not the Sharigan. You're too slow, and your technique lacks finesse," Kakashi calmly but sternly said, before grabbing Tamaki by her wrists, and hurled her against a tree. Wiping his hands, he started to look around. "And where the other could be...?"

The ground briefly shook for second. Most people wouldnd't have sensed it, but Kakashi wasn't "most people". His hand was coated in electricity the moment Kiba burst from underground.

"Got y-"

"And there he is," Kakashi happily said, as he impaled the Inuzuka runt through the heart with his signature ability. "Lightning Blade!"

After piercing his chest "Kiba" crumbled into many smaller rocks, as the real Kiba and Akamaru were leaping at Kakashi from behind. Though as this was happening, Kakashi's hands were flying through seals at an inhuman speed.

"Wind Release: Great Breakthrough!"

Turning around, Kakashi blew a powerful wind blast at the attacking ninja and dog, pushing them backwards. They immediately got back on their feet, but rather than attacking, Kiba shot his sensei an indignant look. "What the hell, man, a Lightning Blade? What if that was the real me? You would have killed me!"

"Oh, you worry too much, Kiba," Kakashi replied in an infuriating cheerful tone, giving him his trademark eye-smile. "I was one hundred percent sure that wasn't the real you. I know your fighting style too well to let you make me think you would attack from underground, and without Akamaru."

"So you're saying I'm too predictable," an unamused Kiba replied, frowned.

"No, of course not!" Kakashi cheerfully reassured. "... actually yes, that's what I'm saying. The only way you could be more predictable was if you told me beforehand what you were going to do. Something your movements already tell me."

"Kakashi-sensei has flat out told you an area of your fighting style that needs improvement," Shino interjected. "You should take his advice as it is rather than an insult."

"Actually, that goes for all of you," Kakashi pointed out. "All of you seem to be pigeonholed into a very tight fighting style, and your enemies will catch wind of that. You need to find a way to improve your styles and change them to adapt to multiple situations. Though I admit that this is in part my fault for not training you as good as I could. But make sure such thing is about to change."

"Uh, hello," a new voice said.

The members of the animal squad turned around, and saw Rin Nohara, looking a little bashful, walking towards them. Tamaki welcomed her with a bright smile.

"Rin, hello!" the cat kunoichi happily greeted her. "Did you come here to train with us?"

"That would be awesome!" Kiba agreed, with Akamaru barking in agreement.

"I'm afraid I didn't come here for training," Rin said, rubbing her arm a little. "If I'm interrupting your training, I can come in another moment."

"It's okay, we were going to take a break," Kakashi stated. "So, what can we do for you?"

Rin sighed a little, and swallowed. This was going to be a bit hard to tell.

"Kakashi... during my latest mission, I fought against Obito," Rin revealed.

Even within his mask, everybody appreciated how Kakashi's mood changed, despite his best efforts to maintain a stoic expression.

"Go on," he said.

"During the fight, Sasuke-san discovered how his intangibility power works," Rin began. "His Mangekyo Sharingan is linked to a pocket dimension. He can send and release objects, up to people, inside. He can also send parts of his body to that dimension in order to avoid damage, that's how he turns intangible."

"That's a very valuable information to have," Tamaki praised.
."Sasuke-kun did a good job, as usual."

"I think I'm starting to see what you're going to say next," Kakashi guessed.

Rin nodded. "I know you have a Mangekyo Sharingan. Obito told me he awakened his when he saw you killing me with your Chidori. Meaning that you must have awakened it as well."

Kakashi remained silent, before he let out a sigh. "Yes, you're right. I have a Mangekyo Sharingan. But if Obito told you about it, then you probably know why I don't use it much. Besides the fact that it leaves me pretty drained due my lack of Six Paths chakra."

"Yes, but you have Obito's other eye. Logic says that your Mangekyo Sharingan should be linked to that pocket dimension as well. If we use it to our advantage, we might be able to counter his biggest trump card," Rin insisted.

"I'm trying to find holes in that reasoning," Kakashi said, as he rubbed the back of his head. "But I don't see any."

"You don't want to use that power, don't you?" Rin asked. "You don't want to relive my death like that."

"I try to tell myself that you're alive and well, and that your death is the equivalent of a bad dream but... it's not enough. The pain, the anguish, it still feels so real..." Kakashi started. "But if there's a chance I can help bring Obito down, I'll do it."

"I'm glad to hear it," Rin smiled. "Though, I want you to know that I know this is painful, and I wouldn't ask you to do it if there were other options."

"It's okay, I'm old enough to know the kind of stuff this job entails," Kakashi replied. "And given that you literally died for the sake of the village, how could I refuse?"

...

Downtown Konoha

Sasuke followed Shisui through the crowded streets of Konoha. Hands buried inside his pockets, the younger Uchiha had a sullen expression, trying to figure out how this mysterious friend of Shisui was going to be of any help with their matter at hand, if he wasn't an Uchiha.

"You know Sasuke, since you know me, you probably think I'm a pretty cool guy," Shisui began, his cheerful attitude being the complete opposite to Sasuke's. "Someone charismatic, kind, friendly, skilled..."

"Not to mention humble," Sasuke deadpanned, as he rolled his eyes.

"Yes, that too," Shisui happily agreed, oblivious to Sasuke's sarcasm. Or pretending to be oblivious, with Shisui it was hard to tell.

"The thing is, I wasn't always like that," Shisui admitted. Sasuke noticed his voice suddenly losing its usual warmth. "When I was younger, I was arrogant and full of myself. Basically, a standard Uchiha. Even more, given that people praised me for my skills, calling me a genius among a clan of geniuses."

"What does that have to do with anything?" an annoyed Sasuke asked.

"You'll see, be patient," Shisui replied. "Anyway, back when I was a brat, Minato Namikaze was a rising star among the Jonin. The fact that he came from a civilian family inspired many kids of similar backgrounds to become a ninja and join the Academy. Among them was a boy called Shuinichi. And just like the Yellow Flash, he was incredibly gifted for a civilian kid.

"Naturally, the two of us butted heads many times and became heated rivals. We competed for the spot of Rookie of the Year, which eventually went to him. Neither him nor the other Uchihes let me live that down."

As Shisui talked, Sasuke realized that they were leaving the urban area of Konoha, and heading somewhere else.

"Uh, Shisui, are you sure this is the right way?" Sasuke asked.

Shisui ignored Sasuke's question and continued talking about his childhood.

"Even after graduating and being assigned to different teams, we still tried to outdo the other. Sometimes, even at the cost of the mission. Must say, I'm not especially proud of my attitude back then," Shisui admitted, chuckling a little while rubbing the back of his head.

"Anyway, after the Third Ninja War ended, being two of the strongest Chunin Konoha had, the two of us were dispatched to deal with some Kumo ninjas that were still giving us some trouble in the border. Naturally, we were going to use this mission as another opportunity to outdo the other.

"We located the enemy ninjas and engaged them. However, things didn't go as planned: thanks to faulty information, there was an ANBU captain among the Kumo ninjas. Even if going back and return with reinforcements would be the most sensible course of action, we continued the fight. Shunichi called dibs on the captain while I dealt with the underlings.

"However, despite his talent and skill, an ANBU captain was too much for Shunichi. He was quickly overwhelmed, and called for my help. I decided to drag my fight on in order to make him suffer a little and teach him some humility -as if I was any better-. I could have ended my fight much quicker and provide him with help. Between the two of us, we could have defeated that captain."

Sasuke then saw that they were heading towards the Konoha Cemetery.

"Shunichi was killed before I could lend him my help," Shisui finished, his voice now completely devoid of all his usual warmth and joviality. "I could have helped him, and I didn't. It wasn't that Kumo ANBU who killed him, but me, even if indirectly. That revelation, and the subsequent guilt and despair, made me awake the Mangekyo Sharingan."

Sasuke was left speechless. He was completely unaware such side of his obnoxiously cheerful cousin even existed. He was really good at masking his emotions. Guess it was a proof that not everything is what it seems and that a ninja must learn to see through deception.

The cemetery was mostly empty. Sasuke followed Shisui until he stopped in front of a grave he guessed was that of Shuinichi. The name on the tombstone confirmed it.

"I try to pay Shuinichi a visit every week, at the very least. To never let myself forget what my haughtiness caused. Heh, it's a good thing his family doesn't come here often. As you can imagine, they aren't exactly fond of me, and the Uchiha Insurrection didn't made things any better," Shisui sadly chuckled. "The Uchiha Insurrection. Even my failure to stop that it's only second to this one."

"How can you say that? Not to disrespect Shuinichi's memory, but he was just one person. Lots of people died in the insurrection, and its effects are still felt today," Sasuke stated.

"Because, even if I fail, I did try my all in stopping it," Shisui replied. His fist clenched. "Sasuke, life is paved with failures, and nothing will change that. But as long as we give our all, there's nothing to be ashamed of."

"Now you're sounding like Naruto," Sasuke pointed out, sounding mildly annoyed.

Shisui shrugged. "Eh, I'm married to his older sister," he nonchalantly said, before his mood turned somber again. "But with Shuinichi, I didn't. I let my arrogance and jealousy get the better of me, and somebody else paid the price. That's why, from that moment onwards, I vowed to be not only the best ninja I could be, but also the best person. It wasn't easy, but I was able to change myself for the better. And to this day, I use the power his death awakened in order to save as many lives as possible.

"And by honoring him, and being the best I can be as both as a ninja and as an individual, over time, the flashbacks I suffered from using the Mangekyo Sharingan stopped ."

Naturally, this did draw Sasuke's attention. "So that's it? That's what I have to do? Be a better person?"

Shisui shook his head. "You're not getting it, Sasuke. Not the part about being a better person -please always strive for that-. In order to overcome the flashbacks, you need to learn to forgive yourself."

"But how I can do that?" Sasuke asked. "I asked Naruto and his family for forgiveness. They said there was nothing to forgive and that they understood why I did that. But it's not enough. The guilt persists. The pain persists."

"I'm afraid I can't help you with that, Sasuke. At least not more than what I already did. While we had help and support from others, both Itachi and I had to walk this road on our own. And so you will have to find yourself what you have to do until you can forgive yourself," Shisui finished. "I'm sorry if this wasn't the answer you were looking for. Though I can still tell you this: do you know what they say about a broken vase?"

"Yes. That even if you glue the pieces together, the cracks will always be there, to remind us that there was a time it was broken," Sasuke replied.

Shisui nodded. "True. But what most people don't realize is that, if properly glued, the vase can still be used as before, cracks and all. You might have some cracks, Sasuke. But that doesn't make you any worse person or ninja. Never forget that."

"I... thank you, Shisui," Sasuke replied, sounding genuinely touched. "Thank you for telling me this."

Shisui smiled. "Don't sweat it."

...

Unknown Location

In a dark place full of light blue blocks of varying sizes, a spiraling portal opened. From it, Kakashi Hatake came out. He briefly inspected his surroundings -there wasn't much of interest to see- and nodded.

"So, this is where I send all that stuff with the Kamui," Kakashi said, before he disappeared in a cloud of smoke.

Another spiraling portal opened, this time, it was Kakashi again, accompanied by Rin Nohara.

"And you never thought in sending a clone until now?" an incredulous Rin asked, as her feet touched a large concrete platform. Or what she thought was concrete.

"Truth be told, I was too afraid to know what this place could be," Kakashi admitted. "So, is this the place you were when Obito abducted you with his Kamui?"

"Yeah, pretty much," Rin confirmed. She then looked around, just to be extra sure. "Well, maybe the blocks were arranged in a different way, but it was pretty much the same."

"I see. So if I send somebody here -or just myself-, we'd be able to hit Obito whenever he tries to use his intangibility," Kakashi said.

"Yeah, that's the idea," Rin replied.

"Well thought," Kakashi praised. "The problem is, though, that we don't know when Obito is going to appear. Especially if he realizes that I'm the key to counter his ability."

"Yes. Last time he personally took part in the jinchuriki's capture, but from what it appears it's never the same. Next time they may send other Akatsuki to do the job," Rin stated.

"In that case, we'll have to guess when Obito will show up again," Kakashi said.

"I have a good idea about that. From what you told me, he's been trying to abduct the other half of the Nine Tails three times in the past. After so many failures, it had to be something personal for him. Not to mention that with the other half under his control, he might feel emboldened," Rin explained.

"So Obito will come for Naruto," Kakashi replied, with a sigh. "Guess we'll have to keep our eyes open when that happens."

"Indeed," Rin agreed, then she looked around, before rubbing her arms. "This place gives me the creeps. I think we tested it enough. Can you get us out of here?"

"Eh... you see..." Kakashi began, as he sheepishly smiled from under his mask, while rubbing the back of his head. "I know how to send things into this dimension, but I haven't tried taking them out."

"Kakashi!" Rin yelled.

"Kidding, kidding! I know what to do!" Kakashi replied, holding his hands in defense. "... I think."

...

Training Ground Nine

In the Medical Squad's usual training ground, a sparring was taking place between two members of the Uzumaki clan.

"Earth Release: Mud Trap!"

The grass around Karin started to change into mud. The bespectacled kunoichi made several backflips in order to avoid the spreading mud, as well as putting some distance between herself and her opponent.

"You know, you won't do anything by dodging alone," Naruto taunted with a smirk of superiority.

Karin replied to Naruto's smirk with one of her own. "Good thing these element is so good for ranged attacks," Karin said, as she pulled out several shuriken. "Wind Release: Vacuum Wave!"

Karin tossed the shuriken forward, which were covered in an aura of wind that made them both spin and fly much faster, while increasing their range.

The Uzumaki cousins have been teaching each other the basics of Wind and Earth release, elements each one was expert and the other wanted to learn. In Naruto's case, Earth Release was the only element he had to master, while Karin wanted to learn Wind in order to have a counter against Earth's natural weakness, Lightning, as well as helping herself into obtaining a promotion.

After that, they had the idea of hosting sparring matches in which Naruto and Karin were limited to Earth and Wind respectively, in what ninjutsu entailed, so they could ease themselves into the new elements. So far, it worked really well and helped them master what they had learned from each other.

"Not bad, nee-chan, not bad," Naruto praised, as his hands formed hand seals in return, before slamming them into the ground. "Earth Release: Earth Style Wall!"

A wall of earth started to rise in front of Naruto. But much to his horror, it stopped midway.

"The hell!?" the blond asked indignantly, before seeing the wind-enhanced shuriken flying at him. "Oh shit!"

The steel stars hit their mark, and if Naruto didn't have a Body Replacement prepared in advance, he could have suffered serious injuries.

"I think I take this round," Karin cheered, pumping her fist into the air. "I think I'm better at Wind than you're at Earth."

"Of course," the real Naruto said, as he emerged from behind a group of trees. "The more elements you master, the harder it becomes. Anyway, I feel like taking a break. How about you?"

"Sure," Karin replied.

Both Uzumaki decided to rest under the shade of a large tree, setting into a comfortable silence. However, as they rested, thoughts started to invade Karin's head. Thoughts she has been trying to silence or push away, but were now coming back. Specially since she was now in her cousin's presence.

She couldn't take it anymore, and decided it was time to talk about it. Plus Naruto was the ideal person to discuss such topic.

"Nii-san?" Karin asked.

"Yes?" Naruto replied.

"You know my latest mission, right?" Karin asked, stammering a little.

Through her chakra sense, Karin could feel how Naruto's mood dampened. She didn't want to poke such fresh wounds, but it was inevitable.

"Yeah. What about it?" Naruto asked, trying to keep a neutral tone.

"You see, since you were in Taki and we couldn't afford waiting for you to get back, Hokage-sama and Shizune-sensei planned to use me as the vessel of the other half of the Nine Tails," Karin stated.

"I didn't know that," Naruto admitted.

"And as you can guess, we failed," Karin told him.

Naruto nodded. "Don't worry. Nobody expected you to win against somebody that commands a Tailed Beast."

"That's not the problem," Karin said, her lips quivering a little. She could sense Naruto's confusion. "Despite our defeat and everything that it entailed... I was glad we failed."

"What?" Naruto shouted. She feared this reaction. "Explain."

"I was afraid of becoming a jinchuriki. So, so afraid," Karin confessed, trying to hold back her tears. Albeit they weren't tears of fear anymore, but of shame. "And not just because of the thought of having a demonic beast living inside my body. When I saw Obito taking Yugito away, I thought, 'that could have been me'. All jinchuriki have massive targets painted in their backs, and the idea of being the prey of a dangerous criminal organization... my blood freeze of just thinking about it."

Naruto didn't say anything, and let Karin's words carefully sink in. He had to admit the redhead was rather brave for showing such a vulnerable side of her, though on the other side he couldn't help but feel little sympathy for her apparent cowardice.

"You must think I'm a coward," Karin continued, as if reading his mind. "But... I just don't want to go to that life again. I can't."

"What do you mean?" Naruto asked.

"I think I already told you about my childhood. Until I was eight, I never knew a permanent home. It was always going from one place to another, hiding our identities, not being able to trust any strangers, because so many people wanted both me and my mom for our genetic abilities... when we settled in Konoha, I thought that we finally left that life behind. But then, when we discussed the possibility of becoming a jinchuriki, I realized the implications besides the obvious one," Karin explained, as tears streamed down her face. She removed her glasses in order to rub her eyes. "Sorry, given what you are, you probably don't think too high of me right now."

"No, it's okay. I don't have the same perspective since I've been a jinchuriki literally from the day I was born," Naruto replied. "This life is all what I know, so I can't tell what a normal person must feel when he or she is forced to become like me. And I don't blame you nor anybody else for being afraid."

"Still... I can't help but feel awful for letting myself be so cowardly. I'm a ninja, for Kami's sake! I should be able to make a sacrifice for the village that make so much for both me and my mom!" Karin protested, as her fist hit the grass.

"But you were willing to become the other half's container, right?" Naruto asked. "Shizune told me what happened. She was going to seal him inside you, when he suddenly woke up and everything went to hell."

"Yeah, but-"

"No buts," Naruto firmly interrupted. "Being afraid in your situation was natural. Yet you managed to keep that fear under wraps and do what was necessary. Don't blame yourself for the failure of that mission."

"But if you feel that's not enough, then listen to me: you might be one of the few people on earth who can contain the Nine Tails, but you're under no obligation to do so. Hell, you don't even need to be a ninja to begin with. Given your background, it's very selfless of you to take such path," Naruto praised.

"My mom said it's important we show appreciation for the village that took us in. Plus being a ninja sounded kind of cool," the redhead admitted.

"See? There you have. You're not selfish nor coward. It's natural to feel overwhelmed under certain circumstances," Naruto said.

"If you say so," she replied, before smiling a little. "Thank you for telling me this."

"Anytime," Naruto said, smiling back.

...

Undisclosed Location, That Night

Kabuto was sitting on a large tree branch, his back resting against the trunk. Unable to stifle it, a yawn escaped his mouth. He hated to do these kind of errands. At first he always felt a bit uneasy due the other part's potential treachery -there were many Sound Ninjas hidden around in case of foul play- . But after some time, he always ended up boring.

"I don't know why we even bother with scheduling an hour if these guys are always late," the silver haired medic-nin complained, and he looked up at the night sky.

Until he heard it. The sound of leaves rustling. His reflexes kicked in, jumping to his feet as his hand pulled a kunai from one of his weapon holsters, just when an individual landed in front of him. A figure wearing a black hooded cloak that hid his whole body, while his face was obscured by a mask similar to those wore by Konoha's ANBU.

"Sorry for being late," the masked figure said, revealing her feminine voice. "Kabuto Yakushi, I presume."

"You guess right," the bespectacled ninja replied. "You're not the usual contact."

"I'm new," the woman replied, as if that explained everything.

"If that's the case, then you'll know the password," Kabuto told her in a challenging tone.

"White orchids. Three birds flying above an icy mountain. Red sunset in the sea," the woman stated.

Kabuto couldn't help but smile. "Password correct."

"You're too trusting. I could have killed the actual messenger and force them to give me the password," the masked woman replied.

Kabuto couldn't help but chuckle. "Trust me, I find that very unlikely. Anyway, what news do you have pertaining the jinchuriki?"

"The jinchuriki of the Seven Tails, Fu, remains in Konoha. While she's allowed plenty of freedom, and the village does little to hide her presence, neither her nor those close to her suspect a team of Konoha ANBU watching every one of her moves," the woman began.

Kabuto nodded. "As expected. Jiraiya-sama is no fool. Capturing her will much harder this time around. But knowing her location is still valuable intel. What else?"

"You're going to like this. Apparently, Kirigakure ninja had finally located Utakata, the jinchuriki of the Six Tails," the woman stated.

Kabuto couldn't help but smile at such good news. "That's a very valuable information, indeed."

"That's not all. We know they send a letter for Konoha asking for help. Apparently, they want to borrow the jinchuriki of the Nine Tails to get close to Utakata and convince him to return to the safety of Kiri."

"So Akatsuki has the chance of capturing two jinchuriki at once. Excellent. Any other news on the other jinchuriki?" Kabuto asked.

The masked woman shook her head. "We found the jinchuriki of the Eight Tails has vanished. We suspect that after Yugito's abduction, the Raikage sent him to a hidden refuge in order to keep him safe," the woman continued. "We still don't know where the jinchuriki of the Four Tails is."

"Oh well, guess it was too much to ask. Still, information on Utakata was vital to obtain, so thank you for that," Kabuto said, making a slight head bow. "If there's nothing else to discuss, I think our meeting should come to an end,"

The woman nodded, silently agreeing, and both she and the Oto ninja left in opposite directions.

OMAKE: Itachi's Torture Methods

After the effect of the paralytic genjutsu disappeared, Itachi tied Yudachi to a chair. The Ame Genin, however, didn't show any hints of being intimidated by the Konoha Jonin.

"I don't know what you plan to do with me," Yudachi defiantly said. "But it won't work! You won't get any information from me!"

"That's what everybody says, until they find out what I plan to do," Itachi's Sharingan changed shape to a curved, triple bladed shuriken against a red background. "Tsukuyomi."

The two ninja were transported to a nightmarish, red and black landscape, which would fit into the popular description of Hell. Suddenly, a large, flat screen TV appeared in front of the Ame Genin. The TV turned itself on and started to play something.

"Let your torture begin. Do you recognize this series?" Itachi asked his prisoner.

"Yeah, it's Haruto! The shonen about a young ninja who wants to prove everybody his worth. What, you plan to use this series to torture me?" Yudachi asked, laughing a little. "Yeah, I know this series has some bad rep, but I think it's pretty good. So tough luck, hater."

"Watch closely," Itachi added. "Don't you recognize this opening?"

Yudachi had a bad feeling, as he tried to recall what season this opening belonged to. All trace of color left his face when he remembered the answer.

"No... no! It's can't be! It's-"

"The almost one hundred episode long filler season set between Parts I and II," Itachi finished Yudachi's sentence All the bravado the Genin had displayed was all but gone, replaced by sheer, primal terror. "Enjoy seventy two hours of mediocre writing, forgettable characters, cheap animation and nonsensical yet predictable plots."

"No! NO!
NOOO OOOOO!"

Author's Note: It's been a while since my last Omake, isn't it? I hope you guys enjoyed it. Though, to be fair, I acknowledge that the filler hell had some hidden jewels among the garbage, such as the Bikouchu arc (which left quite a lasting impression on the Naruhina side of the fandom) or the Yakumo Kurama arc.

That scene with Shisui and Sasuke had been in my head for literally months, and you have no idea how glad I was when I was able to put it on proverbial paper. I always love how when a somewhat cheerful comedic character reveal more about themselves and you can see that there's more to them that meets the eye. Though in many cases it's revealed that the cheerful attitude is a façade to hide their inner turmoil, which is something I don't really like. Shisui's funny and easygoing personality is genuine here.

Thanks to Ookami88 for betareading this chapter.

As hinted by the last scene, the next arc will be about the Six Tails Jinchuriki. While you wait, leave your thoughts on this episode in a review. Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Trail of the Six Tails

Author's Note: Here we are with another chapter of Son of the Sannin, beginning a new mini-arc, starring UtaKata! You know, I watched the filler arc about him in order to write this arc, and have to say, while it wasn't bad, despite being titled "Six Tails Unleashed" it was more about Hotaru than UtaKata, with the latter playing more of a supporting role to Hotaru, rather than the other way around. Still, I liked Hotaru enough as to include her in the story. Now, enjoy!

Chapter 69:

Trail of the Six Tails

or

Being stubborn isn't something unique to Naruto

Hokage's Tower

As usual, Jiraiya was in his office, accompanied by a couple clones, doing the work his position demanded. Somebody then knocked the door. Without waiting for the Hokage to answer, a lizard-masked ANBU entered the office, carrying several scrolls.

"Hokage-sama, these are today's letters addressed to you specifically," the ANBU said, placing the stack of scrolls on the table, and then he picked one. "But you should read this one first. It's labeled as 'urgent', and carries the personal seal of the Mizukage."

Jiraiya nodded, and after breaking the seal, he unfurled and read the scroll. His eyes started to widen as he read its contents.

"Quickly, find my son and his teammates! Tell him I have an urgent mission to them!" Jiraiya asked.

The ANBU nodded. "Yes, Hokage-sama!" he said, before vanishing.

...

Sarutobi State

The residence of the Sarutobi Clan wasn't something the Assault Squad was used to visit. Still, in just a few months, they dropped by so often, everybody felt as if they've been there their whole lives. The reason for this, naturally, was that their sensei was now a member of the clan.

"I thought that nobody had bigger place than the Hyugas, but this one is pretty big as well," Naruto pointed out, as he took some moments to admire the state while they walked across the front patio.

"The Sarutobi Clan is one of the largest clans of Konoha. Naturally, they'll need a big place to house all of their members," Haku replied.

"Even then, I like this place. It feels far more livelier than the Hyuga State," Hinata pointed out.

"Yeah, People here greet you with a smile. It's like they don't have a stick up their butts," Naruto pointed out, before shooting a quick glance to her girlfriend. "No offense."

"None taken," Hinata replied with a hand wave. "Though, you know, sometimes I wonder if I would have been able to make you fall for me if I was as stiff and overly formal as the rest of my clansmen."

"If that was the case, I doubt you would have been interested in me to begin with," Naruto pointed out. "But I'm sure you would have. You still have plenty of other admirable qualities."

For a second, Hinata could swear she saw Naruto's eyes locked onto her chest.

"Oh, look. Kurenai-sensei's there," Haku noticed.

And indeed, their Jonin sensei was leaving the main building just as they were about to head in. The Genjutsu Mistress was now wearing a sleeveless red cotton dress over a green short-sleeved t-shirt. Her stomach had now a noticeable bump.

The former leader of the Assault Squad smiled upon seeing her students. It wasn't hard to tell why they were here.

"Naruto, Hinata, Haku! What a nice surprise," the red eyed woman warmly greeted them. "Did you come here to see me?"

The three of them nodded in unison.

"Indeed. But I see that you're about to leave. Do you have any chores or tasks to do? Because if this is a bad moment, we can come another moment," Hinata said, in an apologetic tone.

"Yes, I was going to leave, but we can spend some time together," Kurenai suggested. "If you want, you can come with me to the place I'm heading."

"Sounds nice," Haku agreed. "Where are you going?"

"First, I'm going to stop at the Yamanaka Flower Shop to buy some flowers. Then I'm heading to the cemetery."

Her three students blinked in surprise.

"Uh, are you sure you want us to go with you? I mean, cemeteries aren't the kind of places you go with friends," Naruto uneasily said, as he rubbed the back of his neck.

"On the contrary. I think they're places when one needs the support of your friends and family the most," Kurenai countered. "Since in those places, we're at our most vulnerable."

Her three students looked pensive upon those words sunk in. They always thought that when one was with their deceased loved ones, it was a moment of personal privacy, not to be shared with other people.

"Besides, that way I can talk you about a certain somebody I would have loved for you to meet," Kurenai said.

"Alright then," Naruto said with a shrug. "Let's go then."

"Since we're at it, I might visit Father's grave as well," Hinata said, before she rubbed her arm. "I admit that I don't pay him as many visits as I should."

Their first stop was the Yamanaka Flower Shop to buy some flowers. At the counter was Ino's mother, who, after some light talking, told the members of the Assault Squad about Ino's recent streak of doing solo missions, much to her sensei and teammate's concerns.

"I'll tell her about it the next time I see her," Hinata had promised Mrs. Yamanaka.

Naruto's reaction, or lack of thereof, didn't go unnoticed by his perceptive girlfriend, as if somehow Ino's behavior didn't surprise him. She made a note to ask Naruto if he knew something about Ino. After pushing those thoughts to the back of her mind, Hinata bought some carnations to leave at her father's grave. Carnations meant admiration for a loved one and acknowledging their great deeds, something befitting for her proud father. She saw Kurenai ordering some white roses, which symbolized innocence, and made her wonder who was this person she was going to visit.

"Hey, Hinata, I was going to buy some flowers to leave at my biological parents' grave. Do you have any suggestions?" Naruto asked. "Though something different from yours. I don't want to copy you."

"Try gladiolus. They symbolize strength, honor and loving memories," Hinata replied. "I'm sure that's how both you and everybody else remember the Fourth Hokage and his wife."

Naruto smiled at her suggestion. "Thank you, I'll do that."

In the end, Haku was the only one who didn't buy any flowers. He explained them that after his father killed his mother, and he killed his father in self defense, he left their hometown fearing for his life, and thus he doesn't know what has been of their bodies.

"Have you thought about them?" Kurenai asked. "Maybe return to the Land of Water, and see if at least they were given proper burial?"

"Sometimes," Haku said, sounding oddly neutral. "But I was so little when they went away... I have no lost love for my father, but I don't even remember what my mother used to look like."

"That's so sad," Hinata emphatically said.

"I guess it is. But it's not so bad anymore. I do have a new home and a new family. Yugao-san and Hayate-san took care of me when I came to live here, and there's Zabuza-sama. They're as much family to me as my mother was, even if we aren't related by blood."

A few minutes later, they arrived at the cemetery. While Kurenai, accompanied by Haku, went to visit her father's grave, Hinata and Naruto went to visit the grave of Hiashi Hyuga.

"Do you think in your father?" Naruto asked.

"Sometimes," Hinata replied. "I'm twice as old as I was back when he was taken away from us. And Hanabi-chan hardly remembers him. Can't blame her for that, since he was not even four."

"I do have some vague memories of him," Naruto told her. "He looked quite stern and imposing. He made quite the first impression when I first met him."

"Yes, father was strict. Though he could be loving and understanding as well," Hinata replied. "I guess he had to appear strong in order to maintain order in the clan."

"Wonder what he would have thought had he seen your speech when you were appointed the new clan head," Naruto said, chuckling a little upon recalling the memory.

"I like to think he'd be proud of me," Hinata said, a bit unsure. "He was a man of high expectations. But I'm sure that he would have loved to see the clan united."

"He would be more than just proud," Naruto added.

After spending a few more minutes, the couple moved to the graves of Minato Namikaze and Kushina Uzumaki. Naruto placed half of the flowers on each grave, and stood there without saying anything.

"I admit that I should have visit them more as well. But hey, I didn't even get to know them, so it's kind of hard," Naruto said, trying to sound justified, before his face softened. "Still, they were my birth parents and died to protect me. Plus I'm their only living relative. They deserve as much."

"Jiraiya-sama used to be the Fourth's sensei. Did he tell you about him?" Hinata asked.

"Yeah, plenty of stuff. He was a pretty cool guy and a badass ninja. The ideal all ninjas should strive for," Naruto said, chuckling a little. "Or at least, that's what dad used to say."

"There's also Kakashi-sensei and Rin, who studied under him," Hinata reminded her boyfriend.

"Yeah, I asked Rin a few thing about him. Makes me wish I was able to meet him," Naruto sotly replied, his voice laced with some melancholy. "I can't believe it was one of his students who caused his death. I could never picture neither myself or any of you guys doing something like that to Kurenai-sensei."

"From what Rin told us, Obito's case was far more complex than what we think," Hinata replied, and realizing that she sounded like she was defending Obito, she quickly added: "Not to say that's an excuse for all the atrocities he did. It's just that... we like to think we know both ourselves and those close to us, but everybody can change or do something out of character in a dire situation."

"Still, how one does go from wanting to be Hokage to setting a Tailed Beast loose in the village and not caring how many people die?" Naruto questioned.

Hinata placed a comforting hand on Naruto's shoulder. "I don't know. But I think it would be best if never found out."

"Guess you're right," Naruto admitted, before something caught his attention. "Oh look, there are Haku and Kurenai-sensei!"

"Let's go meet with them then," Hinata said, removing her hand from Naruto's shoulder.

The group of four gathered together, and the raven haired woman lead them to a certain grave in the most recent part of the graveyard. Apparently, it was from the heir of a certain clan, whose symbol was a wing segmented in three parts as if there were feathers. Kurenai's three students read the name in the tombstone.

HERE LIES YAKUMO KURAMA

LAST MEMBER OF THE KURAMA CLAN

"So, a clan died with this girl," Haku noted, grimly realizing that he could have been in a very similar predicament.

"How did you know this girl, Kurenai-sensei?" Hinata asked.

"The Kurama was a clan specialized in genjutsu, thanks to their Bloodline Limit, which made their illusions so lifelike, the body would react as if it was the real thing. For example, a genjutsu of fire would cause actual burns in the skin," Kurenai explained.

"Amazing," Naruto gushed upon knowing such a bloodline exists. Or existed.

"However, not all members manifest this bloodline. In fact, this bloodline hasn't been manifested since the times of Hashirama. This caused the clan to dwindle in both size and importance over the decades. Until Yakumo was born, and much to their parents joy, she had the bloodline. However, there were complications. She had some health problems, and had a lot of trouble keeping her powers under control.

"That's why Hokage-sama tasked me to personally train this girl -it was a year or so before I became your sensei-. I made a lot of progress with her, and her health improved thanks to a treatment developed by Tsunade-sama, and had hopes that she could become a Genin. However, before she could be examined, tragedy struck; her house was caught in a massive fire, killing both her and her parents." Kurenai finished her explanation.

Kurenai's words were followed by a long moment of silence as her students absorbed them.

"While the charred corpses of her parents were found, there was no trace of her body," Kurenai stated. "At first I had hopes that maybe she escaped and was alive somewhere out there, but in the end I was forced to admit the truth. Yakumo and her clan were gone forever."

"How is that you never told us about this other student of yours, Kurenai-sensei?" Naruto asked. Though he sounded more curious rather than indignant.

"Yakumo was my tragedy, not yours. I didn't see the need to get you involved in this," Kurenai replied.

"Even then, I'm glad you told us about her," Hinata chimed in. "That way, more people will remember her. Even if we didn't get to meet her when she was alive."

Kurenai smiled a little. "Yes, that's a way of seeing it, I guess."

At that moment, a lizard-masked ANBU appeared before them.

"Naruto Uzumaki, Hinata Hyuga, Haku Yuki. Hokage-sama requires your presence for an urgent mission of utmost importance," the ANBU told them, his tone being stoic but at the same time conveying urgency.

Kurenai's three students exchanged knowing glances, realizing what such mission was going to be.

"Guess we'll have to continue our talk another time, Kurenai-sensei," Naruto apologized.

"Don't worry. I know that when duty calls, you must heed said call. Come on, go," the Genjutsu Mistress said.

Her three students quickly waved her goodbye before leaving for the Hokage Tower.

...

Hokage's Tower

The three younger members of the Assault Squad were in the Hokage's office, standing in front of Jiraiya, sitting in his desk. His face sported a serious look, and was holding a scroll in his hand. The crest of Kirigakure was visible on the scroll.

"A few moments ago, this message arrived from the Mizukage," Jiraiya began, showing them the furred scroll. "She said that her forces had located the jinchuriki of the Six Tails, Utakata."

Naruto instantly beamed the moment the news reached his ears.

"That's great!" Naruto beamed. However, his expression turned serious the moment a certain thought sunk in. "But she didn't write that message just to tell us that Utakata is safe, right?"

Jiraiya shook his head. "She send a team of ANBU lead by two of her swordsmen in order to retrieve and escort him back to the village, but he refused. A fight ensued, and eventually the ANBU were forced to retire, since they couldn't risk harming him in any way. Upon seeing the outcome of the mission, Mei realized that maybe the word of another jinchuriki might be make Utakata see reason and return to the safety of Kirigakure."

"And that's where I enter the picture, right?" the blond guessed.

Jiraiya nodded. "Yes. According to this message, Utakata and some girl that travels with him are currently in a place called Nagi Island. The Kirigakure team will be waiting for you," the Hokage pulled out another small scroll and tossed it to Naruto, who easily caught it. "This scroll contain additional information on the mission. Now that you know the essentials, you should hurry and head towards Nagi Island as soon as possible. You will take several days to arrive there, and it's possible that by that time Utakata might have left. If that happens, the Kiri ninja will follow him as to not lose his track. Not to mention the constant threat of the Akatsuki."

The three of them nodded, but it was Naruto who replied. "Leave it in our hands, dad. Akatsuki will go home empty handed this time around!"

After bidding Naruto farewell and hoping he had luck on his mission, Jiraiya returned to work. Given that there were no scheduled meetings for that day, Jiraiya decided to try to finish the paperwork for the day as soon as possible with the help of Shadow Clones, and then spend some time writing the next Icha Icha novel -he was way behind schedule, but he was sure his fans would understand- and after that, do something with Tsunade and the kids.

The twins' kidnapping attempt made Jiraiya realize how easily somebody could take your loved ones away from you, and he wasn't going to let anything to enjoy every moment he could with his wife and kids.

At that moment, somebody knocked the door. Jiraiya suppressed a groan, he wasn't in the mood for a surprise meeting or any bad news. It'd better be important.

"Come in!" Jiraiya said.

The door opened, revealing Itachi Uchiha. Yep, it was important.

"Hokage-sama, I finished my investigation in Amegakure," Itachi began. "I managed to abduct one of its ninjas, and bring him here. I left him at Torture & Interrogation, but I took the liberty of interrogating him myself to see what he knew."

"Please take a seat," Jiraiya said, waving at one of the chairs in front of him. "And tell me everything. Leave no details out."

Itachi nodded, sat down, and gave Jiraiya a detailed recollection of his infiltration in Amegakure, up to the interrogation part.

"Your suspicions turned out to be correct, Hokage-sama. As Torture & Interrogation will more than likely confirm, Hanzo the Salamander is no longer the leader of Amegakure, and hasn't been for at least the past five years," Itachi stated. "Akatsuki controls the village."

Jiraiya let out a long sigh, as he leaned back on his chair. Those weren't good news in the slightest. Hanzo might have been a loose canon and a warmonger, but at the very least he was easy to both predict and appease.

"And since the ninja you interrogated was a mere Genin, I'm going to assume that such knowledge is both public and supported by the population," Jiraiya guessed. This definitely wasn't going to be the same situation as with Taki.

But much to his surprise, Itachi shook his head. "No, the man has no idea what Akatsuki is, even if he already met one already. Apparently, the village leaders are someone they call 'God' and his 'Angel'. He did meet the latter."

"Do you have a description?" Jiraiya asked, fearing the answer.

"A woman in her thirties. Shoulder length blue hair in a bob haircut with a small bun, decorated with an origami flower. Light brown eyes. A piercing under her lower lip. The woman seems to have some sort of power over paper. If it's a Bloodline Limit or a secret jutsu, I can't tell," Itachi explained.

Another long sigh. Yes, he feared that answer for a very good reason. Naturally, such obvious reaction didn't go unnoticed by somebody so observant as Itachi.

"Hokage-sama? Is everything okay?" The Uchiha asked. "Is the woman familiar to you?"

"Sadly yes, she is," Jiraiya replied. The possible suspects of who this 'God' might be was pretty small, and Jiraiya knew he could reduce it to just one name.

"Do you... want me to do something about it?" Itachi offered.

"No, you already did enough. I need to check a few things and talk with some people before further action can be taken on this issue," Jiraiya replied. "Take a few days to rest. I heard that your brother was particularly upset after his latest mission, so maybe spending time with you might do him some good."

Itachi stood up, and made a bow. "Thank you, Hokage-sama. Do not hesitate to call me if you have another mission only I can complete."

...

Nagi Island

As Jiraiya had said, it took them almost a week to reach Nagi Island, since they had to travel all the way to the coast of the Land of Fire, and find and board a ship that could get them to the place in question. Luckily, Mei had already foreseen this and took the liberty to rent a ship that was already waiting for the Konoha team. Still, even if the ship was fast and the wind and waters were favorable, the trip by sea took four days.

As they got off from the ship and walked into the small port town, the three Konoha ninja took a moment to examine it. So far, the port town, while unremarkable at first sight, it was busy and teeming with activity. Being a neutral country, people from other nations saw Nagi Island as a nexus to do deals with other countries in a safe way.

"Alright, here we are," Naruto said. "Dad said that somebody from Kiri should be here. Hinata, use your Tenseigan to-"

"HEY, YOU GUYS! OVER HERE!" a female voice yelled among the crowd of people.

Turning in the direction of the voice, they saw Miyako and Suigetsu, wearing the Kirigakure Jonin uniform, as well as carrying their respective swords, the Helmet Splitter on Miyako's back and the Sewing Needle attached to Suigetsu's belt.

"Well, that was easier than we expected," Naruto pointed out.

"The mission demands for us not to waste any time. I appreciate that they took the effort to look for us," Haku said. The others couldn't help but nod.

As they walked towards the two young Swordsmen of the Mist, Suigetsu and Miyako greeted them with a polite bow.

"Naruto-san, Hinata-san, it's nice to see you again," the blue haired woman said, before turning to Haku. "It's good to see you too, Ambassador."

"The feeling is mutual," Haku replied, returning the bow.

"Sorry for my bluntness, but shall we skip the pleasantries and go directly to the matter at hand?" Naruto interjected, growing a little antsy at the exchange.

"Sure," Suigetsu said. "Come on, let's go."

...

After leaving the port town, they advanced into the island, which was composed mostly of very thick forests, that would remind the Konoha trio of the Land of Fire, if there wasn't for the many rivers and lakes that crossed the mass of land. One certainly could feel peace and harmony while being in such natural paradise.

"Even if you guys took some time to arrive, Uakata is still in the island," Suigetsu spoke. "Fortunately, despite our initial confrontation, we made him believe that we're not going to try anything."

"But that may change soon," Miyaki continued. "Uakata never stays in the same place for long, so it's a good thing that you arrived in time. As far as our last report goes, he's stil here."

"And where is he, might I ask?" Hinata said.

"He and the girl he travels with -we believe she's an apprentice of some sort- set a camp at the edge of a small waterfall lake. Our Hunter-nin watch his every step," Suigetsu said.

"Man, you send Hunter-nin after him? No wonder the guy reacted so bad then!" Naruto indignantly pointed out.

"Hey, what were we supposed to do?" Suigetsu said with a defensive shrug. "Hunter-nin are usually dispatched in these kind of situations. Anyway, that's why we requested your presence here. Maybe another jinchuriki might make him change his mind and see reason."

"Before Naruto-kun can attempt anything, we'll need to know more about this person," Hinata interjected. "What can you tell us about him?"

"Utakata was a very skilled ninja. He graduated the Academy at ten, got a promotion to Chunin the next year, and Jonin when he was just sixteen. While we don't know the exact date, we believe he was made into a jinchuriki when he was a small child. Though such thing was never a problem for Utakata," Miyaki explained, as if she was recalling the text of a Bingo Book. "Until one day, when he was twenty one, he lost control of his Tailed Beast, killing his sensei and many other ninjas in the process. After that, he fled Kirigakure and became a vagrant ever since."

"Do you know what caused to lose control of his Tailed Beast?" Haku asked, being the question in the minds of Naruto and Hinata as well.

Both Miyaki and Suigetsu shook their heads. "Whatever happened, he refuses to tell."

"Also, it's worth noting that at some point about a year ago, he started to travel with a girl. Younger than him, I'd say about eighteen to twenty years of age," Suigetsu added, before the white haired swordsman's lips formed a toothy grin. "Guess a man can't be alone that much time, hehe."

"We aren't sure what their relationship is," Miyaki punctualized, shooting Suigetsu a disapproving look. "Anyway, when we arrive at his location, I think it would be for the best if you got close to him alone. Our approach has to be as nonthreatening as possible."

"What if Utakata attacks Naruto-kun?" Hinata suggested, worry creeping through her spine. "How strong is he, by the way?"

"Like Miyako said, very strong," Suigetsu stated. "And that's not even counting his jinchuriki powers. We do know he has some degree of mastery over them."

"It's okay. There won't be a fight. I know I'll be able to convince him of the threat that hangs over his head. Over all of our heads," Naruto corrected himself.

"Several Kiri ANBU are heading towards our position," Hinata stated.

"They must be our Hunter-Nin," Suigetsu stated.

The two groups meet on the middle, and the Konoha ninja could see five ANBU, all of them wearing masks minus one, who appeared to be the leader of the small squad, a middle aged man with long dark brown hair, and a small beard and a moustache.

"Suigetsu-sama, Miyaki-sama. I see that you brought the Konoha ninjas at last," the man said, smiling a little. "Allow me to introduce myself. My name is Tsurugi, ANBU Captain."

"I'm Naruto Uzumaki, and these are Hinata Hyuga and Haku Yuki," Naruto stated. "I'm the jinchuriki, by the way."

"I see. It's good to have you here," Tsurugi said, before his eyes rested on Haku. "You must be the ambassador appointed by Mizukage-sama at the end of the civil war, right? It's an honor to meet you."

"The feeling is likewise. But unfortunately, pleasantries will have to wait. Do you know where the jinchuriki is?" Haku asked.

"Yes. He and his apprentice set their camp at the edge of a river. They've been there for the past few days, but for the look of it, it seems like they're ready to move out. You guys arrived just in time," Tsurugi explained.

"Good. Tell me where they are, and I'll go. But please, have your men stand back. I need to be alone for this work," Naruto said.

"That's not a good idea, Naruto-san," Tsurugi countered. "Jinchuriki or not, you are still a stranger to Utakata. You won't be able to win him with words alone. I know that man. I think I should go with you."

"If you do that, he'll smell a trap," Naruto pointed out.

"And what do you think he's going to think when he sees a Konoha jinchuriki so far away from his home nation?" Tsurugi asked. Naruto blinked, not taking into account such possibility.

"Still, I think it's for the best if I'm alone. Even if he guesses my intentions or that we're in cahoots with you guys, if I go alone he won't feel as threatened," Naruto replied.

Tsusugi crossed his arms over his chest, and appeared to ponder Naruto's reasoning. He had to admit that, even if his intentions could be obvious, Naruto was right. His appeal would sound much more sincere and nonthreatening if he was alone.

"Okay then. But we'll be near you in case something happens," Tsurugi stated.

"Is Utakata-san a sensor?" Hinata chimed in. "He might sense our presence if it's the case."

"As far as I can tell, no," it was Miyaki who answered. "But that man has been running away from people like us for years, so the guy does know when somebody is following or spying on him. Meaning that we should be extra careful while masking our presence."

"Understood. Then, I'll watch from the skies. I doubt he'll be able to realize somebody's up there," Hinata said, before she took off into the sky, much to the Kiri ninja's amazement, and Naruto and Haku's nonchalance. Which didn't go unnoticed by the former group.

"Did that... did that girl just... flew into the sky?" a flabbergasted Suigetsu asked.

"Yeah, she did," Naruto happily said, placing his arms behind his back. "Man, I never get tired of seeing people's reactions when they see her fly for the first time."

"She didn't fly when I first met you guys," Miyaki pointed out, still looking upwards.

"No. That's something she learned to do recently," Naruto replied.

Miyaki pouted a little. "The Civil War would have ended much sooner if we had a ninja that could fly..."

...

Naruto tried to lower his guard as he walked towards the campsite. It was a foolish thing for a ninja to do, but being nonthreatening was key, and the last thing he needed was the other jinchuriki attacking him out of the blue. As he walked, not even bothering with stealth, even making sure that the two people in the campsite heard him coming, the blond took a look at the two people in it.

A man and a woman. The woman was a little older than him, with long dark blond hair and blue eyes, wearing a pink, sleeveless kimono that reached down her hips. She was setting up a small fire. This woman had to be his apprentice/partner/lover/whatever.

The man, whom Naruto guessed was Uta-kata, was pretty tall. He had short brown hair, with a bang covering his left side of the face, leaving a light brown eye visible. His lithe and svelte body was covered by a long light blue kimono -loose enough to reveal his bare chest- tied by an orange sash.

"Hotaru, stay here. I'll deal with him," Naruto heard him say as he handed her a handful of recently caught fishes.

"Hey there!" Naruto said, happily waving at him. He hoped his cheerfulness didn't come off as too fake.

"I don't know who you are," Uta-kata cut him off, as he walked towards the incoming blond. "And I don't know what do you want either. But if you appreciate your life, you'll turn around and go back to when you came from."

"Whoa, there!" Naruto said, bringing his hands up in defense. "You didn't even let me talk!"

"Because I have no interest in what you have to say," Utakata repeated. "Now leave. This is my last warning."

"My name is Naruto Uzumaki. Listen, I know you're a jinchuriki," Naruto stated. The woman gasped a little upon hearing this, though less from the fact itself and more for Naruto knowing it. Utakata, however, remained impassible. "So I am."

Utakata was taken a back a little, but his frown soon returned. "Liar."

"I don't lie. Tailed Beasts share a special link. When two jinchuriki are together, they can feel that link. I'm sure that you can feel it as well," Naruto insisted.

Utakata was ready to deny such thing, but he was unable to. He did feel a weird connection to the blond, something he only felt with another person in his whole life. Still, that didn't change much. The blond was still suspicious to him.

"I admit that you're right. I feel a connection with you. But that leaves the question of what a Konoha ninja," he started, taking a look at Naruto's headband. "Is interested in a vagrant like myself. It can't be just because we're jinchuriki."

"Actually, that's exactly the reason," Naruto replied. "Some Kiri ninja contacted you in the past days, right?"

"Yes, they wanted me to return to Kiri," Utakata replied, before a realization dawned upon him. His frown turned into a scowl "Wait a minute... you're with them, right? They called you to convince me to return to Kiri? In know that, after the Civil War ended, Konoha and Kiri became allies."

" Damn, this guy is good. Better try to be honest so he has no reason to suspect me of anything funny," Naruto thought, as a trickle of sweat ran through his neck. "Yes, they called me. And it's very important that you listen to them. You're in grave danger. All of our kind are."

"Danger? What kind of danger?" the woman asked, as he walked towards the duo.

"Don't listen to him, Hotaru. They're lies to make me go back to my old village," Uakata told her, before turning his gaze back to Naruto. "Like I said before, leave. Or I'll make you leave by force."

"No!" Naruto shouted, his previous goodwill evaporating. "I'm not going to let another one of us pointlessly die! You have to go back to the safety of your village! You're in danger here! And if you refuse, I'll make you return by force!"

Hotaru immediately placed herself between the two men, hoping to avert a needless fight. "Please, no! There's no need to fight!"

"You heard him, Hotaru. He threatened to bring me back to Kiri by force if I don't do as he says. I think a fight is inevitable at this point," Uakata seethed.

"No, it's not! Let's listen to what he has to say, okay? He doesn't look like an untrustworthy person." Hotaru insisted. Uakata didn't say anything, but judging by his body language, he appeared to agree with the girl. Hotaru then turned to Naruto. "What kind of danger are you talking about?"

"You see-"

"But first," Uakata cut him again. "Tell all the people with you to come out. If they're doing this for my own good and don't have any kind of ulterior motives, there's no need to stay hidden."

"I came here alone. The other Kiri ninjas are not here," Naruto stated.

"Come out, I know you're there! Tsurugi! Miyaki! Suigetsu!" Uakata shouted.

And much to Naruto's surprise -and chagrin- the Kiri ninja and Haku emerged from behind the trees. Naruto let out a defeated sigh.

"Guys, I told you not to come with me. Now you ruined it," the blond pouted.

"Sorry, but this was too important. In case you failed, we need to be prepared in order to take Ukatata by force to Kirigakure," Miyaki stated, ignoring the glare the jinchuriki of the Six Tails was shooting her.

"But such thing won't be necessary, because Ukatata will come to us of his own volition once he hears what's at stake," Naruto insisted, glaring at the blue haired swordswoman as well.

"If all of us are here, then there's no point in Hinata watching the sky," Haku said, waving upwards.

Much to Ukatata and Hotaru's surprise, they saw a blue haired girl with glowing teal eyes slowly descending from above.

...

Sometime later

Night fell upon Nagi Island.

While Ukatata was on edge at first, after some time he got used to the presence of the Hunter Nin. The masked ninjas did nothing other than stay silent and watch the campsite's surroundings, on the possibility that an enemy might appear before they could evacuate the jinchuriki. The rest were sitting around a fire while they enjoyed some dinner.

"And this Akatsuki people, you said that they already captured four jinchuriki?" Ukatata asked.

Naruto nodded energetically. "We managed to save one of them after his Tailed Beast was extracted, but it was mostly luck. I doubt we'll be able to do that again."

"Akatsuki seems to learn from experience. After we rescued Gaara-san, it appears that they got better at hiding their lairs and bases," Hinata added.

"That's why it's so important we find all the remaining jinchuriki and put them in a safe place. And so far, the Great Villages are our best bet. Being in the open alone it's an invitation to the Akatsuki," Naruto urged.

"Are they that dangerous?" Hotaru asked. "Because Ukatata-sensei is very strong. If those Akatsuki came for him, I'm sure he'd be able to kick their butts."

"Akatsuki is comprised entirely of S-Rank criminals," it was Miyaki who spoke. "They know their prey are dangerous ones, that's why they made sure their members are able to face jinchuriki and win."

"Remember that they have defeated four other jinchuriki already," Haku added.

"So, why are they after us to begin with? Because of the Tailed Beasts?" Ukatata asked. Naruto nodded once again. "And how do they expect to control them? Few are the jinchuriki capable of such feat. I'm able to control some degree of the Six Tails' power, but too much and I lose control of it."

"Actually, they don't plan to become jinchuriki themselves. You see..."

Naruto told Ukatata everything he knew about the Demonic Statue of the Outer Path, and how if all nine Tailed Beasts were sealed inside it, the Ten Tails would be revived, which would spell the end of the world. How Akatsuki planned to take control of the best, Naruto didn't know, but in either case that monster couldn't be allowed to be reborn.

Both Utakata and Hotaru took a few moments to let the blond's tale sink in. While they looked surprised at first, they were now pensive. The jinchuriki more than his apprentice, though.

"What you say is indeed troubling. But I still can't help but think that this is part of an elaborate ruse to get me back to the village," Utakata stated.

"Come on man, we left you alone for years! We didn't even try to recruit you when we were fighting against Yagura -and your help would have speed things up a lot-, so please tell me why did we change our mind now?" Suigetsu hotly protested.

"Yes. And I doubt the jinchuriki of Konoha could have bothered to come all the way to this place just to sell you a lie," Miyaki added. "This is serious, Utakata-san. Words alone can't convey the threat Akatsuki is. Besides their power, they also have influence. It was them who controlled Yagura and turned our village into the so called Blood Mist."

"Hell, we don't even want you to come to Kirigakure in particular. If you want to stay in Konoha or Suna, then fine," Suigetsu suggested. "Our orders were to make you go to any of those three villages. But why would you prefer Konoha or Suna over your own home, well, I couldn't really tell."

Hotaru tugged Utakata's sleeve. "I think they're telling the truth, sensei. Besides, what would the Mizukage win by having you go to another village?"

The stubborn jinchuriki had to admit they had a point. Still, all the mistrusts and misanthropy built over his years of isolation after his sensei's apparent betrayal weren't easy to ignore. Even then, there was still a part of him that was constantly warn him of an impending danger.

"What do you say then? Will you let us protect you?" Naruto hopefully asked.

Utakata took a few moments to think his answer before he opened his mouth. "For the time being, let's wait until tomorrow morning. I need some time to think about what you guys told me."

While all of them were cautious and didn't get their hopes up, the fact that the jinchuriki had at least listened to them and was going to take their words into consideration was indeed a small victory. All that was left was to hope that Utakata would agree to take shelter in one of the three Great Villages.

After the tense discussion, people on both sides started to calm down. In order to maximize their chances, Naruto approached Utakata in order to make some small talk and bond with him, while also being careful not to mention anything that made it obvious he was trying to sway his decision. Empathy was the best course of action.

As they talked, Hotaru decided to do the same and sat closer to Naruto's two teammates. She put on her friendliest smile when greeting them.

"Hello there. I don't think we've been introduced to each other. My name is Hotaru, and I'm Utakata-sensei's apprentice," Hotaru began.

"Hello, Hotaru-san. My name is Hinata Hyuga, and this is Haku Yuki. We're Naruto-kun's teammates, though you probably guessed that already," Hinata replied. "Besides his teammate, I'm also Naruto-kun's girlfriend."

"Really? Cool. You make a cute couple," the dark blonde complimented, before switching topics. "So, you think Naruto will convince Utakata-sensei to return to his home?"

"We hope so. Naruto-kun has the ability to reach people's heart with his earnestness. I have faith he can do it," Haku replied. "Though I wouldn't be surprised if he failed this time. While things are better now, the Land of Water used to be a pretty dangerous place, in no small part thanks to the Blood Mist."

"Are you from the Land of Water?" Hotaru asked. "You wear both a Konoha and Kiri forehead protector. I didn't know a ninja could be loyal to two villages, even if they are allied. I mean, if war broke between Konoha and Kiri, who would you side with?"

"To answer your first question, yes, I was born in the Land of Water, but I grew up in Konoha, that's why I wear Konoha's crest around my forehead. However, I was made ambassador of Kiri in Konoha after the Civil War ended, hence the Kiri forehead protector in my neck," Haku explained. "And to answer your second question, it's my job to make sure such thing doesn't happen. But if war eventually broke out, I wouldn't take sides; I'd try my best to make sure both sides stopped fighting and reached an agreement."

"I see. Let's hope that such thing doesn't come to pass then," Hotaru replied, smiling at him.

"What about you, Hotaru-san? How did you become Ukatata-san's apprentice?" Hinata asked. "I might be judging him too hastily, but he doesn't look to be a man patient enough to have an apprentice."

"Your judgement isn't that far off, Hinata. I met Ukatata-sensei when he protected me from a group of ninja, though they were actually after him. I took him home and treated his injuries, and after seeing how strong he was, I asked him to be my sensei. At first he gave me overly difficult exercises in order to make me give up, but I was determined to complete them," Hotaru began.

"Such as?" Hinata asked.

"He first asked me to walk on water, when I hadn't have any kind of chakra control," she explained, while Haku and Hinata winced.

"Though with perseverance, I managed to do it!"

"But that wasn't the end of it, was it?" Haku guessed.

"Not by a long shot!" Hotaru replied, laughing a little. "He then had me do a water jutsu, despite the fact that I didn't even know if my affinity was water to begin with, or even doing the basic exercises first. But once again, I proved my worth!"

"He really did want to get rid of you," Hinata stated, sounding a bit dazed.

"He did. But in the end, I proved I had the resolve to be her apprentice, and in the end he accepted me," Hotaru stated. "I like to think that he grew to appreciate my company and saw me as a worthy apprentice."

"If he allowed you to stick with him for so long, I believe that's the case," Haku stated. "I know a thing or two about hard teachers. Albeit in my case Zabuza-sama never wanted to get rid of me, just make me as strong as possible in the shortest amount of time."

"You mean Zabuza, as in the current leader of the Seven Swordsmen of the Mist?" Hotaru asked, genuinely surprised. "Wow! And here I thought that I was so lucky to have somebody as Utakata-sensei as my teacher!"

"Lucky?" Hinata thought. "But Utakata-san wanted to get rid of her..."

"Also, sorry for asking you this. We know Utakata-san's stance, but what about you? Do you have any opinion on what Utakata-san should do?" Haku asked.

"As his apprentice, I'll follow him no matter what he decides. But honestly, I'd prefer if he decided to stay in one of the villages," Hotaru replied. "Not just for the sake of being safer, but because while traveling the world and meeting new people is fine, I'd like if we decided to stay in the same place more than a couple weeks. Both him and I could make more permanent friends."

"And you think you could convince him to do that?" Hinata asked.

Hotaru chuckled a little. "You already met Utakata-sensei, and know how stubborn he is. I can try, but don't expect much. I'm more interested in traveling with him than he is in having me following him around, and he's very aware of that," Hotaru admitted, averting her gaze. "If I told him that I want to live to one of the villages, he'll say that I'm free to do it."

"Still, it would be great if you tried," Haku insisted. "The stakes are really high."

"Don't worry, I didn't say no. I'll try to get on his case once he stops talking with Naruto-san and we can be alone," Hotaru promised. "But like I said, don't expect him to put much weight on my wants."

"Thank you for your effort, Hotaru-san," Hinata replied. "We don't ask more than that."

...

Nagi Island Port Town

Most ships usually avoided travelling during the night, since it was an incredibly dangerous thing to do. Without natural light, it was very hard to see rock formations in the coast that could sink a vessel. And sadly Nagi Island lacked a lighthouse to guide ships in the dark of the night.

Even then, a small ship managed to arrive at the island. It didn't stop at the dock, since its occupants didn't want to draw attention to their presence. Instead, they dropped the anchor when they were close to the shore, jumped into the water, and using chakra, they walked, or better said, ran, towards the island.

"So, the Six Tails Jinchuriki is somewhere in this island, according to the intel," one of the figures that came out of the ship stated.

"Indeed he is, Konan," the other one replied.

"How are you so sure?" Konan asked.

"If he left this island, we would have been warned. No, he is here, and he's unaware of the danger that hangs over his head."

"I see. What is the plan, Pain?" Konan asked.

"For the time being, let's track the jinchuriki. Find if he's alone, or if there's anybody accompanying him. Then, we'll devise an strategy, and attack," Pain replied.

"We must be swift and careful. I wouldn't put past the Great Villages to start gathering the wandering jinchuriki as well just to stop to our plans," Konan sagely advised.

"Let them try," the Akatsuki leader replied. "Nothing but pain will await to those who stand in our way."

Author's Note: If there's something I like about this arc, is that I finally get to write my favorite villain. Here comes the Pain! Our heroes are indeed in a bad situation, given what's coming for them. Will they be able to save Utaakata, or will he follow Yugito and die at the hands of the Akatsuki?

It was also nice to bring back a couple of the characters from the Kiri arc. Too bad I couldn't bring as many as I could. Still, there will be more chances in the future for them to shine as well.

Thanks to Ookami88 for betareading this chapter.

So, will our heroes survive against Pain, given that they have to face him much earlier than they did in canon? Share your thoughts in a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Facing a God

Author's Note: It seems that a lot of people enjoyed Utakata's debut. Let's hope that the continuation is just as well received, especially since it features my favorite villain. Enjoy:

Chapter 70:

Facing a God

or

Here Comes the Pain!

Nagi Island, Morning

"As I said, I've been thinking about what you told me. The threat of Akatsuki, and what should I do in order to avoid it," Utakata began.

Everybody listened to him intently. What he would say next would determine if the mission could end here and there and finally take the jinchuriki to a safe place, or if the Kiri and Konoha ninja would have to subdue him by force.

"At first, I thought that if I did what I've been doing this past years, moving from one place to another and never staying in the same place for long, I'd be able to evade the Akatsuki," Utakata stated. "However, you finding me is evidence that such plan isn't going to work. I also thought that, in the case they got me, I could defend myself from whoever they send to capture me. But again, the fact that Akatsuki captured other jinchuriki already also means that it'd be foolish if I was so overconfident."

Both Miyaki and Suigetsu looked hopeful.

"Does that mean...?" Miyake began, almost holding her breath.

"Yes. I decide to let myself to be taken into the Great Villages' custody," Utaka finished.

Everybody cheered upon hearing the jinchuriki's response, Hotaru included, much to Uakata's surprise, who raised an eyebrow at this. He cleared his throat to indicate that he wasn't finished.

"However, I do have a condition," Uakata stated.

The cheering abruptly stopped, and the mood died down. Miyaki, however, kept a positive attitude.

"Whatever it is, Uakata-san, I'm sure we can provide it," she said in a conciliatory tone. "As long as it's something reasonable, that's it. So, what do you want for Kiri to offer you?"

"I want nothing from Kiri," Uakata stated, his voice laced with some venom. "I don't want to return to that place. You told me that I was able to go to any of the Great Villages, right? In that case, I want to go to Konoha. That's my request."

"Really? That's awesome!" Naruto cheered, pumping a fist in the air.

"May I ask why do you wish to come to our village, Uakata-san?" Hinata asked. "Don't you prefer to return to your own home?"

"Not that we won't welcome you," Haku helpfully added.

"If you need to know my reasons, well, the first one is that I have way too many painful memories attached to Kirigakure, and I do not wish to return there. Second, Konoha already houses two jinchuriki, as far as you told me," the brown haired man looked at Naruto. "The only jinchuriki I ever met was Yagura, and he wasn't a very pleasant man. Now that I have this opportunity, I wish to know both you and the other jinchuriki better. And third, of all the available options, Konoha seems to be the safest." Uakata then looked at Haku. "And from what you told me, I won't be the first Land of Water native to move there."

"You're not going to regret it, I can assure you that," Haku replied while nodding.

"Then it's settled! Utakata and Hotaru will move to Konoha!" Naruto shouted, as excited as a little boy with a new toy.

"Hey, I said that I'd be there as long as the Akatsuki threat persists. Once this is over, I'll go back to the road," Utakata interjected.

"Fair enough. But I wouldn't be surprised if you changed your mind over your stay there," Haku added, smiling a little.

"I also want to state that I don't plan to become a Konoha ninja nor do missions for your village. That part of my life is already over," Utakata firmly stated.

"Don't worry. Nobody will force you to do anything you don't want to," Naruto assured him, before he shot his fellow jinchuriki a foxy grin. "Not that I won't try to change your mind."

Utakata grimaced a little. "I'm already regretting this decision."

"Come on, Utakata-sensei! I'm sure being in Konoha will be fun!" Hotaru chimed in. Her sensei just sighed.

As they watched the happy exchange, the Kiri ninjas looked less excited than their Konoha counterparts, but they were content nonetheless.

"We were hoping we could convince you to come back home. I'm going to admit we wanted to have a jinchuriki again," Suigetsu stated.

"But we will be happy to know that our enemies won't be able to lay their hands upon you," Miyaki stated. "And who knows, maybe in the future, once Mei-sama wipes away every trace of the Blood Mist, we can convince you to come back."

"You're planning way too much ahead," Uakata stated in annoyance.

"Anyway, now that it's settled, I believe we should get going. The more we stay in the same place, the bigger the Akatsuki's chances of finding us," Suigetsu stated. "We should go back to the port town, get a ship that goes to the Land of Fire, and escort Uakata to Konohagakure."

Miyaki nodded. "We will tag along until Uakata-san is safe behind Konoha's walls. Is that okay with you?" Miyaki asked.

The Konoha ninja looked at each other, looking for their mutual approval, and quickly nodded.

"Yeah, the more we are, the better," Naruto said. "Now, let's pack everything up as fast as we can and get moving."

...

True to Naruto's words, they picked up the campsite and got moving in record time. Jumping from one tree branch to another -except Hinata, who flew close to them-, the group of Konoha and Kiri ninjas made their way back to the port town. They needed to get back there and get into a ship as soon as possible. Once in the sea, the chances of an ambush happening would be close to zero. And in the Land of Fire they'd be safer than in a small island in the middle of nowhere.

"If we keep this pace, we'll reach the port town in little more than half an hour," Miyaki stated.

"Let's try to make it into less than that," Naruto suggested.

Everybody nodded, and increased their pace. Despite the good mood, they wanted to finish this mission as soon as possible, since they felt like they were carrying a potentially dangerous cargo that could blow up at any second, and that filled them with a feeling of uneasiness.

And true to that, the metaphorical cargo was about to blow up.

"SHINRA TENSEI!"

Nobody knew where it came from, but one second, the group was moving forward, and the next a powerful shockwave blasted them upwards, while tearing down several trees in the process, creating a clearing in the area. All of them landed painfully in the now clear ground with several painful thuds.

"Oww..."

"Where did that come from?"

"No time to groan! Everybody, get back to your feet and ready to fight!" Suigetsu called, as his body, which had been partially liquified by the blast, started to reform.

"Hinata-hime, find the enemies!" Naruto asked.

"I'm on it!" his girlfriend replied, as she expanded her field vision in order to find said enemies. She took no time to find a figure wearing a black cloak with red clouds standing in their path. "Akatsuki is here!"

"Of course, this mission would be too easy if they didn't show up," Naruto groaned, as he rolled his eyes. "How many of them? Where are they?"

"They're..." Hinata began, but cut herself as something caught her attention. Another Akatsuki, flying above them. But most distressingly was what she was about to do. "Explosive tags coming from above! They're without number!"

Instinctively, everybody looked up, and indeed, they saw hundreds upon hundreds of explosive tags floating above them, around a member of Akatsuki that kept herself in the air thanks to a pair of wings attached to her back that appeared to be made of paper. The Akatsuki motioned her hand downwards, and the explosive tags rained upon them at such speed they appeared to weight as much as kunai.

"Oh shit!" Suigetsu cried.

"Everybody, get close to me!" Haku called, as his hands flew through hand seals. "Ice Release: Ice Rock Dome of Magnificent Nothingness!"

As everybody clustered around Haku, three domes made of ice quickly formed around them, just in time as the explosive tags reached them, unleashing a chain of explosions. The chain lasted several painfully long seconds, making the ground tremble with each blast. Those sheltered inside prayed for the domes to resist, while Haku struggled to keep them strong.

Eventually, the explosions ceased, and Haku allowed himself to stop channeling chakra into the jutsu, which quickly started to thaw. The Ice Ninja fell to his knees, a bit exhausted.

"Good job, Haku-san. If it wasn't for you, who knows how many of us would have perished," Miyaki praised, as her hands reached her Helmet Splitter.

"So, those our enemies, right?" Suigetsu said, also grabbing his sword, the Sewing Needle. "I never fought against an Akatsuki, but if this is how they open a fight... damn, we're for a fun time."

The Akatsuki on land was a man in his early thirties with spiky orange hair, his face and ears loaded with thick black piercings. He was wearing a slashed Amegakure forehead protector. But the trait that drew the most attention were his eyes, completely purple with a concentric ring pattern. The other Akatsuki, a blue haired woman the same age, with blue hair decorated with a flower, descended upon being close to him.

"You've been found at last, jinchuriki of the Six Tails," the man spoke. His voice was deep and ominous. "Now, I shall take the beast that you bear inside your body. Resisting is futile."

"The Nine Tails jinchuriki is also here," the woman observed. "We can capture the two of them at once. This opportunity it's too good to pass, Pain."

"You may be right, Konan," the man replied. "But for the time being, our main priority is the other."

Naruto made a hand seal, and two clones popped into existence. Without waiting to receive any order from their creator, the clones rushed in opposite directions, vanishing among the sea of trees.

"You said you fought Akatsuki before," Utakata told the Konoha ninja as he grabbed his bubble pipe. "Are these people familiar to you?"

"No, we never met them before," Naruto replied, growing tense. "But they look even more powerful than the ones we did."

"Your assessment is correct, Uzumaki," the man added. "Because in the past, you only fought against regular men. You're against a god now."

"We only want the jinchuriki. Surrender them, and we'll spare everybody else's lives," Konan offered.

"If you think we're going to do that, you're more stupid than you look!" Hotaru angrily replied.

Pain noticed that Naruto was staring at him intensely. More specifically, he was looking into his eyes. Something the Akatsuki didn't find unusual, but decided to ignore. That's it, until the blond opened his mouth.

"Those eyes... they're Rinnegan, correct?" Naruto solemnly asked.

Pain's lips curved into a small smile. "You're right. These are the eyes that once were wielded by the Sage of the Six Paths. As I carry them now, it is my duty to continue with the Sage's mission to create a world without war or strife."

"And how do you plan to do that? By hunting jinchuriki?" Naruto angrily replied. "Reviving the Ten Tails will only cause the end of the world!"

Konan opened her eyes widely when Naruto mentioned the name of the monster they were planning to restore.

"How do you... where did you...?" she blabbered.

"Their knowledge of the Ten Tails is irrelevant to our mission, as it will do them no good," Pain told Konan, sounding as omnious as confident as before, before his eyes turned towards Naruto again. "But if you need to know, the Ten Tails is the key to create that world. If somebody harnessed that vast power, that person would be without equal, and could use that power to put an end to all wars and misery in the world."

"But that wouldn't be real peace! If you know about the Sage and the Ten Tails, then you must know about Kaguya too!" Hinata heatedly interjected. "Such peace isn't bound to last!"

"And what is the alternative? Trust that people will stop hating and warring each other on their own?" Konan asked, scowling angrily at the Hyuga. "You foolish, naive children..."

"Konan is right," Pain continued. "People will never understand each other. Only by knowing each other's pain can understanding be reached. And even if you know the other's pain, hatred may make understanding impossible. That's why there are wars even if most people don't want them. The only way to stop this cycle of hatred is by force."

"I don't care what you believe. I'm not going to let you-" Suddenly, Naruto's eyes snapped wide open. "Uh?"

"Naruto-kun...?" Hinata worriedly asked.

"My clones... they disappeared..." the confused blond replied.

"What? How?" Haku asked.

Hinata made a hand seal, and her Tenseigan flared for an instant. Her eyesight expanded to cover the entire area, her eyes also opened wide upon seeing what had killed the clones.

"More Akatsuki! Five of them! They're surrounding the clearing!" Hinata distressingly informed. "All of them have the same orange hair, multiple facial piercings, and those purple eyes."

"We've studied your fighting style for when the time to capture you arrived, Naruto," Pain replied. "Before a fight begins, you create two clones that go into hiding, making your opponent believe that you're preparing an ambush. Then, in the middle of the fight, you'll go into Sage Mode, despite the fact that in order to gather nature energy one needs to be still for a long period of time.

"But by using clones, you can gather nature energy unimpeded as you fight, then the clone will dispel itself, transferring the nature energy to you, with the added benefit that your opponent's attention is now divided, waiting for an ambush that will never come. Is my guess a correct one, Naruto Uzumaki?" Pain asked.

Naruto gritted his teeth, as a frustrating feeling of impotence washed over him. "I've never fought an Akatsuki without Sage Mode before. What I'm going to do now? No! Stop the quitter talk! You're a great ninja with or without Sage Mode! I can win this! I HAVE to win this!"

The blond's scowl of frustration disappeared, as it was replaced by a confident smirk. "So, you were able to counter one of my many, many jutsu and techniques. Let's see if you can do the same with the others."

"Boasts are useless if one lacks the power to back them up," Pain replied, as he raised an open hand towards them. "I believe there's no point in conversing anymore. Now, it's your turn to know pain. Shinra Tensei!"

Once again, a powerful shockwave blasted the group of Konoha and Kiri ninjas backwards with overwhelming force. Though now they realized it wasn't a normal shockwave. A second before being pushed away, it was almost as if they weighed nothing, as if somehow the Akatsuki could manipulate gravity itself.

They rushed to get back on their feet as the two Akatsuki menacingly approached.

"Hinata-hime, you can take make somebody else fly as well, right?" Naruto asked. His girlfriend nodded. "In that case, take Utakata to a ship, and get the hell out of here!"

"But... I can't leave both you and Haku-kun with those Akatsuki!" Hinata protested. "You're a jinchuriki too! You're in danger as well!"

"Don't worry, we'll divide his attention by rushing in a different way. Let's see which one of us he'll go after," Naruto replied. "Now go, quickly!"

Hinata nodded, and made a hand seal. Utakata's feet stopped touching the ground.

"What the...?" the brown haired jinchuriki asked, as he started to flail.

"Sorry Utakata-san, but no time to ask for permission. We need to leave now!" Hinata urged as she took off into the sky, with the unwilling Utakata being carried behind.

"I won't let you," Pain replied, but oddly enough, made no effort to stop the flying ninja.

Suddenly the air was filled with several whistles, and much to her shock, Hinata's Tenseigan caught a cluster of missiles flying right at her and Uakata. Wasting no time, her hands started to form several hand seals.

"Lightning Release: Thunderbolt!"

Multiple lightning bolts fired from Hinata's fingertips, catching the incoming barrage of missiles, making them to detonate prematurely. Unfortunately, while Hinata was doing this she was unable to notice another danger that was coming to them.

"Watch out!" Uakata called.

As if appearing from thin air, a gigantic, deformed bird with gray plumage and a massive, jagged beak dashed at them. Hinata wasn't able to maneuver in time, and the impact sent the two of them back to the ground, tumbling.

"Hinata-hime!" Naruto cried, as he ran towards her.

"Sensei!" Hotaru cried, following Naruto.

The two of them groaned, as they got back on their feet, helped by their respective partners. So far, they didn't look injured.

"Are you okay?" Naruto asked.

"I'm fine, don't worry. I was able to cushion our fall with my kinetic abilities," Hinata explained.

"Guess that's why it didn't hurt as much as I expected," Uakata said, as he took out the bubble pipe he was carrying on his belt. "No option but fighting, I see."

"Unfortunately, yes," Naruto bitterly agreed, as he glared at the incoming Akatsuki.

"We'll need to take care of the other Akatsuki surrounding the clearing, or else we're going to get blindsided," Hinata stated.

"Leave that to me. I'll try to force them out in the open, while getting some intel on their abilities," Naruto said, as he made his favorite hand seal. "Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

An army of a hundred Naruto clones popped into existence, as they spread out and went to seek and fight the other four Akatsuki. If Pain and Konan were perturbed by this, they didn't show it.

"Konan, make sure none of the jinchuriki leave," Pain instructed his partner.

"What about the others?" Konan asked.

"The closest ninja village is hundred of kilometers away. Even if they go away and call for reinforcements, it would take days to arrive," Pain assured her.

"Very well then," Konan nodded, and flapping her artificial wings, took off into the sky once again.

A black rod emerged from under Pain's sleeve, which the Akatsuki grabbed and wielded it as if it was a weapon. He raised it towards Naruto and Utaakata.

"Now, let the hunt begin," Pain omniously declared, before raising his other hand. "Basho Ten'in!"

Suddenly, Utaakata felt completely weightless for a second, before he was pulled towards Pain by a violently unstoppable force. He tried to react, but the suddeness and the sheer force he was being pulled stopped him, and his neck was gripped by Pain's open hand.

"You're mine now," Pain said before slamming Utkata into the ground, and readied his black rod to stab him with it.

While this happened, Naruto pulled out several shuriken with one hand while making hand seals with the other. The steel starts started to crackle with electricity just before he threw them at the orange haired Akatsuki.

"Leave him alone!" Naruto shouted.

Pain was forced to release Utkata and jump backwards while either dodging the incoming shuriken, or deflecting them with his black rod. Despite being enhanced with Lightning Release, they failed to cut through Pain's mysterious weapon.

Taking advantage of Pain's predicament, the jinchuriki of the Six Tails quickly got back on his feet, and started to weave hand seals. His apprentice landed besides him, also doing hand seals.

"Hotaru, let's attack at once!" the brown haired man commanded, the girl nodding in agreement. "Acid Scattering!"

"Water Release: Water Hail!"

Utkata expelled from his mouth a stream of an extremely corrosive acid, while Hotaru cupped her hands forward, releasing a barrage of water bullets. However, before the two attacks could hit their target, another Akatsuki got in the way. Casting his hands forward, he created a glowing shield of chakra that absorbed both attacks the moment they made contact, much to their bewilderment.

Realizing that they were in danger if stayed close to the Akatsuki for longer, Utkata and Hotaru jumped back, rejoining the others.

"Who is that guy?" Naruto asked, as he stared at the new Akatsuki, a very portly man. Like Pain, he had orange hair, thick facial piercings, and most distressingly, a pair of Rinnegan. "How can he have a Rinnegan too?"

"Your minds cannot hope to comprehend the power I possess," Pain boasted once again.

A high pitched shriek came from the sky, as the giant bird from before loomed over them from above, menacingly nose diving at them. This time, however, Hinata's Tenseigan managed to catch the aerial threat in time, and replied before it could cause any harm.

"Vacuum Palm Wall!"

Thrusting both palms upwards, Hinata launched a massive vacuum shell upwards, hitting the giant bird in its beak with such force, it made it deviate its course to the side, before losing its balance and crashing into the ground, tearing some trees apart in the process.

Immediately, there was a light rumble followed by the sound of more trees teared apart, as a gigantic ox and equally large rhino plowed through the trees, charging at them. Like the bird, all them noticed that these animals also had Rinnegan eyes, as well as thick, black stakes piercing their bodies.

"The hell? Where all these summoned animals are coming from?" Suigetsu asked, as he narrowly dodged being eviscerated by the giant rhino's horn.

"Naruto-kun, I think it's time to bring some summons of our own!" Haku called.

The blond nodded, before biting his thumb, and making the usual five hand seals. "Summoning Jutsu!"

Naruto slammed his palm into the ground, producing a massive burst of smoke. When the smoke dispelled, Naruto was now standing at the top of Gamaken's head.

"Greetings, Naruto. I'm honored that you have summoned be to battle once again," the soft spoken toad said.

"It might be too much for you to handle, but I need your help to deal with those animals," Naruto said, pointing at the incoming rhino and ox.

"Leave that in my hands, Naruto. I've been training these past years in order to curb my clumsiness," Gamaken replied, as he readied his shield and sasumata.

"Meanwhile, we'll deal with the others," Naruto said, as he jumped down to rejoin his friends. "I'm getting information from my clones on the other guys. One of them is some sort of mechanical being, like a puppet. Another is the one summoning these animals, but it seems is the only thing he can do. I don't know about the other two."

"We can't let everything in the hand of the clones," Miyaki decided. "Tsurigi, you and your ANBU unit go and stop those guys! Or else we'll get blindsided!"

"Right away, ma'am!" Tsurigi replied. "Everybody, go!"

"Suigetsu and I will help the giant toad take care of the summons," Miyaki suggested. "Naruto-san was the one who helped Mei-sama take down Yagura, and his teammates don't lack skill nor power either. They're our best bet against these Akatsuki."

"Alright then. But don't think I'm going to be happy with just the leftovers while the Konoha ninja have the real fun!" Suigetsu replied, as he and Miyaki went to face the giant ox.

Meanwhile, the Konoha ninjas, Utakata and Hotaru decided that they have had enough of being on the receiving side, and went onto the offensive.

"That man is able to absorb ninjutsu attacks. I'll keep him distracted while the rest of you deal with the other one, understood?" Hinata asked. Everybody else nodded.

"Whatever you've planned, I can assure you it won't work," Pain confidently stated.

"We'll see about that!" Hinata replied, as she dashed towards the ninjutsu-absorbing Akatsuki, while delivering a palm strike forward. The Akatsuki jumped backwards, and Hinata's palm ended up hitting the ground, producing a small crater. "You won't be able to dodge the next one, since you're within my divination range! Eight Trigrams: Sixty Four Palms!"

Just as Hinata said, the Akatsuki was unable to dodge the Hyuga Clan's signature taijutsu combo, and was pushed backwards with each palm strike as he tried in vain to dodge it.

"Now is our chance, attack at once!" Naruto commanded, as he started to make hand seals. Utakata, Horaru and Haku nodded, proceeding to do the same.

"Ice Release: Multiple Icicle Piercing Shots!"

"Water Release: Wild Water Wave!"

"Water Release: Bubble Jutsu!"

"Lightning Release: Lightning Stab!"

Haku conjured and shot forward multiple ice stakes, while Hotaru exhaled a powerful stream of water from her mouth. Utakata blew several innocuous-looking bubbles, while Naruto pulled out several kunai, infused them with electricity and tossed them forward.

Even the most veteran Jonin would have felt at least a bit distressed upon being on the receiving end on so many elemental ninjutsu. However, Pain was above any average ninja, and was about to show why.

"Pathetic," Pain said, raising an open palm at the incoming elemental barrage. "Shinra Tensei!"

Pain's open palm produced a repulsive shockwave that was easily able to repel -and in the soap bubbles' case, prematurely detonate- the incoming attacks at him, and still keep enough force to push the casters and make them fall on their backs.

"Such power!" Hotaru shouted, mildly distressed. "If all of us together aren't able to overcome that jutsu of his-"

"Watch out!" Naruto called out, pointing upwards.

Everybody looked in the direction the blond was pointing at, and saw Konan looming above them.

"Paper Drizzle!"

Flapping her makeshift wings once, a barrage of razor-sharp paper tags rained from them. The ninjas below her quickly rose to their feet and scrambled to dodge the deadly shower, with each missing projectile stabbing itself into the ground as if it was made of sharp metal.

"Not bad," Konan stated, her face remaining neutral. "Now let's see if you can-OOF!"

Suddenly, Konan was slammed into the ground by an unseen force, her body making a loud noise as if it crashed down.

"Konan!" Pain yelled, expressing some sort of emotion for the first time since the fight began.

"I'm... I'm fine..." Konan said, coughing a little, as she got back on his feet. "What did-"

"She did," Pain finished her question, as his eyes drifted to Hinata. "So, that's the power of the Tenseigan. Impressive, but still inferior to the Rinnegan."

"You know the Tenseigan?" Hinata asked.

"One of our newest members possess a pair," Pain replied, causing Hinata to tense. "I believe that you already met him, didn't you?"

"So it's true. That Toneri guy is somehow part of the Akatsuki," Naturo muttered, mostly to himself.

"Indeed. I have been unable to test the extent of his powers, but given that you have the same eyes as him, an assessment of your abilities will be a valid substitute," Pain stated.

"Alright then, I'll show you the power of my eyes. No, my power," Hinata replied, as she started to make hand seals. "Tenseigan Chakra Mode!"

Hinata's body started to glow with a purple aura. Pain looked unimpressed. Not that she expected any other reaction, given that it was the most basic stage of the Mode. However, the next part would tip the battle in their favor.

"Now..." Hinata placed her hands as if holding an invisible object. A sphere of lavender light formed between them, and started to grow as she moved her hands outwards. "Truth Seeking Balls!"

The violet sphere split into two smaller ones, before losing their light, revealing two fist sized black spheres that reflected a dim purple light. As if they had life of their own, the spheres placed behind Hinata's back.

"Just two? I was hoping I could produce more when the push came to shove," Hinata inwardly lamented. "With Naruto-kun unable to use his Sage Mode, it falls on me to carry the weight of the fight."

Despite her disappointment, her display did impress the Akatsuki.

"Truth Seeking Balls? That's not something you see every day," Pain praised. "Congratulations, Hyuga, You now have my attention."

"Very well then. Take this!" Hinata said, as she motioned both hands forward. The Truth Seeking Balls launched themselves at Pain while spinning around each other.

Pain raised his hand forward, but rather than a Shinra Tensei like Hinata was expecting, several black rods fired from under his sleeve. Two of those rods collided with the Truth Seeking Balls, deflecting them backwards.

"If he knew that Truth Seeking Balls can nullify ninjutsu,, then he knew his shockwave wouldn't work," Hinata realized. "But how did those rods repel the balls? It should be impossible! Unless they're-wait a minute, where did he go?"

The short time Hinata took to muse, Pain launched himself forward, with a longer rod in his hand. But she wasn't his prey; instead, he was now onto Utkata, ready to sink that black rod inside his flesh.

A loud metallic noise was heard, and Naruto was standing between Pain and Utkata, his rod being parried by the blond's Wind Blade.

"My Wind Blade is able to cut through pretty much everything," Naruto pointed out. "Just what the hell is that thing made of?"

"Good one, Naruto! Keep him like that!" Utkata said, as he jumped backwards while taking his pipe to his lips. "Water Release: Drowning Bubble Jutsu!"

Utkata flew a flurry of bubbles, which quickly converged around Pain's head, encasing the Akatsuki's head in a spheric blob of water. The effect was immediate, and the orange haired Akatsuki started to suffocate.

"Pain!" Konan shouted, as he dived to assist her partner.

"Not so fast, miss!" Hotaru claimed, as she quickly formed hand seals. "Water Release: Water Hail Jutsu!"

The suddenness of the attack forced Konan to fall back, much to her frustration. And now that Pain was vulnerable, Haku decided he should better speed up the process. He leaped at Pain while his hands flew through hand seals.

"Ice Release: Breath of Winter!"

Haku exhaled a gust of extremely cold wind, covering Pain in frost but, most importantly, freezing the blob of water the Akatsuki's head was encased into. After a few moments of weakly trashing and trying to break the ice, the Akatsuki fell on his back, lifeless.

"His chakra vanished!" Hinata pointed out. "He's dead!"

"YES!" Naruto cheered, pumping a fist into the air. "Haha, so much for the Rinnegan!"

Suddenly, there was a loud rumble, and the Konoha and Kiri ninjas were startled to see more giant animals coming their way. This time, they were a giant, multiple headed dog, and oddly enough, a giant panda. There were other two Akatsuki on top of each animal's head. One of them had long, orange hair tied in a ponytail, multiple facial piercings, and the Rinnegan. The other hardly looked human to begin with, and just like Hinata said, his appearance reminded one of a puppet. He also had facial piercings and Rinnegan eyes.

"Watch out!"

The giant animals charged at them, forcing the Konoha and Kiri ninjas to scatter. Taking advantage of this, Konan took Pain's corpse, and jumped away.

"You have seen nothing yet!" was the last thing they heard Konan saying.

"Even if we defeated Pain, it seems that these guys can act on their own," Haku observed.

"You're no closer to defeating me than you were at the very beginning of this fight," the Akatsuki with the ponytail said, sounding as if he was also Pain even if his voice was different.

"So... this guy is Pain too? How is that even possible?" Utakata asked, as he looked at the other Akatsuki, the one who looked like a puppet. "All of them are Pain then?"

"We fought an Akatsuki member that had five hearts, split among five bodies, each with a different elemental affinity," Hinata recounted. "That's why the Akatsuki are so dangerous. They aren't merely strong ninja, they possess abilities that defy both logic and morality."

"That means that we need to kill all the Akatsuki with Rinnegan eyes to defeat the actual Pain," Haku deduced. "The Rinnegan is truly an astounding power."

"You have no idea, kid," the Ponytail Pain said, as he nodded to his other self.

The Puppet Pain raised an arm against them, which split in two to reveal what appeared to be a canon. Light particles started to gather around the canon's end, forming a ball, before being released as a beam, producing an explosion when it hit its targets. However, once the smoke dispelled, the Akatsuki could see that the Konoha and Kiri ninja were okay, protected behind a strange black mass. The mass then shrank and reformed into a pair of spheres, and placed themselves behind Hinata's back.

"You seem to forget that Truth Seeking Balls can nullify all kind of ninjutsu," Hinata stated. Suddenly, her expression became one of panic when her Tenseigan caught something a second too late. "Utakata-san!"

The startled jinchuriki felt something wrapping itself around his body, before being pulled upwards by an invisible force.

"Sensei!" Hotaru screamed, as she futilely dashed towards him.

"Hotaru-san, wait!" Hinata called, grabbing her by her arm. "There's another summoned animal there! One who can turn invisible!"

As if to prove Hinata right, a giant chameleon made itself visible. Like all of Pain's bodies and animal summons, the giant reptile also had Rinnegan eyes and several black thick stakes stuck on its body. Oddly enough, its tail ended in a snake head.

"But we need to help sensei!" Hotaru urged.

"Don't worry, Hotaru, I can get out of this mess by myself," Utkata confidently stated. His cheeks then puffed before releasing a corrosive acid from his mouth, spraying the chameleon's tongue with it.

The chameleon hissed as it retreated its hurt tongue into its mouth, releasing Utkata in the process. As he fell, the jinchuriki blew more bubbles from his pipe.

"Water Release: Explosive Bubbles!"

The bubbles started to gather around the giant reptile, and as the name of the jutsu implied, the bubbles exploded upon touching its skin. The chameleon hissed further in pain, before the damage forcefully unsommoned him, leaving a cloud of smoke behind.

"Yes! That was so great, Utkata-sensei!" Hotaru gushed, happy to see her beloved master safe and sound.

"Don't celebrate yet, Hotaru. I got rid of one enemy, but there are still many others left!" Utkata told her, almost in a chiding tone.

As if on cue, the giant animals charged at them. Ponytail Pain stayed where he was, while Puppet Pain jumped from the head of the giant centipede in order to engage the enemy ninjas himself. His left up opened up in multiple places, revealing hidden missiles that he fired at the Konoha ninja.

"Scatter!" Naruto commanded, as he made several hand seals.
"Wind Release: Cyclone Vortex!"

Naruto poured as much chakra as he could into the attack, creating a huge wind vortex that sucked all the incoming missiles inside it, and made them prematurely explode.

The giant dog headed towards UtaKata while the centipede lunged at Naruto, who was wide open. Fortunately, the giant canine was stopped in time by Gamaken, while a giant needle pierced the giant arthropod multiple times, trapping it in a tangle of ninja wire.

"And got ya!" Suigetsu boasted, as he pulled the ninja wire with all his strength, in order to keep the multiple legged animal in place.

"I'll bring it down in one hit!" Haku claimed, as his hands flew through a particularly long sequence of hand seals, clapping his hands in the end. "Ice Release: Sword of Winter!"

Suddenly, the temprature abruptly dropped, and a blizzard started to blow, slowly covering the area in snow. A few seconds later, several gigantic icicles fell from the sky, impaling the centipete through several areas, forcing it to cancel the summon, disappearing in a cloud of smoke.

"Way to go, Haku!" Naruto cheered.

"This jutsu still have enough momentum for more," Haku added, his palms still together, as his sight moved onto the giant dog fighting Gamaken. "Toad-san, move out!"

Gamaken jumped backwards just before more gigantic icicles impaled the dog as well. But much to everybody's surprise, rather than dispelling it like it happened with the arthropod, the dog split into multiple copies of itself.

"What the hell!?" Naruto asked in shock.

Gamaken tried to fend off the pack of monstrous dogs, but in the end, the poor toad was overwhelmed.

"I'm sorry, Naruto," Gamaken croaked, as multiple jaws bit into several parts of his body. "I'm still more clumsy than I thought..."

And the giant toad disappeared in a cloud of smoke. Their prey gone, the giant dogs looked at Naruto, and chose him as their next prey.

"I'm not afraid of you, you overgrown mutts! Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

A clone of Naruto popped into existence. Both the original and the copy flew through a different sequence of hand seals.

"Let's see how much you like this combination!" Naruto said, as he prepared his attack. "Cyclone Vortex!"

"Fire Release: Flame Bullet!"

Naruto created a tornado aimed at the dogs, while the clone blew a fireball into the cyclone, creating a massive twister of fire which caught most of the dogs inside it. However, some of them managed to dodge it or escape with some minor burns and chase the blond.

"It seems we won't be able to defeat this summon the conventional way," Uakata observed, before his gaze locked onto the Pain who summoned it, now perched on a tree branch. "But there are more ways to get rid of a summon."

"Like defeating the summoner, right?" Hotaru asked.

Uakata nodded, and smiled at his apprentice. "Exactly, now let's go!"

"Alright, go after him, we'll try to keep these goddamned mutts at bay!" Naruto said, as he made his favorite hand seal, creating a multitude of clones.

Hotaru took the initiative, making several hand seals.

"Water Release: Water Gun!"

Joining her hands with both index fingers aiming at the Pain with the ponytail, Hotaru fired water missiles from her fingers. The summoner Pain jumped from the branch he was standing on, and continued running, trying to dodge the water projectiles, powerful enough to blow holes in the tree's bark upon hitting them. As he jumped, he motioned his arm towards Hotaru, firing several black rods from under his sleeve that blocked the water shots.

"You're wide open now!" Uta kata said, as he ran to close the gap between him and his enemy. "Water Release: Bubble Jutsu!"

Uta kata blew a barrage of explosive bubbles at the now unprotected Pain. However, before the jutsu could make contact, the portly Pain appeared out of nowhere, landing between his fellow self and Uta kata's attack, and absorbed all the bubbles before they could even explode.

"What the...?" Uta kata asked, jumping back before his orange haired enemies could counterattack. "Didn't Hinata-san deal with this guy already?"

At that moment, Miyako leaped from one of the surrounding trees, Helmet Splitter in both hands, ready to hack the chakra-absorbing Pain to bits. Her ambush was seen by the summoning Pain, but he wouldn't be able to warn his partner in time.

"Die!" the blue haired swordswoman said as she lowered the axe half of her weapon.

But much to her surprise, the chakra-absorbing Pain dodged her blow without even turning around, almost as if he had eyes on his back (or a Byakugan). Still, Miyaki didn't cease her onslaught, and continued to deliver blows to the portly Akatsuki.

As that happened, Puppet Pain reentered the battle. A compartment opened on his arm, deploying a metallic cannon, which fired a massive stream of flames at the jinchuriki of the Six Tails and his apprentice.

"Too broad to dodge! Counter it with a water jutsu!" Uakata ordered.

Hotaru nodded, and the two of them formed the same chain of seals.

"Water Release: Wild Water Wave!"

Master and apprentice expelled from their mouths a torrent of water, Uakata's being larger, which managed to successfully stop the Akatsuki's fiery attack. However, the brown haired man noticed Hotaru was starting to pant heavily.

"Hotaru, are you okay?" Uakata asked.

The dirty blond girl needed a second to answer.

"I am, but..." she wheezed. "My chakra is starting to run low..."

Uakata nodded, remembering that normal people don't have the immense chakra reserves and seemingly unending stamina jinchuriki possess. Even if he could continue fighting, the battle would become much harder to win if his allies started to drop off. Glancing back, seeing the Konoha ninjas fighting the giant dogs -which kept multiplying- he could see that the Ice Release ninja was also breathless. That huge jutsu from before must have taken a good chunk of his chakra.

As this happened, Miyaki continued fighting the chakra-absorbing Pain. It seemed he got tired of just dodging, and pulled a black rod under his sleeve. A loud clang echoed through the forest when the axe half of the Helmet Splitter was parried by said chakra rod.

Miyaki's lips curved into a wide, extremely smug smirk.

"Sucker," she laughed.

She quickly slammed the hammer half into the backside of the axe. The result was the black rod shattering, unable to withstand the sheer force of the attack, and the axe embedding itself into the Akatsuki's chest, killing him instantly.

"You guys won't have to worry anymore about your ninjutsu being absorbed," Miyaki triumphantly said. "This one won't trouble us anymore."

"Good job, Miyaki-san," Uakata praised. "Though do make sure he's dead. He recovered from a seemingly lethal attack before."

Suddenly, Hotaru's opened wide, as she pointed somewhere forwards.

"Sensei, watch out! More summons incoming!" the blond girl shouted.

Uakata turned around and saw that, indeed, the summoning Pain had finished the Summoning Jutsu seal sequence.

"Summoning ju-"

"Lightning Release: Lightning Flash Arrow!"

A blue flash happened, and the next instant, the summoning Pain was impaled by a huge arrow made of electricity. The Pain barely have time to try to understand what happened, before he fell to the floor, lifeless. He was followed by his currently summoned animals, which all instantly vanished, leaving a poof of smoke behind.

Turning from the direction the impossibly fast arrow came from, Uakata and Hotaru saw Hinata, perched on a tree branch, holding a composite bow with glowing seals carved on it and a string that appeared to be made of chakra.

"Another one down," Hinata said, as she folded her collapsible chakra bow. "Now only half of the Pains remain."

"Good job, Hinata-hime!" Naruto praised his girlfriend.

"Yes. Victory is within our grasp," Haku replied, smiling, before his eyes rested on the puppet-looking Pain. "Dealing with this enemy will be easy. Then we can move to help the Kiri ANBU with the other two and Konan. If they stayed behind, I deduce it's because they aren't suited for direct combat."

"I believe you're right, but-" Hinata said, before she interrupted herself when her Tenseigan caught something from the corner of her vision. "HAKU, WATCH OUT!"

"Uh?"

The warning came too late, and the Ice Ninja was impaled by several black rods that were fired out of nowhere, with such force that they pushed Haku backwards, as if he had been kicked by a giant beast, until his lithe body was slammed against a large tree.

"HAKU!" both Naruto and Hinata screaming in unison, with the Hyuga flying towards his position. "Don't worry, I'll help you!"

"I don't think so," a familiar, chill-inducing voice said. "Basho Ten'in!"

While in mid air, Hinata was pulled with incredible force towards Pain, the one with the gravity based powers. The one who should be dead. His strong hand gripped against her throat.

"You... how...?" the Hyuga managed to ask.

"Do you honestly think you can kill a god?" Pain asked, as Konan landed behind him. Despite such boastful question, his tone wasn't one of smugness or superiority. "Toneri requested me that, should our paths cross, I spare your life, for you're dear to him," Pain said, as another black rod appeared in his other hand. "However, his foolish romantic desires are secondary to our goal, so I made no promises."

And then, Hinata followed Haku's fate, her gut being impaled by the black rod, before Pain lazily tossed her body away. A pool of blood started to form around her.

"Hinata... no..." Naruto said in a whisper. His body tensed, as his hands clutched into fists. "How dare you... how dare you... !" Naruto began. His eyes turned red with slitted pupils. His teeth and nails grew longer and sharper, and his cheek marks became bolder. A red aura started to form around his body. "HOW DARE YOU!"

The aura took the shape of a fox, with two tails forming behind him. The grass around him started to burn as a strong wind started to blow in every direction.

"You made him mad, Pain," Konan observed. "This will make things much harder for us."

"Not necessarily," Pain countered, as he extended his hand, his fingers curled as if they were holding something. "Stand back, Konan, I'm going to do it."

Pain opened his hand, revealing an object the size of a small marble, colored pure black. As if it weighed nothing, it started to elevate into the air the moment Pain released it. Just at that moment, the feral Naruto charged forward.

"Chibaku Tensei!"

The earth started to rumble, as chunks of the ground were teared apart and pulled towards the black orb in the sky, as well as fallen branches, pieces of wood, leaves and anything light enough not to resist the gravity pull. Unfortunately, human beings were in this category.

Naruto's charge was abruptly cut as he was pulled upwards. Claws made of red chakra grew from his fingers, and used them to remain attached to the ground, while slowly advancing towards Pain, resisting the gravitational pull, fueled by sheer anger alone.

" Yes.. this man hurt your friends, and want to exterminate your kind..." the Nine Tails voice said within him. "Now take my power! Give into your anger! Make sure he won't be able to hurt you again!"

The jinchuriki let out a feral, inhuman roar that chilled the blood of all of those who heard it, except the orange haired Akatsuki, who remained as stoic and nonplussed as ever.

"Your power is incredible, Nine Tails. But the power I wield transcends even that of a Tailed Beast," Pain boasted.

Naruto's anger grew each second, and with it, the power coursing through his veins burned stronger. A third tail formed along the other two, as his eyes turned solid red. Burns started to spread across his body.

And then, something distracted him from the blinding fury that compelled him to go towards Pain and tear him to shreds: Hinata and Haku's bodies, flying towards the forming planetoid. He saw Hinata's eyes. Her Tenseigan still glinted with a white light. Could that mean that Hinata was still alive?

" No! Don't let her distract you! Your girlfriend is dead! Pain killed her! Now revel in my power in order to become strong enough to kill him! Let the anger guide you!" the Kyubi commanded, his voice growing increasingly desperate.

But the tailed beast's voice didn't have the intended effect on Naruto. The number of tails went down to just two, and as the anger within Naruto subsided, his focus became more clear, and making his choice, let the gravity well pull him as well.

" NO! Don't do that! If you do it, you will die!" the Kyubi called.

Of course, Naruto had no intention to die. He used the rocks flying towards the planetoid as stepping stones, until he reached Hinata, and wrapped her between his arms. He then did the same with Haku, which he used his two tails to grab him, before he tried to take them away from the forming planetoid.

Unfortunately, as Naruto did this, he was unable to provide aid to the Kiri ninjas, not even in the form of Shadow Clones, as his mind was too focused on saving his friends and teammates, while keeping the Nine Tails' from poisoning his mind.

"Oh shit!" Suigetsu yelled, as he was pulled towards the forming sphere of rocks. Overcoming the shock and panic, Suigetsu threw the Sweing Needle towards a tree, and maneuvered the attached ninja wire as to wrap it around its canopy, creating an anchor.

"Hang on there!" Miyaki replied, as she stabbed the axe half of the Helmet Splitter into a nearby tree, in order to anchor herself as well. "Everybody, grab onto either Suigetsu or me!"

Unfortunately, there was somebody unable to anchor themselves to the ground like the others were doing, and was pulled towards the forming planetoid.

"AAAAAAHHHHH!" Hotaru screamed, as she was pulled upwards.

"Hotaru!" Uakata shouted.

The jinchuriki of the Six Tails instantly leaped to her rescue, letting the gravitational well pull him as well in order to gain speed, and using the flying chunks of earth and ground as stepping stones, just like his counterpart from Konoha had done so moments before to save his comrades.

"Got you!" Uakata said, as his fingers clamped over the young woman's wrist.

"Sensei!" Hotaru screamed again.

"Just hold on! Don't worry, I won't let you go!" Uakata promised, as he began to now move away from the gravity attack, still using the flying stones as improvised platforms.

However, at that moment, butterflies started to appear, fluttering around the tall brown haired man, as if they were unaffected by the gravity field. A feeling of dread washed over him as more and more butterflies gathered, some of them perching themselves on Uakata. Then, the former Kiri ninja learned two things, neither of them good.

First was that those butterflies weren't real, but origami figures.

And second, that they weren't made of ordinary paper, but of explosive tags.

Which led to a third, more distressing revelation: He wouldn't be able to get rid of the explosive butterflies while holding Hotaru. Two options were now in front of him, but he took no time to make his choice. To him, it was obvious. His hand reached his pipe.

"Hotaru, I can't save the both of us," Uakata began, as he took the pipe to his mouth. More butterflies gathered around him. "In the past, I would have chose my life over yours in an instant, but that was before getting to know you better. I'm glad that you were so persistent of being part of my life, and that I ended up giving up and let you in. Now I see that I could have been a better teacher, but I think I have time for one last lesson."

Uakata blew a rather large bubble, which he used to encase Hotaru inside it. The bubble managed to resist the gravitational pull and slowly floated away from the danger, much to Hotaru's incesant protest.

"No, sensei, don't do it!" Hotaru screamed, as tears fell down her cheeks, while she futilely banged the surprisingly hard wall of the bubble with her fists.

"Live," Uakata said, a small smile formed in his lips. "Enjoy life ot its fullest, don't be chained by the past, and make sure that when your time comes, you can look back and smile knowing that you have no regrets."

"SENSEI!"

Uakata's last words were followed by a chain of explosions, engulfing the unlucky jinchuriki, before his unmoving body was pulled by the gravity core. Konan quickly flew towards him and intercepted him before he could become part of the still growing planetoid, which was large enough to partially block the sun.

"Are you sure he's still alive?" Pain asked. "Those were quite the explosions."

"I'm positive," the blue haired woman replied, as she landed besides her partner, with the burned and uncosncious Uakata on her arms. "I know the amount of force I have to use to neutralize a jinchuriki without killing him."

"YOU!" Naruto yelled, as he landed in front of them with a loud thud. The two-tailed chakra cloak burned with intensity around his body. "Do you think I'm going to let you go away with him!?"

"What we do we do, Pain?" Konan asked her partner. "Should we capture him too?"

"I think for the time being, we should stay safe and retreat with the one we have captured," Pain's raised hand curled into a claw. "But don't worry, Nine Tails, your time will come as well."

"Bastard! You're not going to-"

"One last thing: tell Jiraiya-sensei that I send our regards," Pain replied, before quickly motioning his outstretched hand down.

"Jiraiya... sensei?" Naruto asked, dumbfounded. The shock caused by such statement was enough to stop him on his tracks.

A few seconds, he finally realized of the situation he was in. A massive rock was falling down on both him and all his friends and partners. Though judging by Suigetsu's screams, it seems that they had noticed and were taking the steps to avoid being crushed to death, while Hotaru slowly floated away inside a large bubble. He was about to run, though not back, but forward. He couldn't let Pain get away with Utakata. But before he could resume the chase, he realized of something.

"Hinata-hime and Haku. They're too wounded to run by themselves. They'll die if that thing falls near them!" Naruto distressingly thought.

Glancing one last time with hate-filled eyes at the retreating Akatsuki, Naruto turned around, and rushed towards where he had left his friends and teammates, hoping that they would be safe while he and the remaining ninja finished the fight.

But alas, this time victory would go to Akatsuki as well.

...

Sometime Later

When Naruto woke up, it was nighttime already. He had very vague memories of what happened after the man-made asteroid hit the ground. The blond guessed the Nine Tails' chakra combined with the exhaustion from the battle made him lose consciousness.

And once again, his thoughts went to his teammates and girlfriend.

"Hinata-hime! Haku!" Naruto yelled, as he quickly rose up -not even realizing he was lying down a moment ago-, and started to frantically look around in panic, his eyes still adjusting to the growing darkness. "Where are-"

"Calm down, Naruto," a female voice gently said near him. "They're besides you, and safe."

Naruto realized that Miyaki was crouching besides him. Looking to the other side, he was Hinata and Haku, both of them unconscious, lying down on white sheets. Despite how pale and sick they looked, the fact that he could see their chests heaving up and down was reassuring.

"We tried to patch them up as best as we could, but they're in need of medical assistance," Miyaki explained. "Sadly, our group of ANBU has no medic nin."

"Utakata," Naruto said, now that his mind was at ease -relatively speaking- when it came to Hinata and Haku's status. "They got away with him."

"And he isn't our only loss," Miyaki sadly added. "Tsurigi died in the fight, as well as one of our ANBU. By the time we can mount a rescue mission, Utakata shall be dead. This mission has been a massive failure."

Naruto couldn't help but nod in frustration, before his eyes once again rested on the sleeping forms of his girlfriend and friend. They had been very close to lose their lives today. Even if Naruto knew that Akatsuki was a dangerous enemy, he always believed that the Assault Squad was powerful enough to beat them no matter what. That childish notion, no doubt engorged by their past victories against them, had been shattered when the rogue organization decided to dispatch one of their heavyweights.

Through the corner of his vision, the blond saw Hotaru, sitting on the grass, hugging her knees against her chest, her sad eyes lost into nothingness. Shaking the pain, Naruto stood up, walked towards her, and decided that maybe she should say something to the distraught girl.

"Hey," Naruto awkwardly greeted the girl. "Are you... are you okay?"

She took a few moments to answer. Her voice sounded cracked.
"Yes, I am, thank you. But Uakata-sensei is not."

Naruto didn't say anything, and sat besides her. While Naruto was sad for losing a fellow jinchuriki, this girl knew and probably loved Uakata on a more personal level.

"It would have been better if I weren't here," Hotaru sadly said.

"What? Why do you say that?" Naruto asked.

"It was my fault sensei got captured. He was busy saving me, so he couldn't save himself," Hotaru explained, her eyes starting to swell up with tears. "If I wasn't so weak... if I were a better apprentice to him... none of this would have happened. He was right trying to push me away from him."

"No!" Naruto replied, surprised by the volume of his voice. "Don't you dare to think that. It wasn't your fault that Uakata got captured," despite Naruto's choice of words, it was obvious to the girl that her sensei was as good as gone. "Akatsuki are the only ones at fault here. They're the ones who took Uakata away. That's why we must do everything in our hand to stop them before more innocents suffer."

"I'd like to do that but..." Hotaru began, sobbing a little. "I'm not that strong. I'd only get in the way. My uncle was right, being a ninja was just a childish whim. I should better return home..."

"It's that what you truly want?" Naruto asked.

"No," she replied. "But what else can I do?"

"What do you want?" the blond repeated.

"I want..." Hotaru began, fighting back the tears. "I wanted to be a ninja. To be strong, to be able to take care of myself, as well as protect others. That's why when I met Uakata-sensei and saw how strong and skilled he was, I did all I could to make him teach me."

Naruto smiled a little. "Hey, those are pretty good reasons to be a ninja. Plus I saw you fight and you're really good. Why let Uakata's teaching go to waste? Continuing your ninja training could be a good way to honor his memory."

Hotaru looked at Naruto a bit surprised, before her eyes shrank a little, and her lips formed a sad smile. "I guess you're right. But what can I do? I no longer have a sensei."

"You can get a new one. There's always time to become a ninja," Naruto kindly said. "The offer from before still stands. The gates of Konoha are open for you if you want to join us."

"That's... very generous of you," Hotaru thanked him. "But for the time being, I need some time alone... to do some thinking, to grieve Uakata-sensei, and plan what I'm going to do next."

"Oh, okay," Naruto replied, as he stood back to his feet. "But try not to wallow in grief too much, okay? Uakata would have wanted you to move on with your life."

"I know," Hotaru nodded. "Thanks for the talk."

Naruto nodded, and walked away. He heard Suigetsu and Miyaki talking about how they'll head back to Kirigakure with the first light of dawn, and that they'll have to make sure all the wounded were taken care of. Though the blond quickly lost interest in their mundane talk, the last thing the Akatsuki said before leaving with Uakata replayed in his head.

" Tell Jiraiya-sensei that I send our regards."

As Naruto pondered those words, an image appeared in his mind. A picture of his dad, only much younger, with three kids: a redhead, one with orange spiky hair, and a girl with chin length blue hair. He didn't remember where or when, but he saw such picture in his house, some time ago. He had dismissed that picture as just another trio of Genin his father had trained in the past. Now he was completely sure two of those kids were the same Akatsuki he just fought.

"Dad... what did you hide from me?"

Author's Note: Sadly for our heroes, Akatsuki wins again, and Uakata becomes the latest of their victims. You know, even if it would have made an already long arc even longer, now I kind of regret not including Uakata in the Kirigakure Civil War arc. He could have bonded with Naruto, and that way his death could have have a greater emotional impact, both for the blond and the story as a whole. Oh well, at least I'm more satisfied with his performance than Yugito's, since he got to be more involved in the arc.

I had to wait a whooping seventy chapters, but I finally got to write for my all time favorite Naruto villain, and boy, that felt good! I hope I made Pain's justice, and that you like him, both personality and badassery wise. Though given that he nearly killed Hinata and Haku, I'm afraid that some people are going to get mad at him. Oh well.

Yeah, speaking of Hinata and Haku, due the injuries they sustained in this chapter, they're going to be out of commission for some time, leaving Naruto as the only remaning member of the Assault Squad. Don't worry, while they recover, Naruto will get assigned a new team for the next arc. All of them being characters I think are popular, which people have been asking more of them (though I can tell you already it's not going to be Team Gai. Yes, I know I'm neglecting them, but I'm kind of struggling with where and when I should use them).

Also, there was something curious about this chapter: Naruto's Sage Mode. I pretty much had to find ways to remove Naruto from many fights so he wouldn't just crush the enemy in an instant, to the point that I regretted giving him Sage Mode so soon (so no, stop asking about the Kurama Chakra Cloak, he isn't getting it before he did in canon). However, Naruto getting Sage Mode much earlier played against him here, given that it gave the Akatsuki time to observe it and develop a way to counter it, while in canon, Pain pretty much had to guess how it worked as he fought Naruto (and lost quite a few bodies in the process).

And yeah, Naruto finally found about Pain's connection to Jiraiya. Which means that Jiraiya's greatest fears are going to be confirmed next chapter. It's going to be a "fun" one, hehe.

Thanks to Ookami88 for betareading the chapter.

Only four jinchuriki left! Which ones will fall to the Akatsuki, which ones will survive? As this question is in the air, don't forget to leave your thoughts on this chapter in a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Heavy Rain

Author's Note: Hey Hektols, if you are reading this (and I know you aren't), with this chapter, Son of The Sannin has surpassed New Chance in terms of wordcount! Yeah! Now, I think it's going to take more time to surpass it in terms of reviews, favorites and follows, hehe ^^U

And if you ARE really reading this... goddamit man, when are you going to update New Chance!? It's almost two years since the last actual chapter!

Anyway, enjoy this chapter:

Chapter 71:

Heavy Rain

or

Drinking and Planning

The journey back to Konoha did nothing but make Hinata and Haku's already precarious condition even worse.

Naruto's first idea to speed the journey was to summon a giant toad and have it give them a ride. But it was soon made evident that the constant leaps wouldn't sit very well with the heavily wounded Konoha ninja. Naruto's next idea was to carry them on the back of clones, but the problem ended up being the same. In the end, Naruto ended up making two makeshift stretchers, and carried them with the aid of clones.

Despite being able to run at a respectable speed, Naruto was unable to leap through the trees as he usually did, which ended up making his trip back home much longer than the justifiably impatient blond wanted. Not helped by all the times he had to stop in order to change the bandages or close a wound that wouldn't stop reopening.

Naruto couldn't be thankful enough when he saw the gates of Konoha. Finally, this nightmare of a mission could come to an end.

...

Konoha Hospital, a couple hours later

"Your teammates are indeed lucky. Either lucky, or crazy strong. To survive such a long journey with such grievous wounds," Tsunade commented, as she looked over the unconscious Hyuga.

Thankfully, after an intervention of proper medical ninjas -her mother among them- Hinata and Haku were finally out of danger, and placed in a room each.

Naruto sighed, and shook his head. "If we were strong or had luck on our side, Akatsuki wouldn't have won."

Tsunade placed a comforting hand on her adoptive son, and gave him a sympathetic smile. "Don't beat yourself too hard, Naruto. I'm sure all of you did what you could. But no matter how good you are, you sometimes end up facing an unexpectedly strong opponent. Did I mention the time your father and I fought against Hanzo the Salamander?"

That made Naruto chuckle a bit. "You did. Hundred of times. Not that I ever get tired of hearing it."

"So you should know that even the best of the best fail at times," Tsunade pointed out.

"Oh, I do know that," Naruto replied. "It's just that..." he trailed off, as his eyes rested on Hinata's unconscious form.

"It doesn't make failing any less painful, right?" Tsunade finished his sentence. Naruto silently nodded. "Sorry if I sound blunt, but get accustomed to it. Be thankful that at the very least, your temmates came back home alive. Others aren't as lucky."

Naruto nodded. He knew exactly what his adoptive mother was talking about. While she was obviously not as eager to share such memories of the war as with the epic battle against Hanzo, Tsunade lost her fiancée and little brother during the Second Ninja War. It was what caused her to leave the village with no other company than a four year old Shizune.

That moment, the door opened. It wasn't a slam, but it had more force than it was acceptable in a hospital. Naruto and Tsunade turned around, and saw another two female Hyugas entering the room, concern and worry written all around their faces.

"My daughter!" Hikari Hyuga said, as she ran to check Hinata, followed by her youngest daughter.

"Don't worry, Hyuga-san. Hinata is fine, even if she may not look like it now," Tsunade interjected, reassuring the former Hyuga Clan Head. "We estimate she'll be completely recovered in three or four weeks."

"Oh, thank goodness she's going to be okay," she said, sighing in relief. "Thanks for your efforts, Tsunade-sama," Hikari replied, bowing at the Sannin. She then looked at Naruto. "And thank you for taking care of my daughter, Naruto-kun. I know that have you not been there, maybe she would have never returned."

"I doubt that's the case, given that she's in that state because of me," Naruto dejectedly said.

"Naruto, I told you that-" Tsunade began, before being interrupted.

"What do you mean, Naruto?" Hanabi asked. "How can you be responsible of her condition? That would mean that you attacked her, and I can't imagine you doing that."

"No, I didn't attack her, but not that it mattered," Naruto replied. "I wasn't strong enough to protect my teammates, and they ended up paying the price. Had I been better prepared, the Akatsuki wouldn't have defeated us and leave Hinata-hime and Haku like that."

Hikari couldn't help but smile a little. She placed a comforting hand on Naruto's cheek. "Naruto-kun, while I appreciate your feelings for my daughter, her injuries are not your responsibility. Hinata is a ninja, just like you are, and knows the risks such position entails."

"But we're teammates-" Naruto tried to protest, but Hikari raised a hand to silence him.

"Naruto, I've known you since you were a child. I know how much you care about my daughter, and how much you push yourself to be the best possible ninja," Hikari continued. "However, no matter how hard you try, there will be times that you will fail."

"See? That's exactly what I told you," Tsunade agreed, nodding vigorously.

"I'm not winning this one, am I?" Naruto asked in defeat. He then looked at his adoptive mom. "We should leave Hikari and Hanabi alone with Hinata-hime, mom."

Tsunade nodded in agreement. "These rooms are too small for so many people, and we've been here for quite some time already," she said, before both blondes left the room.

As Tsunade went to other parts of the hospital to continue with her daily work, Naruto moved to the next room, the one they put Haku in. Upon opening the door, the jinchuriki saw the unconscious Ice Ninja had already somebody paying him a visit: a woman with long purple hair, holding a baby of a few months old, also with purple hair, albeit in a lighter shade.

"Hey there, Yugao," Naruto greeted the ANBU. The woman was wearing a dark blue shirt and green knee length pants. It was one of the few times the blond saw her wearing other than her job uniform.

Yugao turned at Naruto, and smiled. "Hello there. Came to see Haku?"

Naruto nodded, while repressing the urge to apologize to Haku's foster mother for failing to keep the Ice Ninja safe. He knew he would answer in a similar way to Hikari and Tsunade, and that would only made him feel even worse.

"You know, seeing Haku like this..." Yugao began, as her eyes drifted towards the baby in her arms. "Makes me wonder if I should allow Seiichi-kun to become a ninja like his father and I. If something happened to either of them..."

"Your perspective surely changes when you're a parent, right?" Naruto asked the purplette.

"Yes. You're aware of the dangers you go through with every mission, and even if you don't regret your choices, you wish your children would take a different path," Yugao explained, as she rocked Seiichi a little. "But in the end, it's them who have to choose, regardless of what we think."

"Yeah..." Naruto said, almost in a whisper. "Do you want Seiichi to become a ninja, then?"

"I want him to be whatever makes him happy," Yugao replied. "If being a ninja is his call, then I won't stop him. It'd be hypocritical of me if I did such a thing."

Naruto nodded at her response, and the two of them fell into a comfortable silence, with only Haku's slow breath being heard. That's it, until Naruto opened his mouth to ask something.

"Hey, Yugao, may I ask you something?" Naruto asked, not waiting to see the purplette's answer. "What made you and Hayate adopt Haku to begin with?" Naruto asked.

Yugao seemed to be taken aback by such direct question, but her surprise didn't last long. Her smile put Naruto at ease, knowing that the question wasn't as personal as he feared.

"At first, I admit it was the money," Yugao told him.

"Huh?"

"Hokage-sama announced that the village was going to take in a refugee from the Land of Water who happened to have a powerful Bloodline Limit," Yugao started to explain. "And offered a considerable amount of money for the kids' upbringing until he reached adulthood, almost twice as much as he would need. Hayate and I were saving to buy a place of our own, so that drew our attention.

"But it wasn't just the money. Hayate and I also wanted to have kids of our own one day," Yugao smiled at the sleeping child in her arms upon saying this. "And thought that maybe this could be a good opportunity to practice, you know? Even if Haku-kun was almost ten. Though, we grew to love Haku as our own child. While we know we could never replace Zabuza, I hope he at least return some of that love."

This time, it was Naruto who smiled. "Trust me, he does. He wouldn't have grown to love this village as his home if it wasn't for both you and Hayate."

"That's reassuring to hear. Isn't it, Seiichi-kun? How your older brother loves his adoptive family?" Yugao bably talked her child.

"Naruto," a familiar voice said behind him.

The blond turned around, and saw Jiraiya standing in front of the door. He turned back to the purplette one last time. "Nice to speak with ya, Yugao. I'll come to visit Haku whenever I can."

"It was a pleasure. I'm sure he'll appreciate it," Yugao replied, before addressing the white haired Sannin. "Hokage-sama."

Jiraiya nodded back in return, before closing the door.

"Naruto, the ANBU told me of your arrival and the state your teammates were in," Jiraiya replied. "I came to see you as soon as I heard it."

"Well, I got lucky. As you can see, I'm not any worse for the wear," Naruto replied. Jiraiya could detect some bitterness in his voice. "Can we go somewhere more private? There's stuff I need to talk you about. Important stuff about the mission."

"You want to give me your mission report already? Sure, let's go to my office-"

"Actually, I preferred if we went somewhere else," Naruto cut him. Such request surprised the Toad Sannin. Naruto never had any trouble with his office in the past.

"Uh sure. Where do you want to go?"

...

Ten Minutes Later, Above the Hokage Monument

Jiraiya and Naruto were sitting at the top of the cliff where the Hokage Monument was carved. The whole village spread before their eyes. It was, indeed, a magnificent view of Konoha. Unfortunately, neither father nor son were able to enjoy it much.

"So, Akatsuki already has another jinchuriki in their grasp," Jiraiya said, letting out a tired sigh. "That makes five. More than half."

"Yes. But that alone isn't the worst part," Naruto said.

"I don't know if I want to hear it," Jiraiya replied.

"Too bad, because it concerns you specifically," Naruto stated, some anger seeping from his voice. Anger that was directed at Jiraiya. Something the Sannin noticed, and didn't like one bit. "The Akatsuki that fought us were a man with spiky orange hair and a woman with blue hair that had paper related jutsu. Do those descriptions ring any bells? Because the man called you 'Jiraiya-sensei'."

Jiraiya let out another sigh, the longest so far. "I was wishing for it to be just a rumor, or a misunderstanding. I've been trying to ignore it, but guess I have to face the facts."

"So, you know them, then," Naruto said, sounding mildly accusatory. The Sannin nodded. "Did you know they were Akatsuki?"

"I had some reports that said that, yes. But I wanted to make sure it was really them before taking any course of action," Jiraiya admitted.

"And why didn't you tell me!?" Naruto shouted, letting more of his built-up anger seep.

"They... they are two people who were dear to me..." Jiraiya admitted, sounding hurt. "I didn't want to think that they had fallen so far..."

"What's so special about them? I thought that you had nowhere like that in your life other than mom and the Old Man Hokage," Naruto asked, throwing his hands in the air.

"Those two were children from Ame that, alongside a third one, became my very first students. I admit that the reason I decided to train them was because one of them had the Rinnegan," Jiraiya said, much to Naruto's shock. He always believed that Jiraiya only trained Naruto's biological father and his teammates. "I lived with them in Ame for two years, and taught them enough ninjutsu and necessary skills in order to survive such a harsh place like Ame."

"A few years later, during the Third War, I heard that they formed an organization with the purpose of bringing peace to their homeland."

Unfortunately, they drew Hanzo's attention, and not in a good way. That... that was the last time I heard of them. Until recently."

"What do you mean?" Naruto asked.

"There were rumors regarding Ame, the biggest were two that I thought could be related: one, that Hanzo had been quietly disposed and no longer ruled the village, even if that was Ame's official position. And second, that the village was secretly controlled by the Akatsuki. I sent Itachi Uchiha to check if those rumors could be true.

"As expected, they were. Hanzo has been dead for Kami knows how long, and indeed, two Akatsuki members were the one in charge now, which people in Ame called 'God' and his 'Angel'. I could confirm that 'Angel' is indeed Konan, one of the children I trained back then."

"The other goes under the name of Pain. And he claimed to be a God," Naruto told him. "Though given the power of the Rinnegan, that claim wasn't that far off. If you could only see the jutsu he used to finish us off..."

Jiraiya nodded. He had never seen the whole extent of the Rinnegan's power, but he remembered that that boy was one of the most talented and powerful kids he had ever seen. However, his memories were interrupted when he realized that there was something about Naruto's tale that didn't add up.

"Naruto, you said that the other Akatsuki, Konan's partner, had orange spiky hair, right?" Jiraiya asked, now sounding curious.

"Yes. Is that important?" Naruto asked.

"It is. You see, the true name of that man is Yahiko," Jiraiya began. "That wasn't the kid with the Rinnegan."

Naruto's eyes opened wide. "Come again?"

"The kid with the Rinnegan was Nagato. He had pale skin and bright red hair. Just like your cousin. In fact, he could be an Uzumaki," Jiraiya pointed out.

Naruto's mind once again recalled the allegedly stolen Uzumaki Seal Barrier that Akatsuki had used to protect their lair while they extracted the One Tail from Gaara, as well as the Moon Acolyte's revelation on how an Uzumaki could awaken the Rinnegan if they had Uchiha ascendancy. But what his father said... it made no sense.

"No, I'm pretty sure what I saw," Naruto insisted. "The man had orange spiky hair, and his skin was fair but not pale."

"It is possible that Nagato died and Yahiko took his Rinnegan?" Jiraiya suggested. Naruto noticed the Sannin's wording, leaving out the possibility of Yahiko killing Nagato for his doujutsu. Though it was understandable, since it would be like Naruto killing Hinata to have her Tenseigan.

"No, that can't be, unless that Yahiko was also an Uzumaki or a Senju," Naruto replied. "According to the Moon Acolytes, only somebody with Six Paths chakra can wield the Rinnegan or the Sharingan properly. Kakashi-sensei can only use his Sharingan during short intervals, and he's usually pretty winded after that. Pain had not one but two Rinnegan, and he didn't show any kind of signs of fatigue by using it."

"I was hoping that once we had information on every Akatsuki member we could answer all our questions. But it seems that now there are even more questions to answer," a frustrated Jiraiya sighed. He massaged his temples as he tried to put his thoughts in order. No, it was not time to make conjectures, there were some questions that could be answered. "Alright, we'll care about Pain's potential identity later. You saw him fight, right? Tell me what kind of powers he had so we are prepared for the next time we face him."

Naruto nodded, and told his adoptive father about Pain. How he somehow spread his conscience across six bodies, each with one ability. One that could summon multiple animals, another one that could absorb ninjutsu, another that was like a living puppet full of weaponry, and lastly, the "main" one, who used powerful gravity based attacks.

"You said there were six bodies," Jiraiya pointed out. "What about the other two?"

"We neever saw them. They stayed behind. My clones and the Kiri ANBU fought them, but other than using those black rods and basic ninjutsu, they didn't have any kind of unique or amazing ability," Naruto said.

"Or maybe they had, but they didn't show them," Jiraiya pointed out. "The fact that they decided to remain in the background makes me think two possibilities: either their abilities are oriented towards support rather than direct combat, or they're too valuable to risk in a fight. Probably both."

"I think that one of them is able to revive the other bodies," Naruto stated. "Utakata and Haku managed to kill the Pain with the gravity attacks. Hinata checked, his chakra network was down. Then, the woman, Konan took his body away, and later he was back and kicking, as if nothing happened."

"If one of the bodies can resurrect the other ones, then it makes sense that he'd try to keep that one away from danger. That may be the key to defeat Pain," Jiraiya said.

"What about the other?"

"An escort?" Jiraiya suggested, not completely sure. "I mean, that body is important, so it makes sense that he'd try to keep it guarded. Given what you told me, the other four bodies already have powerful and outstanding abilities."

"It could be, but given that all five bodies have any kind of unique ability, we should think the sixth one is no exception, right?" Naruto suggested.

Jiraya placed a hand under his chin, pensive. "I think you may be right. Besides, thinking that the sixth body is any less dangerous than the other five is not a wise thing to do."

"Yeah. Though next time I face them, I'll keep an eye on that one," Naruto said. "Though... with Kurenai-sensei pregnant and Hinata-hime and Haku out of comission, I'm the only member of the Assault Squad. Which isn't much of an squad," Naruto dejectedly said.

Jiraiya smiled at his son in a reasuring manner. "Don't worry, you won't be teamless for long. For the time being, just go train and get ready for the next time Akatsuki shows up, okay?"

Naruto nodded. "Yeah. We aren't the only ones who have been doing research. The Akatsuki knew about my Sage Mode and how to stop me from achieving it."

Jiraya's eyes widened in shock for a second. "That's... rather troubling."

"They gathered intel from all my fights. They know that I send two clones away to gather nature energy. Pain had two of his bodies kill my clones before they could do anything," Naruto explained. "I need to find a way to enter Sage Mode without relying on clones. Or diguise clones while they gather energy. Maybe I could have them Transform as rocks or stumps or something like that?"

Jiraiya shook his head." In order to gather nature energy, you need to be perfectly still. That means that you can't be performing any kind of jutsu either, even one just as easy as simple as the transformation."

"Dammit," the blond cursed, as he lightly punched the ground besides him. "Then what kind of options do I have?"

"Sage Mode is indeed powerful, but in my opinion you had become far too dependant on it," Jiraiya pointed out.

"Sage Mode gives me a huge advantage over my opponents, why I shouldn't use it?" Naruto asked the Sannin. "In the war against Akatsuki, the stakes are too high not to use everything I have."

"Again, that's true, but you shouldn't rely on one thing too much," Jiraiya rebutted. "Until recently, I never mastered Sage Mode completely, that's why I saved it as a last resort in case everything else failed. Why don't you try to improve on your other areas in case you have something to rely on? When was the last time you developed a new elemental jutsu? Or a seal?"

Naruto opened his mouth to speak, but no words came out of it. He tried to recall the last time he devised a new jutsu but that was... far longer than he remembered. The blond had learned quite a few elemental ninjutsu of all five basic elements during the past years, but those were mostly direct blasts, used to counter whatever element the opponent used. Nothing too fancy.

Naruto reflected on his fighting style: mostly wind jutsu for ranged attacks -maybe add another element if the situation calls for it-, his trusty Wind Blade for melee combat, lots of clones, and his trump card, the Rasenshuriken. All of them powered by up Sage Mode.

However, as the fight against Pain showed, the Rasenshuriken was out of the equation if Sage Mode is unavailable, depriving Naruto of his most powerful jutsu. Not to say that Naruto was defenseless without it, not even close. But against foes of Akatsuki's caliber, maybe he needed more jutsu that have the same potency and destructive power.

And not just that. He needed more jutsu that were more than just elemental blasts or barriers. Something that could be used in a nonconventional way, something that could give him some sort of tactical advantage, like flying. Hinata and Fu were able to fly, and so was that Akatsuki woman, Konan. Flight give battles a whole new dimension. But if flight was so easy, somebody would have created a jutsu decades ago, right?

"No, that's quitter talk," Naruto inwardly said. "I'm sure that there's a way I can make it work."

"So, if my intelligence is correct, besides Fu and you, the other jinchuriki left are the Raikage's brother, and one of Iwa's two jinchuriki," Jiraiya stated. "If we look back at Akatsuki's operations, they will take some time to strike again until they find out where the jinchuriki are."

"I'm pretty sure they do know Fu and I are in Konoha," Naruto dryly said.

"Yes, but in order to capture you, they'd have to launch an invasion on the village," Jiraiya replied. Naruto opened his mouth, but Jiraiya beat him to the punch. "And before you bring Taki up, remember that Taki was a minor village with a low number of ninjas that rely on hidden passageways to keep their enemies out of their gates. If Hidan and Kakuzu had tried that crap against us, their so called army wouldn't have gotten past the main gate."

"You seem to be confident in the village's defenses. That's good, I guess," Naruto observed.

"Hey, after the Nine Tails attack, the Uchiha Insurrection and Orochimaru's invasion... you know they say, what doesn't kill you makes you stronger. If Akatsuki will come for us, we will be ready," Jiraiya stated, sure of himself. "But I don't think they'll go for either you or Fu right now."

"What do you mean?" Naruto asked.

"The other jinchuriki of Kumo, Killer B, pretty much disappeared from the face of the Earth after news of Yugito's capture arrived Kumo," Jiraiya revealed. "My guess is that the Raikage sent his brother to some sort of ultra safe and secret underground bunker until Akatsuki is dealt with. That leaves the other jinchuriki, the one from Iwa, as the more logical Akatsuki will target next. Regardless if it's either Han or Roshi, they both left their villages, so they will be the most vulnerable to capture."

"I see. I presume you have people looking for him?" Naruto asked.

Jiraiya frowned a little. "Do you really need to ask? I know this is a life of death situation, and not just for the jinchuriki."

"Good to hear that. Let's hope that what happened to Utakata won't repeat again," Naruto said, getting up. "Man, the journey back left me exhausted. I think I'm heading back home."

"I think I'll join you. Today has been a slow day in the office, and I doubt anybody will complain if I decide to leave a little earlier," Jiraiya added.

...

Senju Residence, later that night

"When was the last time we did this?" Tsunade asked.

It was late in the night, probably midnight. Naruto, Hagane and Kaida were already asleep in their bedrooms -or so both Sannin hoped-. Jiraiya and Tsunade were sitting in the living room's couch, holding each a cup of sake. There was a tray with a couple bottles of sake and more cups sitting on the coffee table in front of them.

"I don't know, but I need it," Jiraiya said, as he downed his cup of sake in one go, before pouring himself another one.

"I think we only do this when there's some serious shit going on," Tsunade stated. "And since nothing too bad seems to be going on on my end... I'm guessing you want to share with me something that's troubling you?"

"You always read me so easily," Jiraiya replied.

Tsunade snorted, and rolled her eyes. "Because you're an open book."

"I think we already had a conversation like this before, hadn't we?" Jiraiya asked, as he took a sip from his cup. "Or it's the alcohol?"

"Eh, it may be both," Tsunade said, as she pured herself more sake. "Now come on, spit it. What's eating you on the inside? Are those kids from Ame?"

Jiraiya chuckled sadly. "Once again, you nailed it. I got confirmation from both Naruto and Itachi that at least two of those kids are still alive, and they aren't just part of the Akatsuki, but everything seems to point out that they're the fucking leaders," Jiraiya said, as he angrily downed the rest of his cup. "Such a great sensei I am, right? It's a miracle our kids came out as normal as they did with me as their dad."

Tsunade's face formed a scowl, and angrily punched her husband in the shoulder -thankfully, it wasn't a chakra-enhanced punch-. "Don't say that! You're a great father and teacher! If you were such an awful person, I would have never married you!"

"But Hime..." Jiraiya tried to protest.

"No buts!" she cut him. "What happened to those kids is tragic, but it's not your fault, you hear me?"

"Whose fault it is, then?" Jiraiya retorted.

"I don't know. But not yours. You did your best to help those kids. You're the last person that should be guilty of what happened to them," Tsunade insisted.

"I know what I did. I don't regret helping them or teaching them ninjutsu," Jiraiya replied, before sighing a little. "It's just... now I felt I could have done more for them."

"I know how you feel," Tsunade replied, as her face softened a little. "When Dan and Nawaki died... I hated myself. I thought it was my fault."

"Because of that necklace?" Jiraiya asked, incredulous. "Come on, that had to be a-"

"At first it was for the necklace, yes," Tsunade interrupted him, scowling at Jiraiya's jumping to conclusion. "But Naruto showed to me that it was just an incredible, and tragic, coincidence."

"Then why? Nawaki died instantly, and you tried your best to help Dan's life. You did all what you could," Jiraiya stated.

It had been a while since the last time Tsunade remembered the deaths of his little brother and fiancé. Strangely, doing so caused her far less pain than it did in the past. Maybe because, over the years she spent in Konoha, she had moved on and filled the void they left in her heart with a husband and children.

However, it also left her with a feeling not of dread, but of unease, of thinking what would she do if something happened to them. The ninja world was dangerous after all.

Pushing those negative thoughts aside, Tsunade replied: "Precisely. I was there, yet I was unable to do anything. If I was a better ninja, a better medic, I used to tell myself that I could have saved them."

"So then why..." Jiraiya was about to ask, when a realization dawned upon him. "Oh, I see. That's how I'm feeling right now, yet I should know the guilt is undeserved. Cheeky woman."

Tsunade couldn't help but smile a little at the compliment., before continuing. "When Naruto told me that he was going out of the village for his first C-Rank mission, I was terrified," Tsunade confessed. "I thought 'that's it, there he goes, and I'll never see him again. Just like Dan and Nawaki'. But in the end, I knew I couldn't keep Naruto locked in the village forever. I had to trust in both him, his teammates and his sensei."

"Though your fears weren't that unjustified," Jiraiya interjected. "Who would have guessed that our son would end up fighting fucking Orochimaru of all people during his first C-Rank mission."

"Don't remind me," Tsunade said, rolling her eyes. "The same thing went with Hagane and Kaida when they were kidnapped. With their secret out of the bag, they would always live with a target painted on their backs. But again, we couldn't keep them in a cage out of fear of something that could happen to them."

"Actually, that's what I did with the Ame kids," Jiraiya felt the need to point out. "Maybe I should have taken them with me to Konoha."

"But you didn't because Konoha wasn't their home. Ame was," Tsunade pointed out, as she took a sip from her sake cup. "And you couldn't stay with them forever. You did the right thing."

"In light of recent news, I don't feel I did the right thing," Jiraiya told her, lowering his head a little.

"Of course you don't. Some guilt is unavoidable. I'm not going to pretend you can bury those feelings in hopes of getting rid of them. But don't wallow in them either. Don't run possible scenarios of what could have been in your head. What is done is done. All we can do now is try to fix the mistakes we made in the past, and learn from those we can't."

Jiraiya chuckled upon hearing Tsunade's words. Tsunade frowned again, and leaned towards Jiraiya.

"What? Do you find anything I said funny?" the Slug Princess asked, unamused.

"Oh no, quite the contrary. Those were quite the inspiring words," Jiraiya praised his wife. "It's just that I have a hard time picturing them coming out of your mouth, even if they just did."

In another time, Tsunade would have rewarded such jest with a punch, maybe with some chakra on it, but the Senju Matrairch merely smiled at her husband. "It's called growing up, Jiraiya. Try it when you're ready."

"Aren't we too old to still be growing up?" the white haired man asked.

His wife shook his head. "That's why I thought at first," Tsunade said. "Before coming to Konoha, I thought that my life had reach its final point. I thought that I'd spend the rest of my days gambling and running away from creditors, waiting for a strike of luck that would never come, until I died of alcohol poisoning on some alleway."

"Geez, that's bleak," Jiraiya noted, grimacing. He emptied his sake cup, and pouring himself another one.

"And you weren't much better than me, should I remind you," Tsunade replied. His face softened again, as her lips curved into a sweet smile. "What I say is, don't let past mistakes consume you, like we used to do before returning to Konoha. Now what we should ask ourselves is 'what are we going to do regarding those kids?'"

"I don't know if they're too far gone to be saved," Jiraiya admitted. "I like to think that it's not too late, but I can't let personal feelings get in the way. I'm the Hokage after all."

"And who's going to deal with them?" Tsunade asked, and scowled before Jiraiya could answer. "And please don't tell me you're thinking in dealing with them yourself!"

"I would have done that in another circumstances," Jiraiya confessed. "But like I said before, I'm the Hokage now, I can't rush into things. Naruto and Fu are jinchuriki, meaning that either them or the other Akatsuki will go after them. So the best thing I can do is to make sure they're strong enough to deal with this threat. Given what Naruto said, it was luck that he didn't end as bad as his teammates, or even as bad as Utakata."

"Speaking of Naruto, what about his teammates?" Tsunade asked. "Hinata and Haku will be out of commission for a few weeks, and there's still a couple months until Kurenai gives birth."

"I've been thinking about that as well," Jiraiya told Tsunade with a nod. "But in the light of how the latest mission went, I'm afraid that traditional four man squads won't do against Akatsuki."

"Do you plan to send bigger teams to deal with them?" Tsunade asked, raising an eyebrow. "Can we afford it?"

"Don't worry, it won't stop the village from taking as many missions as usual," Jiraiya reassured her. "And even if it did, I think this takes priority than some cash money."

"I see," Tsunade said, as she downed her sake cup. She grabbed the bottle to pour herself another, but much to her annoyance, the bottle was now empty. "Dammit."

"Eh, maybe that's a sign that we should stop drinking and go to bed," Jiraiya told her.

"You said that because you drank more than me," Tsunade protested.

...

Akatsuki Hideout, Undisclosed Location, a few days later

Utakata's body was floating mid air, held by a chakra forcefield that came from the Demonic Statue's mouth. Wisps of red chakra came from the jinchuriki's mouth and eyes, each time smaller and less noticeable, until there were none. The statue's mouth clamped shut, dispelling the forcefield and dropping the now dead jinchuriki onto the ground. A fifth eye opened on the Statue's grotesque visage before it sank to the ground.

"With the Six Tails sealed, five out of the nine Tailed Beasts are under our control," Pain said in a congratulatory manner. "Our task is more than halfway done."

"Unfortunately, the few jinchuriki left out there know about us and will hide themselves better," Obito reminded both Pain and everybody else.

"It won't matter, in the end they will also fall to us again," Pain ominously declared.

"Besides, don't we know that two of them are already in Konoha, hn?" Deidara pointed out. "We should go after those next."

"No," Pain shut down the blond's suggestion, much to his annoyance. "We will leave those two for last right now. For the time being, let's focus on the other jinchuriki. Zetsu, what have you found about them?"

"I still know nothing about the jinchuriki of the Eight Tails," White Zetsu stated. "After Obito and Kisame captured the Two Tails, the Raikage send his brother out of the village to one of the many safe houses they have across the Land of Lightning. Finding him won't be easy."

"Maybe we should create a threat that forces them to send the jinchuriki to fight us," Kisame suggested. "It worked the first time after all."

"Which is why it won't work a second time," Konan rebutted. "The first time it worked because they didn't know we had the Nine Tails, and the possibility of Konoha being behind the attack was real. However, the next time they know of the Nine Tails attacking, they'll know it's us and they will be prepared."

"How, may I ask?" Orochimaru asked, amused. "Dealing with a Tailed Beast isn't exactly an easy task."

"Kumo has a lot of experience in that regard, due how many times the Eight Tails escaped its container and went on a rampage," Pain told the Snake Sannin. "Plus I can guarantee you that they will be expecting us to do the same move. No, even if it will cost us more time and effort, we need to find out where the jinchuriki is. In order to keep his location a secret, his escorts will be few in numbers."

"Very well then," Obito agreed. "What about the other?"

"According to our intel, the other jinchuriki is a former Iwa nin that's walking the world, and never stays in the same place for long," White Zetsu replied. "Kinda like Uta-kata."

"Which means that capturing him will be much easier," Black Zetsu added. "At least, if we manage to find him first."

"Don't worry about that. My spies will have his location in no time," the Uchiha assured.

"Good. Once those two jinchuriki are within our power, we can focus all our attention to the ones staying in Konoha," Pain decided. "Now, if nobody has anything else to add, let's conclude this reunion."

As those words left Pain's mouth, the spectral projections of the Akatsuki started to vanish one by one until there was no one left.

...

Amegakure

Pain and Konan opened their eyes, finding themselves once again inside the safe room at the top of the highest tower of Amegakure, which they use for whenever they need to meet with the rest of the Akatsuki members via astral projection. Without saying anything, they got on their feet and got out of the room. The ninja guarding the door stood to attention, and remained silent as they saw their God and his Angel walking away.

"Five Tailed Beasts already in our possession, and we only lost three members so far," Pain started to speak. "Though thankfully we've been able to fill one spot with an even more powerful member."

"What about Hidan and Kakuzu's spots? Are there any plans to fill them as well?" Konan asked, shooting Pain an inquisitive stare. "From now onwards things are going to be even more difficult. It would be beneficial to have all our spots covered."

"Unfortunately, we were unable to recover Hidan and Kakuzu's rings," Pain told her. "They must be in Konoha's possession. Even if Konoha is unaware of their significance."

"Guess eight members will have to do then," Konan said in resignation.

"Eight members, plus all the assets each of us possess. We command an entire village, and so does Orochimaru. The others also have their own minions that serve our cause," Pain confidently said.

"So, I guess that once we're done with the Four and Eight Tails, we will focus our attention to Konoha," Konan guessed.

"That is correct."

"Where... he is the reigning Hokage," Konan said, narrowing his eyes at Pain.

Pain shot Konan a cold stare. "Is that a problem?"

"Are we ready to face him?" Konan asked her partner. "After all what he did for us? Will we be able to fight him?"

"I certainly am," Pain replied, his voice lacking uncertainty. "And so should you. Experience should have taught you already that nothing goes before our mission. Whatever our personal feelings for Jiraya-sensei were, they don't matter anymore."

"Speaking of which," Konan replied, her tone changing. "I don't think you should have told Naruto about our relationship with Jiraiya-sensei. Konoha will know about us."

"At this point, such knowledge is irrelevant," Pain declared. "We wouldn't even need the Tailed Beasts to crush any of the Great Villages, Konoha included. If anything, it will make Jiraiya-sensei more prone to make a mistake."

"If you're confident it won't be a problem, then I'll believe you," Konan stated, though she didn't sound entirely convinced. "Since it was thanks to both your power and guidance that we were able to come this far."

"Good to hear that, Konan," Pain replied. "It wouldn't do us any good for you or any of our members to wager now that we're so close to victory."

"Of course not, Pain," Konan agreed. "Though speaking of members, I think we should also keep an eye on some of them."

"Obito?" Pain asked.

"That's the most obvious," Konan replied. "But I also meant Orochimaru and specially Toneri. I believe that they're only using Akatsuki as means to their own ends."

"A possibility, yes," Pain admitted. "But as long as they keep working for us, whatever hidden agenda they may have it's irrelevant. Now come on, there's much to do. We need to plan our next steps."

...

Orochimaru's Lab, Undisclosed Location

Just like Pain and Konan, Orochimaru also had a designated safe room that he used whenever he was called into a meeting with the rest of his esteemed colleagues. Exiting the room, he removed the Akatsuki cloak and handed it to one of the two Oto ninja that were guarding said room. Said ninja nodded, and went to store the cloak somewhere else, with his partner trailing behind.

"Orochimaru-sama," Kabuto's voice said, and just like the Snake Sannin expected, he saw his silver haired minion walking towards him. "How did the meeting go?"

"Boring as usual," Orochimaru replied with some disgust on his voice. "After literal days sealing the Six Tails, we spend several hours babbling about how little do we know about the rest of the jinchuriki."

"Don't we know for sure that two of them are in Konoha?" Kabuto asked.

"Yes, but they want to leave them for last," Orochimaru replied. "On the flipside, that means that we'll be able to invade Konoha again. I hate to leave a job halfway done, you know."

"With the rest of the Akatsuki backing us up, the result will be different this time around," Kabuto optimistically replied. "Also, I'm sure this piece of news will brighten your mood: The Sound Five have just returned from their mission, and they're successful."

"Those are good news, indeed," Orochimaru said, as a creepy smile formed in his face. "Were they seen?"

"They left no witnesses alive, per your orders, Orochimaru-sama," Kabuto informed him.

"Good, good," Orochimaru nodded. "I'm pleased to see that this incarnation of the Sound Five is far more efficient than the original."

"Your children are quite the force to be reckoned with on their own, and as a part of a unit lead by Kimimaro-kun, nothing stands in their way," Kabuto said.

"This success will bring my main project one step closer to its completion."

"Indeed," Kabuto nodded. "Maybe once your project is complete, we'll be able to use Impure World Resurrection without any kind of drawbacks this time around."

Orochimaru nodded. "It always ate me on the inside having such a powerful jutsu at my disposal, yet not being able to use it. With it, I wouldn't even need Akatsuki to realize my ambitions."

"Though for the time being, it would be wise not to deviate too much from the organization's goals," Kabuto advised. "Obito already watches you with keen eyes."

"Obito-kun doesn't worry me," Orochimaru replied, chuckling a little. "Deep down, he's still a child, one that plays a game far more dangerous than he realizes. But even in this case, it would be unwise to underestimate an enemy, so we'll do as you say."

"One last thing," Kabuto asked. "Did you make any progress in replicating the Rinnegan?"

Orochimaru shook his head. "Sadly, all the experiments have been a failure. Neither of the other two Uchiha that we kidnapped from Konoha were receptive to the procedures, and didn't survive. I still have their bodies, but their use is very limited now."

"Pity. I was sure we'd be able to, given that we have both Uchiha and Hashirama's DNA at our disposal," Kabuto replied. "So, back to the original plan?"

"Yes," Orochimaru said, as his lips formed a sadistic smile. "I'll have to take the Rinnegan from Pain's eye sockets myself."

Author's Note: A more calm chapter following all the action and intensity of the previous one. Yep, Uakata is now officially dead, and Naruto is officially teamless. But don't worry, the latter situation won't last for much longer.

Other than his guilt over his teammates' current condition and his talk with Jiraiya, there was very little Naruto in this chapter, with most of the focus being on Jiraiya, Tsunade and the Akatsuki. Man, I need to use Tsunade more often, given that I'm billing her as a main character. Maybe I should have stuck to canon and made her Hokage instead...

Not much to say here. Next chapter, Naruto will address the beatdown he got from Pain by seeking additional training under other teachers.

Thanks a lot to Ookami88 for betareading this chapter.

That's all folks, see you in two weeks! In the meantime, leave a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Steps to Become Better

Author's Note: With the previous chapter, this story now reached more than ONE. MILLION. VIEWS. Thanks a lot to everybody who read this story, for making this possible! I didn't even DREAMED of writing a story that reached one million views!

Chapter 72:

Steps to Become Better

or

Naruto vs Ino-Shika-Cho

Sarutobi Estate

Dawn came over Konoha. As the still sleeping village was bathed by the first rays of sunlight, a single figure walked its empty streets.

In the past days, Naruto found himself crossing the gates of the estate belonging to the first clan who joined Konoha after its foundation. All the time accompanied by his teammates, and to see their pregnant sensei. Today, however, wasn't like any other. For starters, Naruto was alone, something not that unusual if one knew the outcome of his team's latest mission. And two, while he was planning to pay his sensei a visit, it wasn't the only reason to be there.

"Kurenai Sarutobi?" a maid asked when Naruto told her about his sensei." I believe she should be in the mess hall, having breakfast with the rest of the clan."

"Oh, I see. Can you tell her I'm here to see her?" Naruto asked.

"Sure," the maid said, but before turning, she asked: "Would you like to have breakfast with them? The clan would to have you as their guest."

Naruto shook his head. "Nah, I already had breakfast. Plus I don't want to intrude. I'll wait somewhere else. Oh, and can you tell her that I also wish to speak with Asuma-sensei?"

The maid nodded, and told Naruto that could wait in one of the main living room, usually the place she and her students had their meetings. And after half an hour of waiting, Kurenai and her husband entered the living room.

"Naruto! What a nice surprise," a smiling Kurenai said, as she went to greet the blond. "What does it bring you here? While I love your visits, I didn't expect you to be here this soon."

"Not to mention that you also wanted to see me as well," Asuma pointed out. "Do you want to get to know your sensei's political family a bit better?"

"It's not that. Well, I don't mind getting to know you better, but I'm having some troubles that I think the two of you may be of help."

Kurenai and Asuma took a seat in a couch in front of the blond.

"Tell us then, and we'll see what can we do," Kurenai told Naruto.

"Well, you see... after the failure of our last mission, I decided that it's about time to get stronger. Well, no, maybe that's not the word," Naruto said, as he tried to rearrange his thoughts. "More like... more versatile? Yeah, that's about it. I think I need a more diverse skills so I can have more fighting options."

"And let me guess, since I'm the only other Wind Element user, you want me to train you, is that it?" Asuma asked.

"If it's not asking much," Naruto replied, trying not to sound imposing.

But much to the blond's relief, Asuma smiled in return. "Sure! Any student of Kurenai who wants to train under me is welcome to do so."

Kurenai, however, frowned at her husband. "So, if Naruto wasn't my student, you wouldn't help him?"

"Of course I would!" Asuma replied, sounding a little indignant. "He's the son of the Hokage after all!" Asuma laughed, but upon seeing his wife scowl, he changed his tune. "Kidding, kidding! Come on honey, you know I'd help a fellow wind user no matter what."

"Nice!" Naruto cheered. "Thanks a lot for this, Asuma-sensei!"

"Don't sweat it," Asuma said. "By the way, how is that you want to train under me now? I thought that the training Hokage-sama gave you was more than enough."

"And it has been so far," Naruto replied, as he started to rub the back of his neck. "Not to badmouth dad's training, but when it comes to Wind Release, his training only goes so far. I think I can only progress if I train under somebody who has mastered such element."

"Don't worry, Naruto, nobody will think any less of Hokage-sama just because you seek additional help," Kurenai helpfully added.

"Well, I better get going. I need to do some stuff at the Hokage's Tower before our morning training," Asuma stood up, and walked out of the living room, but turned at the blond before leaving. "If you want to train with my team meet us at Training Ground Ten in about an hour or so."

"Will do, and thanks a lot for this!" Naruto repeated.

Asuma just nodded, and left the living room, leaving Naruto alone with Kurenai, and they fell into a somewhat awkward silence. Naruto's eyes drifted towards her pregnant belly.

"So..." Naruto began. "You must be pretty bored, right? Not being able to go on missions or train or do any fun stuff..."

"Who says I can't train?" Kurenai asked.

"You... you train? Like that?" Naruto asked, pointing at her belly.

"Not in the way you do, obviously," Kurenai replied. "But even if I can't train my body, I can still hone my skills with genjutsu. I've been reading and practicing a lot since my temporary retirement."

"Heh, can't wait to see you in action," Naruto said. "How long until the baby's born?"

Kurenai giggled a little at the question. "Oh, I see you want me back into the team as soon as possible, right? The burden of leadership is too much for somebody so young," Kurenai said, with Naruto chucking a little. "According to the medics, in about two months or so."

"Truth be told, I do want to have you back in the team," Naruto admitted. "Not just so we can be a four man squad again, but you're right about the burden of leadership. I liked to think that I did a good job leading Hinata and Haku. But the last mission... I can't help but think how it was my fault that Hinata-hime and Haku ended up as bad as they did."

"Not to sound rude, but get used to that sensation," Kurenai replied. "Many ninja are brave enough to risk their lives for a mission and the village. But when you have other people under your care, everything takes a different perspective. Suddenly the mission takes a backseat to make sure your subordinates return home safe, and balancing both things become a near impossible task."

"You tell me," Naruto dejectedly said.

"But if it's any consolation, I think you've been doing a great work so far, Naruto," Kurenai praised, shooting the blond a reassuring smile.

"From what I could heard, the Akatsuki you fought against was out of the ordinary, even among S-Class criminals."

"Still, I take pride in being one of the strongest ninja of my generation," Naruto said. "I used to think I had become stronger than most Jonin of this village. Now I see where such a train of thought lead me."

"There's nothing wrong in taking pride in one's abilities, as long as that pride doesn't blind us," Kurenai told him.

"No, you dont understand," Naruto replied, shaking his head. "You see, the reason I was so strong was because of Sage Mode. Such secret allowed me to surpass most ninjas before I even turned fourteen. But if I'm unable to enter such mode... well, I realized that I'm far more lacking than I had expected."

"But you're taking steps in rectifying such mistakes," Kurenai told him. "It's never too late to improve yourself."

Naruto was about to reply that it was if your comrades died, but decided not to pursue such gloom train of thought. He pushed all the negative thoughts aside and smiled.

"You're right, Kurenai-sensei! This time we were lucky, but next time I'll make sure luck is not a factor in our victory."

"See? That's the spirit!" Kurenai cheered. "Now go show my husband how skilled my students are!"

"Right!" Naruto replied, now in a more energetic manner, before leaving the living room.

...

Hyuga Estate

Naruto wasn't the only one who was planning to train. After spending a few days in the hospital, both Hinata and Haku were finally discharged, albeit they were temporarily removed from active duty until they fully recovered, and were also banned from doing any strenuous physical activity, which, naturally, included training.

Not that they could do much training in their current shape. Haku had an arm on a sling, while Hinata needed a crutch to walk.

Of course, Hinata's condition and her word that she wouldn't train wasn't enough, so Hikari had assigned an Hyuga Branch member, or better said, somebody who belonged to the Branch Family when the clan was still split, to watch over her. Her caretaker was a green haired woman a few years older than her named Natsu Hyuga, who used to be Hanabi's caretaker when she was little.

So Hinata now spent most days either in her bed, or sitting in a couch, and the only exercise she was allowed to do were a couple of walks around the estate during the mornings and another couple during the afternoons.

Fortunately, there were more ways to train that didn't involve physical exercise. Hinata wasn't going to spend the time doing nothing and waiting until she was healed enough to go back into active duty.

"Hinata-sama, here I brought what you asked," A woman Hinata recognized as Natsu entered the living room. She was wearing a white apron under a black kimono, which made her look like a maid, with only her Konoha headband identifying her as a ninja. She was carrying a few scrolls under her arm, and a tray with a teapot and cups. "I brought you some tea as well."

"Thanks a lot, Natsu-san," Hinata thanked her with a nod. "And please, drop the '-sama'. The Branch House is no more. I'm no longer your superior."

"I beg to differ, Hinata-sama," Natsu said, as she placed the tray on the coffee table in front of Hinata, and the scrolls besides it, albeit at a prudent distance. She started to pour some tea into the cup. "You might have abolished the clan's castes, but you're the clan head, meaning that you're still my superior, Hinata-sama."

Hinata couldn't help but smile a little. She knew this was a battle she wasn't going to win. "If you say so, Natsu-san."

Hinata raised a hand, and a scroll flew towards it. As she unrolled the scroll and started to read it, she noticed Natsu taking a seat in another couch next to her. She suppressed an eye roll. While she knew that Natsu was just following Hikari's orders, she couldn't help but feel a little frustrated over having a nanny again.

"If you're going to stay here as well, you might as well serve yourself some tea," Hinata offered the older woman.

"Thank you, Hinata-sama. I think I could use some," Natsu said, as she got up and poured some tea onto another cup.

At the very least, Natsu was silent enough to let Hinata read her scrolls in peace. Hell, she couldn't even hear her sipping her tea. She wondered what kind of training did they give her in order to achieve such level of silence. Not that such skill wasn't necessary for a ninja, even if she rarely did missions out of the estate, much less the village.

Soon, the Hyuga Clan Head found herself engrossed in the scrolls she had with her. The powers that the Tenseigan hid were beyond fascinating, and Hinata was a bit miffed that she wouldn't be able to put to test the knowledge she was gaining so far. Even then, there were a few jutsu that were small enough she would be able to discreetly practice

As Hinata read, she was unaware of the time that had passed. She took a sip from her cup of tea, but she realized it was empty.

"Oh," was all what Hinata said, but that was enough for Natsu to spring into action.

"Allow me, Hinata-sama," the maid-dressed kunoichi said as she got back on her feet.

"That won't be necessary," Hinata said, raising a hand. With a motion from that very hand, her cup floated back towards the tray. The teapot elevated into the air, and refilled both Hinata and Natsu's cups. Finally, she recalled back her cup while placing Natsu's into her hands. "There, easy and fast."

"Impressive, Hinata-sama," Natsu praised, before chuckling a little. "Though I think it would have taken me less time to refill your cup the old fashioned way," she giggled.

"It's okay. Besides, it serves me as a little training," Hinata replied.

A slight frown developed on the green haired woman's face. "Hinata-sama..."

"It's not strenuous, I swear!" Hinata said defensively. "Come on, there's no way I can get hurt by doing something so insignificant as moving a teapot."

"Still, it would be better if you limited yourself to reading, Hinata-sama," Natsu advised.

"If that's going to stop you from being worried..." Hinata said. She was about to continue her reading, until a thought dawned upon her. Putting the scroll down once again, she looked at the older girl.

"Natsu-san, may I ask you a question?"

"Of course, Hinata-sama. You can ask me anything you please," Natsu replied, smiling widely.

"Well, it's a bit personal in nature, but I want you to answer me with honesty," Hinata added.

"I'd never answer you any other way," Natsu assured her.

"Very well then," Hinata replied, nodding. "What do you think... of the Hyuga Main House?"

Natsu was clearly taken aback by the question, as her body language betrayed her. She hesitated for a few moments, while trying to come up with the best way to word it.

"I can assure you nobody outside this room will know about your answer. And said answer won't have any repercussions on my part, whatever it is," Hinata assured. But upon seeing Natsu stammering, she added. "Though if this question makes you uncomfortable, you're not forced to answer-"

"No, no!" Natsu cut her. "It's just... well, it's a delicate matter, and I wanted to look for the proper words in order to express myself correctly. While I hold no contempt for either you or Hanabi-sama, I admit I felt resentment for the Main House. For making us their servants. For taking our choices away from us. For branding our bodies with this, " she put extra emphasis on the last word as she removed her forehead protector, showing Hinata her Caged Bird Seal, before quickly putting it up again. "I will forever be thankful to you, Hinata-sama, for releasing us from this yokel, even if only partially. But even today, the Main House members still look at me and my fellow former Branch House members with contempt. They don't see us as equals, and hate that you made us so."

Hinata nodded. "I know. Unfortunately, change can't happen overnight. I always thought that I could close the rift that separated the clan, but I never realized that a scar would take its place."

Natsu smiled at Hinata. "Don't stress yourself over that, Hinata-sama. All in the Branch House know that you're doing your best to help us. Who knows, maybe one day in the future, once the scar is fully healed, our descendants will forget that the clan was once divided."

"And for that to do so, I also need a way to remove the Caged Bird Seal," Hinata said, as she took one of the scrolls. "The Otsutsuki Clan created it, so there must be a way to remove it. Even if the Hyuga Clan erased such knowledge, there must be something here."

However, before she could resume her study, a booming noise followed by a tremor interrupted her. Then another. And another. And another .

"What's going on?" Natsu asked, as she activated her Byakugan. It took her little to find the source of the disturbance. "It seems that Hanabi-sama is sparring against Neji-san. Albeit such fight seems way too intense for a mere spar."

Hinata also expanded her sight, and saw her little sister and cousin training. Hanabi was using the Tenseigan Chakra Cloak in its most basic level. She mostly attacked from the air, while Neji defended from her attacks and countered her when she was within hand to hand range.

"I see," Hinata said, as she telekinetically called her crutch, and walked out of the room. "I want to see them fight in person."

"Hinata-sama, no!" Natsu protested. "It's too dangerous to get so close to them like that. You can see them from here if you want."

"You worry too much, Natsu-san," Hinata dismissed Natsu's concerns with a hand wave. "Come on, let's go see my little sister and my cousin,"

Natsu let out a sigh of resignation, and followed the Clan Head.

...

Turns out, Hinata wasn't the only one interested in Hanabi and Neji's spar. Several Hyuga had gathered in the small training ground in order to witness such high level battle. Of course, they all moved aside whenever Hinata arrived, in order to make room for the Clan Head.

So far, none of the two appeared to be too exhausted. Hanabi was floating above Neji with her hands on fire, while the older boy had his eyes locked on her, his body placed in a defensive stance.

"Fire Release: Eight Trigrams Phoenix Fire!"

Hanabi thrust her arms downwards in a rapid fashion, releasing a fireball with each thrust. Neji, however, was undeterred and deflected the incoming fire bolts with precise chakra coated palm strikes, sending them to the ground. Seeing that it didn't work, Hanabi tried a different approach.

"Fire Release: Eight Trigrams: Double Burning Palm!"

Hanabi placed both palms forward, and dived at Neji from above, as her whole body was coated in fire. Neji, however, merely smirked.

"Is this the extent of your skill, Hanabi-sama?" Neji mocked, as he started to spin while streams of chakra shot from his body. "Heavenly Spin!"

However, Hanabi didn't look astonished or shocked, but much to the onlookers' surprise, she smirked. Just when she was about to crash against Neji, she managed to correct the trajectory of her dive and spin around Neji instead of diving into him. Hanabi continued to fly spins around Neji, and as she did, a tornado of fire started to form. Meanwhile, Neji's own rotation was starting to slow down.

"That was some rather quick thinking on Hanabi-sama's part," Natsu commented. "Neji is in trouble now."

"Don't count Neji-niisan out yet, Natsu-san," Hinata replied. "Hanabi-chan might beat him in raw power, but Neji is still her superior when it comes to skill and experience."

Hanabi stopped spinning as the tornado of flames fully formed, engulfing the older Hyuga within it. While the fire wouldn't hurt him much, the building heat would force him to concede.

"Of course not, Neji. See?" Hanabi cockily replied. "That's what happens when you-"

"Gate of Opening: Open!"

Everybody could see a massive burst of chakra coming from Neji's body, which managed to dispel the fire tornado in an instant, much to Hanabi's shock. A faint green aura surrounded the Hyuga prodigy's body.

"You were going to say something about underestimating the opponent, right?" Neji said, his smirk not disappearing.

"I'll never dream of underestimating you, Neji. That's why I'm going to throw at you the best I have," Hanabi replied, as her hands flew through hand seals, before clapping them together. "Truth Seeking Balls!"

Hanabi slowly separated her hands, forming two black orbs between them. Said orbs quickly placed themselves behind Hanabi.

"So it's not just Hinata-sama the one who managed to learn that jutsu," Neji observed, but his smile didn't falter. "You're very talented indeed, Hanabi-sama."

"Ha! I'm not going to let your flattery make me lower my guard!" Hanabi fired back, as he motioned an arm forward, and the two black spheres shot themselves at Neji.

The Hyuga genius brought his palms together before motioning them forward.

"Mountain Crusher!"

Neji released a powerful wave of chakra from his palms that not only engulfed the Truth Seeking Balls, but it had enough power to reach Hanabi, violently hurling the younger Hyuga's backwards.

"Waaah!" Hanabi sputtered as she tried to regain balance.

"I might lack Six Paths Chakra, but my knowledge of advanced Gentle Fist techniques, combined with my-" Neji started to say, before he was interrupted by a pair of black orbs that smashed right into his gut, with such force it felt like Hanabi threw a building at him. "OOOF!"

Neji lost his balance, and fell on his back. During the couple seconds he took to hastily get back on his feet, he could see that Hanabi appeared behind him.

"Ha! You forgot about the Truth Seeking Ball's biggest strength: it nullifies any kind of chakra based attack!" Hanabi boasted, as she slipped into a familiar stance. "The match's over, you're within my divination range! Eight Trigrams, Sixty Four Palms!"

Neji did try to block Hanabi's strikes, but the unexpected force of the Truth Seeking Balls' impact had slowed his reflexes, and was too slow to parry them. As Hanabi completed the combo, Neji's chances of victory became smaller, until they hit zero at the same time Hanabi delivered the last set of strikes.

"... sixty four palms!" With a well placed thrust, Hanabi dealt the finishing blow, ending the match.

Those gathered there started to clap and praise the younger Tenseigan wielder for her impressive victory over the clan's resident genius. And while Hanabi reveled in all the praise, there was one person she appreciated it the most.

"Nee-chan!" Hanabi cheered, after locating Hinata among the small crowd, and rushed towards her. "Did you see that? I beat Neji!"

"Indeed you did. That was quite impressive of you, Hanabi-chan," Hinata praised.

"A truly spectacular match, Hanabi-sama," Natsu added.

Hanabi giggled at the compliments, blushing a little.

"Excuse me, but would you be so kindly to help me?" Neji said, still sprawled on the ground. "I can't barely move."

Wordlessly, Hinata walked towards Neji, crouched down, and started to heal his injuries and bruises while reopening the chakra points Hanabi had closed.

"You certainly need to step up your training, Nii-san," Hinata said in a mock chastising tone. "What would people say if they find out the pride of our clan was defeated by my little sister?"

"We all know that I'm no longer the pride of the clan, Hinata-sama," Neji rebutted. "Not after both you and Hanabi-sama awakened those eyes."

"Come on, you know you're the most skilled ninja the clan has ever produced, even if you don't have Six Paths chakra," Hinata stated. "That has to count for something, right?"

As Hinata repaired his body, Neji could feel he was able to move again. He sat up, and sighed.

"The Truth Seeking Balls caught me off guard. I was unaware that they could nullify chakra," Neji commented. "Guess it was my fault for treating them as any other ninjutsu, instead of play safe and see what they could do."

"Now that you know that, maybe next time you'll be able to beat Hanabi-chan," Hinata pointed out. "It's not that such jutsu makes one invincible. If that was the case, that Akatsuki wouldn't have defeated us during my last mission."

"Still, the ability to nullify ninjutsu or other chakra based attacks is sort of impressive," Neji commented. "If used correctly, it might mean the difference between victory and defeat. Or life and death."

Hinata agreed with a nod, feeling that another self-deprecating comment wouldn't add anything to the conversation.

Still, Neji brought a good point. No matter how big a ninjutsu would be, the Truth Seeking Balls would be able to nullify it. Recalling the battle against Pain and Konan, she wondered what she could have done to take advantage of such assets. It seemed those gravity attacks couldn't be countered in any way, though they were similar to their telekinetic abilities, so maybe she could do something with that.

Then there was the Pain that looked like a puppet, whose attacks weren't chakra based, or didn't appear to be. There was also the summoner. Could Truth Seeking Balls undo summonings? She'd had to test that one. Thankfully her boyfriend could be of help with that.

She didn't know how to counter chakra absorption or being able to revive other bodies. Plus there was that last body they didn't know anything about.

And then there was Konan. She appeared to be a long ranged fighter specialized in ninjutsu using papers. She wondered if the Truth Seeking Balls could nullify those as well. Plus there was her many, many, many explosive tags. Could those be nullified? Explosive tags were fuinjutsu rather than ninjutsu. But other chakra absorbing abilities were also capable of absorbing those kind of explosions, so there was no reason as for why fuinjutsu couldn't be nullified as well.

... fuinjutsu could be nullified...

"Hinata-sama?" Neji asked, noticing his cousin zoning out.

Suddenly, something clicked inside her mind. The solution to one of her potential problems was right before her very eyes. It has been before her very eyes for so long. She felt so stupid. But there was no time to feel stupid. She had to act.

Getting up and grabbing her crutch, Hinata headed back inside as fast as her damaged legs allowed her to.

"Hinata-sama, don't run! You're going to get hurt!" Natsu cried, as she went after her. "Where are you going in such a hurry?"

...

Training Ground Ten, An Hour Later

"Hi there, everybody!" Naruto greeted as he entered the training field.

"Just in time. Excellent," Asuma greeted Naruto back, pleased, before turning to the others. "Today Naruto will be joining us for our daily training. I hope none of you mind."

All of them nodded and muttered something to express their approval

As Asuma had said, the whole Tactical Squad was present in the designated Training Ground to start their morning routine. Well, not just the Tactical Squad, as Naruto could see he wasn't the only guest there.

"Uh, Choji?" Naruto asked the rotund body. "Who is that guy?"

Naruto pointed to a pale skinned brunnete wearing midriff baring black clothes that hung with Ino.

"Oh, that's Sai," Choji explained, as he happily munched some chips. "He's Ino's boyfriend. Ino usually brings him to our training sessions."

"But don't even dare to say that out loud when she's within earshot," Shikamaru advised, as he walked towards the duo. "Ino gets rather mad if you say that. Even if they're rather close."

"Why is that?" Naruto asked. Looking at the blonde, she seemed rather chummy with the body, who nodded and smiled at everything she said.

Shikamaru merely shrugged. "Beats me. Troublesome woman." He huffed.

While Sai looked familiar, Naruto couldn't tell if he really knew him or not. Maybe he saw him a couple times in passing, but didn't ask his name.

"Is he strong?" Naruto asked, deciding it was good to get some info on the newcomer.

"He's a long range fighter, kinda like Ino and myself," Shikamaru explained.

"He has this jutsu that can bring anything he draws to life," Choji continued.

"The living pictures aren't that though and usually go down after a single hard hit," Shikamaru said. "But if used wisely, those living pictures can be quite a pain in the ass."

"Not to mention that he can overwhelm you with numbers," Choji added.

"So, kinda like my Shadow Clones?" Naruto asked.

"Can your Shadow Clones fly? Because some of his pictures can," Shikamaru dryly asked.

Naruto's eyes opened wide upon hearing such thing. "So, another ninja besides Hinata and Fu can fly as well. I need to find a way to do that."

Asuma's claps snapped Naruto from his brief thought, as the bearded Jonin drew everybody else's attention to him.

"Alright everyone, besides Sai, who by this point has been a common sight," Asuma said, looking at Ino and Sai, the blonde smiling at her sensei. "Today Naruto will be training with us. I'd like to take this chance to make several team exercises, before we move onto individual training."

Asuma's statements were met with a chorus of "yes!" and head nods.

"The fight will be Naruto versus everybody else. Fight as if it was a real battle. Don't worry, I'll stop the fight before the worse comes to pass," Asuma said, as his students and Sai mplaced themselves in front of Naruto, and all of them adopted fighting stances.

Naruto carefully eyed his opponents.

" It's been long since I've sparred against or even saw the Tactical Squad fighting. Neither of them are higher than Chunin, so this won't be too hard," Naruto thought, as his eyes drifted towards Sai. "Other than what Shikamaru told me, I have no idea what that guy can do. I should worry about him the most."

As his eyes jumped from one side of the spar to the other, Asuma decided it was time to start. "Now... begin!"

The moment the order left Asuma's lips, everybody slipped into position and prepared to attack using their usual abilities. Naruto began the fight with his signature jutsu.

"Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

Roughly fifty Naruto clones popped into life, and without waiting for their boss to order them, they charged forward.

Far from being impressed, Shikamaru chuckled and shook his head upon seeing the orange and black tidal wave coming at them.

"Typical Naruto. Choji, shall we begin ourselves?"

"You can bet on it!" the Akimichi heir said as he clapped his hands together. "Partial Multi-Size Jutsu!"

Choji jumped into the air just as his arms grew to giant size. As he fell into the mass of clones, he slammed both arms into the ground, instantly destroying the clones unfortunate enough to fall victim to the brutal assault -so brutal, it opened a crater in the ground-, while creating a shockwave that sent surrounding clones flying.

"Good one, Choji," Shikamaru praised, as he crouched while interlocking his hands into the Nara's most used hand seal. "My turn: Shadow Sewing Jutsu!"

Threads of shadow emerged from Shikamaru's own, launching themselves towards the clones. But unlike the Nara's usual jutsu, these threads didn't travel across the ground, but the air, meaning that they were actually solid. Its purpose was made evident when the thread impaled several charging blondes that were unable to break in time. The clones coming from behind managed to avoid them, but between Shikamaru's shadow threads and Choji's rampaging attacks, their charge was swiftly aborted.

Naruto, however, wasn't worried in the slightest. After all, that charge of clones was a mere distraction to keep Shikamaru and Choji occupied. However, Shikamaru and Choji were countering the charge in the most aggressive way possible in order to distract Naruto. Something Naruto was aware of.

"I was wondering when you guys would show up," Naruto casually mentioned, as he started making hand seals. Looking up, he saw Ino and Sai flying above him atop one of Sai's ink birds. "Hmm, so that's Sai's jutsu. It looks quite versatile indeed."

"Damn, he spotted us!" Ino cursed.

"It's okay. Let's go with the plan as we agreed," Sai told the blonde.

Ino jumped from the bird, making a hand seal as she fell.

"Mind Control-"

"Too slow, Ino," Naruto laughed, as he prepared to unleash his own jutsu. "Wind Release: Cyclone Vortex!"

Naruto thrust both hands upwards, lining up both the descending Ino and the still airborne Sai, and cast a huge tornado that engulfed all of them.

"You're going to need more than that to distract me, you know," Naruto cockily said.

Sai fell from his bird, the latter exploding into ink as it was destroyed. However, much to Naruto's confusion, Sai and Ino also burst into blots of ink, as they were carried away by the powerful wind jutsu.

"What?" the blond dumbly asked.

"Mind Scourge Jutsu!"

Naruto felt as if somebody hammered his brain from the inside. Clutching his head, the sudden pain bent the jinchuriki down to his knees. But as soon as the pain came, it went away, much to Naruto's confusion.

"Liked that?" Ino's voice said from behind. Naruto turned around, and saw the Yamanka smirking at him.

"I wasn't expecting for you to be dumb enough to be fooled by an ink clone," Sai said, as he landed besides Ino. "Guess I overestimated you."

"And now, you're at our mercy!" Ino claimed, as he slipped into a fighting stance.

"Ha! You'd wish!" Naruto made a hand seal. "Shadow Clone-AAAAHHH!"

There it was. The mental pain was back. Except this time it was ten times worse. As if somebody cut his brain with a searing knife. What did Ino do to him?

"Enjoy my Mental Scourge jutsu? As you have noticed, it triggers whenever you use ninjutsu, so unless you have an exceptionally high tolerance for mental pain, I wouldn't recommend you using that," Ino told Naruto, clearly pleased with herself. "I created it myself!"

"Let's finish this already," Sai neutrally stated, as he unfurled a blank scroll, and started to draw several animals. "Super Beast Imitating Drawing!"

"Water Release: Water Gun!"

Still clutching his head, Naruto got up and tried to get away, just as Ino fired several water bullets from her index finger, while several ink tigers emerged from Sai's scroll. Fortunately for Naruto, several of his nearby clones noticed the original's predicament, and quickly rushed to his aid. Some of them jumped in front of Ino's water jutsu, while the others wrestled and fought against the ink tigers, while another one helped Naruto to move away.

"Man, I wasn't expecting these guys to be this crafty!" Naruto thought, cursing his own overconfidence. "And now I can't even use ninjutsu? How the hell I'm going to fight them?"

"Very well, all of you! Great teamwork when executing your tactic!" Asuma's raised his voice to praise his students, while clapping slightly. "Come on Naruto, I know there's still fight in you! I refuse to believe my wife is such a lousy sensei!"

"He was expecting this. He knew that, despite not being that strong individually, the Tactical Squad becomes a monster when they fight together. Plus they have Sai as additional reinforcements," Naruto thought, as the realization dawned upon him. "He knew they'd push me against the ropes, and get ready to counter my usual tactics. Meaning that there's only one solution left... I need to improvise and make the most of what I still have!"

"Everybody, come back!" Naruto called.

His few remaining clones stopped fighting Shikamaru and Choji, and followed their boss into a cluster of trees, running away from the Tactical Squad.

"After him! Don't let him escape!" Shikamaru called, as he and the rest of his teammates converged to catch the fleeing blonds.

The clones, however, pulled several smoke bombs from their ninja tool pouches and tossed them in multiple directions, engulfing the whole zone in smoke, stopping the Tactical Squad in their tracks.

"I can still sense him! Let's go after them!" Ino called.

"Ino, watch out!" Shikamaru called out, as he pulled the blonde away.

At that moment, a chain of explosions rocked the area, hurling Shikamaru and Ino backwards. The two of them coughed a little, before helping each other stand out. They were joined soon afterwards by Sai and Ino.

"Good eye, Shikamaru. Didn't notice the explosive tags," Ino said, as she wiped some dust from her top and skirt. "Man, Naruto isn't pulling any punches, is he?"

"You pushed him into a corner with that jutsu of yours," Shikamaru pointed out. "And you know what they say about cornered animals."

"He recalled his clones," Choji pointed out.

"Because thanks to Ino's jutsu, he won't be able to create more for some time," Shikamaru told Choji. He then turned at Ino. "How long does your jutsu last?"

"It varies. Between ten and thirty minutes, depending on the target's stamina and mental fortitude," Ino explained.

"Ten minutes it is," Shikamaru said.

"Even then, it's safest to assume that the jutsu will run out sooner rather than later," Sai said. "Can you sense him?"

Ino closed her eyes and made a hand seal. After several seconds, she opened her eyes again. "Got him. He and his remaining clones, I think there are seven, are gathered at the top of a tree, hidden behind its canopy."

"He's probably planning how to ambush us as we speak. Let's go, I'll tell you what are we going to do to bring him down," Shikamaru said.

The other three nodded, and headed towards Naruto's position.

...

Meanwhile, at the top of a large tree of the training ground, Naruto and his remaining clones planned what to do next.

"Man, this is bad. I can't use ninjutsu, I can't create more clones," Naruto moaned, as he pulled out his Wind Blade, and activated it. "Head not feeling as if it's about to explode. I guess that I can still use chakra to some extent. That's good. What else do we have?"

"Kunai and shuriken," a clone said.

"Fuma Shuriken as well," another clone said.

"A few explosive tags and elemental tags," a third clone asked.

"And some smoke bombs and ninja wire," a fourth clone concluded.

"Okay, I may not be Shikamaru, but I'm smart and resourceful. I'm sure I can make the most of what little we have," Naruto said, in an effort to gather some courage for his task ahead. "Guess that this situation will be the norm when I fight Akatsuki in the future."

"Watch out! Up there!" a clone urgently whispered.

Everybody looked up, and they could see Sai and Ino, riding one of the former's ink birds, flying in circles around the area. Naruto instantly knew that he had been found -not that surprising, given that Ino was a sensor, but he was hoping for some more time to plan-.

"Is that the real Sai? Or is he an Ink Clone? I don't want to fall for that trick again," Naruto said.

"I think we should let them make the next move. We got into this mess because we rushed into things," a clone suggested.

"Good idea, me. We'll wait, see what they do, and counterattack," Naruto decided.

...

While Naruto wasn't aware of it, those flying above him in circles were the real Sai and Ino. Like Naruto, they were waiting for the blond and his clones to come out to fight them, but he knew better than that.

"It doesn't appear that he's coming out from his hiding place," Ino guessed, as she looked down.

"We'll have to force him out then," Sai decided, as he unfurled another scroll, and with practiced ease, quickly drew several birds. "Super Beast Imitating Drawing!"

The birds jumped out of the scroll, and without waiting for a verbal command, they all dived at the tree where Naruto was hiding.

"Very well then. I'll tell Shikamaru and Choji to be prepared," Ino said, before making a hand seal and closing her eyes.

...

The result of their tactic became evident. Naruto and his clones jumped out of the tree, fleeing from the flock of ink birds that were badgering them with painful pecks and scratches.

"Aw!"

"Goddamn pests!"

"Go away!" a clone yelled, throwing a kunai at one of the ink birds.

"Shadow Sewing Jutsu!"

Once again, Naruto and his clones were assaulted by a mass of black shadowy threads, forcing the group to split in several directions, in order to force Shikamaru to choose between several targets. They could see Shikamaru not that far away from them, standing below the shadow of a large tree.

"Stop running! Attack Shikamaru!" Naruto ordered.

A trio of his clones nodded, and pulled several shuriken, which they threw at him. Shikamaru, however, created more shadow threads which he used to deflect the shuriken away.

"Quickly, now! Let's flank him! He can't attack us if we're spread wide around him!" Naruto said, as he and his clones charged towards Shikamaru in an expanding circular formation.

"That's not a half bad plan to counter my jutsu, Naruto," Shikamaru praised with a grin. "Too bad I'm not the only opponent you're against."

As if on cue, Sai and Ino dived at what they presumed was the original Naruto. The blond quickly turned around, unsealed a Fuma Shuriken from a small scroll, and tossed it at the bird. The ink construct instantly burst into several black blots, spraying them everywhere. Sai and Ino managed to jump in time, the former unsheathing the tanto strapped to his back.

"Oh, so you know how to fight in close range?" Naruto asked, as he parried the blow with his Wind Blade.

"A good ninja can fight both close and from afar. Anything less is unacceptable," Sai replied, as he struck Naruto with quick and precise blows.

"Damn, this guy is pretty good in close combat as well, I can hardly keep up," the blond distressingly thought, as Sai pushed him back with each strike.

"Boss, we're getting a bit overwhelmed here!" a Naruto clone who was trying to hold off Shikamaru's shadow threads called, before he was pierced by one of them. "OUCH!"

Naruto could feel the clone's few memories entering his mind as it was dispelled, which caused nothing but more stress to the original.

"Dammit, dammit! What do I do? I can't go down so soon, I barely did anything!" Naruto distressingly thought. "It was a good thing that I had these clones before Ino nailed me with that jutsu, but how can I use them in a way that... hey, wait a second, that's it!"

"Boss, any ideas?" a clone asked, who tried to fend off another thread.

"Yes, ninjutsu! Use it!" Naruto called. Upon sensing their hesitation, Naruto insisted. "Come on, do what I say!"

The clones obediently nodded, and started to make different sequences of hand seals.

"Naruto, what are you doing? You can't use ninjutsu, unless you want to experience the biggest headache ever!" Ino called out. While it wasn't smart to stop your enemy when he was making a mistake, the Yamanaka kunoichi was so baffled that she couldn't help but ask.

"Wind Release: Cyclone Vortex!"

"Water Release: Wild Water Wave!"

"Fire Release: Fire Bullet!"

"Wind Release: Great Breakthrough!"

The Tactical Squad found themselves at the wrong end of several gusts of wind, bolts of fire, and a torrent of water, forcing them to disengage Naruto and fall back. And much to their shock -Ino's in particular- none of the clones were suffering from any ill effect of Ino's jutsu.

"How... how is it possible?" a bewildered Ino asked. "Are clones immune to my jutsu?"

"Those clones were created before you used your jutsu on Naruto, therefor they're exemt from it," Shikamaru explained, coming with such realization that very moment. "Sorry, I should have realized it earlier and plan for a countermeasure in advance."

"Thank goodness we didn't show all of our cards yet," Ino replied, as she closed her eyes. "Choji, your turn now."

" On it!" Choji's voice replied in her mind.

With all the chaos surrounding him, Naruto hadn't realized that Choji wasn't among his attackers. The Akimichi heir had shrunk himself to the size of a doll, and was flying on a smaller ink bird drawn by Sai. The bird started to fly in circles around the original Naruto, surrounded by his clones, who were pelting the rest of the Tactical Squad and Sai with elemental ninjutsu.

"Alright then, here we go!" Choji said, as he jumped from the bird, and started to fall towards Naruto. "Reverse Multi Size Jutsu: Cancel!"

Bringing his palms together, Choji undid the jutsu, and instantly returned to normal size. Naruto saw a shadow falling over him, and looked up, but it was too late.

"What the-?"

"Got you!"

Choji slammed against Naruto, painfully pinning the blond to the ground. And if such brutal attack wasn't enough, the Akimichi wrapped his arms around the jinchuriki's body, pinning Naruto's arms against his body, leaving him completely immobilized.

"ACK!" Naruto could barely scream.

The clones noticed what happened, and turned around.

"Boss!" several clones said in unison, as they tried to help the original.

This proved to be a fatal mistake, as it gave Shikamaru, Ino and Sai ample chance to destroy all of them with their ninjutsu, or with tanto slashes in the case of the former.

"Can't... move..." Naruto breathed out, as he futilely struggled to break free from Choji's bear hug.

At that moment, Asuma landed besides them, watching everybody with analitical eyes.

"Alright then, I think I saw enough. Good job, guys," Asuma praised his students and Sai, before looking at Choji. "You can release him now."

Wordlessly, Choji released Naruto, before standing on his feet. He then offered Naruto a hand to stand up, a hand Naruto gratefully accepted.

"Thanks," Naruto told the Akimichi. "Good match. You guys are a force to be reckoned with."

"Of course! That's the Ino-Shika-Cho for you!" Ino proudly said, before moving closer to Sai. "With some little assitance!"

"It's amazing how well you guys can coordinate. I barely heard you exchanging words!" Naruto exclaimed.

"That's thanks to Ino's Mind Fragmentation jutsu," Choji told him.

"Huh?"

"It's another jutsu I created," Ino explained, beaming with pride. "It allows to split my mind into tiny pieces and temporarily transfer them to my teammates. That way, not only our minds are connected, but I can see and heard everything they see and hear. You could say our minds become one!"

"Wow, that jutsu is really impressive!" Naruto praised.

Even if it wasn't some flashy or destructive ninjutsu, Naruto could see how useful such an ability was. That was the kind of new skills he sought to develop. Something that allowed him to become a more versatile ninja.

"Before we start the training, I want you to reflect on the spar, Naruto," Asuma began, as he walked towards him. "You'll agree with me that the moment things started to go south for you was when Ino hit you with her Mind Scourge Jutsu, right?"

"Yeah. Not being able to use ninjutsu was a real bummer," Naruto replied, sheepishly rubbing the back of his head.

"And why did you allow Ino to sneak close enough to use her jutsu on you?" Asuma asked.

"Sai fooled me with a bunch of clones," was Naruto's reply.

"And you didn't had the possibility in mind? Weren't you on guard from a potential attack from behind?" Asuma sternly asked, as he crossed his arms.

"Boy, this is embarrassing..." Naruto chuckled, as he ran a hand through his hair. "Usually, I have Sage Mode, which gives me sensorial abilities. Or if that fails, I usually rely on Hinata-hime for such things."

Asuma nodded. "Guess this is why you wanted additional training, right? You were starting to become complacent, and that attitude started to erode your skills. I mean, you didn't even notice that Choji wasn't there during the second fight."

"This was a real eye opener. If you guys were Akatsuki..." Naruto uneasily said.

"That's what these spars are for," Asuma said, sounding now a little more friendly. "Not only we will help you with your initial concerns, we'll make sure you're a great ninja no matter the situation. There's a reason as for why my team it's called the Tactical Squad."

Naruto enthusiastically nodded, and smiled widely, his inner fire returning. "Alright then, let's begin!"

...

Gekko Residence

"You know, it's kind of weird seeing you in the house so often," Yugao said, as she entered the living room.

There she saw her adopted soon reading a book.

"Given that I'm not fit for any physical training," Haku motioned his arm on a sling for added emphasis. "There's not much I can do. Though if I'm being a bother, I can go outside. It's a nice day, even if it's a bit cloudy."

"Of course not, Haku," Yugao reassured, as she sat besides him. "I love to have you here more often."

"Well, given that I can't be of much help here with house chores nor taking care of Seiichi-kun..." Haku said, leaving the sentence hanging.

"Again, don't worry. You should focus on getting yourself better," Yugao insisted, before taking a look at the book he was reading. "What is that?"

"Advanced Genjutsu Theory," Haku explained. "I may not be able to training in taijutsu nor ninjutsu, but at the very least I can do this. That's what Kurenai-sensei was doing during her pregnancy."

"That's very diligent of you, Haku," Yugao nodded, as she smiled at him.

"That's what's so good about genjutsu. You can practice it even if you can't be physically active," Haku stated. "Just like now, for example. You think you're talking to the real Haku, but this is just a genjutsu."

Yugao shot the Ice Ninja a look. Haku returned the stare, and smiled at her. Yugao conceded, and made a hand seal, releasing a burst of chakra through her body. Haku was still there. The boy giggled.

"I can believe I tricked you like that," he said, chuckling softly. "Some ANBU you are."

Yugao scowled playfully, before lightly punching Haku in the arm - thankfully the one that wasn't on a sling-.

"Once you get back to normal, I'm going to make you pay for that in a sparring match," Yugao promised him.

"Good. It will be a nice way to get back into shape after all these weeks of inactivity," Haku earnestly replied, smiling at her.

Yugao sighed. "I can't just win with you, can I?"

"Besides you and Hayate-san, and I was also trained by Zabuza-sama. And of course, I was able to tell which training method was the most brutal," Haku explained. "I doubt there's anything you can do to me worse than anything Zabuza-sama put me through."

Yugao was about to answer something when somebody knocked the door. Wordlessly, the purplette got up and left the living room. A minute later, she returned accompanied by somebody else.

"Hey, Haku-kun, look who came to see you," Yugao told him with a wide smile.

Haku returned the smile. "Tenten!"

"I think I'll leave you alone," the ANBU said before leaving.

Tenten thanked her, before sitting besides her boyfriend.

"Hey there," Tenten said.. "My team and I came from a mission earlier than we thought, so I decided that maybe I could spend some time with you."

"I'm really glad to hear it," Haku replied. "I could use some company other than Hayate-san and Yugao-san."

"Good. Because Gai-sensei and Lee have been particularly obnoxious with their self imposed challenges, and I need to vent some steam," Tenten grinned, as she placed both arms around the Ice Ninja's neck.

"As long as you're careful, I'm all yours," he said with an eager smile.

...

Training Ground Ten

After the fight against Asuma's students and Sai, Asuma had created a clone to train with Naruto, while the real one went to train the rest.

Naruto felt the training with Asuma was fruitful, even if truth be told they haven't done much in the way of training, more like trading ideas for new, innovative wind jutsu. He felt that this would be the set up for something big.

"I wonder why we never had a talk like this before, given that we're the only two wind element users in the entire village," Asuma had said with a laugh.

After that, Asuma had told everybody to take a short break to catch their breath and stretch their muscles. Shikamaru used such opportunity to lie down and watch the clouds, Choji to eat another bag of chips, while Ino was filing her nails. And lastly, Sai was resting against a tree, drawing something on his sketchbook.

Naruto didn't know much about the weird, pale looking boy, so he thought it would be a good chance to meet him.

"Hey there!" Naruto greeted as he walked to him. "I don't think we've been introduced. My name's Naruto."

"I know who you are. I don't think anybody in this village doesn't know about the elder of the Hokage's children," Sai replied in a confusingly polite tone, while he continued working on his picture. "And I think you know who I am, since Ino and the others told you about me."

"Well, yeah, but even with that, we never spoke to each other before, so I think introductions were in order," Naruto tried to justify.

Sai stopped drawing, and smiled at him. It was a smile that unnerved the blond. "Of course. A social convention. Ino told me of those. I try to follow them as much as I can, but most of them don't make much sense to me."

"They don't have to, just go with the flow," Naruto said with a shrug. He had the feeling that trying to get to know this guy better was going to be an uphill battle. He wondered what the hell did Ino see in him in order to become so close.

"I heard about your last mission," Sai bluntly stated, taking Naruto aback a little. "It's a pity that it ended in such failure."

Naruto sadly nodded. "That's why I'm here. I want to get all the training I can so the next one has a different outcome."

"I hope you do. Konoha could certainly benefit from having a third jinchuriki among its ranks," Sai stated.

Naruto frowned, and crossed his arms. He didn't like where this conversation was going. "Hey, it's not a matter of collecting jinchuriki, but saving lives, and making sure Akatsuki doesn't get their dirty hands on the Tailed Beasts."

Sai's smile didn't falter, and nodded. "Of course, such things are important too. But wouldn't Konoha be able to face its enemies, such as this Akatsuki, if we had powerful ninja like jinchuriki among our ranks?"

Naruto wanted to rebutt that question, but found himself unable to. "... I guess you have a point there. But like I said before, that's not the main goal of the jinchuriki rescue."

"It seems you care about them on a personal level," Sai noted. "Even if you never met them. Why is that?"

"Because we're the same," Naruto replied.

"That doesn't make sense," Sai said, shaking his head. "Do you feel such a strong bond with every blond haired person on earth? With everybody who has blue eyes? With everybody who has a penis?"

"What the...? No!" Naruto angrily snapped. "Being a jinchuriki goes beyond something so shallow! A jinchuriki bears a huge burden. Not only carrying a Tailed Beast is a constant source of danger for us, but people tend to fear and avoid us, due said danger. And what's worse, none of us chose to be jinchuriki. It was the villages that forced such burden upon us."

Sai had stopped smiling, and stared at Naruto intently with his black eyes, as if he was slowly reflecting Naruto's words.

"I see," he said, averting his gaze. "And do you hate the people who sealed the Nine Tails within you?"

"No, I don't," Naruto replied, his anger subsiding. "I know the circumstances behind the sealing. Only a member of the Uzumaki Clan can hold the Nine Tails, and back then, I was the only one available. There weren't other options. So in the end I had to accept this and move on."

"Of course. Sometimes sacrifices need to be made for a greater good," Sai said, nodding, as he went back to his drawing. "In the end, the two of us aren't that different."

"Huh? What does that mean?" Naruto asked, as he scratched the side of his head in confusion.

"It's nothing," Sai waved off. "Shall we resume the training?"

...

Land of Earth

Trekking through a forest near the base of a mountain, there was an old man. He sported a red beard, a blue mark that crossed his face in an horizontal manner, and wore an Iwakagure forehead protector. A voice resonated within the man's head.

" You know, we're pretty close to your former home, Roshi. Have you ever thought about going back?"

"You should know already that I'm not going back. At least, not yet, Four Tails," Roshi replied.

The Tailed Beast growled upon being called such a thing, but kept the frustration to himself. This was more important.

" I've felt another one disappear. This time, it was Saiken," the Tailed Beast replied. "Something is happening, Roshi. Somebody is hunting us. I think we might be in danger."

"Of course. The villages, major and minor, always went after us. You're not telling me anything I don't know, monkey," Roshi rebutted.

" This is not like the other times! I can't sense my siblings anymore! This serious! Will you listen to me just for once in your life, you stubborn old man?" the Four Tails roared.

"Are you afraid that somebody might have find a way to take you out permanently?" Roshi asked, enjoying the fear the normally proud and haughty monkey was feeling.

" That's not possible. There's only one reason my siblings would disappear like this," the monkey warned. "And that doesn't spell anything good for your kind."

Author's Note: So yeah, another chapter dedicated to both training, and setting up future plots. I often fear that readers might find these chapters boring, but it's not rare to see them getting more and better reception than the action-packed chapters. So I'll be hoping for a warm reception for this one as well.

I hope you enjoyed Naruto's fight against the Ino-Shika-Cho trio (plus Sai), and you're not too miffed over the fact that he lost. Not only it was four versus one, but I also wanted to showcase the deficiencies Naruto had developed over relying so much on Sage Mode (such as not being attentive to his surroundings since Sage Mode gives him powerful sensorial abilities).

Thanks to Ookami88 for betareading this chapter.

And as the last scene showed, this chapter was the introduction to the Roshi Arc! This arc will also introduce Naruto's new team for the mission, which, as said in a previous chapter, it will be bigger than the usual four man squad. With this new team, will Naruto be able to save Roshi, or will he also fall prey to the Akatsuki? In the meantime, leave a review with your thoughts on this chapter! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Search For Roshi

Author's Note: Okay, here we are with another chapter. This chapter features the return of two teams that have been in the background for quite some time, and people has been clamoring for them. Hope you enjoy:

Chapter 73:

The Search for Roshi

or

Monkey See, Monkey Do

For the past couple of weeks or so, Naruto had been training with Asuma Sarutobi in order to perfect his Wind Jutsu and develop new ones. While he hadn't been able to create a jutsu that would allow him to fly yet, he had the feeling he was making some good progress on that as well.

His teammates weren't slouching either. Even if they were physically unable to train, they busied themselves training their minds, Hinata reading more about the powers of the Tenseigan and Six Paths Chakra, while Haku studied about genjutsu, and tried to think in new and innovative ways to use his Ice Release. Unfortunately, unlike Naruto, there were no other Ice Release users in Konoha that could train the Land of Water native.

And today, he was expecting another productive day of training. He was full rested from a good night of sleep, and was ready to have breakfast. But when he got down to the kitchen, he was surprised to see only his mother there.

"Good morning, Naruto," Tsunade said, as she finished her cup of coffee. "Slept well?"

"You can bet I did," the blond grinned. "So, Kaida and Hagane left already?"

"Yeah. Tenzo came here to pick them up. Apparently, they had an important mission," Tsunade explained. "And so do you."

Naturally, this caught the blond's attention. "Really? But I have no team!"

Tsunade just shrugged. "You're a Jonin already, Naruto. It's not rare for a Jonin, or even a Chunin, to do missions on their own. Though you won't be team-less for long. I've been checking on Hinata and Haku's progress, and they're almost fully recovered. I think they'll be able to rejoin active duty in one or two weeks at most."

"Really? That's awesome!" Naruto cheered, pumping his fist into the air. "Too bad we can't wait that much for them."

"Sadly things rarely go the way we want. Still, I'm sure you'll manage without them this time around," Tsunade said in an encouraging tone.

"Did he tell you what the mission was about?" Naruto inquired, as he took a bite from a slice of toast with honey. "It's related to the jinchuriki?"

"I don't know, Jiraiya didn't tell me anything, but if he requested you, then I guess it has to do with them," Tsunade guessed, shrugging.

"I'll finish breakfast as soon as possible then!" Naruto said, as he shoved another toast into his mouth.

"Whoa there! Slow down, Naruto, or going to choke. There's no hurry," Tsunade told him. "There's something I want to talk with you about. You've been training with some other people during the past few weeks. Why haven't you asked me to train you?"

Naruto almost choked on his food. This was a very delicate question. He couldn't say that he still had nightmares from his adoptive mother's brutal training methods.

"Er..." Naruto began, as he tried to come up with a believable excuse. "Aren't you training Hagane and Kaida? Yeah, you were busy with them, and I didn't want to take you away from them."

"I can train the three of you just fine," Tsunade insisted, as she crossed her arms over her chest. "Plus that way, you could do some more bonding with your siblings. You barely get to do anything with them these days."

"I know but... I'm kind of busy, with all the stuff with Akatsuki," Naruto replied.

"Listen, I'm not telling you do forsake your other responsibilities and duties, that would be idiotic," Tsunade told him, her tone softening. "But being a ninja is a dangerous career. You will lose loved ones, and then you'll regret not having spent enough time with them."

"You talk as if Hagane and Kaida are going to die any day now," Naruto said, rolling his eyes.

"Did you forget already how close we were to lose them forever to Orochimaru not even four years ago?" Tsunade reminded Naruto. "I try not to think about it, as well as not being overprotective but... as long as we're alive, I want to enjoy our company."

Naruto suddenly felt like a jerk. He's been avoiding Tsunade's training, while the Slug Sannin only wanted to spend some time with her son. The blond had been training with Jiraiya in order to gain a better hold of the Nine Tails' chakra, and maybe Tsunade was a bit jealous of that.

"Okay. Maybe once I'm back, I can find some time to train under you again?" Naruto weakly suggested.

"I'd love to," Tsunade smiled. "Come on, go already. I'll clean this up."

"Thanks mom!" Naruto said, before giving Tsunade a kiss on the cheek, and running out of the house.

...

Hokage Tower

Just as Naruto was told, Jiraya had indeed a new mission for him. And just like the blond had thought, it was about the topic he had guessed. Though what he didn't guess was that Jiraiya wasn't alone; standing besides him was Itachi Uchiha.

"My spies have located one of the other two remaining jinchuriki not under our custody," Jiraiya began, as he handed Naruto a folder.

Naruto opened the folder, and saw the picture of an old Iwa ninja with red hair and bear. The name of the file figured merely as "Roshi".

"This is the jinchuriki?" Naruto asked.

Jiraiya nodded. "Itachi?"

"Roshi was seen crossing the border into the Land of Earth. However, we have no confirmation that he planned to return to Iwagakure, so it's likely that he's still roaming the land," the Uchiha explained Naruto. "We need to secure him and bring him to Konoha."

"Understood. I guess that the two of us are going after him now?" Naruto asked. Even if it was just one man, Itachi Uchiha was among the most skilled and powerful ninjas Konoha had among their ranks.

"Not just the two of you," Jiraiya said, as he pressed a button on the intercom sitting on his table. "Tell them to come in."

A couple minutes passed before the office's door opened, and eight people entered. He recognized half of those people.

"Tenzo's All Purpose Squad is present!" Tenzo said as he and his students entered the office.

"Anko's Assassination Squad is present!" the other adult in the group said, a purple haired woman wearing a trenchcoat.

"Whoa! Hagane and Kaida! And Hanabi!" Naruto said upon seeing Tenzo's Team. He then looked at the other newcomers. "Er... and you're Anko, right? I think I remember you from that mission to the Land of Rice Fields. Kurenai-sensei sometimes told us about you."

"Let's hope she only said good things, or else the two of us are going to have a long talk," Anko replied, chuckling a little. "Anyway, meet my students! Aren't they the cutest?"

Naruto raised an eyebrow at Anko's choice of adjective, as his eyes moved towards Anko's students. For some reason, it felt like he had met them before, but couldn't tell when. And he was sure he would remember somebody who was entirely covered in bandages.

"Nice to meet you, I'm Naruto Uzumaki. And you guys are?" Naruto asked.

The trio of young ninjas composed of two boys and a girl shot him a look between annoyed and astonished.

"Did you really forget about us? Wow, we had to make such a weak first impression upon you," the girl huffed, as she crossed her arms.

"We fought against you and your teammates a couple times in the past," the boy covered in bandages said. "First in the Land of Sound, then during Orochimaru's attempt at kidnapping your siblings."

The boy looked at Anko, who looked back in approval, much to Naruto's confusion. Little did he know that Anko had spend quite some time breaking their habit of using the "-sama" suffix with Orochimaru. Failure to do so had resulted in excruciating punishment.

"I'm Dosu, and those are Zaku and Kin," Dosu waved to his teammates. "And while we used to be Sound Ninjas, after our capture we've been... persuaded into joining Konoha."

"Oh..." Naruto said, as conflicted feelings clashed within him. On one side, he was mad that these people used to work for Orochimaru and helped him kidnap his siblings, but on the other, they appear to have turned a new leaf. Plus given that they weren't very high among Otogakure's hierarchy, he decided to forgive and forget. "Well, nice to meet you. Glad to see that you're working for the good guys now."

"Yeah, whatever," Zaku huffed, whose reaction was mimicked by Kin. Dosu remained impassible.

"Anyway," Jiraiya interjected, drawing everybody's attention. "Now that you're together and introductions are over, let's go to the matter at hand. All of you have been told you're going to become part of a larger squad for an S-Rank mission. I choose all of you because of all our current forces available, you're the best suited for this mission. Tenzo's squad has two Wood Release users that can bind a Tailed Beast should an Akatsuki decide to throw the other half of the Nine Tails at us, and if that fails we have Itachi's Mangekyo Sharingan, while Anko's squad will provide additional support and firepower. Itachi will be the leader of this ten man squad. Itachi?"

Itachi nodded, and took a step forward. "Our mission is simple: We will infiltrate the Land of Earth, locate the jinchuriki, and either escort him to Iwa, or if he refuses, bring him back to Konoha using any means necessary. However, do not rule any kind of unforeseen setback, and be prepared of all times. Chances of Akatsuki knowing this are high, so be ready to fight against S-Rank ninjas. Any questions?"

"Are we really going to operate on a foreign land under the protection of a Great Village?" Tenzo asked. "Shouldn't we warn them first?"

"We did, but we got no response," Jiraiya replied. "While the possibility of a war with Iwa is high, I think it's worth the risk if we can keep another jinchuriki safe from Akatsuki's hands."

"What if Iwa also sends ninjas to retrieve the jinchuriki?" Hagane asked.

"In that case, we'll let them take him away. Our goal is to keep the jinchuriki safe. Even if Iwa is not allied with us, that's better than Akatsuki," Jiraiya told them. "But like I said, chances of Iwa sending ninjas to retrieve the jinchuriki are small. They will think this is some sort of trick on our part."

"Even then, we'll try our best to avoid causing a war between our villages," Itachi firmly added. "If those are all the questions, then let's meet up at the western gate in an hour. The Land of Earth is far away, so pack for several weeks."

All of them nodded, before they exited the office. That's it, all of them except Naruto, who stayed behind to have a talk with his father.

"So, what do you think?" Jiraiya asked, guessing his son's thoughts.

"It looks like a powerful team," Naruto replied. "Not to mention that we won't be outnumbered as easily now as with four man squads."

"I think this is going to be the procedure for the time being until we beat Akatsuki. Four man squads won't do anymore," Jiraiya explained. "Are you okay with the picks, or would you have suggested somebody else?"

"Itachi is an obvious choice. Though I'm surprised that you choose Hagane and Kaida's team for a mission involving Akatsuki."

"They may be my kids, but they're also ninjas of this village, and as Hokage I must treat them as such. Plus Tenzo's Squad is one of the most powerful teams we currently have available," Jiraiya told Naruto with a firm tone. "Plus it's not that they're Genin anymore."

"What about Anko's squad? They used to be Orochimaru's lackeys, they might betray us," Naruto pointed out.

Jiraiya, however, smiled confidently at his son. "Trust me, both Anko and I made sure such thing won't happen. Besides, I've read the reports Anko gave me on their progress, and it appears that they got used to Konoha and started to prefer it over Otogakure, even if they don't say it out loud."

"You know, I think that maybe we could have taken Fu with us as well. She's pretty strong," Naruto suggested.

"She is," Jiraiya agreed. "But if sending a jinchuriki to deal with Akatsuki is already a big risk, you can imagine what would be sending two at once. That would be like inviting all of Akatsuki to go after you. It's better to keep at least one jinchuriki in the village."

"Makes sense, I guess," Naruto said. "Well, let's better get going. Hopefully, once we come back, old man Roshi will be among us."

"I'm sure you'll be successful this time, Naruto," Jiraiya said. "Good luck, and come safe."

...

Half an Hour Later, Senju Park

Per Naruto's request, Hinata and Haku had met him on that spot in order to talk. It seemed that Tsunade hadn't lied to him: both his teammates looked good enough to return to active duty. Hinata could now walk without a crutch, and Haku had no longer his arm on a sling.

"Thank goodness I can have some clones prepare my backpack, or else I wouldn't be able to do this," the blond thought.

Wasting no time, Naruto told the other two about his mission to track and secure Roshi, the jinchuriki of the Four Tails, as well as who was going to go with him.

"So that's the mission Hanabi-chan is going to do?" Hinata asked, worry in her voice being evident.

"I know how you feel. Hagane and Kaida are also coming as well," Naruto pointed out. "But don't worry, I'll make sure that this mission won't be a repeat of what happened the last time."

"Still, I can't help but wonder if she'll be okay. This will be her first S-Rank mission," Hinata said.

"I don't have siblings who are also ninja, so it might not be my place to speak," Haku began. "But if Hanabi is as powerful as you're now, she should do just fine."

"That's what worries me," Hinata replied, looking at the confused Ice Ninja. "I think she's letting her new power get to her head."

"Yeah, I can relate to that," Naruto said. "Kaida used to think that her Wood Release puts her above everybody else."

"According to Hanabi-chan, she still does sometimes," Hinata pointed out.

Naruto's face fell. "Damn, I'm not looking forward this mission. Thank goodness there will be some adults as well."

"Who are you going with, besides Hanabi and your siblings' sensei?" Haku asked.

"Itachi is going to lead the mission. There's also Anko's team," Naruto said.

"I didn't know Anko-san had a team," Haku observed.

"And you guys aren't going to believe who they are," Naruto said, as incredulity returned to his voice. "Remember those Otogakure ninjas that we fought during our first C-Rank mission, and then when Orochimaru kidnapped my siblings?"

"A boy that used soundwaves, another boy that shot pressurized air blasts from his palms, and a girl that used both senbon and genjutsu. Are you talking about those?" Haku asked. Naruto was surprised that Haku was able to remember them so well, given that, unlike Hinata and him, the Ice Ninja didn't get to fight them a second time. Sensing Naruto's bafflement, he added. "Zabuza-sama trained me to memorize every ninja I met, as well as their more significant abilities."

"Even the weaker ones?" Hinata asked.

"Especially the weaker ones," Haku emphasized. "While a strong ninja is hard to forget, a weak one is. And said weak ninja can train to become stronger. Even if they develop new abilities, at least you have a base of knowledge of what to expect."

"That's... very thorough of Zabuza-san," Hinata praised, sounding genuinely impressed.

Haku smiled in return. "Zabuza-sama didn't become part of the Seven Ninja Swordsmen by being a mediocre ninja, you know. There will be times in which there won't be any chance to check a bingo book, or you won't have one with you."

"Heh, now I wish Zabuza didn't decide to stay in Kiri. We could use his help against Akatsuki," Naruto said. "He saved both you, Tenten and Karin-nee-chan from that Oto ninja with the bone bloodlimit."

"Fortunately, we have other strong ninjas in Konoha we can rely on," Hinata said, as her eyes drifted towards Naruto, and smiled. "You, for example."

"If I was that strong-" Naruto began.

"No," Hinata firmly cut him, raising a hand. "Don't finish that sentence, you hear me? You're a strong ninja, and I don't want to hear you saying otherwise," Hinata insisted, her stare becoming harder. "You need to be strong if you want this mission to succeed and to bring everybody home safe."

"I... yeah, you're right," Naruto replied, forcing himself to smile, something Hinata echoed. "I can't just mope and pity myself. I have to give my best. There's no more room for failure."

"That's the spirit, Naruto-kun!" Hinata cheered.

"Okay, my Shadow Clones had finished packing my stuff," Naruto said, as the new information entered his mind. "I better get going."

"Understood. Good luck, Naruto-kun," Hinata said.

"I'll hope for your safe return," Haku added.

"Thank you guys. I'll make sure to carry your part of the weight while you're absent," Naruto replied, as he leaped away from the park. Then, he whispered: "I'll make you guys proud."

...

Akatsuki Hideout, Undisclosed Location, the Next Day

Eight spectral shadows were standing in a circle, their eyes being the only part of their bodies that weren't blurred. Unlike other times, nobody was physically there.

"I'm glad that you could answer my call so quickly," Obito began. "This is an urgent matter. My spies from Konoha has told me that the jinchuriki of the Four Tails, Roshi, has been found."

The rest of the Akatsuki began to grumble among themselves.

"If Konoha is your source, I assume that a team has already been dispatched to secure the jinchuriki," Pain interceded. "Am I right?"

"Indeed. They're crossing the Land of Fire as we speak," it was Zetsu, the black half, who answered the question.

"Of course. That means that we need to dispatch somebody else to deal with the jinchuriki as well," Pain continued. "Konoha already has two jinchuriki behind their walls. Letting them have more would be problematic in the long run."

"The question would be then, who should we send to deal with this new development?" Konan asked.

Obito cleared his throat. "If I may make a suggestion, I already have two candidates in mind."

...

Several Days Later

The group spend the next days traveling through the Land of Fire, leaping from one tree branch to the other, stopping occasionally to rest. They decided to cross the frontier with the Land of Earth by going through the Land of Waterfalls, given that such border used to be less guarded. Without much difficulty, they managed to reach the border and cross it without trouble.

The change of scenery couldn't be more evident. The thick forest of the Lands of Fire and Waterfall were replaced by a range of mountains and other rocky terrain. While there was still some green, it was obscured by all the rocks and stones. It was as if nature itself warned the newcomers that they had entered another world.

"Alright then," Itachi said, coming to a halt. The other nine ninja stopped behind him. "We just arrived at the Land of Earth. With some luck, neither Iwa nor Akatsuki know that we're here, and we'll leave without them none the wiser. Still, stay alert."

"Fear not, Itachi-san. Hagane's sensory skills and Hanabi's Tenseigan will track any enemy before they can get too close," Tenzo told te Uchiha.

Itachi nodded. "Even then, I want everybody to keep your eyes open, and stay alert. Now, according to our reports, Roshi was last seen in the area to the northeast, so we'll look there first."

"Should we split in order to cover more ground?" Naruto asked.

Itachi shook his head. "While in other circumstances that would be a valid strategy, I'm afraid it won't do now. I want this group to remain close at all times."

"Itachi-taicho, if I'm allowed to speak," Dosu spoke up. Itachi nodded in return. "Given that we have two ninjas with tracking skills, we could split up, but try to keep a minimum distance. Hagane-san and Hanabi-san can tell if a group or an individual wander too far away."

Itachi seemed to consider the bandaged ninja's suggestion, before nodding.

"Very well. Let's form two groups: Naruto, Hagane, Anko and Kin, with me. Dosu, Zaku, Kaida and Hanabi, go with Tenzo," Itachi instructed. "Hagane, Hanabi, make sure both groups won't stray from each other."

"Sure thing!" Hanabi cheerfully said.

"You can count on me," Hagane replied.

Both groups split, as they began their search of the Four Tailed Jinchuriki.

...

Itachi's group went to the northwest, towards a mountain range, while Tenzo's headed towards the west, heading to a series of rocky paths that lead to Iwagakure. However, soon Itachi commanded his half of the group to stop.

"Huh?" Naruto asked, a bit confused.

Itachi didn't say anything, bit his thumb before making a series of five hand seals, and slammed his palm into the ground.

"Summoning Jutsu!"

Itachi's jutsu produced a small burst of smoke. After a couple seconds, the smoke dispelled, revealing a small murder of crows at the Uchiha's feet. Itachi dug into his ninja tool pouch, until he found what he was looking for: a small picture of Roshi.

"My group and I are looking for this man," Itachi said as he knelt down, while making sure the crows could see the man in the picture. "Could you help us track him down? He may be around this area."

One of the crows cawed affirmatively, before the whole murder flew away in different directions.

"Uh, neat," Kin praised, before he looked at Anko. "Anko-sensei, why didn't you think in summoning snakes to help us search?"

"Hey, good idea, girl," Anko replied, as she summoned a few small sized snakes. "Alright, we're searching for an old man. Iwa ninja, red hair, red beard. Probably exudes a powerful chakra since he's a jinchuriki. Are you up to the task?"

The snakes wordlessly spread around, quickly slithering until they were no longer visible. Anko decided to take that answer as a "yes".

"Alright then, while the crows and snakes search, let's keep looking for Roshi on our own," Itachi commanded. "Stay close, and keep your eyes open for a potential ambush, either from Akatsuki or Iwa ninjas."

Everybody nodded, and followed Itachi's lead.

...

Tenzo's group moved to the west, with the adult heading the group, followed by Dosu and Haku, and Hagane at the rear, while Hanabi was flying a couple meters above them, her Tenseigan constantly scanning the area. As they ran, Zaku and Dosu started to talk among themselves.

"You know, that man who can use Wood Release," Dosu began. "I think I know who he is."

"Huh?" Zaku replied.

"Back when he was a Konoha ninja, Orochimaru-sam-Orochimaru," Dosu corrected himself, despite the fact that Anko wasn't nearby.

"Orochimaru made several experiments to see if he could replicate Wood Release in somebody else. Apparently, that man was the only success."

"Huh. If Orochimaru could do that, why didn't we have an army of Wood Release users when we attacked Konoha?" Zaku asked.

Dosu merely shrugged. "Beats me. Maybe he ran out of the First Hokage's DNA. Or that guy was just a fluke."

"Guess that would explain why he wanted to kidnap those brats to begin with, if one of them had Wood Release," Zaku guessed. "Kind of ironic that we're working alongside them."

"Yes, Orochimaru started as a ninja of Konoha, before creating Otogakure," Dosu began. "While we started as Oto ninjas, but now we're working with Konoha. Fate has a twisted sense of humor."

"You know, my cousin used to speak that way," Hanabi suddenly said, as she suddenly appeared between the two. She grinned at them. "My sister told me about you two, and that girl you hang out with. She beat all three of you on her own."

"That's in the past, girl! Now we're much stronger than before!" Zaku angrily retorted.

"I find that doubtful," Hanabi said, as she fixed her eyes on Zaku. "She has the power of a Kage now. And when I'm able to control my power, so will I."

"Girl, shouldn't you be keeping an eye on the surroundings, in case the jinchuriki or potential enemies appear?" Dosu pointed out. "You might be powerful, but by forsaking your duty to trade barbs with us, you're showing how poor of a ninja you are."

"Hmpf!" Hanabi grumbled, but apparently listened to Dosu's words, and flew back into the sky.

"Good one, Dosu. You showed that girl," Zaku said with a grin of satisfaction.

"And you shouldn't let a young girl bait you like that," Dosu chastised his teammate. "Keep your mind on the mission."

Zaku's smirk disappeared, and turned his eyes forward. "Hmpf. Whatever. No need to be such a stick in the mud."

"Our subpar performance was what led to our capture," Dosu replied. "Even if we now have to throw our lot with Konoha, I'll make sure the past won't repeat itself again."

...

As the Uchiha took the group near the edge of the mountain, he gestured Naruto to come closer. The blond did so.

"What's up, Itachi? Saw something?" Naruto asked.

The Uchiha merely shook his head. "Not yet. Listen, I wanted to talk with you about something else. Hokage-sama told me that Akatsuki knows about your Sage Mode, and how they can counter it before you even get to activate it."

"Yeah. I used to send two clones to gather nature energy, but Akatsuki will be expecting that and prepare for that," Naruto explained, a bit downtrodden.

"Can't you use more clones to gather nature energy?" Itachi asked.

Naruto shook his head. "Large chakra reserves are a must for Sage Mode, and if I create many clones, their individual chakra pools become too small for that. I can't create more than four clones if I want to enter Sage Mode."

"I see," was what Itachi said. The Uchiha remained silent for a few seconds, until he spoke again. "Okay, if a fight happens, this what we'll do."

Itachi told Naruto his idea. The blond's eyes opened wide in shock.

"But... but that's extremely risky! I can't just do that!" Naruto protested.

"Trust me, it will work. I used this tactic with enemies in the past, and it has never failed me," Itachi assured.

"If you say so..." Naruto said, still sounding unconvinced.

"And don't worry about the risks. If it doesn't work, I'll make sure that you're not in danger," Itachi added.

...

As night fell, Roshi decided to set camp in a small clearing he had found in the forest at the top of a small hill, close to a larger mountain range. He was gathering firewood, while his Tailed Beast remained silent, contemplating his options.

" Stubborn human," the Four Tails grumbled. "The two of us will end dead -or worse- if we don't do something." He sighed, and started to wonder how could approach the topic in a way that Roshi could be convinced.

That's it, until his meditation was interrupted. He sensed a foreign presence, one that he hadn't sense in pretty much decades.

" It can't be," the giant ape thought. "Not, it couldn't be-"

" Hey, you idiotic primate!" a voice resounded inside his head.

It could be.

" Kurama," the Four Tails indentified the voice. "Fancy meeting you here."

" Shut up and listen, you dumb shit flinger," Kurama harshily snapped.

The Four Tails let out a long sigh. "Son Goku. I'm Son Goku. Would it kill you to call me by my name, Kurama? It's bad enough when the humans do it, but to hear it from a brother-"

" I told you to shut up!" the Nine Tails ordered. "And don't even dare to say my name aloud! Only those worthy are allowed to say it!"

Son Goku decided it was for the better not to argue with his nine tailed sibling. "Very well then, You seem troubled. What's the matter?"

" There's not much time, so I'll try to summarize it as best as I can," the Nine Tails began. "There's this organization of extremely powerful missing ninja called Akatsuki. Their goal is to gather all of us and seal us inside the Demonic Statue in order to revive the Ten Tails."

If Son Goku actually had blood, it would have drained from his face. "B-But... that's insane! Inconceivable! If the Ten Tails returns, then this world will be done for! Why any human would want to do that!?"

" Beats me, but if I had to guess, they want to harness the Ten Tails' power for themselves," the Fox guessed. "Foolish humans and their lust for power."

Son Goku would have agreed with that, but now other concerns occupied the giant ape's mind.

" Wait a minute, for somebody to summon the Demonic Statue they would need to possess a Rinnegan, and no such human has been born since our father died," Son Goku reasoned.

" And that's where you're wrong, brother. Another Rinnegan wielder exists. Not to the same level of Father, but fairly powerful as well," the Nine Tails revealed. "Listen, how such human came to be or what the Akatsuki want to do with the Ten Tails is irrelevant. We need to focus on making sure whoever are left among us remain free. Relatively speaking. Now, my jinchuriki and other Konoha ninjas are scouring the are looking for yours. You must convince your human to come to us, before you also fall prey to the Akatsuki."

" So that's what happened to the others," Son Goku reasoned. "I guess that, besides you and me, the only ones left are Chomei and Gyuki, right?"

" I think so, but there's no point in dwelling on that. Do what I said!" The Fox ordered.

" I would gladly try, but I doubt Roshi will listen to me. I've been trying to tell him to seek shelter for the past few months, as I started to sense how our siblings started to vanish one by one," Son Goku replied, sounding a little frustrated. "Even with this new information, I don't see him listening to me."

Son Goku could hear his nine tailed sibling loudly groaning for several seconds.

" Okay, new plan. Can you at least make sure the idiotic human stays in the same place?" the Fox asked.

" He's currently setting camp to pass the night, so that won't be a problem," Son Goku asked.

" Very well. I'm going to focus on your position and direct the jinchuriki and the rest of his group towards you. After that, the humans will take care of the situation," the Fox explained.

" It's possible that Roshi might not want to go with them," Son Goku told him, worried by the possibility. "They may end up fighting."

" If that happens, then don't do anything," the Nine Tails ordered. "And don't assist your jinchuriki. I find unlikely that he alone will be able to defeat the entire group my jinchuriki is part of."

" Very well, brother. I shall be waiting for you," Son Goku said, as he felt his stubborn sibling's presence slowly vanish. "It might not be too late for us after all..."

...

Shortly after this happened, not far away from there, Naruto felt a tugging sensation coming from within. Knowing what it was, he allowed himself to be pulled, and closed his eyes. When he opened them, the Nine Tails was in front of him.

"What do you want? I'm kind of busy now," Naruto asked, not in the mood to deal with the grumpy fox.

" Yeah, I know, looking for my foolish brother," the Nine Tails said. "Which, by the way, I already found. You're welcome for doing your job, by the way."

Naruto grew excited, and ignoring the sarcasm, he asked. "Really? Where is he?"

" In a forest at the top of a small hill, surrounded by bigger mountains. Follow my indications and you'll be able to reach his position," the Nine Tails instructed.

Naruto beamed in response. "Thank you, Fox, you're a lifesaver!"

The Nine Tails grumbled a profanity. "I don't do it to help you or your race, but to make sure the Ten Tails is not revived. Now move your ass already!"

Naruto found himself once again in the real world after being abruptly ejected from the Nine Tails' pocket dimension. Itachi was looking at him with mild concern.

"Are you okay, Naruto?" the Uchiha asked. "You zoned there for a moment."

Naruto smiled, and nodded. "I've been talking with the Nine Tails. He said he has located the Four Tails' position. Come on, follow me!"

...

As Roshi heated a piece of meat in front of the campfire, a feeling of uneasiness washed over him. It started when he swore he was feeling his tenant talking to somebody else, almost in a whisper. But that couldn't be, right? Roshi was the only one that monkey was able to talk to, for a rather obvious reason. What could that ape be scheming?

Not helped by a different sense of uneasiness: It was calm. Way too calm and silent. His experienced battle sense was screaming at him that this was the calm preceding a fight, and that enemies were incoming and he was in danger. And he didn't survive for so long by ignoring his often accurate gut feeling.

Pulling out a kunai, Roshi yelled to no one in particular: "Come on, I know you're there. Come outside and let's get this over with!"

As he had guessed, there was somebody there. Nearby bushes started to rustle, and from them a young blond boy emerged, his hands raised above his head, almost as if he was surrendering. The boy was wearing an orange and black attire, plus a Konoha forehead protector.

"A Konoha ninja," Roshi hissed, narrowing his eyes at Naruto. "And you look awfully familiar to the Yellow Flash, kid."

"Yeah, he was my dad," Naruto awkwardly said. He wasn't sure if he should have said that, given how much Iwa ninjas might hate Minato Namikaze. Still, the best course of action was to make his intentions known as soon as possible. "Listen, I swear I didn't come here to fight. Like you, I'm a jinchuriki."

Roshi raised an eyebrow. "A jinchuriki, you said?"

"He's right, old man. He's the jinchuriki of the Nine Tailed Fox," Son Goku's voice said from within. "I've been talking with my sibling, and drew him here."

"You sneaky ape! I know your kind couldn't be trusted!" Roshi mentally snarled.

"Sorry, but you left me no other options. This is important, Roshi, so please stop being so stubborn and listen to what the brat has to say," Son Goku asked, sounding almost like a plea. "Both our lives depend on this."

After pondering his options for several seconds, Roshi decided to at least hear his fellow jinchuriki out. If his intentions were hostile, they would have ambushed him from the get go, instead of coming out in the open.

"Alright kid, I'm listening," Roshi stated.

Naruto's lips curved into a hopeful smile. "Really? Great! Now, there's not much time, so I'll try to be-

"But first," Roshi interrupted him. "Tell your friends to come out as well."

"My friends?" Naruto stammered, being taken aback by such statement.

"Yes. I know you didn't come alone. So if you want my trust, you better not have anybody hidden waiting to strike my back at your order," Roshi told him.

Naruto sighed softly, before saying: "Guys, come out!"

More rustling, followed by more Konoha ninjas emerging from behind the darkness and the vegetation. A rather diverse group: men, women, some adults, several young teens, the latter with some eye catching appearances, like the boy covered in bandages, the white haired twins, and a girl that looked like a Hyuga, but her eyes were something Roshi had never seen in his life.

However, most of them were footnotes compared to the presence of Itachi Uchiha, one of Konoha's most powerful ninjas.

"You know, I'm having a hard time believing that you bring a group this large just to talk," a skeptical Roshi said.

"I'm going to be honest with you, Roshi-san," it was Itachi who answered. "We're going to make you a proposition. If you refuse, we will capture you by force."

"But we aren't you enemies!" Naruto chimed in, trying to downplay the inherent threat of Itachi's words. "When you hear what we have to say, you'll agree to come with us. Or return to Iwa, whatever you prefer."

This made Roshi to raise an eyebrow. These Konoha ninja could get their hands on a lone jinchuriki, yet they were okay with letting him return to his old home? There was something fishy about this issue.

And as a good ninja does, information gathering is always a must before taking any course of action.

"Now if you listen to me, you'll understand everything, and why I had to bring such a large group with me," Naruto nervously said, before grinning sheepishly. "Mind if we take a seat around the fire and have something to eat while we're at it? Searching for you left us quite exhausted."

Roshi rolled his eyes and sighed, but motioned them to do so.

"Now, kid, you have my attention," Roshi told Naruto. "But please don't test my patience."

"Very well then," Naruto nodded, as he began his explanation. "You see, there's this group of missing-nin called Akatsuki. Their goal is to gather all the Tailed Beasts in order to..."

Roshi listened to Naruto's story, at first with skepticism, but his willingness to believe him increased with each word. It seemed like the story had no holes; even the most ludicrous parts, like the Rinnegan or the Sage of the Six Paths had their explanation behind it -not to mention that girl with the weird glowing eyes, the Tenseigan, who was a living proof of what Naruto was saying-. Despite being such an outlandish story, he had to admit everything made perfect sense.

"... and after our failure to save Utakata, only four of us remain," Naruto finished with a weary sigh. "That's why we're trying as hard as we can to secure the remaining jinchuriki. Listen, we aren't going to ask you to come to a village that was your home's deadsworn enemy, but at least you should go back to Iwa. They can keep you safe."

"I don't think I'm ready to return yet," the redheaded man began, shaking his head. "But I'm guessing you aren't giving me any options, right?"

"I'm afraid not," it was Tenzo who answered. "Please understand the situation is too delicate, and we can't risk anything to chance. So far you have two options: you let us escort you back to Iwa, or you come back with us to Konoha."

"And if I refuse either option?" Roshi tentatively asked, albeit he could figure out the answer.

Even if for the untrained eye nothing happened. Roshi could feel how all the Konoha ninjas around him tensed up, ready to fight.

"Then we will incapacitate you and take you to Konoha by force," Itachi stated, his voice firm but devoid of aggression.

"I see," Roshi replied, looking around at the ninjas around him, measuring their potential abilities, and wondering if he could be able to fight all of them at once. Itachi alone would be a huge problem, and so was the jinchuriki if he had a degree of control over the Fox. Then there were the other eight ninjas, who didn't look all that threatening, but one could never let appearances deceive you.

"If you're thinking in fighting us, I'd seriously reconsider," Itachi warned him. "This group has ninjas specifically handpicked for this task due their abilities. Many of us could defeat you alone."

"But please don't take it as a threat," Naruto insisted, trying to sound reassuring. "If we were hostile, we wouldn't be here talking with you, nor would offer you the option to return to Iwa. Please understand the situation is desperate."

"It sounds desperate indeed," Roshi agreed. "It's been a while since I've been involved with the matter of ninjas and villages, so I might not be up to date. But before I tell you my answer, tell me this: what about the other two jinchuriki besides us, kid?"

"From what I know, the jinchuriki of the Eight Tails has been hidden somewhere in the Land of Lightning by his brother, the Raikage," Naruto replied. "While the jinchuriki of the Seven Tails is safe behind Konoha's walls."

"So, if I decide to accompany you to Konoha, I'll at least be with other two of my own kind, right?" Roshi asked. Naruto nodded. "Alright then. Given the alternatives, I think I'll go to Konoha."

"Really!?" Naruto beamed, jumping to his feet.

"Are you sure you don't want to return to Iwa instead?" Anko suggested. "It's your home village after all..."

"Yes, I was born and raised in Iwa," Roshi replied. "But that place never felt like home. People feared and avoided me, afraid that the Tailed Beast within me would escape or take control of my body and harm them. And to be honest I was afraid of that too, that's why I set on a journey in order to learn how to control this power without endangering innocents. However, after some time... I grew to appreciate, and even enjoy the solitude."

"Yeah, I can relate to that," Naruto uneasily said, as he rubbed his arm.

"So Konoha isn't any different from Iwa then," Roshi stated.

"I don't know about Iwa," Naruto began. "But Konoha is awesome."

"But you just say-"

"Yes, people were afraid of me. At first," Naruto stated. "But I had awesome people raising me that helped me deal with my condition as jinchuriki, as well as all the friends who don't mind that I have a giant homicidal fox sealed within my being. And eventually, even those who were afraid of me learned not to."

Roshi's expression softened a little. "That sounds really nice."

"It is," Naruto chuckled.

"The way you earned those people's trust, you make it sound so easy..."

"It wasn't easy, that's for sure," Naruto said. "But it was worth it."

Roshi's mind was then assaulted by a wave of doubts. He wondered if instead of running away, he should have stayed in Iwa and tried to create some bonds, build some friendships. The idea of somebody, other than another jinchuriki befriending him always seemed like an unreachable dream. And this boy came and proved him wrong.

" Things are sometimes much easier than you think, Roshi,"
Son Goku's voice said from within him. "You'd realize of this more often if you weren't so stubborn."

"So, you're coming with us then?" Itachi asked.

Roshi nodded. "Yes. When are we leaving?"

"I'd like to go now, but traveling by night is dangerous, especially with such a large group like this one," Itachi said. "We'll wait for dawn to break, and we'll head to the Land of Fire."

"Understood," Roshi nodded. "Let's continue eating and have a nice rest then. A long journey will be waiting for us when the sun rises."

...

The Next Day

The group of now eleven ninjas were undoing the journey those from Konoha had done the days before. Fortunately, no Akatsuki nor Rock Ninjas had decided to ambush them at night, and all of them were pretty rested. Combined with the fact that it took pretty little time to convince Roshi to go with them, moral was overall high.

"At this pace, we will be able to reach the border with the Land of Waterfalls in less than a day," Itachi announced. "We will avoid nearby towns in order to keep a low profile. If everything goes well, I estimate that we will be back in Konoha in less than a week."

Everybody nodded, with Naruto smiling as well. He did it. He was finally going to save another jinchuriki after the string of failures following Fu's near capture.

"So, Naruto," Roshi began. "How it's Konoha?"

"Oh, it's awesome!" the blond beamed. "It's really pretty, surrounded by forests and some mountains. People are pretty nice, and ninjas are strong. Oh, did you know that my dad is the Hokage?"

"The Yellow Flash, yes," Roshi nodded.

"No, that's my biological dad," Naruto said. "But guess you have a point. I mean the current Hokage is my adoptive dad. His name is Jiraiya."

Roshi raised an eyebrow. "Jiraiya of the Sannin? Kid, you have some powerful family members. Whose your adoptive mother, Tsunade?"

"Yes! How did you know?" Naruto said.

"I... didn't," Roshi stammered, before clearing his throat. "I didn't know those two were married."

"They've been married for more than a decade now," Naruto told him. "Man, were you living under a rock all these years or something? Because really, you don't seem to be aware of all the stuff going on around the world."

"Well, you could say that I was," Roshi admitted. "During my journeys, I did my best to distance myself from civilization."

"I see. Thankfully, it's not too late to fix that," Naruto optimistically said. "Oh, when we arrive Konoha, you have to eat a bowl of Icharaku's Ramen! There's no better ramen than that! Once you taste it, you'll never want to eat anything else."

Roshi chuckled a little. "Heh, that sounds nice. It's been a while since the last time I ate something that I didn't hunt or gathered myself."

Shortly after the group passed a certain spot, a white humaoid being emerged from the ground. It was a White Zetsu. The humanoid creature smirked.

"So, the jinchuriki are already on the run," the White Zetsu said. "Better tell them that their prey is in the open."

And with that, the humanoid aberration sank into the ground again.

Author's Note: So yeah, here they are! After being introduced towards the end of Part I, Team Anko makes its debut! And alongside them, even if they have been recurring characters, Team Tenzo makes it first onscreen official mission! Again, I'm sorry I took so long to feature these two teams, but juggling so many characters and trying to give them enough screentime is insane. I was planning and writing this arc when people were asking about them. And as of this writing, some readers are complaining about how long has it been since the last time Team Gai did anything important. Be patient, guys, this stuff takes time!

And in order to give these characters some screentime, I was unable to bring any Iwa characters other than Roshi into the arc (unlike the Yugito or Uakata arcs, that featured Kumo and Kiri characters, respectively). If you want to see Iwa characters, I'm afraid you'll have to wait until I adapt the Kage Summit Arc.

Also, I decided to leave a mystery what Akatsuki members will be tasked with capturing Roshi. Have fun guessing which ones will do it (the only hint is that they won't be Pain nor Konan).

Thanks to Ookami88 for betareading this chapter.

I believe that's all. Hope you enjoyed this chapter, and don't forget to review! Reviews make me really, really happy!

Fire and Earth, Wood and Music

Author's Note: I've made a change to the previous chapter. Many reviews pointed out that snakes are very good trackers in real life, so I changed the scene in which Anko turns down using snakes to track Roshi into her actually using them alongside Itachi's crows.

Also, check out Shinobi420's story "The Two Twisted Timelines", which is actually set in the Son of the Sannin universe.

Now with that out of the way, enjoy the new chapter:

Chapter 74:

Fire and Earth, Wood and Music

or

Monekys, Foxes, Snakes and Puppets

For several days, the group of ten Konoha ninjas and the single Iwa ninja had been traveling through the forests of the Land of Waterfalls almost nonstop. However, they felt their swiftness rewarded when Itachi opened his mouth to announce something.

"We just crossed the border with the Land of Fire," Itachi stated. He could almost feel the relief washing over the rest of his temporary teammates. The fact that they had returned to their home country in one piece gave them high hopes of completing their mission without incidents.

"Yes! Konoha, here we come!" Naruto cheered.

"I believe we're still a couple days away from the village," Tenzo interjected. "But I think the worst have come to pass."

"Yeah. We weren't attacked by Iwa ninja," Anko added. "And the chances of being ambushed by Akatsuki were higher in the Land of Waterfalls."

"Still, I don't want any of you to lower your guard, understood?" Itachi asked. All of them tensed up again. "I believe we could take a small break. Hanabi, see if you can locate a proper spot to rest."

Hanabi nodded, and expanded her sight, though she focused mostly in the terrain in front of her. She scanned the immense forest before her, and after a few seconds, she found a nice place.

"I think I found something," Hanabi began. "If we deviate a little to the west, there's a clearing with a small lake and a waterfall in about three kilometers."

"That will do. Lead the way, Hanabi," Itachi asked.

...

A few minutes later, they arrived at the waterfall lake. The lake was big enough to both drink and even have a bath if one wanted, and they could even use the waterfall to take a shower. Plus there was enough room for all of them to sit and relax in the grass, and maybe have some food if they felt hungry -which Naruto was-.

"Alright, I believe we can afford to spare an hour resting," Itachi stated. "But if you plan to take a bath, eat, or whatever, do it now. Once the hour is up, we will resume our trip back to Konoha, and whoever is behind, will be left behind."

Itachi's tone was cold and left no room for discussion, but none of them questioned his orders. They all knew that bringing Roshi to Konoha was of vital importance.

...

Not far away from there, two figures wearing black cloaks with red clouds were perched on a high tree branch. One of them had their eyes fixed on the Konoha ninjas.

"They finally stopped. Should we attack now?" the first figure asked.

The second one shook his head. "Not us. Let's send our minions first to soften them a little and measure their capabilities. They're a large group after all."

"That might tip them off of our presence and sneak past us with the jinchuriki," the first figure argued. "We're powerful enough to crush all of them. What are you afraid of?"

"Nothing my dear partner, but let's say that I'm not somebody keen in using brute force to approach a problem," the second figure calmly replied. "Besides, this is your first mission. You shouldn't be so overconfident. Remember what happened to Hidan and Kakuzu."

"Don't compare me with those fools," the other Akatsuki fire back. "Very well then, we'll do it your way."

"Good. Send your troops first. They'll be excellent cannon fodder."

...

As everybody relaxed, Roshi was sitting under a tree. In his hand there was a book, though rather than reading it, he was actually writing on it. He would write something, stop, look around, ponder about something, and write again.

"Hey there, Roshi!" Naruto's voice said. Roshi took his eyes from his book, and noticed Naruto walking towards him, followed by those two white haired children. "We were going to eat now. Are you hungry?"

"Thanks, but I'm not. I'll eat sometime later," Roshi said.

"I made some tea as well," the white haired boy chimed in. "Do you want some?"

"I don't think I'm going to turn that down," Roshi with a smile, as he took the cup of tea the boy gave him. "Thank you, kid. I don't think we've been introduced."

"My name's Hagane. This is my sister Kaida," Hagane said, waving his arm at Kaida, who made a curtsy nod. "And you already know our older sibling, Naruto."

"You're siblings?" Roshi asked, raising an eyebrow.

"Adopted siblings," Naruto punctualized, realizing that Roshi noticed their lack of physical resemblances between naruto and the twins. "Well, technically, I'm the one who's adopted, but you get the gist."

"Yes. Those two kids look a lot like Jiraiya and Tsunade, especially the former," Roshi observed. "And you say they adopted you?"

"Yeah. Jiraiya was my godfather, and Tsunade was my last living relative, even if we're only distantly related," Naruto explained.

"I never imagined that there would be people kind enough to adopt a jinchuriki," Roshi noted. "We were created to be living weapons, you know. And people don't want weapons to be close to them or their loved ones."

"Not everybody is like that," Naruto argued, crossing his arms. "And sometimes they're just being ignorant. People who used to fear me because of the Kyubi are no longer afraid of me after they got to know me better, and realize that the Tailed Beast within me can't harm them."

Roshi's reply came in the form of a somewhat sad chuckle. "Then you were born luckier than most, Naruto. From my experiences, almost no jinchuriki has your life. Tell me, do you know how they select a jinchuriki?"

Naruto knew why he was chosen to bear such burden, but he guessed it would be different with the other Tailed Beasts, since no other jinchuriki were Uzumaki.

"First of all, jinchuriki are chosen at a young age," Roshi began, not waiting for Naruto's answer. "So they can carry the Tailed Beast for the longest time possible, and their minds can be more easily molded."

"Guess that makes sense," Naruto mentioned. All the jinchuriki he had met were either teens or young adults. The oldest jinchuriki he had met before Roshi was Killer B, and he appeared to be in his mid thirties.

"Second, jinchuriki almost always tend to be orphans," Roshi continued.

"Because no family would want their child to be subjected to such a fate, right?" Hagane guessed.

"You've a bright mind, boy," Roshi nodded. "But that's not the only part. If a child has no family, they won't have any kind of bond or personal allegiance. And thus, there's a void the village leaders can fill."

"Which brings me to my last point: all jinchuriki tend to be related to the Kages in some way," Roshi said. "To ensure their loyalty to the village."

Naruto was the most obvious case. Both his biological and adoptive father were Hokages. Gaara was also the son of the current Kazekage. There was also Killer B, who was the Raikage's brother. And Yagura, who cut the middleman and was Mizukage himself. However, it didn't appear that Utakata was related to any Kage, and Fu hailed from a village that didn't have a Kage to begin with, though she was pretty close to the village leader, Shibuki.

"What about you?" Hagane asked. "Are you related to the Tsuchikage?"

"In a way, yes. Do you know the Second Tsuchikage, Mu the Null Man?" Roshi asked, but upon seeing the youths' look of confusion, shook his head. "Of course you don't, he already perished at the hands of that despicable Gengetsu. Anyway, I was distantly related to him. My father was his second cousin. After both my parents died in the First Ninja War, I was taken under his wing. Shortly after that, I was made the Jinchuriki of the Four Tails."

Roshi could feel the monkey's anger at being referred once again by such moniker, but decided to ignore him as usual.

"Naruto, if I may ask something," Roshi began. Naruto gave him a nod. "How old you were when you were made a jinchuriki?"

"Uh... about an hour or so," Naruto replied. Roshi raised an eyebrow. "Let's say that the circumstances of my birth were kind of chaotic."

"Were you born the same day the Nine Tails attacked Konoha or what?" Roshi asked. Upon seeing Naruto nodding, the redhead's eyes widened. "Boy, I take back what I said before. Your luck is extraordinarily bad for such a catastrophe to happen the day of your birth."

"Luck had nothing to do with what happened that day. It was part of a deliberate plan," Naruto replied. "I'll tell you the details once we're safe in Konoha, because it's kind of a long story. And not even we have the full version."

"I'll be eager to listen to such tale, it will be an interesting addition to my book," Roshi began.

"You're writing a book?" Kaida chimed in. "About what? Does it have romance? Can I read it?"

"It's not the kind of book you'll enjoy, girl," Roshi replied, chuckling a little. "It's mostly a record of my journeys and experiences across the elemental nations. Towns I visited, people I met, ninjas I fought, and the like."

"So, you're going to write about us then!?" an excited Kaida asked.

"Yes. It was exactly what I was doing before you arrived," Roshi said. "Don't worry, I won't write anything bad about you. As long as you don't give me any reason to."

"Then be sure to include that you met somebody who could use Wood Release!" Kaida said.

"Girl, as much as I'd have loved to meet him, I'm afraid that I was nothing but a young teen when the First Hokage died," Roshi said, laughing a little while shaking his head. "Do I look that old to you?"

"I wasn't talking about great grandpa, but me! Look!" Kaida made a hand seal with both hands, and suddenly vines started to emerge all around them. "Awesome, right?"

Roshi watched with his eyes open wide in fascination as a Bloodlimit he considered a legend manifested before him. "Amazing indeed, girl. You too were born with extraordinaire luck to inherit such a power."

"My little brother also has a Bloodlimit, even if it's not as cool as mine," Kaida boasted. "As does our teammate, Hanabi."

"You have quite the collection of Bloodlimits for such a relatively small group," Roshi noticed. "Not to mention another jinchuriki. You made no expenses in case I wasn't this cooperative, didn't you?"

"Eh, while I'm not going to deny it..." Naruto began, as he chuckled and rubbed the back of his head. "All this manpower wasn't just because of you, but because of Akatsuki. You know, the guys who want to capture us. They have some crazy strong people among their ranks. Plus I'm not here just to fight."

"We believe that the chances of jinchuriki listening to us will be higher if it's another jinchuriki the one to do the talking," Hagane explained.

"Yeah, and our brother is taking a huge risk leaving the village like that, so show some appreciation!" Kaida added, tapping her foot.

"But I did, right? I'm coming with you peacefully," Roshi replied, holding his hands in defense. "Not that I had much of a choice."

"You could have returned to Iwa," Hagane pointed out.

"Besides, this is just temporary," Naruto reassured. "Once the Akatsuki threat is done with, you'll be free to roam the world again."

"Glad to hear it," Roshi nodded, as he went back to his writing.

His reaction, however, caught Naruto a little by surprise. "Wait, you believe me?"

"Why I shouldn't?" Roshi asked. "You're in no need to promise me such a thing. So if given my predicament you tell me that, it must be true."

"Boy, you're surely a trusting person," Kaida pointed out.

Roshi raised his eyes from his book, and gave the white haired girl a somewhat condescending smile. "Girl, I didn't get to live this old by being trusting. But over time, you learn to know which people you can trust and which you can't."

"In either case, I'm glad we fall into the latter category, hehe," Naruto said, grinning a little. He felt like a change of topic was in order, and now was the chance. "So, how many books did you write so far with your experiences?"

"Quite a lot," Roshi stated. "Would you want to read one?"

"Hell yeah I would!" Naruto happily replied. "I admit I'm not much of a reader myself, but reading about the experiences of another jinchuriki has to be something else."

"I like your enthusiasm, kid," Roshi chuckled a little. "I'll give you a signed copy once we reach your village."

"You know, our father is also a writer too," Kaida chimed in.

"Jiraiya writes books? That's new to me," the redheaded man laughed. "I can't picture him as a writer. Well, except maybe porn writer, since his pervertedness is as legendary as his skill as a ninja."

Hagane sighed. "Sadly, that's exactly what he writes."

"Not that we can tell if they're good or not, since mom banned us from reading them," Kaida said, shaking her head a little. "Poor mom thinks we'll never grow up."

"Listen to your mom, child. I'm sure she knows what she's talking about," Roshi said, chuckling a little, as he continued his writing.

Kaida leaned towards him, tried to get a look at what he was writing, and gave him his best smile. "So... are you writing about me now?"

Roshi just sighed. "I won't be able to write much if you keep talking to me."

As Hagane and Kaida bothered Roshi alongside Naruto, their last member of their team, Hanabi, took the pause to relax and meditate. Meditation has been an constant exercise in her endeavor of mastering her Six Paths chakra, since the usually energetic Hyuga needed a calm mind to use her new power. It was something that made her advance at a slower pace than her calmer older sister.

However, as she meditated, she felt a presence. Very faint, almost like a distant star. And Hanabi wouldn't have given this a thought if it wasn't for the fact that, when she decided to focus on this presence, she noticed something unsettling.

The presence had a very similar chakra to her. And other than her older sister, there was only one person with this kind of chakra.

Opening her eyes, Hanabi expanded her eyesight, scanning the area in the direction of the presence. The young Hyuga gasped.

"Hanabi?" Tenzo asked, noticing his student's reaction. "Something's wrong?"

"A large group of ninjas is heading towards us!" Hanabi warned.

Naturally, this drew everybody's attention, as they stopped what they were doing, and quickly gathered around the brown haired girl, with Itachi getting the closest.

"How many of them? From what village? How long until they arrive?" the Uchiha asked.

Hanabi focused her eyesight on the potential group of enemies as she tried to find the answers her captain demanded her. "About eighteen. At their current pace, they will be here in less than five minutes. As for the village..." Hanabi began, as he focused on their forehead protectors. "I don't recognize that symbol!"

Suddenly, Naruto had a very bad feeling about this. "Hanabi, is the symbol a crescent moon overlapped with a sun?"

"Yes, it looks like that!" Hanabi nodded. "Wait, how did you know that?"

"Because Naruto had already fought against such ninjas, isn't that right?" Itachi asked the blond.

"Yeah, they aren't actually ninjas, but very advanced puppets. If those puppets are here, then Toneri Otsutsuki can't be too far," Naruto warned the others.

" Toneri Otsutsuki... so that's the presence I felt..." Hanabi realized. "Well, if he's here expecting my sister, he's in for a disappointment. Though I hope he doesn't decides to take me as his bride instead. EWWW!"

"Even if the last time Toneri attacked us he was aiming for Hinata, we have a reason to believe that he's working for Akatsuki as well," Naruto told the others. "So even if he came here mistaking Hanabi for Hinata, Roshi is still in danger."

"Very well then. Roshi, Naruto, stay close to me. Anko, Tenzo, have your teams cover our flanks," Itachi ordered.

"Very well then," Tenzo nodded.

"You got it!" Anko replied.

"Finally some action!" Zaku said with an excited grin. "I was starting to get bored of all this inactivity."

"Don't underestimate Akatsuki, brat," Anko told Zaku. "Or else you'll end up dead."

"That habit of yours is going to be the death of us, Zaku," Dosu chastised his teammate, shaking his head.

"You can discuss that later! Here they come!" Kin pointed out, as she heard the trees surrounding them rustling.

And true to her words, a trio of Moon Puppets leaped from the trees above them, their hands cupped. A golden chakra ball formed between them, before thrusting their hands forwards, firing the yellow projectile.

"Leave that to me!" Zaku said, taking a couple steps forward, while raising his arms at the incoming projectiles. "Decapitating Airwaves!"

Zaku released two powerful cones of pressurized air and sound that sucessfully repelled the incoming projectiles, and lacked enough power to reach the ninjas, who just touched ground and rushed towards them.

Anko made five hand seals, before biting her thumb, and slamming her palm into the ground.

"Summoning Jutsu!"

After the initial burst of smoke, a large, green snake appeared around both Anko and her students, coiled around them in a protective manner.

"Did you call, Anko-san?" the snake asked, in an oddly soft and feminine voice.

"Indeed, Tagitsuhime. We could use your help against these enemies," Anko replied. "Try to make sure none of them catches us off guard!"

"You can count on me," the snake said, as she slammed with her tail an incoming puppet with such force, it was snapped in two.

"Alright then! Dosu, Kin, if these guys are puppets, then your usual fighting style won't be of much use here! Switch to taijutsu and conventional ninjutsu!" Anko told her other two students.

"Yes, sensei!" the two of them replied in unison.

Meanwhile, Tenzo prepared his team for another group of puppets that were coming from their direction.

"Kaida, with me! Let's create a wood barricade!" Tenzo ordered, as his hands flew through hand seals. "Hanabi, Hagane, cover us!"

"Yes sir!" the three Chunin chorused in unison, as Kaida's hands also formed hand seals.

"Wood Release: World of Trees Wall!"

Tenzo and Kaida slammed their hands into the ground, and in front of them dozens of wooden roots grew from the ground, interlocking among themselves, catching some of them puppets that were heading towards them. The puppets struggled to get free, but the roots' hold became harder with every second, to the point they were unable to move.

Upon seeing this, some of the puppets generated golden swords made of chakra that they used to cut through the wall of wood -but trying to help the trapped puppets didn't cross their possibly nonexistent mind- and charged forward.

However, Hanabi and Hagane were already expecting them, both of them forming hand seals of their own.

"Lightning Release: Thunder Spear!"

Hagane raised his right arm, which started to crackle with electricity, before firing a lightning bolt at the incoming enemies, hitting one of the puppets square in the chest.

"Fire Release: Burning Palm!"

Flames coated Hanabi's palms as she rushed to meet the attackers head on, and started trade blows with three of them, one using a golden sword, the other two resorting to unarmed combat. Despite being puppets, the young Hyuga found them far more skilled than she imagined. Their movements were fast and precise, blocking her strikes with acute expertise.

"It's as if these guys know about the Gentle Fist..." Hanabi wondered aloud, before a revelation hit her. "... because they do! We Hyugas descend from Otsutsuki!"

Her revelation proved to be correct when the trio of puppets pushed her into the defensive in a frighteningly effective display of Gentle Fist. Unfortunately for them, Gentle Fist wasn't the only thing Hanabi could rely on. The Hyuga jumped backwards, with the puppets following suit. Just as she expected.

"Very well then, how about this?"

Hanabi spread her arms wide with the palms forward, releasing a powerful kinetic wave that hurled the puppets backwards. Then, with another hand movement, she broke the momentum of one of them and pulled it back to her. The moment it was in range, Hanabi slammed her burning palm into the puppet's chest, blowing a hole into its body. The puppet fell down, and didn't get up.

The other two puppets weren't deterred by seeing their "partner" dead, and dashed towards Hanabi. The Hyuga smirked confidently, as she adopted a defensive fighting stance.

"Come on, I'm not afraid of-"

Suddenly, something fell from the sky, slamming the two puppets into the ground. Said something turned out to be Hagane, who used one leg to stop each puppet, stopping them and there in their tracks.

"Oh come on, those were mine!" Hanabi whined.

"This isn't a competition," Hagane chastised, as his eyes scanned the area for more enemies. "Just focus on the mission, we're Chunin, for crying out loud!"

"Ugh, he always has to rub how mature he pretends to be," Hanabi grumbled, shaking her head in annoyance.

Naruto, Roshi and Itachi were fighting against a much larger number of puppets than the other two squads did, either because they were the strongest ninjas of the group, because it had not one but two jinchuriki, or maybe both. Probably both.

"Fire Release: Burning Edge!"

Itachi's katana was coated in flames just in time to parry the blow from one of the puppets wielding a golden chakra sword. The swordfighting puppet delivered a series of vicious but precise blows that forced Itachi onto the defensive. His Sharingan flaring to life, Itachi had tried to put these beings under a genjutsu, but unsurprisingly they were immune, given their lack of a brain. His Sharingan also failed to predict their movements, since they didn't have muscles.

"Naruto, you fought against these creatures," Itachi began, as he pushed back the puppet's sword after parrying a blow. "Any idea on how they can be beaten? Weak points, anything like that?"

"Not really! These guys are strong, fast, and don't feel pain! The last time we fought we just overwhelmed them with brute force!" Naruto said, as he was fighting other two puppets, Wind Blade in hand.

"Watch out!" Roshi warned, pointing upwards.

Laping above them, there were two other puppets, holding a large sphere of golden chakra between their hands, which they threw at the two jinchuriki and the Uchiha. Roshi, however, was already preparing a counterattack.

"Lava Release: Scorching Rocks Jutsu!"

Roshi expelled multiple bursts of lava from his mouth, that quickly solidified into projectiles of molten rock. The lava missiles crashed against the golden chakra spheres, resulting in a large explosion. As this happened, Itachi's hands also ran through hand seals.

"Fire Release: Great Fireball Jutsu!"

Itachi breathed a massive fireball into the cloud of dirt and smoke produced by the previous clash of attacks, much to Naruto and Roshi's confusion. But the jinchuriki's confusion didn't last long when they saw the two puppets leaping out the cloud of ash and smoke, heading directly into the fireball. They realized of their mistake too late, and they were burn to ashes by the Uchiha's hot flames.

"Just because my Sharingan can't predict their movements, it doesn't mean that I don't have other ways to anticipate their actions," Itachi stated in his usual stoic tone, though Naruto could detect some hints of pride in there.

"Everybody, watch out!" Hanabi shouted. "More enemies incoming!"

"More puppets?" Naruto asked.

"No, these ones are alive!" Hanabi replied. "They're Oto Ninjas!"

"Oto ninjas. Then that means that Orochimaru must be close then," Anko deduced.

Her three students immediately paled. Well, Zaku and Kin did, Dosu was better at hiding his reaction, in no small part thanks to the bandages covering his face.

"O-Orochimaru is here!?" Zaku almost screaming. "Of course, it's not like things can go our way just once!"

"No no no no no NO! He can't be here! He can't see us!" Kin shouted, taking her hands to her head. "If Orochimaru knows that we defected to Konoha..."

"Snap out of it, brats! Orochimaru won't lay a hand on you as long as I'm here to keep you safe!" Anko energetically replied. "And even if I can't do it alone, we have more people to cover our backs!"

Kaida, who overheard the conversation, decided to chime in. "Yeah! We Konoha ninjas take care of our own! So as long as we stick together, there's nothing to fear!"

"Besides, if Orochimaru was close, I'd sense him," Anko told them, as her hand instinctively touched the spot on her neck where the cursed seal was. "This thing burns like crazy when he's close."

"Naruto, watch out! An Oto ninja is heading towards you!" Hanabi warned. "His chakra levels are downright ridiculous!"

Itachi and Roshi tensed up, while Naruto made a hand seal.

"Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

A dozen of clones popped into existence, and formed a circle around the original, Roshi and Itachi, eagerly awaiting for the ninja to show up. Itachi's eyes widened when his Sharingan caught something.

"Naruto, Roshi, move!" Itachi shouted, as he pushed Roshi to the side.

"Ten Finger Drilling Bullets!"

Tiny white projectiles flew at them at an imperceptible speed, dispelling several of the clones, which, along the original, scrambled in an attempt to avoid such an attack. That moment, a white haired ninja Naruto hadn't seen in a long time landed in front of them.

"YOU!"

"Yes, me," Kimimaro replied, his face as stoic as usual. "I remember you, kid. Naruto Uzumaki. I was expecting to see you here."

"What are you doing here? Are you working with Akatsuki? Or did you come here for my siblings!?" Naruto angrily asked, as he and his clones gathered again in front of him, as if forming a barrier to stop him from continuing forward.

"While my failure of such mission will haunt me forever, that's not why I'm here," Kimimaro replied. "We have orders to capture the jinchuriki of the Four Tails for Orochimaru-sama. And you as well, but you aren't the priority right now."

"Well, get this that on that bonehead of yours! You failed back then, and you'll fail again! Just like we rescued our siblings, neither you nor your boss will get your dirty hands on anymore jinchuriki!"

"Kimimaro Kaguya, last member of the Kaguya Clan. Last time I heard of you, Zabuza claimed to have defeated you," Itachi said, narrowing his eyes at him. "Naruto, do you know this man?"

"Yeah. He was part of the group that kidnapped my siblings three years ago," Naruto replied, not taking his eyes from the white haired ninja. "Before you say anything, yes, I know he's dangerous."

"In that case, you won't complain if I say that you should let me handle him," Itachi told him. "Make sure Roshi stays safe."

Kimimaro started to make hand seals. "You think you can handle me, Uchiha? Your Sharingan doesn't impress me. Besides, I'm way stronger than the last time the Uzumaki fought against me. Dance of the Orchid!"

Kimimaro slammed his hands into the grass, and the ground started to shake. Suddenly, an skeletal serpentine dragon emerged from below Naruto and Roshi were standing, who barely jumped in time to avoid it.

"Whoa, that's new!" Naruto pointed out.

"Didn't you hear what I just say?" Kimimaro replied.

The earth continued to shake, and more bone serpents emerged, the three bone constructs focusing on one ninja each. That's when Kimimaro took advantage of the situation and dived for Roshi, while he activated the first stage of his cursed seal.

"Itachi, I'll distract these things!" Naruto said as he made a hand seal. "Protect Roshi! Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

Itachi nodded as he went to intercept Kimimaro. A hundred of Naruto clones popped unto existence, and they began to charge at the skeletal serpents. While they failed to inflict any significant damage, they did keep the bone constructs distracted enough.

Meanwhile, Anko's team continued to fend off the horde of autonomous puppets. As she saw a couple of puppets coming at her, Kin made several hand seals.

"Lightning Release: Thunder Needles!"

Kin grabbed a handful of senbon as her hands started to crackle with electricity, and tossed the electrified needles at the incoming enemies. One of them raised its hand forward, casting a golden chakra blast at the needles, producing an explosion. However, when they crossed the ensuing cloud of smoke, Dosu was already waiting for them.

"Resonating Echo Burst!"

Given their momentum, the puppets were unable to stop in time nor dodge Dosu's invisible attack, which violently hurled them backwards.

"Good one!" Kin cheered.

"No time to celebrate! More coming from the east!" Dosu warned, as the bandaged ninja sensed their steps resonating through the ground.

"Leave those to us!" Anko said, as she and Zaku rejoined them.
"Zaku, time to use our combo!"

A smirk appeared on the black haired teen. "Hell yes! I thought we'd never do it!"

"Just wait for the right moment!" Anko told him, as she started making hand seals.

As a trio of puppets rushed towards them, they jumped into the air while cupping their hands, producing a golden chakra sphere between them. Anko tensed up.

"Now!"

Zaku raised his palms upward. "Decapitating Airwaves!"

"Fire Release: Great Dragon Fire!"

Zaku released wide cones of pressurized air through the holes of his palms, while Anko exhaled a stream of fire from her mouth. Both attacks merged into a massive wall of fire that engulfed both the incoming chakra blasts, as well as burned the puppets to ashes.

"Yeah, how do you like that one, huh!?" Zaku boasted.

"Hey, do you hear that?" Dosu asked.

"Hear what? I can't hear anything with all this ruckus," Zaku complained.

"Yeah, what are you talking about, Dosu?" Anko asked.

"It sounds like a flute. Don't you hear it?" Dosu insisted.

Upon hearing that, Kin went pale. "Wait, a flute you say? Oh man, I wasn't expecting her to be here!"

"Who-"

"Tayuya!" Kin interrupted Anko. "She's a member of the Sound Five! And uses the melody of her flute to put everybody who hears it under a powerful genjutsu!"

"I see. And we can't allow that, can we?" Anko said, nodding. "Dosu, you're the one with the best sound ninjutsu. And Kin, you're the genjutsu specialist, so you two take care of her."

"W-Wait! You can ask us to deal with one of Orochimaru's elite guards! We're not that strong!" Kin whimpered.

"Yes you are!" Anko snapped, getting in her face. "And you know why? Because I trained you myself all these years! Under Orochimaru, you were disposable tools, but under me, you're fucking ninjas! So now go there, beat her into the ground, don't dare to fucking die, and make me proud!"

"Yes, sensei. We won't disappoint you," Dosu said, bowing his head. "Come on Kin."

Reluctantly, Kin nodded and followed his teammate into the thickness of the forest that surrounded the lake.

It didn't took long for Dosu to find Tayuya. The redheaded kunoichi barely made an effort to hide herself. The marks around her skin showed that she was using the first stage of her cursed seal from the get go.

"Let's make sure she doesn't play that flute anymore!" Dosu suggested, as he jumped from one tree branch to the next heading towards Tayuya. "Resonating Echo Soundwave!"

Dosu slammed both melody gauntlets together, producing a sound blast that expanded forward. Tayuya jumped in time before the branch she was standing upon was shattered into splinters. However, she didn't stop playing her music.

"Now's my chance!" Kin said, making a hand seal.

As Tayuya was about to land on another branch, she lost her balance for a second. But that second was enough to made her trip, and fall to the grass below.

"What the fuck!?" the redhead cursed, as she incidentally dropped the flute.

"Good one, Kin!" Dosu praised, as she dashed towards the falling redhead. "Time to finish her!"

However, Kin's genjutsu only lasted a couple seconds, and while she was in mid air, Tayuya was able to regan her balance and land on her feet. She then sprung towards Dosu, and interrupted his attack with a vicious punch to the face.

"Finish this, you shithead mummy!" Tayuya shouted. "You're going to need way more bandages than those once I'm done with you!"

"Kin! The flute! Make sure she doesn't get it back!" Dosu warned, raising his voice.

Kin nodded, and rushed towards the flute, laying on the ground. Tayuya, being so focused on Dosu, didn't notice that until it was late.

"Fuck no! Don't you dare!"

"Mine!" Kin said as she was about to grab the flute.

"KIN, WATCH OUT!"

But before she could do that, a new cloaked figure appeared from behind a tree, and punched Kin in the face with such force, the black haired kunoichi was sent flying against a nearby tree. The figure then grabbed the flute, and tossed it to Tayuya.

"Be more careful next time," the cloaked figure said. Tayuya grunted something unintelligible in return. "And a 'thank you' would be nice."

"I didn't ask for your help, so go fuck yourself!" Tayuya angrily snapped.

"Very well then. I'll go help Kimimaro instead," the figure said, as he rushed towards the battlefield behind them.

"Of course, you can't stand being separated from your boyfriend that much, can you?" Tayuya mocked, before turning her attention back to the Konoha ninjas. Dosu was helping Kin back on her feet.

"Alright, you fuckers have no idea how mad you made me with that little stunt of yours, so prepare to get the worst beating of your life!"

And Tayuya's cursed seal started to spread even further, as it advanced to its second stage.

"This doesn't look good for us..." Dosu lamented, but he wasn't sure what was more scary: Tayuya as she mutated into a human shaped monster, or Anko if she was pissed. Though deep down, the answer was easy. "Facing Tayuya it is, then."

Back to the fight, Tenzo's team was also fighting the last of the remaining puppets. Several of them had surrounded the Senju twins, and were ready to fire their signature golden chakra blasts.

"Sister, you're on!" Hagane called.

The white haired girl nodded, as she made several hand seals.

"Earth Release: Earth Dome Jutsu!"

Kaida slammed her hands into the ground, and a dome of dense rock quickly formed around the Senju siblings, just in time when the puppets fired their blasts. The golden projectiles easily shattered the barrier. But much to their surprise, the twins were nowhere to be seen all what remained were several pieces of charred rock.

There was also a hole, but they saw it way too late. Hagane and Kaida then burst from underground behind them, the latter making more hand seals.

"Water Release: All Devouring Maelstrom!"

Water from the nearby lake started to form and gather around the puppets, and quickly spun around them, until it formed a water tornado. The puppets tried to break free from the powerful attack, but it was in vain.

"Good one, sis! Now it's my turn!" Hagane said, as he fell from above, his hands holding a massive spinning sphere of blue chakra. "Sage Art: Big Ball Rasengan!"

Upon smashing the sphere of destruction unto the tornado of water, it exploded in a massive blast that not only shattered the puppets, but the land below as well. The water from the lake moved to fill the new empty space.

"Guys, watch out!" Hanabi's voice said from above, as the Hyuga floated down towards them. "More enemies are incoming! These ones are actual ninjas! And their chakra... no, that can't be right!"

"What can't be right?" Kaida wanted to know.

But before Hanabi could reply, the answer presented itself.

"Wood Release: Deep Forest Emergence!"

Thick green roots emerged from both the land below and the nearby water. Hanabi flew back into the air, while the Senju twins jumped away in order to avoid the sudden attack. A storm of shuriken laced with electricity appeared seemingly out of nowhere. Hagane, however, managed to see it in time.

"Wind Release: Cyclone Vortex!"

The ensuing cone of wind managed to either suck or push away the incoming rain of steel stars.

At that moment, two ninjas wearing Otogakure uniforms, including face concealing balaclavas, landed on top of one of the newly generated trees.

"Another Wood Release user?" Kaida asked in shock.

"That's what I tried to tell you!" Hanabi shouted from above. "These ninjas have an almost identical chakra to you two! In fact, they even look like you two, only older!"

"I see. At first I was surprised, but now I know who they are," Hagane said, as his surprise started to subside. "You're the clones Naruto-niisan told us about, right? Remove those masks, you aren't fooling anybody."

The two ninjas did as Hagane asked, revealing their appearances. Kaida's shock grew even more, as so did Hagane, but he was better at masking it.

"Who are you calling a clone, brat?" Hagane's lookalike angrily asked. "Orochimaru-sama may have used your DNA as a template to create us, but we're way more than simple clones!"

"Don't bother arguing with them, Hebimaru. Words matter little here," the woman told her brother. "Now stand down and let us take the jinchuriki. If you make our jobs easier, we will spare your lives."

"Hanabi, I need fire. Lots and lots of fire," the male Senju asked.

"You got it," Hanabi nodded, as she started to make hand seals.

"Guess you were right, Hebiko. Time to fight then!" Hebimaru said, as he unsheathed the broadsword he was carrying on his back.

"Fire Release: Crimson Phoenix Flare!"

Hanabi breathed a massive stream of fire that quickly took the shape of a bird, which flew towards the duo of Oto ninjas, burning everything in its wake. As this happened, Hagane also prepared his next attack.

"Wind Release: Great Breakthrough!"

Hagane blew a powerful gust of wind towards the phoenix, and just like Anko and Zaku's attacks a moment ago, both jutsu merged into a massive inferno, which carbonized everything that it touched as it advanced.

"Poor kids, you're so out of your league," Hebimaru said, shaking his head. "Come on sister!"

"I'm ahead of you!" Hebiko said, as her hands flew through hand seals. "Water Release: Wild Water Wave!"

Using the water from the ever expanding lake as a source, Habiko raised a wave that crashed against the incoming inferno, but it did little to stop it.

"Even if you use water, that's not enough to stop our combination!" Hanabi boasted.

"We haven't played all our cards, girl," Hebimaru said, as he made several hand seals of his own. "Wind Release: Breath of God!"

An hurricane formed among the water that was trying to stop the incoming fire. The hurricane then shapped the water into a tornado, while also sucking more and more water from the lake, increasing the size of the jutsu. Eventually, the water tornado was large enough to stop Hanabi and Hagane's attack.

"Like we said, you're nothing but kids, while we are-"

However, Hebimaru's taunt was interrupted when he felt a presence around him. They've been there for quite some time, but he was so focused on stopping the fire jutsu that he didn't notice it until now. And soon, the Oto ninja were ambushed by Kaida, who sprung from behind.

"You're mine!" she yelled, as she descended towards them, with a kunai on each hand.

Unfortunately for her, Hebiko did notice her in time, and managed to stop Kaida by grabbing her by the neck, making the younger girl drop her weapons.

"You lowered your guard, brother," Hebiko said, shaking her head. "You almost let this little girl shank you."

"Sister!" Hagane cried, upon seeing her predicament.

"Let her go or else... !" Hanabi threatened, as her eyes flared with a blue and white light.

"Or else what?" Hebiko said, and laughed. "Your little friends' recklessness costed you dearly. Now surrender, or she won't enjoy what I'll do next."

"I'm... I'm like... your sister..." Kaida managed to say, as she tried to pry the older woman's hand from her neck. "Doesn't that...?"

"Sister? Please, don't make me laugh!" Hebiko replied. "We may have a similar DNA, but that does not make us family. Hebimaru and Orochimaru-sama is the only family I have."

"Too bad... then..." Kaida said, before losing consciousness, and going limp.

"Huh?" Hebiko mumbled. "I swear I wasn't putting that much force onto that hold..."

Then, much to her confusion, Kaida quickly started to lose all color, her skin, hair and clothes becoming light brown, almost looking like wood.

"A clone! Sister, this girl just fooled-"

But Hebimaru's scolding was interrupted when lots of presences manifested at once, followed by an horde of more Wood Clones emerging from all around then.

"Now, attack!" the Kaida clones said in unison, as they unleashed a barrage of shuriken and kunai unto the Oto siblings.

"Sister, get close to me!" Hebimaru called, as his hands ran through hand seals as fast as they could. "Wind Release: Wind Wall!"

A tornado engulfed both Hebiko and Hebimaru, sucessfully repelling most of the incoming barrage of weapos, though some managed to get by.

"Hanabi, now!" one of the Kaida clones called.

The Hyuga nodded, and flew towards the two white haired Oto ninjas, while making several hand seals. Hebiko's face lost all color when she realized what was going to happen.

"Brother, stop, they're-"

"Fire Release: Great Dragon Fire!"

Hebiko saw how Hanabi breathed a stream of fire at them. If that fire hit the tornado, the two of them would be trapped inside a flaming vortex that would burn them to ashes.

" Even if Hebimaru cancels the jutsu, he can't move until it ceases completely," Hebiko said,, as she started to form hand seals of her own. "I need to use a water jutsu before-"

Her thoughts were interrupted when something kicked her out of the wind barrier. She saw that, even if Hebimaru couldn't quite move completely, he was still able to move her leg in order to kick her away.

"No!" she screamed.

Hanabi's fire jutsu hit the tornado, and just as everybody expected, the make Oto ninja was engulfed in a twister of flames. Suddenly, Hebimaru, covered in flames jumped out of the fiery twister. He tried to land on a branch, but the fire burning his body and the ensuing pain made it difficult for him to properly land, tripped, anf fell. Though much to his luck, there was water below which instantly put out the flames.

"Brother!" Hebiko shouted, as she dashed towards him, jumping into the water. She managed to bring him to the surface before he could sink. "Come on!"

Hebiko jumped onto a nearby tree branch, and left her brother resting against the tree. There were plenty of burns across his body, While the water had out out the flames, the sudden change of temperature had worsened his wounds.

"It's okay... I'm okay..." Hebimaru groaned, as he coughed. "I need... some time to recuperate..."

"Very well then. I'll buy you that time," Hebiko told him, before a scowl developed on her face. "Don't dare to die, you hear me? Orochimaru-sama is counting on you, and so do I!"

Before Hebimaru could reply, the Chunin of Team Tenzo landed on a nearby branch -though in Hanabi's case, she just floated above it.

"Alright, time to take them out!" Kaida said, as she got ready to attack the now weakened duo.

Meanwhile. Dosu and Kin were still fighting Tayuya, who, brewing with anger- not that it was that hard to get her like that- decided to go into the second stage of her cursed seal.

"Alright you shitheads, if you aren't going to let me play my music, then I'll rip your fucking limbs from your bodies!" the redhead growled as she dashed towards them.

Dosu protectively stood between her and the still injured Kin, arms raised in a defensive stance. He saw Tayuya's left punch coming, and moved his arm to block it. The impact was so great it pushed the former Oto ninja backwards, leaving his arm sore, but he still smirked under his bandages.

"Resonating Echo Burst!"

All the power Tayuya had put into that punch was converted into soundwaves by the Melody Gauntlet, and released them the form of a sound blast that knocked the mutated kunoichi backwards. Taking advantage of the situation, Dosu decided not to let her any room to breathe and dashed forward, ready to attack.

However, much to Dosu's surprise, Tayuya quickly crouched and delivered a low kick, hitting his forelegs, and made him trip and fall on his back. Tayuya then pulled a kunai and tried to stab it on Dosu's chest.

"Now die already!"

Dosu managed to grab Tayuya's wrist and stop her in time, but the Oto kunoichi's strength was much greater while in her current form, and the kunai slowly came closer to his chest.

"Damn... I can't use my sound jutsu if I can't move my arms..."
Dosu thought as she struggled against his redheaded opponent.

Suddenly, Tayuya got off Dosu and jumped back as she used her kunai to deflect a pair of senbon. Turning around, Dosu saw Kin back on her feet, pelting Tayuya with her throwing weapon of choice.

"You think you can beat me by throwing fucking toothpicks at me!?"
Tayuya angrily growled. "Oh, that's it!"

Tayuya then made several hand seals, and took her flute to her lips.

"She's going to use her genjutsu again! Dosu, stop her!" Kin panicklingly warned.

"On it!" the bandaged ninja replied, as he prepared to blast Tayuya with another sound wave.

However, there was something odd with the way Tayuya was holding the flute. Rather than holding it sideways, she was holding it facing front, as if it was a blowpipe.

And when Dosu felt the pain of a projectile piercing his shoulder, that's exactly what she was doing.

"Dosu!" Kin screamed, as she rushed towards him.

Tayuya keep firing projectiles at Dosu, but this time, the Oto ninja was able to dodge them, if badly. Kin helped him to stand, as the two of them tried to dodge Tayuya's incoming barrage of projectiles, which impacted with such force, they pierced the nearby trees.

"Just what the hell is she shooting at us?" Kin shouted.

"Bullets of concentrated soundwaves!" Dosu replied. "Really clever, she will never run out of ammo, and they can only be avoided, not blocked."

"That may be clever of her, but we're pretty much screwed!" Kin cried.

"Fire Release: Great Dragon Fire!"

Suddenly, a blaze of fire came from above, creating a wall of flames between the two former Oto ninjas and Tayuya. A couple seconds later, Anko and Zaku landed besides Dosu and Kin.

"Sounds like you guys are having trouble," Zaku chuckled, before smirking at them.

"Zaku, do you have a first aids kit?" Anko asked, not taking her eyes from Tayuya. Zaku grunted in affirmation. "It seems that that girl was too much for you guys in the end. Okay, stay behind and take care of Dosu. This bitch's mine."

"Who are you calling bitch, you bitch?" Tayuya snapped back at her.

"You hurt one of my students," Anko hissed. "And as his sensei, it's my duty to return that pain multiplied by one thousand! Get ready for the beating of your life"

While Anko and her students fought against Tayuya, Itachi, Naruto and Roshi continued their fight against the leader of the Sound Five. The last member of the Kaguya Clan was proving to be far more resilient than what Itachi had expected, as he was able to keep the three ninja at bay, keeping a solid defense while harrasing with powerful attacks.

"Dance of the Orchid!"

Twp more gigantic bone dragons emerged from below, joining the existing three.

"Godammit!" Naruto cursed, as he was trying to fend off a single one. "These things won't go down!"

"Maybe we can slow them a bit," Roshi mentioned, as he started to make hand seals. "Earth Release: Swamp of the Underworld!"

Roshi slammed his hands down, and the ground around them started to turn into a muddy swamp. The heavy bone constructs started to slowly sink. They trashed violently, but other than splashing mud everywhere, they were unable to do anything.

"Nice one, Roshi!" Naruto praised.

"Watch out!" Itachi warned.

Neither Naruto nor Roshi noticed Kimimaro dashing at them at an insane speed, using the sinking bone serpents as stepping stones. Two bone blades appeared on Kimimaro's hands, as he readied to sink them into the redheaded man's chest. However, a black blur got between the Oto ninja and his prey, and the bone broke with a loud clang.

"Itachi!" Naruto shoued as he was about to help the leader of his squad.

However, another figure, completely covered in a dark blue cloak, intercepted Naruto before he could assist the Uchiha. A gigantic brown and inhuman looking fist emerged from one of the sleeves, punching the Uzumaki with incredible force.

"UGH!" Naruto groaned, but he was able to land on his feet.
"Another enemy?"

The newcomer pulled his hood back, revealing to be an orange haired boy a few years older than Naruto. His face, which was fair skinned, but with grayish brown slowly spreading around it, had an expression of stone hard stoicism.

"Who the hell are you?" Naruto asked.

"For the time being, your opponent," the orange haired teen said.
"But if you need a name, you can call me Jugo. I'd recommend you not to interfere with Kimimaro's fight."

Naruto gritted his teeth in anger, as he prepared to face his new enemy, while Kimimaro and Itachi continued their fight.

"Not bad. You deserve your reputation, Uchiha," Kimimaro said, as he jumped backwards, eyeing the Uchiha, who was now surrounded by an spectral yellowish orange ribcage. "So that's your famed Susanoo?"

"Indeed," Itachi nodded, his eyes forming the shape of the Eternal Mangekyo Sharingan. "Consider yourself lucky, few are the enemies I consider strong enough to use them. However, their luck usually don't last much after that."

"We'll see then," Kimimaro said, as more bone blades started to protude from his arms. "You have no idea how much I trained after my defeat at Zabuza's hands. I swore myself I'd never fail Orochimaru-sama again. And nobody, not even the famed Itachi Uchiha, will make me break that oath! Dance of the Dandelion!"

Kimimaro fired several bone spikes at Itachi, which split into smaller spikes, Itachi jumped backwards as he firmly held his katana in one hand, and pulled a kunai with the other. His Sharingan allowed him to analyze which flying spikes were going to hit him, their speed, and how he could deflect them. For Itachi, it was as if the world ran in slow motion, allowing him more time to think and react.

From an outsider's perspective, however, it would look as if Itachi was wildly moving his arms as if he was trying to swat away a bee, even if each move was calculated. After deflecting every bone projectile, Itachi stared intently at Kimimaro, panting.

"Out of breath already?" Kimimaro asked. "If that's what it takes to deplete your stamina, then you aren't going to last long around me. Or it is a trick to make me lower my guard? I admit I can be quite arrogant at times, and such attitude costed me dearly in the past."

"Why don't you come and find out?" Itachi said in a taunting manner.

Kimimaro then pulled his own spinal chord out of his back, and wielded it as if it was a sword.

"Oh, I plan to."

...

Meanwhile, not far away from there, two figures were observing the fight. Well, technically only one had enough visual prowess to appreciate every detail. His face, however, remained impassible for the duration of the battle.

"How is it going, Toneri?" the first figure asked.

"Inconceivable. That little girl also has a Tenseigan. How is that possible?" Toneri asked, seemingly ignoring his partner's question. With his own Tenseigan, he could zoom into the battle and see it with minute detail. "Only Hinata and I should have one."

"I'm sure you are going to put an end to such unforgivable transgression," the other man said, rolling his eyes. "The jinchuriki?"

"He seems unharmed, and still with plenty of energy," Toneri replied. "Should we attack now, Orochimaru?"

A sadistic grin formed on the Sannin's face. "Why, of course we should. We can't let out minions to have all the fun, can we? Besides, I'm sure they already did a good job wearing them down."

And thus, Orochimaru and Toneri decided to join the battle for Roshi's fate.

Author's Notes: Yep, there you have it. Those who guessed that Orochimaru and Toneri were the ones tasked with Roshi's capture were right. I think it was their time, given that neither of them have assisted in any jinchuriki capture yet. Though before they join the fray, the good guys will have to deal with their minions, mostly the new incarnation of the Sound Five.

In a related note, I hope you guys enjoyed seeing Teams Tenzo and Anko in action. Sorry I took this long to showcase them, but like I said many teams, please be patient with me. For the most part I tend to be a long-term planner, and it may seem that I forgot about a character or plot element that I introduced at a certain point, but I can assure you that most of the time it won't be the case (there is the chance that I may forget about something, I'm still human after all).

But guess this is what happens when you juggle as many characters as I do. We love to criticize Kishimoto for wasting so many good characters (and with reason), but balancing such a large cast is no easy feat. Hell, unlike the Yugito and Uzakata arcs, I was unable to include any ninjas from Roshi's home village, since as you can see, this arc is getting pretty crowded.

Thanks to Ookami88 for betareading this chapter.

Next time, this arc comes to an end. Will Akatsuki claim Roshi and the Four Tails, or will Naruto and the Konoha ninjas succeed this time? In the meantime, leave your thoughts in a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Light of their Eyes

Author's Note: And today, we reached another milestone with the posting of the 75th chapter. Let's see how much this story has grown since then:

1070775 views

2678 favorites

3070 alerts

32 communities

and 2632 reviews!

Thanks a lot to all the people who made this story grow so much! I've never ever dreamt that any of my fanfics could get such high number of, well, pretty much everything! You guys rock!

Chapter 75:

The Light of their Eyes

or

Tense Family Relationships

"Fire Release: Great Dragon Fire!"

Anko breathed another stream of fire at the mutated Oto kunoichi, who jumped to another branch before the flames could claim her. Tayuya then took the flute to her lips, and played a quick melody, no more than a dozen notes.

Suddenly, Anko felt as if somebody smashed a hammer into her head from the inside, and instinctively fell to one knee, as the world around her became blurrier.

"Guh...?" she gurgled, as she tried to understand what was going on. While she knew that Tayuya was a genjutsu specialist, she also knew that the Oto kunoichi had to continuously play her flute in order to keep the genjutsu active. Same went in order to control her three summoned creatures.

Tayuya dashed forward, her flute in one hand with a kunai in another. Warned by killing intent, Anko tried to fight the dizziness, and jumped away just in time the angry redhead delivered an horizontal slash, leaving a cut in her left arm. The sharp pain, however, shook her out of the genjutsu.

"How did you-"

Anko's question was interrupted by another quick melody, and she was assaulted again by the same sensation of dizziness. This time, Tayuya decided to deliver a brutal flying kick at Anko's face, which send the Snake Mistress tumbling into the ground.

"Anko-sensei!" Kin screamed, witnessing in horror her sensei getting pummeled.

"This is the end, you bitch!" Tayuya shouted, as she leaped towards her. "This is what happens to those who betray Orochimaru-sama!"

Tayuya landed on top of Anko as she sank her kunai on the purplette's chest. She didn't really know if she had pierced Anko's heart as she wanted, but she was sure a stab like that had to be lethal. Blood trickled from Anko's throat. And much to Tayuya's confusion, she smirked.

"Why are you so happy, you dumb bitch? Did you want to-"

This time, it was Tayuya who was interrupted when "Anko" burst into a mass of snakes that wasted no time and lunged towards her. Tayuya tried to evade them by jumping back, but two of them managed to tightly wrap themselves around her body.

"First of all, it was Orochimaru who betrayed me, not the other way around," the real Anko said, as she landed behind Tayuya. She pulled out a kunai of her own. "Second, not only did Orochimaru betray me, his student, but also betrayed his village, as well as countless others. And third... in case it wasn't clear, you made me angry as fuck, so you have the wonderful fortune of being the target of my venting."

"I'd like to see you try, you bitch!" Tayuya shouted, before disappearing in a puff of smoke, leaving a log behind.

"Sensei! She's between the trees southwest of your position!" Dosu managed to shout.

"Good hearing, kid," Anko replied, as she headed towards the position.

As she dashed towards Tayuya, she heard the sound of a flute. Like before, it was very quick, only a few notes.

"Oh no, you aren't going to catch me with that dirty trick again!" Anko said, as she made a hand seal, while sending a burst of chakra through her body. "Release!"

Anko's world became blurry for a fraction of a second, before it returned back to normal. Anko smirked at Tayuya's bright hair flashed before her eyes.

"Many Hidden Shadow Snake Hands!"

Snakes shot from under Anko's sleeve, and wrapped around Tayuya's neck. The Oto kunoichi barely had any time to gasp before the snakes pulled her towards Anko with incredible force. Anko then hurled her into the air, before slamming her back into the ground. Tayuya bounced against the grassy ground as if she was a rubber ball, before falling back with a thud.

"I see you improved your genjutsu," Anko stated, as she walked towards the downed kunoichi. "From what I heard, you had to play your flute continuously for it to have effect. It was a valid strategy when you were with your teammates and were about to ambush your enemies, but against an enemy who knows about it, not so much, right?"

"That's why you developed this version. A genjutsu in short bursts. Only disables your enemies for a moment, but that moment is enough for you to strike. However, that also has a glaring flaw, and is that if an opponent knows what is coming, they can preemptively dispel the genjutsu before it takes effect."

"You think you're... so fucking clever..." Tayuya groaned, as she struggled to get back on her feet.

"Oh, I know I am," Anko said, with a wide smile. "Now let's-AAAAAAAAAAHHHHHHH!"

Anko screamed as she fell on her knees, her hand instinctively going to the source of the pain, the spot where the Cursed Seal of Heaven was placed. It felt as if she was being branded with a searing iron.

"Sensei!" her three students said at once, as they landed besides her.

"Are you okay?" Dosu asked.

"Orochimaru... he's here..." Anko hissed, as pain coursed through her body. "You have to... warn the others!"

...

As Anko fought Tayuya, Itachi, Naruto and Roshi continued fighting Kimimaro and Jugo. If Kimimaro was proving to be extraordinarily resilient before, he was a force to be reckoned with now that he had backup. Naruto, however, decided that it was time for them to get some backup as well. He bit his thumb, before making several hand seals.

"Itachi, Roshi, get close to me!" Naruto called them, before slamming his hand into the ground. "Summoning Jutsu!"

After a masisve burst of smoke, an equally massive toad appeared before the two Otogakure ninjas, with Naruto, Itachi and Roshi standing at the top of it. The Toad was smoking from a pipe, and had one of his hands resting over the pommel of a short sword -relatively speaking.

"A Boss Summon?" Roshi asked, sounding impressed, as he looked down at the creature he was standing onto. "You're one interesting kid. I have the feeling this battle will make quite an addition to my journals."

"While I admire your optimism, Roshi-san, this battle is far from over," Itachi told the older man.

"Hey, Naruto," Gamabunta said, as he eyed Kimimaro and Jugo below. "Please tell me you didn't summon me to deal with those little things."

"Don't judge them by their size, boss," Naruto replied. "They've been giving us quite some trouble."

"Hmm... if you say so," Gamabunta finally conceded, as he unsheathed his short sword. "Very well then! I'll take care of them for you! But I'm expecting some compensation after this, you hear me?"

"Don't worry boss, I won't forget it," Naruto replied.

"Let's take advantage of your summon to attack them. They'll be wide open once they try to dodge it," Itachi suggested. The other two nodded.

Gamabunta brought down his short, yet also massive sword at Kimimaro at Jugo. And while the orange haired teen jumped away, Kimimaro didn't move, much to everybody's surprise. The impact created a large fissure in the ground, the resulting shockwave blowing a powerful gust of wind and dust in every direction.

"Ha! Overconfident idiot..." Gamabunta said, shaking his head, as he pulled the sword back. Only that, much to his shock, he was unable to. "What the...?"

When the dust dispelled, the giant toad could see that there was a giant claw made of bones kept the sword pinned to the ground. The Toad Boss tried to pull it, to no avail.

"What the hell!?"

"Watch out!" Itachi called.

Naruto and Roshi saw how a black blur clashed against a mostly white one multiple times in a row, each time a metallic CLANG echoing through the area. Eventually, the two figures landed on a tree branch below Gamabunta.

"You're fast, Uchiha, those eyes are hard to fool," Kimimaro praised. "But reading my movements alone won't do you any good. So far, you didn't make a single attempt to attack me."

"Maybe. But what matters in a fight is not how many times you attack, but how many blows do you need in order to take down the opponent," Itachi countered, as he gripped his katana tighter.

"In my case, you'll need plenty of them. My bones can't be broken," Kimimaro boasted, as bone spikes grew all around his body.

"Actually, I only need one hit," Itachi replied. "And before you answer, yes, the hit has already landed. You just don't know it yet."

Suddenly, the world around them started to melt, and was replaced by a red and black hellish landscape. Itachi and Kimimaro lost all color, becoming shadowy beings. Kimimaro looked around in confusion, before realizing what was going on.

"Ah, yes, the Uchiha and their famed genjutsu," Kimimaro replied. "You think I have no means to counter this? Orochimaru-sama has the same eyes you have, and has trained me to withstand their illusionary powers just in case I ran into one of you. Breaking this genjutsu will be easy."

Kimimaro made a hand seal, and send a burst of chakra through his body. But nothing changed.

"What? Release!" he repeated the process, but the result was the same. "What kind of Genjutsu is this?"

"As you're about to learn, Orochimaru doesn't have the same eyes as mine," Itachi corrected, as he started to walk towards him. Barbed wire apperared out of nowhere, and wrapped itself around Kimimaro. The last of the Kaguya was lifted into the air, with two additional wires pulling his arms in opposite directions, leaving him in a crucified pose. "The name of the jutsu is Tsukuyomi," Itachi said, as multiple Itachi clones appeared around him. "Let's see if your mind is as strong as your bones in order to survive seventy two hours of uninterrupted torture."

The seventy two hours in Kimimaro's mind were merely three seconds in the real world. After such intense torture, the last Kaguya Clan member fell to the ground, his mind completely turned into shreds.

Itachi, however, fell to one knee, as he felt how the jutsu had drained his chakra.

"I was hoping that I wouldn't have to use this jutsu so soon," Itachi groaned, heaving a little. "Okay, now that that's out of the way, let's dispose of this guy as well..."

However, before Itachi could do anything, a gigantic snake appeared out of nowhere. The Uchiha's reflexes were good enough to dodge it in time. He was about to prepare a fire jutsu, when his Sharingan caught sight of another snake.

However, this snake didn't attack him. Instead, it slithered towards the unconscious Kimimaro, and swallowed his body whole before leaving.

"These snakes... Orochimaru must be here..." Itachi concluded.

...

Meanwhile, Team Tenzo was still fighting against the Senju Clones. Though a better way to phrase it would be that Hebiko was trying to shield the injured Hebimaru from the relentless attacks from the three Konoha Chunin.

"Water Release: Water Wave!"

Once again, the water of the lake around them rose in the form of a massive wave. Hebimaru took a step forward, as he made several hand seals. His body glowed with a white aura.

"Wind Release: Great Breakthrough!"

The male ninja exhaled a massive gust of wind, powered by nature energy, that managed to stop the incoming wall of water. However, the effort made his injuries to punish his body even more, and fell to his knees, groaning and clutching his side.

"Brother! I told you to take it easy!" Hebiko chastised him.

"You need me... to deal with these devils..." Hebimaru said with a cough.

"They just got the jump on us. I know I can-"

"Enough," a third voice said, softly but firmly.

Between the two Oto ninja and the Konoha Chunin was another Akatsuki, one with white hair, pale skin, and Tenseigan eyes.

"Toneri..." Hebimaru whispered.

"Orochimaru wants you to help him capture the jinchuriki," Toneri told the adult twins. "I'll take care of these ones."

Wordlessly, Hebiko helped her brother to his feet, and the two of them went to help their master. Toneri then turned around, and locked eyes with Hanabi.

"So, you're Toneri," Hanabi said, placing her hands on her hips. "The creep who wants to marry my sister."

"Sister?" the Otsutsuki replied. "I was going to ask you how you got a Tenseigan, and your relation to Hinata... that might explain part of it. Though there are still some things that I'm not aware of."

"Yeah, and one of them is when somebody tells you 'no'," Hanabi deadpanned, before punching her palm. "So, ready to get your ass kicked?"

"Your overconfidence is charming, kid," Toneri replied, chuckling in a condescending manner. "I know about you three. You might possess powers beyond most humans, but you lack the experience and proper training to handle them. Fighting me means death. I might spare you as not to upset Hinata, and for... other reasons," he then looked at Hagane and Kaida. "But I have no reason to let you live."

The three Chunin quickly slipped into fighting stances, as Toneri raised his hand to cast an attack. However, before he could do anything, multiple brown wooden roots emerged from below and the sides, wrapping themselves around the Akatsuki, immobilizing him.

"I hope you weren't planning to fight this man on your own, were you?" Tenzo's voice said, as he landed besides them. "You might be Chunin, but this enemy is beyond your capabilities."

"Of course not. I knew that you were around. I was stalling for time so you could join us," Hanabi replied.

"While I'm doubtful of the truth of that statement, let's leave that for later," Tenzo said, as he jumped towards the immobilized Toneri. "Now, let's put you to-"

Suddenly, a shockwave exploded from Toneri's body, shattering his wooden bindings -as well as nearby tree branches- into hundreds of splinters, while Tenzo was violently hurled backwards, his body falling with a splash into the water.

"SENSEI!" the three Chunin screamed in unison.

"Don't make the mistake of thinking that just because you caught me off guard before, you can compete with me," Toneri dangerously hissed. "You might have Wood Release, but your execution is so rudimentary, it's barely a threat."

"Let's see how'd you like MY execution then!" Kaida angrily shouted, as she started to make hand seals. "Wood Release: Wood Dragon Jutsu!"

Kaida summoned a serpentine dragon made of wood that lunged at the Akatsuki. Toneri merely made a few hand seals.

"Tenseigan Chakra Cloak!"

Toneri's eyes flashed, and the Otsutsuki started to glow with a teal aura. He raised his hand, generating a green glowing orb of chakra. The glow flew towards the Wood Dragon, which exploded upon contact, shattering the dragon to splinters.

"Is the best you-"

The Otsutsuki was interrupted when his Tenseigan caught three more dragons emerging from under him, advancing towards him while leaving enough distance to each other to make sure they couldn't be destroyed all at once. Seeing no way but up, Toneri flew into the air. However, his flight was interrupted when a white blur shot at him like a missile.

"Heavenly Kick of Pain!"

Before he could realize what was going on, Toneri's face was hit by Hagane's foot, the kid managing to put much more power into his kick than his small size would let one guess. As he bounced backwards, Hagane took a sealing scroll, and unsealed a giant Fuma Shuriken. The shuriken started to crackle with electricity.

"Enjoy this!" Hagane said, before tossing the giant electric shuriken. "Shadow Clone Shuriken Jutsu!"

Toneri saw how a mass of crackling shuriken flew at him, the loud whirring noise they were making piercing his ears. The Otsutsuki, however, wasn't fazed, and made another set of hand seals.

"Truth Seeking Balls!"

With a flash of green light, Toneri summoned a pair of Truth Seeking Balls. The balls merged into a shapeless mass, which quickly took the form of a shield, covering the Otsutsuki. The shuriken all shattered as if they were made of rotten wood the moment they crashed against the improvised barrier.

"He can use Truth Seeking Balls too?" Hagane asked, as he landed on a branch. "This is bad. As far as I can tell, they can nullify ninjutsu and are an unbreakable defense against physical attacks. But just like a diamond can cut another one, maybe the balls can resist their own power? Hanabi!"

"I know!" Hanabi said, having just summoned other two black orbs as well.

"Your mastery of the Tenseigan is encomiable, girl," Toneri praised.
"But you still have a long way to go until you can reach my level."

...

"Kimimaro!" Jugo shouted, seeing what had happened to his friend. He forgot about Naruto and Roshi and went to his aid.

"Sorry, but no, you arent leaving," Naruto said, as he made a hand seal. "Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

An horde of Naruto clones appeared from thin air, already dashing towards Jugo.

"Get out of my way!" Jugo shouted, his voice becoming deeper, as his other arm also mutated, becoming larger and more monstrous looking.

Even if all Jugo did was swing his arms wildly, his swings carried so much power they destroyed a good chunk of the clones coming at him. Jugo let out screams of rage the more clones he destroyed.

"That young man seems to have turned into a wild animal all of sudden," Roshi observed. "We should proceed with caution."

"Whatever is his power, he has little control over it," Naruto added. "Let's take advantage of that."

"I'll kill you! I'LL KILL YOU ALL!" Jugo bellowed, as he jumped towards the two jinchuriki atop the giant toad. Jugo's cloak was ripped apart as flesh growths emerged from his back, taking multiple shapes, such as claws, wings, and even an additional pair of arms. "NOW DI-"

However, before Jugo could reach his targets, he swatted away by a giant webbed hand. He was so focused on Naruto, he completely forgot that the giant Toad he was standing on wasn't going to just stay there and watch.

"Good one, boss!" Naruto cheered. "We're almost done here, now let's-"

Suddenly, the earth started to shake, and from under Gamabunta's feet, a giant jet black snake emerged, bursting from underground, and wrapping itself around Gamabunta at imperceptible speed.

"ACK!" the Toad croaked, as he tried to break free from the snake's hold.

"Hello there. My name's Kurokiba, and I shall be your executioner," the giant snake hissed. "To think that I'll be the one to put an end to the infamous Gamabunta... Orochimaru-sama is truly a gracious ally."

"Orochimaru!?" Naruto paled upon hearing that name. "Is that him who-"

"The answer should be obvious, Naruto-kun," a soft but chilling voice said. Naruto turned around, and saw the Snake Sannin standing before him. Both him and Roshi quickly slipped into a defensive stance, with Naruto pulling out his Wind Blade. "It has been so long since we last met, isn't it? From your little incursion in the Land of Sound, if I remember correctly. Back then you were a rookie Genin, yet from what I've been told, you raised to Jonin. Times surely flies, doesn't it?"

"Orochimaru of the Sannin..." Roshi mentioned. "This day surely gets more interesting with each passing second."

"Oh, you heard of me? I'm flattered," Orochimaru said, giving the two jinchuriki a chilling grin. His yellow eyes turned red as he activated his Sharingan, while his hands started to fly through hand seals. "This is something you'll find mostly interesting as well. Fire Release: Great Fireball Jutsu!"

Orochimaru opened the fight with the Uchiha's signature jutsu, breathing a massive fireball at the two jinchuriki. Rather than being intimidated by an attack of such scale of an element strong against his affinity, Naruto merely smirked and made several hand seals as well.

"Wind Release: Vacuum Vortex!"

Naruto cast his arms forward, creating a spiraling vortex of wind, which quickly started to absorb the fireball, storing and compressing the fire inside an invisible orb of wind. Both Orochimaru and Roshi looked at the display in awe.

"A wind jutsu that can counter fire attacks?" Roshi repeated. "Kid, you're indeed sure something."

Naruto smirked at Roshi. "And that's not even the whole thing!"

Waving both arms in a circle before thrusting them forward, Naruto released all the fire he had absorbed in the form of a powerful stream. The Snake Sannin was forced to jump away into the trees below to avoid being incinerated.

"Heh, this is one of the jutsu I developed with Asuma-sensei's help!" Naruto proudly thought, while directing his improvised flamethrower. "Fire won't be a trouble anymore!"

"We should go after him," Roshi suggested. "I know Orochimaru is powerful, but I don't think I know the extent of his abilities. I mean, I would remember if he had a Sharingan!"

"Agreed. The less room we leave him to breathe, the better!" Naruto said, before making some clones. "I'll leave some clones here to help the boss."

Both jinchuriki leaped after the Sannin, while Gamabunta continued to struggle against Kurokiba, and the clones prepared to attack the giant snake. They landed on a large tree branch, and saw that Orochimaru was perched onto another one. And just that moment, Itachi landed besides him.

"My my, three versus one, isn't that a bit unfair?" Orochimaru said with a chuckle. As if on cue, Hebimaru and Habiko landed on another branch above Naruto and Roshi. "Now that's much better."

"What are your orders, Orochimaru-sama?" Hebimaru asked.

"Keep the two jinchuriki busy, but try not to harm them much," Orochimaru stated. His glinted with anticipation as they fixed on Itachi. "Itachi Uchiha here is the biggest threat. We'll have to deal with him first if we want our mission to succeed."

"Understood!" the adult twins said in unison as they leaped towards the two jinchuriki, with Hebimaru unsheathing his broadsword.

"Finally, some payback for what you did last time!"

Naruto didn't say anything, just shot the twins a look of pity, before he and Roshi prepared to fight them.

"Naruto!" Itachi called, while his eyes were still fixed on the Sannin. "Sage Mode, now!"

"Uh, are you sure?" the blond stammered.

Itachi turned around, looking at the Oto twins, before sending Naruto a determined stare.

"Yes! Now do it!" Itachi ordered.

Naruto nodded, and made his most common hand seal. "Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

Two clones popped into existence, and jumped away in different directions. Upon seeing this, Orochimaru merely chuckled.

"You know what to do, kids," the Sannin told them.

Hebimaru and Hebiko nodded, and dashed towards the escaping clones.

"Not so fast!" Hebimaru said, as he sliced the clone from the back, dispelling it instantly.

Hebiko, meanwhile, made several hand seals.

"Earth Release: Rock Bullet!"

Hebiko conjured a large rock in front of her, which shot forward towards the other Naruto clone. Upon impacting, the clone was instantly dispelled.

"You tricked me with that the last time we fought," Hebimaru replied, as he and his sister returned to their original positions. "But rest assured that such thing won't happen twice!" the white haired man hotly stated, as he and Hebiko lunged at Naruto and Roshi.

And while they fought, Orochimaru and Itachi got ready for their own one on one fight. The two of them opened the fight by making the same sequence of hand seals, almost in perfect synchrony.

"Fire Release: Great Fireball jutsu!"

Both Itachi and Orochimaru exhaled a massive fireball each at the other. The two fireballs, equal in power, clashed against the other unable to push the other backwards, resulting in a burst of fire that set the trees around them ablaze.

"Those eyes don't belong you, traitor," Itachi coldy told him. "I must thank fate for this chance to right a wrong that has been haunting me for so long."

"It is fate who favors me, Itachi-kun," Orochimaru said in a jovial tone, as his grin widened. "So far, I've been unable to discover the secrets behind the Mangekyo Sharingan. But if I capture you, or at least take your eyes, that will be one problem less I'll have to worry about."

"The Tsukuyomi I used before took a good portion of my chakra reserves, and Kami knows what kind of modifications Orochimaru grafted into his body. No, I can't win this with brute force, I have to pace myself, wait for an opportunity to strike, and end the fight in a swift blow," Itachi thought, as he pulled a handful of shuriken from his ninja tool pouch, and tossed them forward.

Orochimaru merely pulled out a kunai from under his cloak, and with the aid of his Sharingan, expertly deflected the shuriken thrown at him. However, as he did that, Itachi was charging at him, his right hand firmly holding the handle of his katana. As if he wasn't even surprised, Orochimaru merely blocked the strike, but Itachi's momentum pushed him backwards.

"You'll have to do better than that, Itachi-kun," Orochimaru taunted with a grin.

"I plan to," Itachi said, as his other hand dropped something.

Much to his surprise, Orochimaru saw it was a flash grenade, but he realized of that too late. The grenade exploded, filling the area with a bright white light. Even if he closed his eyes in time, there were another pair of eyes that he was using and took the brunt of the attack.

"AAARGH!" Orochimaru yelled, as he took a hand to his head, while keeping the other one up in a defensive stance.

"According to our reports, you have four snakes attached to your back. One of those snakes has a Byakugan, which I presume you were using, right?" Itachi told him. Orochimaru's grin of smugness had turned into a grimace of pain and anger. "Well, not for much longer."

"Very well! I don't need the Byakugan to defeat you, Uchiha!" Orochimaru said, before a snake emerged from his mouth. Said snake opened its own mouth, vomiting a sword, which Orochimaru took no time to grab. "Do you know what's this?"

"The Sword of Kusanagi, if I must guess," Itachi said, readying his own katana as well. "Don't worry, I'm prepared for that."

"I find that doubtful," Orochimaru said.

Suddenly, several snakes burst from underground, and wrapped around Itachi, pinning his arms against his body, just as Orochimaru lunged at him, stabbing the Sword of Kusanagi into his chest. Itachi then turned into a black mass, before bursting into a murder of crows, which started to fly in circles around Orochimaru.

"Of course, it would never be this easy," Orochimaru mentioned in mild resignation. "And why didn't the protective seals carved in my skull work? Is his genjutsu level so good he can bypass them?" The Sannin thought in mild frustration.

While Orochimaru's skull seals offered him some protection against genjutsu, they were mostly designed to keep people like Yamanaka to use mind probing or mind controlling jutsu on him. They couldn't just stop the brain from being fed wrong information. Not to mention that against a genjutsu user of Itachi's caliber, those seals were of little use.

"It's amazing that, despite having the same eyes as yours, you still manage to trap me into one of your genjutsu," Orochimaru said.

"Your eyes are not the same as mine," Itachi answered, his voice coming from every direction at once.

Orochimaru made a hand seal, releasing a burst of chakra through his body, undoing the genjutsu. He watched in satisfaction how the crows started to dissolve into nothingness, but much to his confusion, only half of them disappeared.

"What?"

Among a cacophony of screeching caws, the crows all dived at Orochimaru, more precisely his face, and tried to peck his eyes out.

"I see. He mixed some real crows with illusionary ones. Crafty, really crafty, Uchiha," Orochimaru said, making several hand seals.

"Lightning Release: Flash Burst!"

Orochimaru's body crackled with electricity as lightning coursed through his skin, shocking the crows away before disappearing in a puff of smoke. Sensing danger, the Sannin spun on his feet and raised his Sword of Kusanagi in order to parry the blow from a large sword made of golden flames. Said sword was being held by Itachi's Susanoo, which was just a ribcage with a skeletal arm attached to it.

"It seems I'm not the only one with a legendary blade in their possession," Orochimaru commented. "The Sword of Totsuka. Given that you were in Konoha when I unleashed my reanimated Kages... that's how you defeated them, right?"

"Yes. I defeated Tobirama Senju with this blade," Itachi answered. "Now, you will share his fate when I seal you as well."

Itachi's Susanoo grew another arm and a head, before muscles and skin covered its body. It raised its arm, and tried to slam Orochimaru with it. The Sannin, however, easily avoided the blow by jumping it backwards, and the sword only ended up cutting some -admittedly large- tree branches.

"Susanoo already? I'm really flattered," Orochimaru said, grinning mischeviously.

"While I'm not keen on using my Mangekyo Sharingan, I can't afford to hold back against an opponent of your caliber," Itachi declared. "Akatsuki can't be allowed to capture any more Tailed Beasts."

"And you think you can stop us?" Orochimaru taunted, as his hands flew through hand seals. "Lightning Release: Snake Thunder!"

Orochimaru raised his arm at Itachi, which was crackling with electricity. A snake made of lightning shot forward, quickly wrapping itself against the Susanoo, before biting its neck. The whole snake blew up, as if a lightning bolt fell from the sky onto Itachi. However, when the light and dust disappeared, Itachi and his Susanoo were still there, even if they were now standing on a crater.

"Your defense is impressive, I'll give you that," Orochimaru complimented. "Or did you put me under another genjutsu while I was casting the jutsu? Are you going to attack me from behind while I'm busy striking down an illusion?"

Itachi smiled a little. "That's the beauty of fighting a genjutsu user. Eventually, you start to doubt reality itself. But to answer your question, why don't you attack and find it?"

"I intend to," Orochimaru said.

But rather than Orochimaru, it was one of the giant snakes that he had summoned before who lunged at Itachi. The Uchiha, however, reacted in time and slashed it with the blade of Totsuka, unsummoning it instantly. It was then when Itachi felt something biting his neck.

"Ow! What the...?" Itachi's hand flew to his neck, and grabbed a little snake, who wriggled within his grasp.

"You were so preoccupied with me and my giant snakes, you failed to notice the little ones," Orochimaru cackled. "And while its size is rather puny, I can assure you that the poison that it injected in your system is quite potent."

"When did you...?" Itachi slurred, the poison already taking effect. The world started to look blurry, and Orochimaru's words sounded distorted.

"Right when we first clashed. I'm aware of the power of the Sharingan, but your eyes can be fooled if I can focus them on something else. I wanted to see if I could defeat you myself, but I admit that the power of the Mangekyo Sharingan is too much for me," Orochimaru replied. He twirled the Kusanagi in his hand. "Now ready to die, Itachi? I can't wait to make your power my own."

Not waiting for the Uchiha's reply, Orochimaru dived into the grass, digging underground. The next instant, a giant snake emerged from under Itachi, catapulting the Uchiha into the air. The giant snake opened its mouth, revealing the Sannin between its jaws, ready to skewer his opponent.

"DIE!"

"Amaterasu!"

Both Orochimaru and his giant snake were engulfed by a mass of black flames, breaking their momentum. Curiously, the giant snake broke into a multitude of smaller snakes, while Orochimaru fell to the ground, screaming. Itachi, however managed to regain his balance, and landed on his feet.

"I need to find Anko. Only she can heal me from this poison," Itachi said to no one in particular, and went to look for the snake mistress, hoping she wouldn't be too busy.

As Itachi left, Orochimaru, as he was being consumed by the black flames, opened his mouth, and regurgitated a new body, shortly before the old one was burned to ashes.

"That was a close one," Orochimaru said, pnating heaveily. Even if he was able to escape the attack, so much damage and pain wasn't easy to brush off, not to mention the huge amount of chakra his Shed Skin Replacement consumed. "But at least I got rid of the Uchiha for some time. With him out of the picture, I can finish the mission."

...

Not far away from there, Gamabunta was still struggling against Kurokiba, the giant snake proving himself to be extraordinarily strong.

"Stop resisting, toad. Let death claim you, and your suffering will end," Kurokiba hissed.

"I don't know about my suffering, but yours is about to BEGIN!" the giant toad said, as his dewlap swelled. He then shot a stream of oil, not at the snake, but upwards. The oil naturally rained down, splashing both toad and snake.

"Just... what are you doing?" the giant snake asked, as he felt his grip on Gamabunta slipping.

"Oil is awfully slippery, isn't it?" Gamabunta said, as he pushed the snake away from him. "Let's see how can you deal with an enemy you can't wrap around!"

...

Meanwhile, not far away from there, the two jinchuriki were fighting against the two white haired Oto ninjas, who were proving to be formidable opponents.

"Wind Release: Breath of God!"

Hebimaru blew a massive tornado at the two jinchuriki. As Naruto and Roshi held onto the nearby trees in order to not be sucked away, Hebiko made several hand seals.

"Wood Release: Ironwood Armor!"

Several vines quickly wrapped around her, piling onto each other until they formed something akin to a chrysalis or a cocoon, which instantly disappeared in a poof of smoke, revealing the Oto kunoichi now wearing an armor made of wood, which only left her eyes visible.

"I'm going in!" Hebiko said.

The white haired woman jumped into the tornado. Vines shot from the armor, and wrapped themselves around nearby trees or rocks in the ground, acting as anchors. When she was near the two targets, several vines shot at them.

"You're mine!" she yelled.

"Fire Release: Fiery Cataclysm!"

Roshi breathed a massive stream of fire, which was quickly amplified by the giant tornado, engulfing Hebiko completely. Roshi then smirked.

"You youngsters think you're so strong, don't you?" Roshi taunted. "But youth and power means little if you keep making such mistakes! Don't you know what happens when wind clashes against fire?"

However, much to his and Naruto's surprise, Hebiko emerged from the flames. Half of her armor was burned, but it quickly rebuilt itself, almost looking as wounds rapidly closing.

"And you old men think you know everything because you lived for long," Hebiko angrily seethed, as she wounded her arm back. A large, curved blade of extremely sharp wood formed from her bracers. "All Cutting Forest Blade!"

Roshi jumped backwards just as Naruto got between the two of them, his Wind Sword activated. The sharpened wood blade clashed against the sword of wind, neither of them being able to cut each other, as they struggled to push the other back.

"Naruto, duck!" Roshi said from behind.

Naruto disengaged Hebiko and did as Roshi told. The white haired woman saw how the redheaded man lunged at her, his fist wounded back and coated in small rocks, forming a compact gauntlet of stone.

"Earth Release: Fist Rock Jutsu!"

Hebiko instinctively reared back, but she wasn't fast enough to avoid the incoming punch. While the wooden faceplate softened the blow, it carried so much power it send her flying backwards, drops of blood falling from her mouth.

"Sister!" Hebimaru cried, as he rushed to assist her.

"Now's my time to strike!" Naruto said, leaping from the tree branch while making several hand seals. "Wind Release: Bounce!"

When Naruto touched the ground, a burst of wind from beneath his feet catapulted him upwards, almost as if he had bounced off, heading towards Hebimaru. The white haired man, however, saw Naruto coming, and with a powerful roundhouse kick, the blond was send crashing against a tree.

"Not so though without your Sage Mode, are you?" Hebimaru said in a taunting manner.

However, much to his surprise, rather than slam against it, Naruto once again bounced against the tree's surface, flying towards the Oto ninja. Hebimaru had no time to protect himself from the incoming attack, and soon he found his face at the wrong end of Naruto's fist. Like his sister before, done by a powerful punch to his lower jaw.

Naruto landed on the grassy ground beneath him -no bouncing this time-, with Roshi soon joining him.

"Nice jutsu you got there," Roshi complimented. "I don't think I've ever seen something like that before."

"Thanks! I spent the last few weeks trying to come up with more creative wind jutsu," Naruto explained. "I had an idea for a jutsu that would allow me to fly. Wind Release: Bounce is based upon that idea."

"You certainly caught that hothead by surprise," Roshi said, pointing at Hebimaru, sprawled on the ground.

"It's not that hard. They may be strong and possess rare Bloodline Limits, but I think their own power blind them," Naruto said, shaking his head.

"Those kids are indeed powerful, but their tactics and teamwork could use a lot of improving," the red haired man commented. "The way they fight remind me of some Genin out of the Academy. Whoever trained them did an overall poor job."

"These kids are actually clones grown in a lab, whose age was accelerated by unknown means," Naruto explained the older man. "They are as powerful as my siblings, maybe even more. But they don't have not even a tenth of their experience."

"Let's finish them off," Roshi said, taking a step forward, but he was stopped by Naruto.

"Wait!" the blond said, as he grabbed Roshi by the shoulder. "Could we... avoid killing them? They're kind of important to me and my family."

Roshi looked at Naruto in the eyes, shooting him a pleading look. While sparing your enemy in the heat of the battle would be considered a foolhardy decision, he could see that Naruto's request wasn't a foolish or selfish one.

"Very well then. Let's knock them out," Roshi suggested. "Then I can use an Earth Release jutsu to immobilize them."

Naruto nodded. "Thank you."

The two of them walked towards the downed white haired twins, trying to get back on their feet as badly as they could. However, before they could get any closer, a massive snake tail slammed down, forcing the two jinchuriki to jump backwards. Orochimaru landed between them and the two Oto ninjas.

"Just when I got rid of Itachi, my children fall before you two," Orochimaru said, sounding disappointed. "Guess luck won't favor me without taking something else in return."

"You got rid of Itachi? What did you do to him?" Naruto asked, between panicked and angry. If Orochimaru had grown strong enough to defeat Itachi, then they were in serious problems.

"You should worry more about what's going to happen to you and your jinchuriki friend, Naruto-kun," Orochimaru said, as his long tongue licked his lips, while his eyes glinted with a red light. A large brown snake slithered its way around Orochimaru, while at the same time acting as a barrier for the twin Oto ninjas.

"If anything, this is proving to be an interesting day. You don't get to fight a Sannin on a regular basis," Roshi commented. "My next journals are going to be quite the read."

"I'm afraid the only thing anybody will write about you in the near future will be your epitaph," Orochimaru hissed, before lunging at them "Now fall to your knees!"

...

"Fire Release: Crimson Snake Fang!"

Anko breathed a large stream of fire, which split into smaller ones as it moved forward. The smaller streams then took the shape of snakes, and wrapped themselves around its target, the last of Tayuya's Doki demons. All the snakes bit the giant creature, while detonating at the same time. When the ash and dust dispelled, the creature was sprawled on the ground, defeated, before it disappeared leaving a poof of smoke behind.

"Is that the best you have?" Anko said in a taunting manner.

"Not in the slightest, you fucking hag!" Tayuya angrily snarled. "Now prepare to-"

Tayuya was interrupted when she saw Itachi Uchiha landing behind Anko. The redhead's eyes grew wide, and color started to vanish from her face.

"Oh shit! No, just no!" Tayuya said, taking several steps backward. "Orochimaru-sama didn't say anything about fighting fucking Itachi Uchiha!"

And the redhead turned around, and leaped into the trees, disappearing behind them.

Anko turned around, and smirked at Itachi. "Hey, good job scaring her away. That's one less problem to be worried about. I take you took care of Orochimaru?"

Itachi shook his head. "Not in the slightest," his hand darted towards a spot in his neck. "He managed to slip a small snake into my body. It bit me. I can't even..."

"Say no more," Anko said, as she started to look for something in the hidden pockets inside her coat, until she pulled out a small vial. "Yeah, I know those snakes. They're called Marble Needles. Real pain in the butt. Here, take a shot of this, and after a few minutes of rest you should be good to keep fighting."

"Thank you," Itachi said, as he did what Anko instructed.

"But be careful, I don't have many more antidotes on me," the purplette warned him.

"Don't worry. Orochimaru won't trick me again," Itachi assured her. "Unfortunately, I left both Naruto and Roshi alone against him. You should go and help them."

Anko's mouth formed a wide grin. "You don't have to tell me twice."

...

Meanwhile, not far away from there, Toneri continued their fight against Team Tenzo. As the Otsutsuki floated above them, Tenzo's hands flew through hand seals.

"Wood Release: Great Forest Jutsu!"

Brown wooden roots grew from below, lunging at Toneri. The Otsutsuki merely smirked, and made a hand motion. His two Truth Seeking Balls shot at the incoming attack, and the moment they touched the wood, it instantly rotted and turned into ash.

"Nothing. That defense is impenetrable..." Tenzo said in frustration.

"And you just realized of that now?" Toneri mocked. "And the best part, it can be also used as offense."

With another hand motion, the black orbs stretched and expanded, as they took the shape of large nail-like spears, before shooting themselves at Tenzo. Fortunately for the Wood Release user, two other black orbs appeared in front of him, merged, and took the shape of a dome. The spears bounced against the dome, quickly recovering their original form.

"Thank you, Hanabi," Tenzo earnestly said. "That was a close one."

"This man is powerful, but I noticed that his number of jutsu is pretty limited. If all he can do is using telekinetic blasts and Truth Seeking Balls, we might be able to build a tactic around that," Hagane suggested.

"Still, don't underestimatye him, Hagane. A ninja of ancient times once said 'Don't fear the man who practiced ten thousand jutsu once, but the man who practiced a single jutsu ten thousand times'," Tenzo quoted. "His number of abilities might be low, but if he's skilled, that's all what he needs."

"Not to mention that he can nullify all our ninjutsu," Hanabi added.

"Come on, those balls must have a weak point," Hagane insisted.
"No jutsu is perfect! All of them have vulnerabilities!"

"Not this one, I can assure you of it," Toneri said, with a mocking smirk. "Also, do you want to see something new from me? I wasn't going to use this, given that you're just children, but if you insist..."

"Way to go, Hagane," Kaida deadpanned.

Toneri cast his hand at Tenzo and his students, and the two Truth Seeking Balls started to spin in a circle in front of it while they glowed with a golden light.

"Quickly, behind me!" Hanabi said, as she put herself between Toneri and the rest of her teammates, as she molded her own black orbs into another protective dome.

"Golden Wheel Reincarnation Explosion!"

The two golden balls merged into a sphere of pure energy, energy which was released in the form of a golden beam of chakra, carving a path towards Team Tenzo hidden behind the shield. After a second of delay, the area the golden beam touched was engulfed in a massive linear explosion, digging a large trench in the ground. Hanabi undid the shield, and everybody looked around at the destruction caused by such a jutsu.

"Incredible... if it wasn't for Hanabi..." Kaida stuttered, still processing the power the last Otsuttsuki possessed.

"You'd be dead were you stand," Toneri finished the sentence. His eyes then drifted towards her brother. "So, what do you think, young man? Do you still think you can stand against this power?"

However, Hagane's answer was something Toneri didn't expect in the slightest.

"Come on, attack now! All at once! Before he can summon the black orbs again!" Hagane shouted.

"Well observed, Hagane!" Tenzo praised. "Kaida, you and me will cover your brother's flanks! Hanabi, cover us from above!"

"Yes sir!" the three Chunin chorused back.

Toneri was taken aback. Hagane's words made him realize that no, he no longer had Truth Seeking Balls to protect himself with, and found that he was unable to create more, at least for the time being.

" This kid... how did he...?" Toneri was unable to gather his thoughts as he saw how the members of Team Tenzo went after him, Hanabi through the air while the others jumping from one tree branch to another, while all of them started to make hand seals. Kaida and Tenzo were the first ones to attack.

"Water Release: Water Gun!"

"Earth Release: Crushing Avalanche!"

Kaida expelled a stream of water at Toneri, while several rocks were conjured out of thin air above him, falling down after coming into existence.

"I don't need Truth Seeking Balls in order to avoid these infantile attacks," Toneri said, as he raised each of his arms against the incoming elemental blasts, and repelling them with a kinetic blast. "Whatever you do, I can counter!"

"Counter this then!" Hagane replied, as he furiously weaved hand seals. "Lightning Release: Lightning Flash!"

Hagane's body started to glow with a white light, as lightning sparks crackled around it. His teammates and sensei quickly covered their eyes. Unfortunately for Toneri, he found what the jutsu did too late, when his Tensiegan was overwhelmed by a searing white light, threatening to burn his retinas.

"MY EYES!" Toneri screamed, as he instinctively covered his eyes with his hands, in a vain attempt to nurse the pain. "MY EYES! HOW DARE-"

"Hanabi, now!" Tenzo shouted.

In an instant, Hanabi appeared in front of the now blinded Otsutsuki, her palms covered in fire.

"Fire Release: Eight Trigrams, Sixty Four Burning Palms!" Hanabi started to deliver a flurry of palm strikes at Toneri. However, much to her shock, while she got some few good hits, the Otsutsuki managed to stop her by grabbing her wrists.

"I've been blind most of my life," Toneri seethed, his eyes still closed. "You think a little trick like that is enough to beat me?"

Displaying a deceptive amount of force, Toneri hurled Hanabi against the ground. Tenzo quickly moved to catch her, but due the sheer force she was launched, both of them ended up slamming against a tree. As this happened, However, Hagane had leaped towards Toneri, and prepared for the kill.

"Okay, I managed to gather as much nature energy as I could for this attack. It should be enough to end him," the white haired boy thought. "Sage Art: Big Ball Rasengan!"

However, just as the large chakra sphere was about to hit the seemingly unsuspecting Otsutsuki, two new Truth Seeking Balls formed out of nowhere, merged and formed a protective barrier around him.

"NO!" Hagane cried, as his jutsu hit against the improvised shield.

"Look at that, I recovered my Truth Seeking Balls just in time," Toneri said, sporting a confident smirk. "Now, let's put you in your-"

Crack!

"What... what was that?" the Otsutsuki asked, not liking the sound of that.

More cracking sounds were heard, as cracks started to form around the black barrier, much to both Toneri and Hagane's amazement.

"What? No! How could you-" Toneri said in shock and frustration, before the Rasengan exploded and overpowered the barrier, shattering it in a million pieces. Even if Toneri didn't took the brunt of the attack, the resuling shockwave was enough to submit him to the same thing he had done to Hanabi just a few seconds ago, only ten times stronger. In less than a second, Toneri was hurled into the ground with such force into the forest, it blasted several trees away, and created a large crater.

"Wow..." Kaida said in awe. "You... you nailed him!"

"I.. I think I did..." Hagane said, panting.

"HOW!?" his sister inquired. "Truth Seeking Balls are supposed to nullify ninjutsu! All of it!"

"I'm still trying to figure it out," Hagane said, as he started to think. "Could it be... the nature energy of the attack?"

"We can worry about that later," Tenzo said, as he hobbled towards them, with a limp Hanabi on his arms. "I know you must be exhausted, but I need you to heal Hanabi. She sustained some serious injuries from that last impact."

"Sure thing," Hagane nodded. Tenzo gently placed Hanabi on the ground, and the white haired kid started to heal his injuries, starting from the most grievous, to the less ones.

Meanwhile, Toneri laid on his back against the crater his body had formed upon impact. His eyes still hurt. His whole body hurt. He was having trouble understanding what was going on. How could he be beaten by mere children? Even if one of them had the same eyes he had, she shouldn't even be able to touch him.

But what puzzled him the most was how the Truth Seeking Balls had failed to protect him. How could that be possible? The Truth Seeking Balls were the ultimate elemental combination. Their Yin-Yang release should nullify any ninjutsu, no matter how big or powerful.

"My Byakugan Princess.." Toneri softly cried, an image of Hinata shooting him a pitiful look appeared before him. "How can I pretend to be worthy of you, if I allow a bunch of children to..."

Suddenly, besides Hinata, an image of Naruto appeared. The blond was looking at him with a mocking expression, almost stifling a laugh.

That vision filled Toneri with rage. How dare that blond hick, mock him on top of stealing what was rightfully his? He would make him pay. Both him, and everybody who submitted him to such humiliation.

Something insider Toneri broke, and the body of the Otsutsuki was overflowed with power. He could feel his head throbbing in pain, but he didn't care. The aura of the Tensiegan Chakra Cloak returned, only this time it shone brighter, almost forming flames around him. His body elevated into the air, the new power coursing through his veins restoring his energy and slightly healing his wounds. Four Truth Seeking Balls appeared around him.

"So much power..." Toneri said in awe, as he looked at his own hands. "Did my emotions awake this power? I knew other stages existed, but experiencing them myself... I don't feel like I'm going to lose."

Naturally, Toneri's comeback wasn't unnoticed by Team Tenzo, who were still covering Hagane as he healed Hanabi.

"The hell? How is that guy back again?" Kaida whined. "I thought you nailed him for good!"

"I thought so as well!" Hagane said, panic seeping through his voice.

"What do we do?" Kaida asked.

Toneri aimed his hand at the group, the four black orbs orbiting around it as they started to glow with a golden light. Everybody paled. They knew what was coming, except this time they didn't have Hanabi to protect them. Without letting Hagane finish, Tenzo scooped the youngest Hyuga between his arms, and ran away.

"Everybody, flee!" Tenzo ordered. "Run in different directions, he won't be able to hit all of us at once!"

Regardless of Tenzo's tactic, Toneri had already decided on his target. The boy who had bypassed his defenses and humiliated him.

"Perish, you accursed child," Toneri hissed, as he moved his hand towards him. "Golden Wheel Reincarnation Explosion!"

Toneri fired another golden beam, this one being thicker, and glowing with a brighter light. As it progressed, the beam carved a thin line towards its target, and after a second delay, it produced a line of massive explosions.

"BROTHER!" Kaida screamed, upon seeing her twin being engulfed by the chains of explosions.

"Now let's see if-ARGH!" Toneri gargled, as the pain coursing through his body increased tenfold, forcing him to land. "Dammit! My body was too injured to withstand the backlash from such a heavy jutsu. Sorry, Orochimaru, but I can't provide you anymore assistance..."

And Toneri quietly flew away from the battle.

...

While Toneri was fighting Team Tenzo, Orochimaru was facing the two jinchuriki, who were now assisted by Anko.

"Multiple Hidden Shadow Snake Hands!"

A multitude of snakes emerged from under Anko's sleeve, all of them lunged at Orochimaru while hissing furiously. Orochimaru merely smirked, and brandishing the Sword of Kusanagi, beheaded all of them with a series of quick and expert swings.

"Really, Anko-chan? Do you expect to defeat me by using my own tools?" Orochimaru mocked, as he grinned at her.

"I expect to defeat you using every tool I can get my hands on," Anko replied, as she started to make hand seals. "Blondie, support me here with some wind jutsu! Fire Release: Great Dragon Fire!"

Naruto nodded, and weaved the signs of one of his most used wind jutsu.

"Wind Release: Cyclone Vortex!"

Anko expelled a stream of fire at Orochimaru, which was magnified by Naruto's wind attack, resulting in a massive tornado of flames, dangerously advancing towards Orochimaru, burning to ash everything they touched. Orochimaru, however, wasn't fazed. Two white snakes emerged from the cloak's neck, while Orochimaru made several hand seals.

"For a regular ninja, that combination might be impressive. But for me, not so much," Orochimaru confidently said. "Wind Release: Great Breakthrough! Water Release: Tearing Torrent! Typhoon Water Vortex Jutsu!"

Orochimaru's snakes expelled two streams of water that coiled around each other, while Orochimaru blew a powerful gust of wind from his mouth, creating a massive, raging torrent that clashed against Anko and Naruto's combination attack. The Sannin waited expectantly for his attack to overpower theirs, but such thing didn't happen. His smirk slowly disappeared as the wall of flames devoured the torrent, while continuing its advance towards him.

"What!? How can this be?" the shocked Orochimaru said, as he jumped to the ground. There was no time to ponder what was going on, and no place to hide but down. "Earth Release. Hiding like a Mole Jutsu!"

Orochimaru dug deep underground, and the firestorm safely passed him, leaving a field of scorched earth before. Of course, he wouldn't be safe for too long.

"He's underground!" Naruto said. "Let's dig him out before he can ambush us!"

"Leave that to me, boy!" Roshi replied, as he started to make hand seals, before slamming his hand into the ground. "Earth Release: Opening Earth Rising Excavation!"

The earth started to shake, as multiple earth pillars shot from the ground, one of them launching the surprised Orochimaru into the air. As the Sannin pondered what could have happened, a loud, whirring sound filled the air.

"That sound... no, it can't be!" Orochimaru said in horror. But it was

"Wind Release: Rasenshuriken!"

Orochimaru's Sharingan saw how Naruto, in Sage Mode, tossed his most powerful jutsu at the Sannin. Even with his modified body, there was no way he could survive the attack. There was only one thing he could do, and he didn't have much time before the attack struck. The Sannin opened his mouth wide, regurgitating a white snake, which tried to move as far from the Rasenshuriken as possible. Seconds later, the attack struck, exploding into a sphere of razord winds which teared the Sannin's body to shreds.

"He's trying to use his Shed Skin Replacement Jutsu to avoid your attack!" Anko pointed out. "Target that snake before he can generate a new body!"

"Earth Release: Earth Style Wall!"

A huge wall of stone rose between the Konoha and Iwa ninjas, and the spot where the snake landed. Hebiko landed on top of the wall, while Hebimaru landed behind Naruto, Anko and Roshi. Once Orochimaru climbed out of the snake's mouth in his new body, he joined his surrogate daughter.

"You entered Sage Mode," Orochimaru observed, after noticing Naruto's golden eyes. "How?"

"You'd like to know, wouldn't you?" Naruto taunted in return, giving the Sannin a foxy grin. "You often boast how much of a genius you are, why don't you figure it out yourself?"

"I can tell that bothersome Uchiha and his genjutsu had something to do with it," a displeased Orochimaru said.

While Naruto wasn't going to confirm it, the Sannin was right. Turn out Naruto hadn't created two clones, but four. Itachi had used a genjutsu to cloak them from others, making sure to keep Orochimaru's attention on him. The clones went to hide in a safe place, and began storing nature energy. Once they had enough, one of them dispelled.

"I have to admit, it was careless of me not to count that you guys would figure out a way around my Sage Mode," Naruto said, causally placing both arms behind his head. "But you guys should have counted that I'd figure out a way around your way!"

"This changes nothing. You aren't the only one among those present that is able to use Senjutsu," Orochimaru countered.

"I already beat Hagane's clone once, and I can do it again," Naruto replied.

"Yes, but can you do it while you fight against me?" Orochimaru asked, and fast as lightning, lunged at Naruto, followed by Hebiko and Hebimaru.

"We're going to need some high ground!" Naruto said, as his hands flew through hand seals. "Earth Release: Moving Core!"

The blond slammed his hand into the ground, raising a large stone pillar, almost looking like a hill or a small mountain. As this happened, Roshi's mind came with a way to use this to his advantage. His hands quickly went through a chain of seals.

"Lava Release: Volcanic Bloom!"

Lava started to erupt from around the two jinchuriki and Konoha kunoichi, flowing down in every direction, forcing the Sannin and his twin minions to back down.

"Very well, Roshi!" Anko praised, patting him on the back, before turning around. "Meanwhile, I'm going to make sure that other fucker doesn't blindside us."

"Hebiko, we need to neutralize that lava! Attack with me!" Orochimaru ordered, as she and the white haired young woman went through the same chain of seals.

"Water Release: Water Wave!"

Both Orochimaru and Hebiko expelled a stream of water from their mouths at the incoming lava, generating a cloud of steam. They intensified both the pressure and cold temperature of the burst of water, until the lava was starting to solidify.

"Lava Release Chakra Mode!"

The curtain of steam split in two, revealing the jinchuriki of the Four Tails enveloped in an armor made of molten lava, dashing at Orochimaru. The Sannin's Sharingan glinted with a crimson spark, and expertly dodged backwards while pulling the Blade of Kusanagi, and quickly stabbing it into the jinchuriki's shoulder.

"AGH!" Roshi cried, as Orochimaru pushed further, making the old man to fall on his back against the ground.

"You underestimate me, Roshi-san," Orochimaru told his prey.

Roshi, however, grinned. "It's you who overestimate yourself!" Roshi said, before it transformed into Naruto, and disappeared in a cloud of smoke.

The earth started to shake, and from below, Roshi, wearing his lava armor, emerged, dropping embers and chunks of molten rock everywhere. Said chunks of molten rock started to gather around Roshi's reared fist, forming a gauntlet of lava around it. Orochimaru parried it with the Kusanagi, but that was what Roshi was expecting. Grinning, the older man gripped the blade of the sword, while holding Orochimaru's arms with his other hand.

"I got him!" Roshi stated. "Naruto, this is your chance!"

"You can count on me!" Naruto said, as he created several clones. One of them helped the original to create a Rasenshuriken, while the others went to make sure Hebiko didn't interfere.

Victory was close.

"Huh?" Naruto said, his sensorial abilities picking up a massive spike of chakra. "What is this-"

The place was shaken by a chain of explosions. But most distressing, was that he had sensed Hagane's chakra massively dropping.

"Hagane!? What the-"

Naruto's distraction also extended to his clones. And unfortunately, it was all Hebiko needed. The white haired woman quickly weaved a chain of sings.

"Water Release: Water Dragon Jutsu!"

Hebiko's cheeks puffed up, expelling another stream of water, this one taking the shape of a masisve dragon. The dragon opened its jaws, swallowing the Naruto clones -which were instantly poofed- Orochimaru and Roshi. And in the latter's case, the water had the unfortunate effect of turning his lava armor into brittle rock.

Seeing his opportunity, Orochimaru grinned, showing his sharp fangs. His neck stretched in an unnatural manner, and the Sannin sunk his fangs into the jinchuriki's neck, piercing the layer of thin rock that covered him.

"What the...?" was all that Roshi said before he lost consciousness, and fell into Orochimaru's arms.

"Roshi, NO!" Naruto yelled, as he dashed to save his fellow jinchuriki.

"Wood Release: Wood Dragon Jutsu!"

Or he would have, if Hebiko didn't create several wooden dragons to keep him at bay.

"Excellent! It would have been better if we could capture Naruto-kun as well, but for the time being we'll settle for just one," Orochimaru said, nodding. "Everybody, we're done here! Fall back!"

As if on cue, Kurokiba emerged from underground, and opened his jaws. Carrying Roshi above his shoulder, Orochimaru jumped inside his mouth, followed by Hebiko.

"Alright, let's leave," Orochimaru said.

"Wait a minute! Where is brother?" Hebiko asked, sounding distressed, as she scanned around the area, until she found him.

Wrapped in snakes, with Anko holding a kunai to his neck.

"Listen, Orochimaru, I know that you don't give a shit about your subordinates," Anko yelled. "But I know that this one is special to you! So how about an exchange? Let the jinchuriki go, and you can have him back."

Hebiko looked at Orochimaru with apprehensively. "Master? What are we going to do?"

But Orochimaru didn't acknowledge Hebiko's question. "Kurokiba, get us out of here."

"WHAT!?" Hebiko asked in shock.

The giant, jet black snake snapped his jaws shut, and dug underground.

"ROSHI! ROSHI! NO!" Naruto yelled, as he futilely rushed towards the escaping snake.

And inside the snake's mouth, before darkness claimed him to never be released again, Roshi had one last thought.

" I'm sorry Naruto... I guess I won't be able to write about this day..."

Author's Note:... yep, Roshi has been captured. I know that this is not what most readers wanted to see, and I'm sorry for that, but he had to be captured for the sake of the plot.

I know maybe I've been giving the bad guys too many victories, but it was either this, or have the jinchuriki be captured offscreen. I originally planned to do the latter as I told you in chapters past, until a certain somebody asked for Naruto authors to give jinchuriki more presence in their stories. That way, I was able to flesh them out a little more beyond being walking McGuffins, plus I could use their arcs to showcase other characters and give them character development (like how I brought Suigetsu and Miyako in the Uzakata arc, or how I finally gave teams Tenzo and Anko some much needed time to shine this arc).

I don't regret doing this arcs, even if they made the story far longer than I initially thought, for the reasons above, and because I grew to like the jinchuriki a lot while I was writing them, which made me all the sadder that I couldn't save them (I especially liked Roshi). But yeah, I know that despite all of this, the reception hasn't been that good, not just because of what the reviews said, but because said number of reviews have been steadily decreasing.

And on top of that, Hagane was left in a coma. I originally planned for him to die there, but I felt it would make this arc way too dark, so he was just grievously wounded instead. Plus, I liked him and, unlike Roshi, his death wasn't needed to advance the plot, so I decided to save him. Though, on a brighter side, at least this time Naruto doesn't return home empty handed, and have captured one of the clone twins. I don't think I need to tell you this capture will become important later on.

But hey, you can breathe in relief knowing that it's finally over. From now onwards, the chances of the good guys scoring some victories are all the greater (doesn't mean that they will win all the time, mind you).

Thanks to Ookami88 for beta'ing this chapter.

In two weeks, we begin the Root Arc! It's another original arc I've been planning since the beginning of this story, and I'm very excited that the story finally reached that part! In the meantime, don't forget to review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Recovery

Author's Note: Okay, while the Root Arc DOES come next, this chapter doesn't delve into it already. It was the next chapter when such arc will begin. Sorry for playing with your expectations, and hope you enjoy the chapter nevertheless:

Chapter 76:

Recovery

or

Old and New Arrivals

Akatsuki Lair, Undisclosed Location

Roshi's still living body laid unconscious on the hard stone floor of an underground cave. Eight figures watched him, six of which were mere shadowy projections.

"The jinchuriki of the Four Tails has fallen to Akatsuki," Pain declared. "Good job on your first successful capture."

"You honor me with such kind words, Pain-sama," Toneri replied, bowing a little. "I already assured you that I would be an excellent asset for Akatsuki."

"Yes, you proved to be useful," Konan added, though her tone revealed some unpleasantness. "Come on, we need to seal the beast immediately."

"If I may," Obito interjected. "Before we begin, however, there's something you need to know: Zetsu here has finally located the hideout of the jinchuriki of the Eight Tails."

"Yes. The jinchuriki has been moved to a place called Valley of Clouds and Lightning," the white half of Zetsu stated. "It's a place deep within the Land of Lightning, and its multiple mountains make it hard to traverse."

"Of course, no natural formation is obstacle for our abilities," the black half boasted.

"The jinchuriki has minimal escort, probably in an effort not to draw unwanted attention, so snatching him shouldn't be that hard," the white half helpfully added.

"Very well then. In that case, he needs to be captured immediately," Pain said with a nod. "Deidara, I believe that due your flight capabilities, you're the best suited to traverse such strenuous terrain. Take Kisame with you."

"Understood, sir. That man won't stand a chance against my art, hn!" Deidara shouted.

"While I'm not one who turns down a chance for some action, shouldn't we help you to seal this one first?" Kisame questioned. "With just six doing the sealing it will take quite some time."

Pain shook his head. "Capturing the jinchuriki is the hardest part of our mission, that's why we need to collect them as soon as possible," Pain explained. "Once they're in our grasp, the sealing won't be a problem, since no Village has found out any of our hidden lairs."

"Besides, I'm sure we will be done with the sealing already once you two return with the Eight Tails," Konan added.

"Alright then," Kisame said with a nod, before he and Deidara's projections disappeared.

"Now that that's out of the way, let's begin," Pain declared. "Summoning Jutsu: Demonic Statue of the Outer Path!"

...

Konoha Hospital, a few days later after Roshi's abduction

"So, how is he?" a male voice asked. "Any progress?"

"He's still stable, Hokage-sama," the medic-nin told Jiraiya. "Though even if your son is out of danger for the time being, I can't tell when is he going to wake up."

"Thank you, doctor," Tsunade said.

"I'll leave you alone," the medic-nin said, leaving the unconscious white haired kid with his family.

"Our poor son," Jiraiya said, as he ran a finger through Hagane's bandaged face. "I swear that I will make whoever did this to you pay tenfold."

Hagane's survival was a miracle. From what Tenzo could tell, the boy had been gathering as much as nature energy as he could while he ran away from Toneri using his Bloodline Limit, and jumped away the moment he sensed Toneri was about to fire. However, even if he was able to avoid the initial blast, he was caught by the ensuing chain of explosions. If it wasn't for all that nature energy strengthening his body, Hagane would have died then and there.

Naruto managed to keep the boy alive with his rudimentary knowledge of medical ninjutsu, as well as giving him regular chakra transfusions. The only silver lining was that the Akatsuki ambush had happened in the Land of Fire, not far away from Konoha, and they were able to get back home in just a couple days.

Naturally, Naruto had taken this as good as anybody would expect. Losing yet another jinchuriki to Akatsuki had been a huge blow to his morale, and Hagane's status didn't make it any better. During the first two days, all the blond did was sit besides the kid's bed, completely silent, never answering all those who wanted to talk to him, either being his parents, Kaida, Shizune, or even Hinata. If he was deliberately ignoring them, or his depression sunk him into some sort of trance, nobody could tell.

It was during the third day that Naruto broke his silence.

"Hagane's like this because of me," Naruto whispered.

Which was a big mistake, given that among those present in the room was Tsunade. She immediately turned around, and shot Naruto a stare full of anger.

"Oh no, you won't!" Tsunade said as she stomped towards the blond. "You aren't going to take the blame for this, you hear me!? Whatever happened to your brother was tragic, but it's not your fault!"

"In fact, I'd say it was thanks to you that brother is still alive," the other person present in the room, Kaida, added.

Tsunade then groaned, and pinched the bridge of her nose. "Naruto, we already went through this with the Uta-kata fiasco. Why do you always feel the need to think that anything that goes wrong during a mission is your fault? I'm not saying that you shouldn't feel bad for what happened, but don't think for a second that it's your fault! You weren't even the squad leader!"

"I'm his older brother. I had to protect him," Naruto said.

"No, Naruto, Hagane doesn't need you to watch over him," Tsunade had stated. "Young as he is, he's a Chunin, who got -earned- the rank when you earned yours.."

"But-"

"No buts!" Tsunade interrupted him. She then grabbed him by the shoulders and pushed him towards the door.

"Hey, what the hell? Mom!" Naruto protested as he tried to push back.

"You've been here for too long! Do you think Hagane will wake up faster just because you're here? Get some fresh air already! Go visit your girlfriend!" Tsunade said, as she finally pushed him out of the room. "And we're in a goddamned hospital, so cut down the yelling!" Tsunade yelled, before slamming the door shut.

Naruto sighed, lacking the energy to fight her. Not eating anything in two days and not barely moving from a chair won't do anything good to your body. However, another part of him told him that his mother was right.

He remembered when Hinata visited Hagane, and tried to talk to him. But Naruto was so depressed, he barely registered her presence there. Reflecting on that, that wasn't something a good boyfriend should do.

"I better apologize to her," Naruto said, as he started walking. "Maybe I should buy her some cinnamon rolls just in case..."

...

"How are you feeling today?" a male voice asked.

"Better," another male voice replied. "Today I could finally eat without wanting to throw up immediately afterward."

"Just try to take it easy, Itachi," a woman advised. "That poison was a really nasty thing. You're lucky to be alive."

Turns out, Hagane wasn't the only one who had to be hospitalized upon arriving to Konoha. The leader of the operation himself, Itachi Uchiha, also needed urgent medical intervention. While the antidote provided by Anko had proved to work at first, the poison's symptoms started to show the day after the battle's conclusion.

Apparently, the Marble Needle snakes had improved their poison since Anko got that antidote, which now only served to slow down the damage caused to the body. Once again, it was thanks to Naruto's knowledge on medical ninjutsu that managed to keep the Uchiha alive until an actual medic could heal him.

And even if the poison was now out of his body, the effects would take some time to disappear, meaning that, for the next couple weeks at the very least, Itachi would have to spend his time locked inside a hospital room.

"Don't worry, brother," Sasuke began. "I swear that Orochimaru will pay for doing this. All of the Akatsuki will pay. It's because of them that most of our clan is dead."

"Sasuke-kun..." Shizune softly chided.

"Sasuke, no," Itachi said, shaking his head. "While Akatsuki needs to go down, you can't let feelings of revenge to guide your actions."

"You almost died, Itachi," Sasuke pointed out, a scowl developing on his face. "Aren't you angry? No, wait, let me rephrase that. Had Akatsuki threatened to kill me, wouldn't that make you angry?"

"Indeed it would have," Itachi admitted. "But I would have at least tried to keep my anger in check. Remember, Sasuke, our clan met its downfall because they act upon their feelings and cast reason aside."

"Tch, wahetever," Sasuke scoffed, looking aside. "If you're in the mood for lecturing me, your health must be getting better. I'm going to train. Sooner or later, Akatsuki will come here to get their hands on Naruto and Fu."

And with that, Sasuke left.

"Little brother..." Itachi said after Sasuke had left.

"While not as bad as Naruto-kun, this Akatsuki debacle is taking a toll on Sasuke-kun as well," Shizune said, shaking her head.

"Keeping that anger of his under control is such an exhausting task..."

"I understand you. And I deeply appreciate all what you've been doing for him," Itachi reassured the medic-nin. "Akatsuki is like a wound that never fully healed. Worse, every time Akatsuki wins, it's like rubbing salt into the wound. And I'm afraid of what Sasuke might end up doing if he ends up losing a loved one at their hands."

"Sasuke-kun knows the possibility. We're ninjas, after all. Death always follows us wherever we go," Shizune said in a mildly admonishing tone.

"Sasuke knows that way too well. He was surrounded by death long before he even became a ninja," Itachi reminded Shizune.

There was a moment of silence between the two of them. Shizune walked towards the window, and gazed at the village, or at least the past that could be seen from there.

"Sasuke did bring a good point," Itachi said, changing the topic. "Akatsuki now has, at the very least, six Tailed Beast in their possession. Only three remain. One of them is hidden in the Land of Lightning, while the other two are here. While it's not their modus operandi, Akatsuki already invaded a village before in order to capture a jinchuriki, not to mention how many times Obito and Orochimaru had attacked Konoha. Whatever they plan to do to capture Naruto and Fu... we won't like it."

After a few seconds of staring through the window, Shizune turned around. A determined look appeared on her face.

"Well, they'll like our welcoming party even less!" the black haired woman said. "Akatsuki isn't invincible, we have defeated them in the past. They might have won the last few battles, but the war isn't over."

Itachi couldn't help but chuckle at Shizune's enthusiasm. "Glad to see that you're not intimidated by such prospect," the Uchiha said.

"Of course not! As Jiraiya-sama said, a ninja is one who endures," Shizune stated. "And we Konoha ninjas have endured more than most. Whatever Akatsuki plans, we'll be ready for it, especially now that we know about all its members."

"If our ninjas had half the determination and resolution you have, I'm sure of it," Itachi said, smiling gently at Shizune. "Shizune, take care of Sasuke, since I won't be able to do it for the time being."

Shizune nodded. "You don't even need to ask."

...

Torture and Interrogation Department

Despite the failure to stop Akatsuki and the number of injured, Itachi's squad hadn't returned home empty handed. Anko was able to subdue and capture Hebimaru, and thanks to her snakes' paralytic poison, she was able to bring him to Konoha in order to be interrogated.

Right now, the purplette was watching through a one way mirror how a Yamanaka ninja scanned his mind. A broad shouldered man wearing a dark trenchcoat with his face marred by two huge scars walked towards her.

"Any progress?" the man asked.

Anko shook her head. "Very little for the time being, Ibiki," the Snake Mistress replied. "It seems that his skull was carved with seals that act as barriers against mind scanning or mind manipulation. If we get any cooperation at all, we will have to beat it out of him."

"Understandable," the scarred man said. "Orochimaru had no trouble leaving him behind. If he possessed information that we could use against that bastard, at the very least he would have tried to kill his underling."

"As much as pains me to talk positively about my former sensei, he's a very methodical man who rarely leaves loose ends," Anko hissed.

"Even then, Orochimaru is still a man, and every man makes mistakes," Ibiki stated. "This might have been one of them."

"Yes, there might be the case," Anko stated. "While this man doesn't appear to take Orochimaru's betrayal as such, I saw the way his twin sister reacted. Even if we can't get any useful information out of him, we might be able to use him to turn the girl against her master."

"That would be nice. We never had any kind of leverage against him. This might be the first truly important minion of Orochimaru we got our hands onto," Ibiki stated. "Speaking of which, how are your brats? I heard they returned from the mission in a pretty bad shape."

"You heard right," Anko said. "However, they weren't as bad as others. They didn't even need to be a whole day in the hospital before being discharged. While they got some pretty bad wounds, there was nothing that would leave any kind of permanent effect. "

Ibiki couldn't repress a smile. "Is that relief I hear in your voice, Anko? It almost look like you care about those brats."

Anko turned at Ibiki, and frowned. "What the hell is that supposed to mean? Just because I'm kind of a sadist, doesn't mean I don't care about a lot of people, you know!"

"Kind of?" Ibiki laughed. "And I wasn't talking about that. Those brats used to work for Orochimaru. I thought you hated everybody related to that traitor."

"I thought that too," Anko admitted. "But the more I got to know those kids, the more I realized they really didn't know what they were getting themselves into. Thankfully, seeing Orochimaru abandon one of his minions made them realize that joining Konoha was the smart thing to do. They were almost like..." Anko left the sentence unfinished.

"Come on, say it," Ibiki prodded.

"They remind me of how I used to be, and how I used to see Orochimaru," Anko finally said. "And I swore I'd never let them end the same way I did."

"Give yourself some credit. I think you turned out pretty well," Ibiki complimented. "Though don't get yourself too attached to those brats. We don't want any softie working here."

"Who the hell are you calling a softie, Ibiki!?" an outraged Anko angrily asked, as she stomped towards the interrogation room Hebimaru was in. "Alright, get that Yamanaka out of there! Once I'm done with that fucker, he'll beg me to kill him!"

...

Hyuga Estate

After buying a bag of the best cinnamon rolls he could find in Konoha, Naruto headed towards his girlfriend's house. He was hoping that Hinata wouldn't be too mad at him, and that the sweet treats would do the trick. Then again, he never remembered Hinata being truly mad at him, ever. Even if they sometimes had arguments just like any other couple, they usually solved them in a civilized manner.

"Even then, bringing this won't hurt," Naruto told to himself, as he finally reached the door.

There were a couple of guards guarding the entrance to the compound as usual. What wasn't usual, however, was that these men belonged to the Main House, given that their exposed foreheads lacked the much hated Caged Bird Seal.

" Guess this is the result of Hinata's equality policies," Naruto thought, as he mentally shrugged.

"Hello there, Naruto-san," one of the Hyuga guards brightly greeted him, confusing Naruto even more. Why a Main House member would be so happy if he was doing a job that used to be part of the Branch House's duties? "Are you here to see Hinata-sama?"

"Yeah," Naruto replied with a nod. "Uh... do you know if she's too angry with me? Last time she talked to me, I was kind of a jerk to her."

"Ah, yes, we heard about that," the other guard said, albeit he didn't sound disapproving. "However, Hinata-sama was aware of the circumstances surrounding your mood back then, and doesn't blame you for your reaction. She decided that giving you space was the best course of action, and that you'd come back to her once the moment was right. And given that you're here now, guess that she made the right choice."

"Hinata-sama is in the outdoor training ground, sparring with Hanabi-sama," the first guard told Naruto.

"Alright, thanks a lot!" Naruto said.

The blond was a bit relieved to hear that. There was the chance that those guards would be playing a prank of him and Hinata was actually beyond furious, but he pushed the idea aside. Naruto has always been welcome among the Hyuga, and they treated him with nothing but politeness and respect.

"Oh look, Naruto-san is here!"

"Welcome, Naruto-san!"

"Came to see Hinata-sama? She will be happy to see you!"

As he walked across the compound, he was warmly greeted by more Hyugas, all of them Main House, if their naked foreheads were of any indication, and all of them in an exceptionally good mood.

"Weird. Just what happened to make these guys so happy?" Naruto inwardly wondered. "And now that I think about it... I only saw Main House members. What happened to the Branch House?"

"Hello, Naruto, are you here to see Hinata-sama?" a familiar voice said, one that sounded far more stoic than the average Hyuga. "She will be happy to see you. She has been quite worried about you these past days."

"Oh, hey, Neji!" Naruto happily greeted Hinata's cousin. "Say, can you tell me what's going on? Why is everybody so happy?"

In an incredibly rare display, Neji smiled at Naruto. While the smile was genuine and warm, it was also a bit mischevious.

"Are you saying you can't tell?" the Hyuga prodigy stated, almost chuckling. "Come on, look a bit closer."

It didn't take too long for Naruto to notice what Neji was talking about. He realized that, unlike the other times he saw Neji, the Hyuga wasn't wearing his forehead protector, leaving his forehead bare. However, the Caged Bird Seal was nowhere to be seen.

"Whoa! The seal! It's gone!" Naruto shouted, pointing at Neji's forehead with a shaky finger.

"Indeed it is," Neji confirmed with a nod. "And good riddance. This marks a new era for the Hyuga Clan."

"Wait, all those happy Hyugas I saw on my way here... they were Branch House members?" Naruto asked.

Neji nodded once again. "Former Branch House members," Neji punctualized. "The clan division is no more. All of us are equals nows, thanks to Hinata-sama."

"Hinata... did this?" Naruto asked, his shock only growing. "How?"

"Why don't you ask her?" Neji replied. "She's sparring with her sister in the backyard training ground."

And indeed, true to Neji's words, Hinata was sparring with Hanabi in the outdoor dojo, under the watch of some Hyuga and a couple of Moon Acolytes. Naturally, Hinata's Tenseigan registered Naruto's presence the moment the blond entered her field of vision.

"Naruto-kun!" Hinata happily chirped, before a Gentle Fist to the abdomen nearly made her fall. "OUCH! Hanabi-chan, what are you doing?"

"Hey, just because your boyfriend is here doesn't mean that the spar is over," Hanabi said, showing a cheeky smile. "You can't afford those kind of distractions in a real battle!"

Hinata merely rolled her eyes.

"Okay, okay, I get it," Hanabi replied, before she turned around. "Everybody, move! I bet Hinata-neechan wants some alone time with her boyfriend!"

A pink blush developed on Hinata's cheeks. "Do you have to word it that way? You make it sound as if Naruto-kun and I are going to do it here."

"You aren't?" Hanabi asked, feigning innocence. "Kidding, kidding! We're leaving."

After a couple minutes, the outdoor dojo was completely vacant save for the two members of Kurenai's Assault Squad. They decided to sit in one of the benches surrounding the training area.

"I'm glad to see you, Naruto-kun," Hinata said, as she moved her face closer to Naruto's in order to kiss him, a kiss Naruto happily welcomed. "And... are those cinnamon rolls I see?"

"Heh, there's no way to keep a surprise for you with those eyes," Naruto chuckled, as he handed the bag with the baked goods to Hinata, who was practically drooling. "Consider them my apology gift."

"Apology?" Hinata asked, before shaking her head. "There's nothing to apologize for, Naruto-kun. Hanabi-chan told me how the mission turned out, and your resulting mood was understandable. Though I admit, I'm glad you feel better now."

"It took mom to literally kick me out of the hospital, but yeah, I'm a bit better now. It helps that Hagane is going to be okay, even if we don't know when is he going to wake up," Naruto told her. "So, how about you? Are you any better? I see you're no longer using a crutch."

Hinata smiled brightly. "Both Haku-kun and I recovered fully shortly before your return to Konoha. The next mission, we will be there for you."

"That's great to hear. Let's hope Kurenai-sensei gives birth soon so the whole squad can be reunited again," Naruto said, smiling back. "By the way, I wanted to ask, what happened to the cursed seals of the Branch House members? Neji told me you found a way to undo them."

Hinata's smile grew even wider. "Yes. It took some time, effort and a lot of trial and error, but I found a way around it."

Before Naruto could ask how, Hinata waved her hand, creating a single Truth Seeking Ball.

"Truth Seeking Balls contain Yin-Yang release, which nullify ninjutsu. That got me thinking if it could nullify fuinjutsu as well. After some testing, I managed to successfully turn an explosive tag into a mere piece of paper without destroying it. Then, I made my first test on Neji-niisan, who volunteered to be the first human test, when he heard what I was trying to do. It worked perfectly, and after a few days, I managed to remove every single Caged Bird Seal. There's nothing now that makes any Hyuga better or superior to another. The clan is finally unified."

"That's awesome. I knew that one day you'll change your clan for the better," Naruto replied, smiling earnestly.

Hinata smiled and giggled in return, before her expression turned a little more serious.

"Well... I can't help but feel that all of this is possible because of the Tenseigan," Hinata reflected. "I mean, I was able to enforce this new policies thanks to my new power, and removed the Caged Bird Seal with the Truth Seeking Balls that came with it. What if I didn't have any of those?"

Naruto chuckled. "You know, mom always gets mad when I bring up possible fatalist scenarios. Now I understand why," the blond said with a chuckle. "Obviously, you wouldn't have been able to do all of these. But think about this: you were given a great power, and rather than using it to your own benefit, you used it to make the lives of your clansmen better. Not to mention that you also shared part of that power with your little sister."

Hinata rubbed her arm, her cheeks turned a shade of pink at the receiving praise. "Well... that's what I always wanted to do..."

"That's what I mean," Naruto replied. "You should focus on how much you're helping with your power, not how you'd be able to help if you didn't have it."

Hinata nodded. "I guess you are right."

"Heh, talking with you made me understand a little how the others feel when I get all mokey," Naruto replied.

"Nobody said that you have no right to feel sad when bad things happen, Naruto-kun," Hinata gently reminded.

"But excessively pondering over potential scenarios isn't healthy either," Naruto replied. "Anyway, how have you been doing since I was out?"

Hinata stood up, and did a little spin around her feet.

"As you can see, I'm completely recovered," Hinata said. "And now I'm resuming my training. Hanabi and I are trying to reach the second level of the Tenseigan Chakra Cloak."

Naruto nodded. While he didn't see it personally, Kaida and Hanabi told the others how Toneri had gotten back from the brink with a stronger Tenseigan Cloak, which not only made his jutsu more powerful, but allowed him to summon up to four Truth Seeking Balls. It was natural that Hinata and Hanabi wanted to catch up, not just for their sakes, but for everybody else's.

"I just remembered something," Naruto said. "When Hagane apparently defeated Toneri, he had managed to somehow bypass the Truth Seeking Balls' ability to nullify ninjutsu with his Rasengan."

"Yes, Hanabi told me that already," Hinata replied. "Turns out the Truth Seeking Ball isn't all that infallible as we thought."

"Hagane thought that every jutsu had a weakness, and it seems that he was right," Naruto continued. "And given that both you and your sister can produce Truth Seeking Balls, maybe we could try to figure out what he did? Since we can't ask Hagane, and I don't want a Yamanaka to scan his mind just for that."

"Of course," Hinata said with a nod. "We can start now if you-"

"HELLOOOOOOOOOOO!" a cheerful but extremely loud voice boomed from above. A white, tan and green blur crashed into the dojo like a meteor, producing a loud thud, and leaving some cracks in the landing zone. "Fu is here! Ready for your flight lessons?"

"Oh..." Hinata said, a little dejected. "I forgot that I already had appointments."

"Hey, don't worry, we can do that any other time," Naruto said. "Hey, Fu."

"Naruto! Good to see you back on your feet!" the bubbly girl said as he rushed to the blond and gave him a bone crushing bear hug. "Are you feeling any better?"

"Ack..." the blond croaked in pain, before Fu released his loving embrace of pain. "Y-Yeah, I was in a kind of a funk, but I'm better now."

"Good to hear it! Though, I'm very sorry for what happened to your brother," Fu said, gently patting Naruto in the shoulder. "But from what I heard, he's going to be okay, right?"

"He's out of danger, yes," Naruto replied. "We're hoping he can fully recover soon."

"Great," Fu said, before turning at Hinata. "Your sister isn't coming?"

"Oh, yes! She must not have seen you," Hinata deduced, before leaving the two jinchuriki alone in the dojo. "I'll go fetch her."

While Hinata went to look for her sister, Naruto continued to engage Fu in a small talk. It's been quite some time since he and the fellow jinchuriki spend some time together.

"So, are you getting used to Konoha?" Naruto asked. "I know it'd took me a while to adapt living in another village."

"I won't deny I do miss Taki," the tall girl said, her mouth curved into a melancholic smile. "But Konoha is pretty cool. Though I'm still getting used how big Konoha is. I could fly from one end of Taki to another in less than five minutes, while it takes me almost four times as much to do the same with Konoha."

"Hey, we're a great village for a reason, hehe," Naruto said, grinning as he placed his hands behind his head. "Where are you living, by the way?"

"Shino was kind enough to offer me stay in his Clan's compound," Fu said. "It's pretty big and have plenty of room to spare. His clansmen are rather quiet and stoic, but very kind people when you get to know them."

"You and Shino are already living together?" Naruto asked. "Wow, you're surely taking things fast!"

Fu put her hands on her hips as she narrowed her eyes at Naruto. "Hey! It's not that we're sleeping together or anything!" the green haired girl protested. "We simply want to enjoy an opportunity to spend quality time before I return home. Long distance relationships are kind of hard. Not all of us are lucky enough to find love in the same village."

"Hey, don't worry, I was just making an observation," Naruto said, raising his hands in a defensive manner. "Even if you were sleeping together, I wouldn't judge you."

"Though now that you mention it... I wonder if Shino will be ready to take our relationship to the next level," Fu started to wonder, as she rested her chin on her hand.

"We're back!" Hinata announced, as she and Hanabi returned to the dojo.

"Come on, let's begin!" Hanabi impatiently said.

"Sure thing," Fu said. "Anyway, we'll have to catch up later, Naruto. Being a sensei keeps me quite occupied, hehe."

"Again, sorry that I wasn't able to spend more time with you, Naruto-kun," Hinata apologized, bowing slightly.

"Hey, it's okay. There will be more time to hang out, especially now that you're back in shape," Naruto reassured.

The three girls took off into the sky, while Naruto left the dojo by feet.

"By the way, what were you and Naruto-kun talking about?" Hinata asked. "I feel that I interrupted something."

"Oh, there's nothing you should worry about," Fu replied in a nonchalant tone. "Say, Hinata, did you and Naruto have sex already?"

...

Akatsuki Lair, Undisclosed Location, a Week Later

Inside yet another underground cave, the Akatsuki were gathered to seal the Four Tails into the Demonic Statue. Without Kisame and Deidara the process had took them the best part of a week, but much to the relief of the two present members and four astral projections, the sealing was reaching its end.

The last few bits of Tailed Beast chakra left Roshi's mouth as they were absorbed into the statue. The chakra field that kept the former jinchuriki suspended in mid air disappeared, and Roshi's body fell to the ground below with a thud. His long life had finally come to a tragic end. Right after that, one of the statue's closed eyes opened, while its mouth snapped shut.

"It is done," Pain declared. "The sealing of the Four Tails is complete."

"Heh, six beasts out of nine. We're doing pretty good if I may give my opinion," the white half of Zetsu said, smiling happily.

"It may be the case, but we shouldn't let our streak of victories drop our guard," Konan said in an almost chiding tone. "Konoha is growing desperate, and it shows. Rather than their usual four man squads, they sent a team of ten people to stop Orochimaru and Toneri. Not to mention that among that group was Itachi Uchiha, two Wood Release users and a Tenseigan wielder. Next time, they might send an even more powerful force."

"Your concern is understandable, Konan, but there won't be a 'next time'," Obito interceded. "Zetsu here told me that Konoha is unaware of the Eight Tails' location, nor that we dispatched a team to retrieve it. Once the Eight Tails is in our possession, all what's left will be the capture of the Seven and Nine Tails, both of them in Konoha."

"Speaking of which," Pain spoke up. "Do we have any news on Kisame and Deidara's progress? I was expecting that they should be here with the Eight Tails by the time we were done sealing the Four Tails."

"Apparently, there has been some logistic problems that delayed their progress," White Zetsu said.

"The two of them were too far apart from each other, and thus they took a few days just to gather," Black Zetsu continued. "The last time we heard of them, they had successfully infiltrated the Land of Lightning. I believe they will capture the Eight Tails' jinchuriki within the next three days at the latest."

"If I may speak," Toneri interceded. "It's to my knowledge that we have half the Nine Tails. Shouldn't we seal it as well?"

"For the time being, let's not," Pain replied with a head shake. "Not only is the Nine Tails an useful asset that helped us catch a jinchuriki, but we should seal it once we have both halves under our control."

"Besides, the Nine Tails should be sealed last," Obito continued. "It's the most powerful of the nine, and it could destabilize the other beasts within the statue without the other eight first."

"I see," Toneri replied. "In that case, I have nothing else to say."

"Very well then. We can use this time to rest and prepare for what comes next," Pain declared. He made a hand seal, and the statue slowly sank into the ground, until it disappeared completely. "Meeting dismissed."

And with that, the four astral images of the Akatsuki not present vanished, leaving Orochimaru and Toneri alone with the other. Orochimaru cracked his neck, and stretched his limbs.

"If I knew it would take this long, I would have voted against sending Kisame and Deidara to catch another jinchuriki before sealing the one we captured first," Orochimaru complained.

"It's a mostly unpleasant experience, yes," Toneri agreed. He then noticed Orochimaru walking towards Roshi's corpse. "Wait, what are you doing?"

"I'm taking it with me," Orochimaru said, as he sealed the body inside a storage scroll. "Why? Did you want it yourself?"

"Why would I want the corpse of an old man?" Toneri asked in disgust. "Why would YOU want the corpse of an old man?"

"A ninja's corpse contains plenty of secrets, and this one is no exception," Orochimaru said. "This old man was able to use the Lava Release Bloodline Limit. If I study his body, I might be able to replicate it in somebody else."

"Did anybody tell you that you're a grim, creepy man, Orochimaru?" Toneri asked the Sannin.

Orochimaru nonchalantly shrugged, and grinned. "I've been called worse. If there's nothing left to discuss, I'll be taking my leave. See you during our next meeting, Toneri-kun."

Both the Sannin and the Otsutsuki left the underground cave, going their separate ways until Pain would recall them again for new missions.

...

It didn't take long for Naruto to return to the hospital. Unfortunately, it wasn't because his little brother had finally woke up from his coma. While stable, Hagane was still unconscious, and the medics still weren't able to tell when he would wake up. However, the reason for his visit to the hospital was one of joy: Kurenai had finally given birth.

She was watching her husband train his students -and Sai, who tagged along more and more often, usually at Ino's request-, when her water broke. It was a good thing Asuma and his team were there, since they were able to bring her to the hospital with utmost celerity, and Ino's medic-nin training came in handy to help Kurenai until the red eyed woman was in the hands of better doctors.

After nearly a whole day of labor, Kurenai had given birth to a healthy baby girl. And after Shikamaru, Ino and Choji had spent quite some time watching over the newest member of the Sarutobi Clan, the Genjutsu Mistress had requested for her students to be present as well.

"Prior marrying you, they're the closest thing I have to a family," the raven haired woman had said.

And now, it was the Assault Squad's turn to see and admire their sensei's daughter.

"Aw, she's really cute," Hinata cooed. "She looks like Kurenai-sensei."

"Eh, all newborns look the same to me," Haku admitted. "Seiichi-kun looked the same when he was born as well."

"What's her name?" Naruto asked.

Both Asuma and Kurenai looked at each other and smiled, remembering how much importance Naruto had placed on a meaningful name.

"We decided to name her Mirai," Kurenai revealed.

"Mirai..." Naruto repeated, as if tasting the name, before grinning and giving his sensei a thumbs up. "Sounds cool! I like it!"

"Good to see that our chosen name passed your test, Naruto," Asuma admitted with a chuckle.

"I know it may be a bit early to ask..." Haku began, sounding somewhat bashful. "But you think you'll be able to return to duty soon? Yugao-san returned to active duty only a couple days after giving birth."

"Of course," Kurenai told Haku. She could see how both Naruto and Hinata beamed as well. "Trust me, apart from finally being able to hold my daughter in my arms, I also couldn't wait to give birth already so I could get back to action. I know you guys have been going through a rough time."

"Heh, that's putting it lightly," Naruto said, sounding a little sour.

"So, does that mean that you won't continue training under me then?" Asuma asked.

"Of course not!" Naruto replied. "We've been doing quite a lot of breakthroughs when it comes to Wind Jutsu. It would be stupid to stop now."

"I also want to do missions with you again, sensei," Hinata told her. "Without you it hasn't been the same."

"Well, we're going to need babysitters to take care of her when both of us are busy so... how about a D-Rank?" Asuma asked. Upon seeing three forwns headed towards his direction, he raised his arms in defense. "Kidding, kidding! Nobody in their right mind would make you do a D-Rank!"

Kurenai laughed at her husband's attempt at a joke, and the rest of them spent the next hour both talking to each other and watching little Mirai.

...

Orochimaru's Hideout, Undisclosed Location

A few days after he and Toneri went their separate ways, Orochimaru had finally arrived at his main hideout. He was really hoping that Kisame and Deidara would take their sweet time with the Eight Tails, since between the battle against Konoha, the sealing of the Four Tails and the subsequent trip, the Snake Sannin felt truly tired.

"Huh. It seems that even with all the improvements I made to this body, I'm still close to my limit," the pale man reflected. "It will be something that I'll need to tackle soon. I can't afford to have a body so unreliable."

Once within the safety of his lair, Orochimaru was greeted by his number one lackey, the bespectacled medic-nin known as Kabuto.

"Welcome back, Orochimaru-sama," the silver haired man said. "I presume your mission was a success?"

"You presume well, Kabuto," Orochimaru confirmed with a nod. "How have been things here while I've been absent? I trust nothing happened."

At this, the medic-nin grew a little uneasy. "For the most part, yes. Though there has been a certain individual who has been a major source of troubles lately."

It didn't take a genius to know who was the bespectacled man talking about.

"Let me guess, Hebiko?" Orochimaru asked.

"Yes. The rather... unfortunate loss of her brother has been a major source of distress to her," Kabuto began. "She has tried many times to gather several of our ninjas and head to Konoha to rescue her brother. In the end, I had to lock her up in a cell."

"I should have foreseen this would happen," the Sannin said, shaking his head. "I knew their attachment to each other would become troublesome for this very reason.."

"I believe the wisest course of action is to talk to her," Kabuto suggested.

Orochimaru nodded. "Indeed. I'll visit her immediately. Hopefully my words will be able to soothe her concerns."

"What if you fail?" Kabuto asked.

"If she becomes a nuisance rather than an asset, I guess we'd have no other option but to terminate her," Orochimaru replied, thought sounding a little saddened at the possibility. "Even if neither she nor her brother are indispensable to me anymore, they were strong minions, and it would be a pity if I had to get rid of them."

Hebiko and Hebimaru helped the Snake Sannin to make plenty of breakthroughs in his investigation on the Wood Release and Senjutsu. However, he had managed to cultivate enough of their cells as not to need them anymore. That's why he had no qualms abandoning Hebimaru the moment the white haired ninja had become a liability. Still, Hebiko could have some uses yet.

It didn't take long for the Sannin to reach the cells. One of them was actively guarded by two of his balaclava-wearing Oto ninjas, Chunin, if their uniform was any indication. The fools wouldn't stand a chance against Hebiko if the girl decided to break free. Upon seeing their master, the two of them stood to attention.

"Open the cell, then leave," Orochimaru commanded.

"Yes, Orochimaru-sama!" the two of them obediently chorused before carrying out their orders.

Inside the cell, Hebiko was sitting on a bench, both arms and legs crossed, an expression of unamusement plastered on her face. Orochimaru had the impression she knew that he would come to talk to her.

"Ah, my dear," Orochimaru began, trying to sound friendly. "I was told-"

"You abandoned him," Hebiko spat, interrupting the Sannin.

Orochimaru was taken aback. While he could sense the unbridled anger boiling beneath her, her calmness was off putting. He was expecting her to yell, to shout, to throw a tantrum. But this... it showed how much Hebimaru's loss had affected her.

"Yes, I did," Orochimaru admitted, his tone turning colder.

"Why?" was all she asked. "Was the mission more important than his life?"

"Yes, the mission was important," Orochimaru said. Hebiko was going to say something, but Orochimaru silenced her by raising his hand. "But I didn't abandon your brother to die."

"Somehow, I find that hard to believe," Hebiko scoffed.

"It's true. Had it been another enemy, I would have tried to rescue Hebimaru, even if that meant putting the mission at risk," Orochimaru said in a reassuring tone.

"But not with Konoha," the white haired woman concluded.

"With Konoha, abandoning him is something I could have afforded," Orochimaru began. "Your brother will be fine. I know their ninjas, and I know their Kage. Due the fact that the genetic template I used to create you being those of his own children, Jiraiya foolishly thinks of you as his children as well. And that sentimental idiot would never try something that would end in Hebimaru permanently damaged.

"But if you need additional consolation, Akatsuki will attack Konoha soon in order to capture the last two jinchuriki. We can take advantage of that and free your brother when we're at it."

There was a very tense moment of silence while Hebiko absorbed Orochimaru's words and pondered on them. After what appeared to be an eternity, she gave him his answer.

"You promise?" Hebiko asked.

"You know how important you two are to me. I'd never abandon you for real," Orochimaru told the young woman. "Now come on. There's still much work to do."

Author's Note: After the admittedly bleak ending of the previous arcs, it was nice to read something far more lighthearted. Sure, there were still scenes with Orochimaru and the Akatsuki, but this chapter mostly focused on the stuff with Konoha, Naruto and his teammates.

Yeah, after their absence, the entire Assault Squad is back in business! With Hinata and Haku recovering already, and Kurenai finally giving birth. Guess this fic has been missing some Naruhina goodness for quite some time. And as you can see, Hinata hasn't been wasting her time while she was off duty. While I teased it a few chapters back, thanks to her new powers, Hinata was finally able to completely remove the Caged Bird Seal, unifying the Hyuga Clan once for all.

And Fu. Man, I missed writing for her so badly. Even if her scene wasn't that long, I always like when she's present.

Thanks a lot to Ookami88 for betareading this chapter.

Now, for real, the Root Arc does begin next chapter. I promise you guys will like it much better than the past jinchuriki arcs. In the meantime, leave a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Enemy from Within

Author's Note: Okay, now THIS chapter is the beginning of the Root Arc. I hope you find it both revealing and enjoyable:

Chapter 77:

The Enemy From Within

or

The Root of the Problem

"Please let it be good news," Jiraiya said to no one in an almost pleading tone, as he opened the sealed envelope. Upon reading the document inside, the Sannin's face soured, crumpled the paper into a ball, and tossed it to a nearby papercan.

As with the last three reports he got from his ninjas gathering information on the last remaining jinchuriki, it was negative.

This was an unknown that needed to be solved as soon as possible. As far as Jiraiya knew, the remaining jinchuriki (other than Naruto and Fu) were either Han of the Steam Armor, or Killer B. Jiraiya was completely sure that it was the latter -had Killer B been captured by the Akatsuki, Kumo would have retaliated in some way, not just because he was their last remaining jinchuriki, but mostly because he was the Raikage's brother, and Jiraiya knew how emotional A could be.

However, he couldn't just discard the possibility of Han being the last survivor, at least not until they had the confirmation that Killer B was alive. While he knew it would be impossible to take Killer B out of the Land of Lightning, at the very least he could form an alliance with Kumo in order to protect him -and Naruto and Fu- better. Sadly, he couldn't just send the Raikage a message asking if Killer B was still alive, and if that was the case, to reveal his current location.

Because Jiraiya knew that, once Akatsuki had seven Tailed Beasts in their power, they'd turn their attention towards the one village that houses the other two. Konoha.

Jiraiya was snapped from his thoughts when somebody knocked the door of his office.

"Yes?" the Sannin asked.

The door opened, and a bird-masked ANBU peered in.

"Hokage-sama, Danzo of the Council of Elders is here," the ANBU announced. "He wants to talk with you about an important matter."

"Fuck, just what I needed, a meeting with Danzo," Jiraiya grumbled under his breath, as he rolled his eyes. "Tell him to come in."

"Yes, Hokage-sama," the ANBU replied.

A few seconds after the ANBU left, the door opened again, revealing the leader of Root.

"Danzo," Jiraiya said. "What do I owe this visit? Please try to be quick. I'm a very busy man."

"You know exactly why I'm here, Hokage-sama," Danzo said, as he took a seat without Jiraiya telling him to do so. "Our recent failures in curbing the Akatsuki threat has put us in a very... delicate situation."

"I'm aware of that," Jiraiya dryly replied. "Any other obvious things that you want to share with me?"

"It would do you plenty of good if you cast away that façade of sarcasm and nonchalance, and employed some sobriety just for once," Danzo chastised, almost as if Jiraiya was a kid -and Jiraiya had the feeling that that was how Danzo saw him-. "Your method of dealing with the Akatsuki threat has resulted in failure so far. Obviously a new strategy is needed."

"Not a complete failure. We managed to secure the jinchuriki of the Seven Tails," Jiraiya tried to defend.

"And for that, you'll have my appreciation," Danzo replied. "Or you would, if I didn't know you have the foolish idea of letting her go back to Taki once this crisis is over, instead of trying to make her stay in Konoha permanently. From what I could learn, she started a romantic relationship with the heir of one of our most important clans. Even a kid with no experience in politics should know how to use that to convince her to stay."

"Regardless if she chooses to stay or not, it will be a better option than within Akatsuki's grasp," Jiraiya stated, bringing the topic back on course. Danzo, however, had no option but to agree with that.

"Even then, Akatsuki is in control of six and a half Tailed Beasts," Danzo recapped. "A threat of such magnitude requires a response of appropriated scale."

"I'm afraid to ask what are you suggesting," Jiraiya deadpanned.

"Your informants revealed that the leader of the Akatsuki has strong ties to Amegakure. In fact, the whole village appears to be under Akatsuki's control," Danzo began. "The answer should be obvious: we should invade Amegakure and capture the leader of the Akatsuki. With the leader in our power, not only dealing with the rest of the organization will be much easier, but we will be able to obtain all the Tailed Beasts they captured."

Jiraiya let out a sigh, and repressed an urge to groan.

"Danzo, starting a war is no small business," Jiraya said, now being the one to use a scolding tone. "Much less a war with a village that's still officially allied with us, on evidence that it's shaky at best. It would make our other allies worry that we might also turn on them on a whim."

"Suna and Kiri also lost jinchuriki at the hands of Akatsuki. They should join us in the invasion," Danzo countered. "Plus we aren't attacking Amegakure without reason, so it wouldn't be 'on a whim'."

"This is why you were always passed for the title of Hokage," Jiraiya remarked. "War is your solution to everything."

"It will be a solution this time around. Besides, war is unavoidable at this stage," Danzo rebutted. "We have two of the three remaining jinchuriki. You know that Akatsuki will attack us sooner or later in order to claim them. The wisest course of action would be to attack them first and catch them off guard. You can hide behind Hiruzen's pacifistic nonsense all you want, it won't change reality, not the fact that I am right."

There was a moment of silence as Jiraiya pondered Danzo's words. He wanted so badly to dismiss them, but he had to admit the war hawk had a point. And given the current situation, it wouldn't be hard for him to foster fear of the Akatsuki among the population, and gain support for a war. And thus, Jiraiya did the only thing he knew he could in this situation.

"Thanks for letting me know your concerns, Danzo," Jiraiya replied, now sounding more polite. "I'll meditate on them before reaching a solution."

"No meditation is needed to do such a thing," Danzo said, as he stood up and walked towards the door. "But sure, take all the time you need if that's what it takes to quell your conscience."

Danzo left the office, leaving Jiraiya struggling with his thoughts.

...

Training Ground Eight

"Ice Release: Thousand Needles of Death!"

Several ice spikes formed above Hinata and Kurenai, the former taking a step forward, and slipping into a fighting stance.

"Okay, I can deflect them!" Hinata said, as she started to move her palms forward in a pushing manner. "Protection of the Eight Trigrams: Sixty Four Palms!"

The ice spikes showered over the two women, but Hinata's defensive jutsu blocked all of them efficiently. As the ice bolts were shattered, the air started to fill with little ice crystals that sparkled with the sunlight. This gave Kurenai an idea.

"Hinata, prepare to attack after this," the Genjutsu Mistress said as her hands flew through hand seals. "Wind Release: Great Breakthrough!"

The raven haired woman blew a gust of wind towards her and Hinata's opponents, the male half of the Assault Squad. The wind also pushed the sparkling ice crystals towards the duo, momentarily blinding them.

"Not bad, sensei. You aren't as rusty as you made us believe," Haku commented, as a smirk appeared on his face, as he jumped backwards and made a hand seal. "Take this then! Ice Release: Multiple Piercing Icicle Shots!"

This time, Haku conjured several frozen spears, which flew towards the two women making whistling sounds.

"You're right, Haku, I'm not," Kurenai replied, and returned the smirk as she made a hand seal. "Demonic Illusion: Mirror of Heaven and Earth Change!"

Suddenly, the icicles turned around, flying towards Haku instead. The Ice Ninja tried to move, but found several roots growing around his legs, pinning him in place. Fortunately, both the roots and the icicles dissolved into nothingness before any damage could befall.

"Are you okay?"

Haku looked around, and saw Naruto grabbing his shoulder.

"Yeah. Thanks for the save," Haku said with a nod. "I guess I underestimated Kurenai-sensei."

"My body might be out of shape, but I had plenty of time to hone my skills in genjutsu," Kurenai said in almost chiding tone. "You still have a long way to go until you can beat me with the very art I taught you. And you've seen only a little of what I learned these past months."

"Let me show you something I learned then!" Naruto boasted, as he made a hand seal, before clapping his hands together. "Wind Release: Riding the Hurricane!"

A tornado started to form around Naruto. Or better said, around Naruto's legs. As the tornado started to grow in both size and intensity, the blond's feet stopped touching the ground, as he elevated into the air. Hinata's eyes were wide open in surprise.

"I finally did it! A jutsu that allows me to fly! Well, more or less," Naruto say. "You can thank your husband for this!"

"He's so sleeping on the couch tonight," Kurenai joked, letting out a chuckle. "Okay, I'll try not to rely on genjutsu so much, this spar is to help me get back into shape after all."

"Understood. I'll hold back so you'll do most of the work, sensei," Hinata offered. Kurenai nodded in return.

The Genjutsu Mistress ran to meet Naruto mid charge, while making several hand seals.

"Earth Release: Multiple Rising Pillars!"

Like the name of the jutsu suggested, rock pillars grew from the ground in front of Kurenai, each one being a little taller than the one before. The raven haired woman jumped from one pillar to another as if they were stepping stones, until she was at the same height as Naruto. She pulled out several shuriken from her ninja tool pouch, and tossed them at Naruto.

The orange clad Jonin, on the other hand, pulled out his Wind Blade, and after activating it, he used it to deflect the incoming steel stars with expert swings. He was about to dash towards Kurenai, but what happened next surprised the blond.

"Huh?"

Naruto saw Kurenai leaping at him, holding Asuma's trench knives on each hand, glowing with a blue aura as chakra coursed through them, and delivered a double swing in opposite directions, forming an X. Naruto barely had time to parry the surprise attack, and pushed Kurenai back onto one of the stone pillars.

"Since when are you able to use those knives?" Naruto asked in shock.

"Genjutsu isn't the nonly thing I've been working on," Kurenai replied. "While I admit that I'm not as good as them as my husband, they aren't that different from normal kunai."

Kurenai was mostly a long range fighter that relied mostly on genjutsu and ninjutsu, and thus strong close combat fighters were a problem id they were able to close the gap. That's why she decided to learn to use a melee weapon as well.

"Very well then, how about this!" Naruto said, as his hands quickly made more hand seals. "Wind Release: Cyclone Shockwave!"

The tornado supporting Naruto expanded and grew until it doubled in size. Rather than at the top, Naruto was floating in the middle.

"Riding the Hurricane is not just for flying, I can combine it with other wind jutsu and use it to attack!" Naruto said, as he waved his hand forward. "Onwards we go!"

"That's an impressive jutsu indeed," Kurenai said, as she jumped off the pillar, landing on the ground. "Though it has a glaring weakness."

"And that would be?" Naruto asked, almost in a taunting manner.

"I'll show you now," Kurenai said, while her hands formed more hand seals. "Earth Release: Hiding Mole Jutsu!"

Kurenai quickly dug underground, leaving a patch of removed dirt as the only evidence that she was even there. Naruto's tornado passed over it without having any effect.

"Dammit!" Naruto cursed, as he dispelled the tornado, landing on the ground, as he started to frantically look around. "Where did she go? Haku, do you see her?"

"No, but stay on guard. She might plan to ambush us from below, so let's focus on the ground beneath our feet," Haku told Naruto, who nodded. "Let's fight back to back."

The male half of the Assault Squad covered their backs with each other, as they prepared for Kurenai's next move. It didn't take long until they noticed the ground vibrating beneath them.

"There she comes!" Naruto warned, as he prepared to attack.

But rather than Kurenai, multiple wooden roots emerged from below, wrapping themselves around Naruto and Haku, until the two ninjas were trapped inside a tree.

"What the...?" Naruto asked, as he tried to futilely struggle against his bindings. "When did she put us under a genjutsu?"

"You've been under one for quite some time," Kurenai said, as she appeared from behind the tree. "And to answer your question, it was just after you used that giant wind jutsu."

"Then you didn't go underground!" Naruto said in realization.

"No, I didn't," Kurenai said, before making a hand seal. The tree disappeared, releasing Naruto and Haku. "I made you think that so you'd focus your attention elsewhere and wouldn't think that the attack could come from somewhere else."

"Misdirection," Haku said in realization.

"Misdirection is a powerful tool that, if applied correctly, can allow a ninja to defeat a superior opponent," Kurenai explained. "One that genjutsu specialists just like myself work to master above everything else."

"You did an splendid job, Kurenai-sensei," Hinata praised, as she walked towards the others. "Nobody would say that you've been off duty for so long."

"Thank you, Hinata," Kurenai smiled at her,, before she started to huff. "But truth be told, I'm almost out of breath. That little spar left me torn. Then again, my victory is also due Naruto and Haku's poor performance. Seriously boys, how did you let me fool you like that?"

"Guess I'm a bit rusty as well, since I've been recovering from an injury these past weeks," Haku said a little embarrassed, deep down knowing that there was no excuse for failing like that. He could feel Zabuza's disappointing glare weighing on his neck.

"What about you, Naruto?" Kurenai asked the blond. "I don't remember the last time since you've been this distracted."

"I something on your mind, Naruto-kun?" Hinata asked her boyfriend.

"You could say that," the blond replied. "I've been thinking in Akatsuki, and all the jinchuriki we failed to save..."

"Naruto-kun..." Hinata said, almost in a worried tone.

"It's not what you think. I'm done playing the blame game," Naruto reassured his girlfriend. "I've been thinking in those fights, and realized of something: the Akatsuki always managed to capture the jinchuriki just after we located them."

"Now that you mention it..." Haku said, as he also recalled the missions involving them. "You're right."

"Do you think that Akatsuki is following us?" Hinata asked.

"That, or there's a spy in Konoha that feeds them information," Naruto concluded.

"No, that can't be right," Kurenai replied, shaking her head. "If there was a spy leaking intel, I'm sure Jiraiya-sama would have already routed him or her out."

"Maybe, but it's the only possibility I can think of," Naruto said.

"Also, what about Gaara? Or Yugito?" Kurenai asked.

"Gaara and Yugito worked for their respective villages, so tracking them would be easy," Haku countered. "It would be a matter to wait until they're far from the village, or trick them into leaving it."

"But Utakata-san and Roshi-san were vagrants," Hinata continued, as she came to same realization as her teammates. "And Akatsuki found them almost immediately after we did. I'm with Naruto-kun, this can't be a coincidence."

"If what you say is true, and there's an Akatsuki spy in Konoha..." Kurenai began, as she looked at Naruto with worried eyes. "Then both you and Fu are in grave danger."

"Fu and I have been in danger since the moment we became jinchuriki," Naruto replied. Realized the way he sounded he added. "Thanks for your concern, Kurenai-sensei, but this is nothing new to us."

"Anyway, enough of this gloom talk," Hinata said, standing up. "If there's an spy, we must trust Jiraiya-sama will be able to find and deal with them. All this training worked up my appetite a little. Say, how about if we go to Icharaku's, the four of us? It's been a while since we did that. Plus I think that will take your mind off of negative thoughts."

Naruto smiled at her girlfriend's suggestion. "I think I can agree on that."

...

Root Main Hideout, somewhere under Konoha

Careful nobody could see him -Danzo was sure Jiraiya had ANBU monitoring his every move, but the old War Hawk knew how to evade them- the leader of root entered his underground base. There, his two most trusted agents and bodyguards, Fuu Yamanaka and Torune Aburame were waiting for him.

"Welcome back, Danzo-sama," Torune greeted his leader. "We hope your meeting with Hokage-sama went well."

"It went better than most other meetings, that's for sure," Danzo replied, as he started to walk, his two minions closely following from behind. "He insists that this crisis can be avoided without declaring war on Ame. However, soon he'll be forced to face the facts. Time runs against him."

"Indeed. We need to take the war to the Akatsuki before they attack," Fuu agreed. "Those who take the initiative are the ones with greater chances to win a battle."

"Now is time to check how the progress on my other pet project is going," the leader of Root said. "Please go and fetch Sai. Tell him I want to speak with him."

"Immediately, Danzo-sama," Torune said, as he and his partner vanished.

About an hour later, Fuu and Torune returned with Sai. The three of them were kneeling in front of Danzo.

"Here is Sai, as you commanded," Torune said.

"Very well, leave us alone," Danzo ordered.

The two older Root agents stood up and left instantly. Some people would have called Danzo negligent for not having more people present, you never know who can be a spy among those who work for you.

Of course, Danzo knew. He knew very well. And the answer to that question was none. He had made sure to break all the ninjas working for him, before rebuilding them in his image. That method guaranteed a one hundred percent rate of loyalty towards both him and Konoha. Danzo could tell his subordinates to die for no reason, and they would do so without even asking why. How many people could boast about that? Not even a Kage could.

That's why Danzo was so sure of his agents' loyalty. Naturally, Danzo wasn't foolish enough as to trust them completely. He hadn't reached such an advanced age by being a trusting person.

"Report," was all what Danzo said.

"As expected, the Hokage suspects that somebody within Konoha is leaking intelligence regarding jinchuriki to the Akatsuki," his agent said. "So far, he has been very secretive about this issue, but has been working to root out the potential spy."

"Of course," Danzo nodded. "Like his sensei, Jiraiya may be an idealistic fool, but one should never make the mistake of underestimating either of them. Continue, Sai."

"As we suspected, he did task Ino Yamanaka with this mission. So far, nobody knows about it. Not even Jiraiya-sama's wife or elder son, or Ino's sensei and teammates," the pale boy continued.

"Does Jiraiya suspect it was us?" Danzo asked. The leader of Root did feel a bit uneasy, worried even, but years of brutal self-imposed mental conditioning didn't allow his stoic façade to falter.

"Fortunately not, Danzo-sama," Sai replied. "He seems to be convinced that the spy is somebody under a genjutsu placed by Obito Uchiha using Shisui Uchiha's stolen eye. Even if the eye was recovered, the genjutsu will continue to work as intended. So far, Ino doesn't seem to question this line of thinking either."

"Those are good news indeed," Danzo said, but once again, if he was happy, he didn't look like it. "What about the Yamanaka? I hope you didn't give that girl a chance to scry your mind."

"She did use some of her mind jutsu on me as part of our training sessions alongside her team," Sai began. "Fortunately, Fuu-san's training prepared me to resist such jutsu, and realize when she was reading my mind."

"And you trust she never did?" Danzo questioned.

"I do. After all, Fuu-san is a more experienced and skilled in the arts of the Yamanaka jutsu than her. If I can resist his jutsu, then so I can hers," Sai replied. "Not that I ever let my guard down with her during any moment."

"As it should be," Danzo replied with a firm nod. "You know, it was a fortunate chance that the Yamanaka heiress showed interest in you, Sai. Being close to her might provide us with more Yamanakas to our organization."

"So I take that you want me to continue my relationship with her?" Sai asked.

"For the time being, yes," Danzo said. "Though I hope that you aren't growing fond of her, Sai."

"I believe I'm not," Sai replied.

Danzo's only visible eye narrowed. "You believe ?"

"Ino has been trying to undo the mental training I received at Root," Sai explained. "So far, I've made her believe she's making progress. However, even with my best efforts, it's logical to think that spending so much time with one person might end up influencing you to some extent."

"A logical assumption, yes. For regular people, not Root ninja," Danzo harshly reprimanded. "Emotions are a weakness no good ninja should be prey of. It was thanks to the girl's emotions and dare I say, hormones, that we were able to place an agent following her every step without her being none the wiser. However, we can't allow your mind to be poisoned by such nonsense. If the Yamanaka heiress is giving you this much trouble, I might have to remove you from this mission."

"That wouldn't be advisable, Danzo-sama," Sai countered. Despite the words, Danzo didn't detect any sort of defiance in his voice, but more of a warning.

"And why not?"

"Ino-san has grown accustomed to my company, and might ask why I suddenly disappeared on her without reason," Sai explained. "And if we place another agent to fulfill my role, she might grow suspicious."

Danzo looked at Sai, his façade of impassiveness unwavering, as he processed the pale boy's words. Root agents were trained to think logically and to use foresight, and so far, Sai was showing a marvelous display of both attributes. Danzo couldn't find any fault in his reasoning.

"Yes, I believe you're right. This operation is at a too far advanced stage in order to change the agent carrying your role," Danzo admitted. "However, I think that supplemental training will be in order if we want to counter the influence the girl is having on you."

"Of course, Danzo-sama," Sai obediently agreed.

"You're dismissed," Danzo finally said.

Without saying anymore words, Sai swiftly disappeared from the chamber, as if he was never there, leaving Danzo alone with his thoughts.

So far, the plan was going good. Akatsuki would soon gather the other seven Tailed Beasts in one place, making their capture by Konoha all the easier. Then, it will only be a matter of fueling a sentiment of fear towards Amegakure that would result in a war. Akatsuki would be crushed, and Konoha in possession of all nine Tailed Beasts, as it should have been.

And then, Danzo's dream of Konoha ruling supreme over the Elemental Nations would finally become a reality. Yes, the long years of planning were finally bearing fruit. Soon, everything would come to an end.

...

Valley of Clouds and Lightning, Land of Lightning

Surrounded by steep mountains lied one of the Land of Lightning's most visually impressive hallmarks. Its unforgiving terrain made an almost impossible task to build anything there, either be a military outpost or a village for civilians to live. So naturally, most people who go to the valley are mere trekkers wanting to enjoy a beautiful sight.

Of course, Kumogakure took advantage of such terrain, and decided to build a small underground shelter beneath it. Not too big, with only capacity for ten, maybe fifteen people, which wouldn't make it fit as a place to go for an evacuated village. However, it was the perfect place to hide somebody.

Such as the jinhcuruki of the Eight Tails.

Or it would be if Akatsuki didn't had such good spies in their payroll (albeit the best one worked for free).

The Valley had changed a lot in the past hour or so, mostly due the battle of titanic proportions that just took place between its sole human inhabitant and a pair of cloaked interlopers. The battle had deviated the course of a nearby river, shattered some of the nearby hills, fill the ground with craters, and oddly enough, gigantic severed tentacles were scattered around.

The two interlopers, Deidara and Kisame, walked towards their downed prey.

"Goddamit... the fucker took so long to go down," Deidara said, panting. "If I knew this guy was a Lightning Release user..."

"This has to be the strongest jinchuriki we ever faced," Kisame stated, who, unlike his annoyed partner, sounded rather pleased. "Too bad. Now every enemy I will fight after this one will feel unsatisfying."

"I can't believe you enjoyed this," Deidara said, as he put some of his clay into one of the mouths in his hand, and started to chew. "We've been this close to die! I still don't know how that last attack brought him down!"

"You can say that to me, fighting is an art, and the stronger the opponent, the better. I mean, seven swords at once? These Kumo guys might have a point when they boast about being the better swordsmen. Though in the end, guess that quality trumps quantity," he replied, shooting the blond a bloodthirsty grin. He then crouched down and placed two fingers on Killer B's neck. "Good. He's still alive. I was afraid that my last attack would have ended him for good. You can't afford to hold back against an opponent of this caliber. But thankfully, jinchuriki tend to be tougher than average."

"Yeah, whatever, I want to get the hell out of this place," Deidara said, as his mouth released a small bird made of clay, that in a burst of smoke increased his size to a point where it could comfortably carry both Akatsuki and the jinchuriki.

Deidara and Kisame hopped onto the bird, who caught Killer B with its talons, before it flew away.

And as this happened, two Kumo ninja stationed nearby arrived to see the result of the ensuing fight.

"What the... what happened here?" the first ninja asked. "A fight? Is Killer B-sama okay?"

"Hey, what's that?" the second ninja asked, pointing at the retreating flying figure.

Wordlessly, the first ninja pulled a spyglass and took a look. What he saw filled him with horror. "It's the Akatsuki! And they have Killer B-sama!"

"No!" the other one said. "Come on, we have to stop them!"

"We can't," the first one said, shaking his head in resignation. "We have no way to catch an airborne enemy. All we can do is inform Raikage-sama of this."

"Raikage-sama isn't going to take kindly to these news..." the second ninja fearfully said, as he loudly gulped. "Even then, I better try to follow them, so I can find any leads."

"Understood. Good luck. I'm going to report this to Raikage-sama," the first ninja said, as he and his partner took different paths.

And if both Akatsuki and Kumo ninja had stayed a little longer, they would have noticed how one of the many severed tentacles scattered around the devastated battlefield started to wiggle, as if something alive tried to get out from inside it...

...

Downtown Konoha

Walking through the moderately crowded streets of the village, the four members of the Assault Squad made their way to Icharaku Ramen, per Hinata's suggestion.

"I tend to eat there pretty often, but man, it felt like ages since the last time I was there!" Naruto said with a grin of anticipation, both hands behind his back.

"Things have been pretty hectic during the past weeks," Haku pointed out, then looked at Naruto. "Especially for you."

"Not having you guys with me has been weird, that's for sure," Naruto admitted. "But now that the whole squad is reunited, things will get back on track in no time! Akatsuki won't lay a finger on any more jinchuriki, and we will rescue the Tailed Beasts they had in their power!"

"You're certainly in a good mood, Naruto," Kurenai observed, before smiling at the blond. "Did my return had such an impact to you? If that's the case, I'm really flattered."

"Hey, the three of us are pretty awesome. But none of them would be were we are if it wasn't for you, sensei," Naruto earnestly said. "A ninja might have potential, but it's a good sensei's job to bring it to the surface."

"I think you give me too much credit," Kurenai replied, even blushing a little. She was aware all her students had surpassed her already, yet they still looked up to her and considered her an important part of the team. "You downplay too much the importance of-"

Kurenai stopped mid sentence when something caught her eye. She could have sworn she saw a certain person she hasn't seen in quite some time.

"Kurenai-sensei?" Hinata asked, tilting her head. "Are you alright?"

But the genjutsu mistress didn't reply. Upon seeing that person turning to another street, the raven haired woman immediately rushed after her.

"Wait!" Kurenai cried as she followed this person.

"Kurenai-sensei? Where are you going?" an alarmed Naruto asked.

But Kurenai didn't reply. Entering the same street as the stranger, she frantically looked around, having lost her out of her sight, until she was able to see her again, about to enter to another street. Rushing along, she followed suit, entering a less crowded zone. But much to her shock and disappointment, she was nowhere to be seen.

"I swear it was her..." Kurenai mumbled to herself, before sighing in defeat. "How I wish I had a Byakugan, or were a sensor at the very least..."

"Kurenai-sensei!" Naruto yelled, as he and his teammates ran towards their sensei. "What's going on?"

Shaking her head, Kurenai turned around, and forcing herself to smile. "Don't worry. I thought it was somebody I met some time ago. But I guess that my mind was playing with me. Come on, let's go to Icharaku already."

For the time being, her students didn't pry for anymore questions, but she knew that it wouldn't last. And indeed, once they were at Icharaku's and placed their orders, Naruto's overwhelming curiosity got the best of him, and asked.

"Uh, Kurenai-sensei," the blond began. "Who is this person you thought you saw?"

Everybody could see how Kurenai's expression turned somber, and the blond immediately regretted asking that question. Still, Kurenai wasn't mad at him, not after that little display from before.

"I think I told you about how before I got to be your sensei, I was assigned as the teacher of a girl from a dying clan that was very gifted with genjutsu," Kurenai began.

"Yes. Yakumo Kurama, right?" Hinata asked.

A bit surprised that Hinata remembered that, Kurenai nodded. "And you know what happened to her."

This time, nobody said anything, but they knew that she had died in a fire alongside her parents, putting an end to her clan forever.

"I think I saw her among the crowd," Kurenai said. "And foolish me, I thought she was alive. That she somehow had survived the fire and went to live on a secret life. What a stupid thing to think."

"Don't say that, Kurenai-sensei," Hinata told her. "I sometimes mistake some of my clan members with my father. It's possible that you just saw a girl who happen to look like her."

"Yes, that appears to be the most logical explanation," Kurenai admitted. "But the thing is... this is something that never happened to me before. It's not that I haven't lost people I cared for during my life."

"Eh, there's a first time for everything," Naruto said, shrugging a little. "Don't dwell too much on it."

That moment, Icharaku walked towards them, placing the bowls of ramen in front of the four Jonin.

"Alright, your orders are ready!" the ramen chef said. "Hope you enjoy them!"

"Thanks, old man!" Naruto cheerfully said, as he split his chopsticks and dugged in as if there was no tomorrow.

"Well, when you think about it, people coming back from the dead isn't that impossible," Haku observed. "Take a look at Kakashi-sensei's teammates, Obito and Rin. Both of them were thought to be dead, and the two of them turned out to be alive and well. More or less."

"While nothing would make me happier than to learn that my former apprentice survived, I would hate to see Yakumo turned into another Obito," Kurenai replied, as she slowly eat. "It's kind of a grim thought, but there are some times were death is the better alternative."

Hinata sighed heavily. "And here I thought that bringing you guys here would distract you from such kind of thoughts..."

"Sorry, Hinata," Kurenai said, as she tried to put on a smile. "It's just that... well, seeing that stranger reminded me of Yakumo. But don't worry, from now onwards, any sort of topic that it's remotely gloomy or grim shall be banned!"

"I can agree with that!" Naruto cheerfully said. "Old man, another bowl!"

Kurenai's eyes shot open, staring at Naruto's empty clean bowl, before looking back at her barely started one. She closed her eyes, and shook her head. "Ah, I definitely missed this."

As they eat, their conversation started to shift to more casual and lighthearted topics, just as Hinata had hoped. While Kurenai and Haku were full after just one bowl, Naruto and Hinata ordered several, with Hinata surprisingly eating more than Naruto, who apparently took Hinata's large apetitie as some sort of challenge.

They had such a good time as Icharaku that nobody, not even Hinata, noticed that somebody had been watching them the whole time. It was the person that Kurenai had mistook for her deceased student.

She decided to leave before they could notice her presence.

...

Turns out, the Assault Squad wasn't the only team whose members were eating together after a hard training session. Coincidentally, Kurenai's husband Asuma was also eating with her students, albeit they were having lunch at Yakiniku-Q, their usual -and Choji's favorite- eating spot.

"Today's training has been a good one," Asuma commented. "You're getting visibly stronger with each day. You guys make me proud."

"Aw, you don't have to say that," Ino said in fake modesty. "But I enjoy being praised a lot, so keep the compliments coming!"

Asuma laughed at the blonde's reply. "Well, this compliment may make your day then. Guys, have you ever thought in applying for a promotion to either Jonin or Special Jonin?"

Naturally, such question drew the full attention of his three students, who looked at him with eyes wide open. Even Choji had stopped chewing on his slice of steak when he heard Asuma saying that.

"Do you.." Choji began, before gulping the piece of meat in his mouth without even chewing it whole. "Do you mean it, Asuma-sensei? Do you think we're ready?"

"Of course I do! If it wasn't the case, I wouldn't had say it," the bearded Jonin stated. "Honestly, I think that you've pretty much outgrown the rank of Chunin for some time. It's about time you guys move forward."

"While the prospective of a higher rank is indeed great, I can't help but notice that there's something more to this recommendation," Shikamaru interjected, narrowing his eyes at Asuma as his lips curved into a smirk. "I suppose that the fact that you have a child now had nothing to do with it. And that if we had a higher rank, you would be allowed to spend less time with us and more with your family?"

Asuma was taken aback by Shikamaru's conclusion. No matter how much time he spend with the Nara heir, he would never stop being caught of guard by Shikamaru's keen mind. Fortunately for Asuma, he didn't have to answer as Shikamaru continued talking.

"Not that I blame you for thinking that," Shikamaru added. "I just want to make sure we're ready for it."

"Er... I'd lie if I didn't admit spending more time with Mirai was part of the reasoning," Asuma bashfully replied. "Don't think I want to get rid of you, guys. You're the best students a teacher could have."

"We'd never think something like that," Shikamaru said. "Besides, Temari has been needling me with that topic as well. Since she became Jonin less than a year after becoming Chunin, she also wants me to get the rank as well."

"A lot of people of our age group are either Jonin or Special Jonin," Ino commended, as her hand rested under her chin. "I mean, Kurenai and Gai's teams have no Chunin among them." Suddenly, Ino's face lit with realization. "That's it! You're afraid Kurenai-sensei will make you feel inadequate and want match her team, aren't you?"

"Ino..." Asuma groaned as she shot the blonde an annoyed stare.

"Kidding! Kidding!" Ino laughed, holding her hands up in defense. "I know you don't have such a fragile ego, Asuma-sensei."

"Say, what would we have to do in order to get the promotion to Jonin?" Choji asked, hoping to bring the topic back on track.

"For starters, you'll need to improve your record a little. Jonin usually do nothing but A and S rank missions, so you'd need to do some more missions like that in order to show them that you're ready," Asuma began. "You'll also need a certain degree of expertise on two different elemental ninjutsu. I think we should focus most of our training on that."

"I'm all for it," Ino replied. "Hinata and Tenten are already Special Jonin, and if I let forehead girl to get the rank before I do, then I'd-" Ino began, before she suddenly shut up. Her mouth was agape, and her eyes shot open. It looked as if Ino had just seen a ghost.

"Uh, Ino? Are you okay?" Shikamaru asked, while Choji waved a hand in front of her.

This seemed to snap the blonde out of her stupor. "Uh, yes! Yes! I'm fine!" Ino insisted, sounding oddly nervous and agitated. "Uh, I remembered something! I need to help my mom with some stuff on the flower shop!" Ino pulled out her coin purse and left a couple bills in the table. "This should be enough for my meal. You guys can keep the change. Sorry for leaving so sudden! I will make up for this, I swear!"

And Ino left the restaurant as if it was on fire, leaving her three male teammates rather confused.

"Do you know what happened?" Asuma asked, deeply confused. "I hope it wasn't something I said."

Choji just shrugged, but Shikamaru looked pensive. It was quite obvious that the blonde was hiding something from them.

...

Ino felt really bad for leaving her teammates like that. It was painfully obvious that her excuse to leave was a very transparent lie, but she had no other options. She couldn't tell them, at least not now. Her mission was too important, and secrecy was key.

She walked at a steady pace, but not quite as fast as to make her look she was in a rush. Fortunately, Yakiniku-Q wasn't that far away from her destination: the Hokage Tower. Wasting no time, she climbed the stairs until she reached the last floor, and walked towards the Hokage's secretary.

"Excuse me," Ino began, making herself known. "My name is Ino Yamanaka. I need to see the Hokage right now. I hope he isn't busy."

"You're lucky, Hokage-sama doesn't have a meeting until half an hour," the secretary began, as she pressed a button in the intercom. "Hokage-sama, a kunoichi of the name Ino Yamanaka wants to see you."

"Sure! Tell her to come in!" Jiraiya's voice replied.

"Tell the Hokage that I bring some inspiration for his new book," Ino added.

The middle aged woman raised an eyebrow, as she shot the blonde a dubious look, but decided to comply.

"Uh, Hokage-sama," the secretary continued. "The girl says she brings something that will inspire you for your next book."

There was a moment of tense silence, until Jiraiya's voice could be heard again.

"I want you to cancel all my scheduled appointments for today. I'm going to be very busy," Jiraiya's voice said. His voice had lost all its usual warmth, replaced by steel cold determination.

"But sir-"

"Do as I say!" Jiraiya insisted, silencing the secretary. "And tell Ino to meet me immediately."

"Okay," the woman looked at Ino. "You heard him, girl. Better not make him wait."

Ino nodded, and walked into the Hokage's office. Jiraiya was there as expected, and stood up the moment the Yamanaka heiress made her presence known.

"I already made all the ANBU leave," Jiraiya began. "You know what to do."

Ino nodded, as she and Jiraiya made a hand seal, producing a single Shadow Clone each. Jiraiya had made Ino to learn the Shadow Clone jutsu. It took some time for the blonde, but in the end she managed to expand her chakra pool enough to produce a single clone. It was necessary for their meetings.

As the clones took seats at a side of the desk each, Jiraiya walked to Ino, grabbed her wrist, and made a different hand seal. The next second, they weren't inside the office anymore, but inside the stomach of a giant toad. Jiraiya remembered the first time she had brought Ino there. The poor blonde had emptied her stomach upon realizing where did he took her. However, it was the only place they could talk one hundred percent sure nobody would listen to them.

"So, what is it?" Jiraiya asked, already dreading the answer.

"It is as we feared, Hokage-sama," Ino began. "It is Danzo who has been leaking information to the Akatsuki."

Author's Note: Dun dun duuuun! And now you finally knew why Ino was having all those meetings alone and in secret with the Hokage. She was carrying a mission only her would be able to do. My beta said he was a bit confused as how Ino learn about Root's treachery, and if you share his confusion, rest assured that it will be explained during the next chapters. I don't plan to leave any loose end.

So yeah, if you like Ino, she's going to shine quite a lot during this arc. I know she's far from the most popular character (or even most popular girl) but I think she's a pretty awesome and underrated character, and I hope I can make people like her more with this story.

Thanks to Ookami88 for betareading this chapter.

So, NOW finally the Root Arc begins! Hope you guys are as excited as I am, because I've been planning this arc even before I posted this story. Tell me your thoughts about both the chapter and the upcoming arc in a review. Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

The Enemy Without

Author's Note: And after an episode of building up, here comes the action! Though, don't think everything's going to go smoothly. Danzo isn't going down without a fight.

Enjoy:

Chapter 78:

The Enemy Without

or

Uprooting the bad weeds

Hokage Monument, early in the morning

"Boy, I wasn't expecting so many people here," Naruto said, as he looked the crowd around him.

"Whatever happened, it must be big for Hokage-sama to gather this many people," Haku observed.

Kurenai's Assault Squad started their morning routine as usual, with some training before seeing any mission that could suit them. After half an hour or so, an ANBU had appeared, requesting the three of them to meet with the Hokage at the Hokage Monument. It was an odd choice of place, given that Jiraiya often briefed every team he tasked a mission with in his office.

"No wonder Jiraiya-sama told us to meet him here," Hinata added. "His office is pretty big, but I doubt it could fit this many people."

"There are a lot of known faces," Naruto said, as he scanned the crowd. "There's Shizune-neechan and her team, Team Bushy-Brow Sensei, Team Kakashi..."

"Team Asuma as well," Hinata continued. "But... oddly enough, Ino-san isn't with them."

"Maybe she's indisposed?" Naruto guessed, sounding unsure.

"Maybe she ate a lot and now is bedridden with indigestion."

"That doesn't sound like Ino-san at all," Hinata replied, shaking her head, before smiling at him in a teasing way. "That sound more like you, Naruto-kun."

"I can also see some ANBU, as well as several Military Police members," Kurenai said, speaking for the first time. "Whatever happened, it must be big if Hokage-sama needs so many people."

"Do you think it has to do with the last jinchuriki?" Naruto asked, sounding rather agitated. "Given our string of failures, I wouldn't put past dad to send an army to secure him."

"It's a possibility, yes," Kurenai conceded, a hand resting under her chin. "Though sending this many people to a single mission has a lot of drawbacks, such as-"

"It seems we're about to find out, sensei," Hinata interrupted the raven haired woman, as she nodded towards Jiraiya, who was walking towards them.

"Wait, isn't that Ino walking behind him?" Naruto asked, narrowing his eyes.

"Seems to be the case," Kurenai said, looking as puzzled as her students. "Anyway, now let's be quiet. I'm sure Hokage-sama will explain what's going on."

All the ninjas present there immediately stopped chattering with each other and stood to attention once the supreme commander of Konoha got closer to them. He scanned the crowd, and smiled while nodding, confirming that all the people and teams he had summoned were indeed there.

"Greeting. I know what you're thinking. Yes, this is highly unorthodox, even for my standards," the Hokage acknowledged. "However, time is of essence, and I couldn't afford to debrief every team and ninja present here one by one. The reason as for why I gathered you here is because we're going to carry out an operation against an enemy of Konoha which has been hiding within the village itself. Said enemy is the Black Ops organization known as Root, headed by Danzo. I'm sure that name rings a lot of bells."

Naturally, this revelation caused a lot of people to murmur among themselves worriedly, with some even asking what was going on. It was known that Jiraiya and Danzo didn't get along, but this was going too far.

"What did Danzo do to merit this?" an ANBU asked.

"Rest assured that everything has an explanation," Jiraiya continued, hoping to soothe their concerns. "I had the feeling that there were spies within the village that leaked our intelligence to our enemies. More specifically, regarding those related to our operations of search and rescue of jinchuriki. Now I know that it was Danzo's group the one behind these leaks. What they expected to gain by helping our enemies, I don't know."

"Do you have any evidence on this?" another ninja asked.

Ino then took a step forward. "I've been tasking Ino Yamanaka here with a counterespionage mission. Sadly, it took us quite some time, but we finally have the proof needed."

Without being told, Ino started to speak. "I've been following one of Danzo's agents, whose name is Sai. Thanks to my clan's psychic jutsu, I was able to collect information that incriminates Danzo and Root. Said information has already been shown to the people in the T & I department, as well as the Council of Elders."

"I knew that guy was trouble the moment I laid my eyes upon him," Sasuke said within the crowd.

"Well, it's a relief to see that Ino wasn't being manipulated by that asshole," Sakura added, and had to raise an eyebrow when she realized of the implications. "Actually... it was the other way around. Huh, didn't know Ino had it in her."

"I remember telling you that you should give Ino a little more credit," Sasuke reminded his girlfriend. "She's a kunoichi after all."

Near them, another Uchiha was also talking to his romantic partner. Even if said Uchiha was usually really nice and friendly, today he was shaking with anticipation. Shisui never forgot the confrontation with Danzo eight years ago. It's hard to forget when somebody gouges your eye out. And even harder if said someone gets away scott free.

"If it wasn't for Danzo," Shisui thought. "The Uchiha Insurrecion and all the pointless bloodshed it caused could have been averted. Today, you will pay for your crimes!"

The Uchiha was snapped out of his thoughts when a hand grabbed his. A hand he knew too well.

"Shisui? You okay?" Shizune whispered her husband.

"Don't worry, I'm fine," Shisui replied, grinning at his wife. "Let's say that I've been waiting this day for a long time."

"I can imagine," the medic-nin replied. "Though try not to get to carried away, okay? This is an important mission for Konoha as a whole."

"Don't worry, I'll behave," Shisui reassured, as his smile widened. Though Shizune could tell it wasn't entirely genuine.

Jiraiya, meanwhile, continued talking.

"Root has several installations that they use to carry their missions. Of course, none of them is their general HQ," Jiraiya stated. "Danzo believes that the location of his true HQ is unknown to us, but he forgot that I used to be the one in charge of the village's intelligence network, so finding it wasn't that hard for me."

"I'm sure that word of this attack will reach Danzo's ears before we can storm his base, so expect heavy resistance, as well as an escape attempt," Jiraiya said. "That's why we will split into two forces: the Vanguard Unit, and the Hunter Unit. The Vanguard Unit will be the ones to invade his base, and capture, disable or kill every member of Root you come into contact with. The Hunter Unit will spread around, and will capture any Root agent trying to flee. I expect Danzo will sacrifice several of his own agents to create a path to escape. Remember, Danzo is the main objective of this mission. If we can take him down, Root will go down with him."

"That's all. I myself will lead the Vanguard Unit in the raid. Everybody knows your roles. Now let's go!"

Jiraiya jumped off the cliff, using the carved faces as footholds, until he reached the village, and headed towards the main Root HQ, with the ninjas of the Vanguard Unit closely trailing behind him. Meanwhile, the many squads that composed the Hunter Unit moved into their positions.

As this happened, three people were observing the display. These three persons were Koharu Uatane, Homura Mitokado, and Hiruzen Sarutobi. The retired Hokage looked at the rushing ninjas with melancholic eyes.

"To think that it would end like this..." Hiruzen began. "Danzo, just what did you do?"

"Guess it's a good thing we didn't offer the hat to Danzo when he asked for it after the Uchiha Insurrection," Koharu said, shaking her head.

"I believe Danzo had the skills to be a competent Hokage," Homura replied, earning a glare from the other councilor. "Though, his war-like tendencies made him a unsuitable candidate. Not to mention that further militarization of the village isn't what people wanted after the horrors of the Uchiha Insurrection."

"Danzo was also too stubborn. He always believed that his ways to solve problems were the only correct ones," Koharu continued. "But to leak information to the Akatsuki..."

"Danzo and I used to be friends," Hiruzen solemnly said, before straightening himself. "And I used to believe that, despite our differences, he loved this village as much as I do. But sadly... this treason cannot go unanswered."

"I'm sorry, old friend. I deeply lament this had to end like this."

Of all the times Hiruzen was glad that he was rid of the burden of being Hokage, this moment was the one he appreciated it the most. Just like what happened to Orochimaru, he was afraid that he would let Danzo go if he confronted his old friend. Fortunately, Jiraiya didn't have any kind of emotional connection with the War Hawk, and would do what's needed to do.

Shaking his head, he turned around and walked towards the village.

"Let's go," Hiruzen told his former teammates. "There's nothing left to see here. All we can do is wait for the news of Jiraiya's victory to arrive."

...

Root Underground Base, at that same moment

Just like Jiraiya had expected, Danzo got wind of the operation against Root. Its leader wasted no time, and gathered all the available agents he had in Konoha around him. Time was of essence, and there were many things to do. Though he had hope his men and women could deliver the results he was aiming for.

"My ninjas, what we feared has come to happen," Danzo started. "It seems that Jiraiya has evidence of our dealings with Akatsuki. Naturally, he didn't even bother to contact me and let me explain why I did this and how Konoha can benefit from it. As we speak, a battalion of ninjas loyal to him rush to this very base, ready to either kill or capture every single one of us."

As expected, none of his ninjas said anything. They remained quiet, still bowing to him, merely awaiting orders.

"Fortunately, I already had a contingency measure in case something like this came to happen," Danzo continued. "For the time being, given how outnumbered we are, the best course of action will be to flee the village. In order to do so, several of you will need to stay behind and fight Jiraiya's forces so you can buy the rest of us time to escape."

Again, none of his agents ever protested. If Danzo told them to die, they would die. Since they believed that that was for the best of the village. The thought of questioning such orders wouldn't even cross their minds.

"On top of covering our escape, we need to take several crucial assets for our organization to continue," Danzo finally said, as his single eye rested on a particular group of ninjas. "It's time to carry out Operation: Rising Phoenix."

...

A few minutes later, the Vanguard Unit, lead by Jiraiya, arrived at the entrance of Danzo's main base. It was an old, wrecked textile factory that had been severely damaged by the Nine Tails when it first attacked Konoha sixteen years ago. Since then, a new textile factory was opened, and this one was left unused. That's it, until Danzo decided it would make a great hideout.

"Is this the place?" Jiraiya asked the kunoichi besides him, who happened to be Hinata.

Hinata's Tenseigan flared for a second, and nodded. "Yes. There are several tunnels that lead to a large underground base. There are several ninjas placed inside the factory, as well as many others in the base."

"As expected, they know we're coming," Jiraiya confirmed with a nod. "What else? Do you see where Danzo is?"

Hinata's eyes scanned the underground base, until she finally found the man in question.

"Found him," Hinata said. "He's in the deepest part of the base. He seems to be issuing orders to his ninjas. Some of them are gathering around him while others are coming up. I believe he's planning to send half his forces to stop us while he escapes with the other half."

"Just as I expected," Jiraiya said, smirking a little. "Even if Danzo escapes our grasp -and I think it's a possibility- the Hunter Unit is going to give him a really nasty surprise. Now, if he plans to ambush us, it would be best to send somebody who's utterly and completely expendable. Naruto!"

"HEY!" the blond protested. "Who are you calling expendable?"

Jiraiya sweatdropped. "... I was talking about your clones."

Naruto's anger dissipated, replaced by a feeling of embarrassment. "Oh... yeah, that makes sense. Though you could have worded it differently."

"Naruto-kun, we have no time for this. For each second we stall, is one more second we give Danzo to escape," Haku reminded him.

"Oh, yeah, sorry!" Naruto replied, making his favorite hand seal. "Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

A hundred Naruto clones popped into existence. Without waiting for the original to issue a command, the orange and black clad army poured into the abandoned factory like predators breaking to their prey's lair. And just like they had expected, the Root ANBU ambushed them. Two Root agents leaped from their hideouts, weaving the same set of hand seals.

"Water Release: Water Wall!"

The two Root ninjas expelled a stream of water through the hole in their masks, quickly flooding the floor of the factory. As this happened, other two Root ninjas appeared, weaving a different set of hand seals from the first two.

"Lightning Release: Thunderbolt!"

Their hands started to crackle with electricity, before they shot lightning bolts from their fingertips at the ground below. The water conducted the electricity, instantly dispelling most of the Naruto clones.

"Good job guys, you just wasted that carefully prepared trap on a bunch of clones!" one of the surviving clones boasted. "Everybody, come inside!"

"Everybody, watch out!" Hinata warned the ninjas breaking into the factory. "More Root agents remain hidden in the shadows! Expect another ambush!"

Just as Hinata had said, more masked Root ANBU jumped out of their hiding spots, and tossed kunai with paper tags attached to them. It didn't take a genius to realize what they were.

"Explosive tags! Take cover!" Asuma warned.

"Those aren't explosive tags!" Hinata shouted.

And indeed, upon closer inspection, they could see they had both a different color (dark blue rather than the usual faint yellow) and sealing patterns. The mysterious paper tags started to glow with a pink light, and suddenly an array of seals quickly started to spread all around the ground. Once the array was complete, they started to glow with a blue light, and the effect was immediate.

"Aw, what the hell?" Ino protested, as she was frozen in place. "I can't move!"

"Me neither!" Sakura replied.

"These seals seems to form an energy field that paralyzes whoever gets close," Sasuke deduced. "If we destroy the paper tags, it will be undone!"

"And you think we're going to let you?" a voice said from above, as more Root ninjas emerged from their hiding spot. All of them were carrying large sealing scrolls. "DIE!"

The ninjas above them unfurled the scrolls, whose contents were quickly unsealed, and the paralyzed ninjas found themselves about to be showered by a rain of multiple swords, kunai, shuriken, and other weapons and very sharp objects.

"Hinata-hime, your turn!" Naruto said.

Hinata, who had remained behind, floated into the factory, before flying upwards, completely immune to the effect of the paralyzing seals.

"Since I'm not touching the ground, I'm safe from that trap," Hinata thought, as she made several hand seals. "Tenseigan Chakra Cloak!" Hinata started to glow with a lavender aura. "Truth Seeking Balls!" The Hyuga Clan head created two dark orbs out of thin air. "Silver Wheel Reincarnation Explosion!"

The two Truth Seeking Balls merged into a single energy orb, which exploded into a silvery tornado that began moving upwards, blowing the rain of weapons away, until it destroyed the roof of the factory. The tornado not only pushed the storm of steel away, but several of the Root ninja were caught inside it as well.

Most people present watched in awe at the sheer destructive display of the Hyuga Clan head.

"Well done, Hinata!" Jiraiya praised, snapping the others out of their astonishment, before using a fire jutsu on a section of the ground. The section now revealed a tunnel that led underground.

"Hinata-hime and I will take care of this and secure the building!" Naruto volunteered, as he proceeded to produce more clones. "The rest of us, go downwards!"

"Very well then, son!" the Hokage agreed, before turning to the rest of his troops. "Everybody, go inside! Beware of any traps!"

The entrance tunnel to the underground base was very narrow and only allowed them to move in rows of one. Even if the tunnel itself was devoid of traps, such bottleneck was perfect for an ambush at the other end.

"Hokage-sama, there are a multitude of ninjas waiting for us to come out at the other side of the tunnel," one of the Hyuga ANBU accompanying them warned.

"As I imagined," Jiraiya said, as he bit his thumb. "Don't worry, whatever they're planning, I'm sure they're not accounting for what comes next."

...

At the other side of the tunnel, a large group of Root ninja waited patiently for their enemies to appear. The sensors had already warned them of their presence, and now they could hear them talking, even if they couldn't discern their words. Several agents were surrounding the tunnels' exit, ready to strike at whatever came out of that gate. And it seemed it would be Jiraiya, the Hokage. Danzo had told them that he would lead the attack, and to make him a priority target.

Yes, getting rid of that weak Hokage would be a huge service to Konoha.

However, those who underestimate Jiraiya would pay for it dearly, and the Toad Sage was about to show why he was a living legend.

"SUMMONING JUTSU!"

There was a burst of smoke, followed by a large, six meter tall toad, breaking through the tunnel, tearing it apart completely. The toad was blue skinned with a yellow belly, holding a kanabo in one hand and a rectangular metal shield in the other. While the Root agents didn't expect something like that to happen, they didn't hesitate and unleashed a barrage of elemental ninjutsu on the toad.

"Yikes!" the toad cried, as he hid behind his metal shield.

"Sorry, Ryoko, but you were the best one to use for this situation!" Jiraiya hastily apologized as he leaped above the toad. "This place is too small to summon the larger toads, and Ryoko's shield makes him the perfect candidate for a meat wall. Though I better not say that out loud." Jiraiya thought

Aside from that, Ryoko also blew a huge hole in the wall connecting the tunnel, destroying the bottleneck and thus allowing the Konoha ninjas to pour into the base in large groups, while also using the giant toad as a meat shield.

"Goddamit, why is that when I'm summoned, is to be used as an improvised shield?" Ryoko complained. "It's because I carry a shield myself?"

"Again, sorry, Ryoko! I promise I'll make up to you!" Jiraiya told him, as he engaged in combat with a Root ANBU that carried two swords.

"You better!" Ryoko complained, before he noticed what was going on. "Hey, wait a minute, all these guys are Konoha ninja, what gives?"

"Let's say we managed to find that they weren't as loyal to the village as we thought," Jiraiya replied, as he traded blows with the dual wielding ninja.

"Er... this is going to be rather complicated..." the toad grumbled as he looked at the battlefield around him. "You guys are wearing the same clothes and all that..."

"It's okay! Just stay there and cover our ninjas as they enter this place!" Jiraiya told the giant toad.

A few seconds into the fight, circular sealing patterns started to appear all around the ground. While some of them didn't know what they mean -other than a potential trap-, many others, especially those who took part in the Kirigakure Civil War, remembered very well what was going to happen. Still, every ninja, Root or otherwise jumped backwards to give the seals space.

"You have to be kidding me..." Sasuke groaned.

The seals started to glow, until produced a burst of smoke each. And from the smoke, a humanoid mechanical construct emerged.

"Chakra Golems," Jiraiya hissed, narrowing his eyes. "Did Danzo steal the blueprints as well?"

These golems resembled greatly those used by the Blood Mist, except that they were black with red highlights instead of red, and had Konoha's crest on them instead of Kiri's. Jiraiya could also see that they had more sealing patterns written all over their steel plating than those Naruto and the others brought from Kiri. The fight had become much more difficult.

"What... what are those things?" a Konoha ANBU asked.

The Chakra Golems started to hum as the fuinjutsu patterns across their chassis started to glow with a blue light, signaling that they had been activated. Recognizing the Konoha ninjas not affiliated to Root as enemies, the mechanical creatures stomped towards them.

"They're Chakra Golems. Mechanical constructs animated by Uzumaki fuinjutsu and powered by chakra," Karin quickly explained. Some Konoha ninjas started to form hand seals, but the redhead interrupted them in time. "They can absorb ninjutsu, so only those who are good hand to hand combat should fight them!"

"Too bad we didn't brought Tenten-chan's team," Haku lamented. "Gai-sensei and Lee-san would make short work of these machines."

"Thank goodness I'm here to trash these pieces of scrap," Sakura eagerly said, as she took a step forward while punching the palm of her hand. "Come on!"

The pinkette lunged towards an incoming golem, delivering a brutal chakra-enhanced punch to its chest, blowing a large hole on it. The force of the attack was such that the golem was hurled backwards, before slamming against a wall.

"Were those golems this fragile, or it's me who became stronger?" Sakura wondered aloud, enjoying the situation. "Who cares. The faster I can get rid of them. Guys, cover me while I trash these overgrown toys!"

Sakura dashed towards another Golem. Two Root ninjas, a large man carrying a massive sword, and another, smaller man wielding bladed tonfas. However, the two of them were unable to reach the pinkette, as their weapons clashed against a katana and a shoto.

Sasuke Uchiha was the one holding the blades parrying their weapons.

"If you want to touch her, you'll have to go through me first," Sasuke coolly said, as he spun around his feet, turning himself into a brief bladed whirlwind, pushing the root ninjas aside.

"Thank you, Sasuke-kun!" Sakura said, as she was about to reach the second golem. "Now let's turn you into scrap metal!"

However, before Sakura could reach, one of the seals in the golem's chestplate started to glow. Then, a circular sealing pattern spread from the golem's feet, covering an area of two meters in radius. And the moment Sakura entered the sealed area, she was paralyzed on the spot, much to her shock and confusion.

"What the...?" Sakura asked, as she struggled to break free. "What's going on? Why can't I move? This is like being trapped by Shikamaru's jutsu!"

The golem stomped forward, and raised one of its massive fists in order to crush the pinkette. Sakura let out a scream.

"Sakura!" Sasuke shouted, as he tried to help her, but the large man with the broadsword got in the way.

"You're not going anywhere, Uchiha!" the man shouted, as he brought his sword down, forcing Sasuke to parry.

"GET OUT OF MY WAY!" Sasuke hollered, while delivering powerful and swift blows with his katana.

"Ice Release: Ice Barrier!"

Just when the golem's fist was going to hit the defenseless Sakura, a wall of ice developed between the two of them. The mechanical warrior hit the frozen barrier, but only succeeded in cracking it a little.

The cracks quickly disappeared as if the ice had a healing factor. As this happened, Karin rushed forward, making a hand seal.

"Adamantine Sealing Chains!"

Several chains wrapped around the golem, pulling it back, and thus releasing Sakura from the fuinjutsu paralysis trap. Wasting no time, the pinkette climbed the wall of ice, and used it as a springboard before jumping into the air.

"Heavenly Foot of Pain!"

Sakura landed feet-first into the downed golem, the impact shattering it into tiny pieces of metal. She looked at Haku and Karin, and smiled in gratitude.

"Thank you, guys. A second later and I would have been a goner," Sakura told them.

"It seems that this golems know more tricks than those we fought in Kiri," Haku observed. "Better advance with caution."

"Though we shouldn't spend too much time fighting these mooks," Shisui called, as he traded blows with another tanto-wielding masked ninja. The Root ninja slashed at Shisui, but his weapon phased through him as if he was an illusion, before slowly vanishing. The real Shisui appeared from behind, and plunged his own tanto into the man's back, killing him instantly. "Danzo is probably preparing his escape as we speak."

"I sense more ninjas in the lower levels, but they're still," Karin relayed, as she directed her Mind Eye of Kagura down below. "I think they're planning a series of ambushes when we get down."

"Thus confirming that this is mere a delay," Jiraiya stated. "Half of you stay here and fight these Root agents! Everybody else, with me! Let's go downwards!"

"Don't let them advance any further!" a female Root agent cried.

"Shizune-chan, let's cover them! Time for our combo!" Shisui called.

Shizune nodded, and made a hand seal while taking her head back.

"Posion Mist!"

Her cheeks puffed before expelling a stream of purple, poisonous gas. The Root ninja immediately jumped back, careful not to let the gas even touch them. It was too late when they noticed Shisui weaving hand seals.

"Fire Release: Great Fireball Jutsu!"

Shisui breahted a fireball at the growing toxic cloud. Not too big, since he didn't need it to be large for what he was planning to do. The moment the fireball touched the purple cloud, it instantly ignited, producing a chain of explosions, making the whole underground base to shake.

"That's out chance! Now go! Go! Go!" the Hokage urged, as he dashed towards the staris that led to the lower levels, followed by several of his ninjas.

And, as expected, the moment they reached the next sublevel, they were welcomed by yet another ambush, with several Root ninjas unleashing a barrage of elemental attacks, kunai and shuriken on them, followed by several Chakra Golems charging forward. However, there was a new element that wasn't present in the previous fights: large animals made of ink.

"Sai is here!" Shikamaru pointed out. "Can you guys see him?"

"He's not fighting us directly," Ino said, as he made hand seal, in an attempt to sense him. An attempt that resulted in a success. "He's hiding in a nearby storage room. He's probably drawing and animating creatures before sending them to fight us."

"That way, he can fight and help his friends without exposing himself," Asuma deduced. "Cheeky bastard."

"I'll take care of him," Ino decided, as she started running towards the room Sai was hiding in.

"Ino, wait for us!" Choji said, as he and Shikamaru rushed after her.

"No!" the blonde replied, much to her teammates' confusion. "I want to do this alone. There's something I need to tell Sai. Plus I may be able to end this in a nonviolent way."

"Ino," Asuma said in a somewhat forewarning tone. "I know you care about Sai. But he's with the enemy, and has always been. Don't let your feelings get in the way of what has to be done."

Ino scowled, and averted her gaze, looking as if she was wrestling with conflicting feelings. Eventually, she returned her sensei's gaze.

"Don't worry, Asuma-sensei. I'm a kunoichi. I know what to do."

And Ino went to face Sai alone.

...

"Super Beast Imitation Drawing!"

As expected, Sai was sitting alone on a half empty crate inside one of the building's many storage rooms, calmly drawing pictures of various animals before bringing them to life and sending them to support his fellow Root agents.

"Sai." a voice called.

The pale boy looked up, and saw Ino glaring at him, a kunai in hand. Her eyes were glinting with anger, but she was doing an admirable job at suppressing it.

"Oh, Ino, hello," Sai said, giving her a smile. "I wasn't expecting to see you here."

"What did I told you about faking a smile, Sai? You aren't fooling anybody, much less me," the Yamanaka heiress hissed.

"This smile isn't fake. I'm smiling because I like seeing you," Sai truthfully replied, as he furled his scroll, and stood on his feet. "I enjoy and appreciate your company."

"Why, Sai? Why did you help Danzo? Why did you guys leaked intel to the Akatsuki of all people?" Ino angrily asked.

"I don't know. It's not my place to question Danzo-sama's orders," Sai replied, and Ino once again could tell he was being honest. "But if he says that it will be for Konoha's benefit in the long run, I believe him. However, I must ask: how do you know Danzo-sama was responsible for the leaks? Root's security is tight when it comes to keep our operations a secret."

"If you don't remember, Sai, I'm not just a Yamanaka, but the Clan Heiress," Ino replied. "While I wasn't as suspicious of you as others were, it took me no time to find that you were a spy. And with the Mind Fragmentation Jutsu, I was able to see and hear through your eyes and ears as if they were my own."

"That can't be true," Sai said, looking a bit confused. "A Yamanaka Root agent that's stronger than you scanned my mind after all our meetings just in case you tried something like that. He never found anything."

"Quite pretentious to assume that guy to be stronger than me, don't you think?" an annoyed Ino said, as she placed one hand on her hip. "I did tell you that it's a jutsu I created, meaning that no other Yamanaka knows about it. And I refined it so I could create a shard of my mind so small, it could go unnoticed for anybody who would try to scan your mind, unless they knew what they were looking for."

Sai smiled again. This time, it was a smile of admiration. "So, you knew that I was spying on you. And used the opportunity to turn the tables on me. Truly outstanding. I had to admit that I underestimated you, Ino."

"Why are you smiling!?" Ino screeched, her face turning red. "I pretended to be your friend, but I was just using you! Why aren't you angry at me!?"

"Why should I be? You were doing your job, nothing less, nothing more," Sai said with a shrug. "The only thing I should feel is regret for letting me fall to your tricks. But I will suppress that feeling too. After all, emotions are the enemy of the ninja."

Ino took a step backwards, his face no longer contorted with anger, but reflecting a look that was a bit of shock and pity.

"Just what they've done to you!?" Ino asked, her voice cracking with horror.

"I am a tool of Danzo-sama that he will use to shape the world into a better place," Sai replied, his cheerful demeanor, fake or otherwise, disappearing, as it was replaced by stoic determination. "And tools aren't allowed to feel emotions."

"You lie. Even if it was a farce, I refuse to believe that all the time we spent together didn't influence you in any way," Ino replied, before narrowing his eyes. "I can feel your inner turmoil. How you struggle to suppress your emotions. It has been increasingly difficult the more you got to know me, right?"

"That's not true. My emotions are in check. My mind is clear," Sai declared.

Ino shook her head, unconvinced. "Chakra doesn't lie. I'm a sensor, remember? And your chakra fluctuates in a very irregular way. Your chakra isn't that of a calm person."

"Why do you care about how I feel?" Sai asked. "I'm your enemy. A ninja doesn't show compassion to an enemy. It's illogical, and goes against common sense."

"Maybe because I'm lying to myself. Maybe because I'm a lovestruck fool. Maybe because I'm still an idiotic little girl pretending to be a kunoichi," Ino replied, shrugging. "And humans are rarely driven by logic."

"And you still plan to fight me? In that condition, you will barely be able to stand against me," Sai replied.

"Why? You may think that emotions are a ninja's enemy. But I was taught that my emotions can also be a source of strenght. When you fight to protect something you love..." Ino began, as her body slipped into a fighting stance, while her face reflected nothing but determination. "... is when a ninja's at their most powerful!"

"Very well then. I believe no more words are necessary. Now, we fight. Show me this power of yours, Ino," Sai challenged.

Ino's lips curved into a smirk. "It will be a pleasure."

True to his words, Sai didn't say anything. Instead, he pulled a smaller scroll, unfurled it, and started to draw something on it at a lightning speed pace.

"Super Beast Imitation Drawing!"

Several inky black snakes jumped out of the scroll, and quickly slithered their way towards Ino, hissing loudly as they came closer. The blonde kept calm, slowly walked back, and carefully eyed the drawn reptiles as they prepared to attack.

The moment the snakes lunged at her, Ino pulled out several shuriken from her ninja tool pouch, and tossed them. The close distance made aiming much easier, and the momentum the snakes carried made them impossible to dodge, and thus they were turned again into small puddles of ink once the shuriken hit them.

Ino then rushed forward, and her hands started weaving hand seals, just like Sai was busy drawing more pictures in his scroll. Ino finished her jutsu faster.

"Water Release: Water Gun!"

Ino's cheeks puffed, before shooting several water bullets at Sai.

"Super Beast Imitation Drawing!"

Several large dogs emerged from his scroll. However, before the dogs could leave the scroll completely, the incoming water bullets destroyed them. One of the water bullets even hit Sai in the shoulder, dropping the Root agent to one knee, while instinctively clutching the damaged spot to soothe the pain.

"You'd do well not underestimating me, Sai," Ino hissed, glowering at Sai.

The pale skinned boy stood back on his feet, and nodded. He stopped clutching his shoulder, and pulled another scroll, this one being larger.

"Of course. That was careless of my part," Sai said, as he quickly started drawing once again, his hand moving so fast it was almost a blur. "I promise I will throw at you everything I have."

Multiple ink bats emerged from the scroll, and flew at Ino in a circular formation, so the blonde wouldn't be able to destroy all of them at once. Not that Ino wasn't going to try anyway.

"Water Release: Water Gun!"

Once again, Ino started to shoot small but deadly watery projectiles at the bats, each creature hit being turned into a small puddle of ink. And the bats were small enough that the bullets kept most of their momentum after destroying once. Unfortunately, there were many of them, and spread too wide to destroy individually.

A shadow alerted Ino that the bats might be a mere distraction. Looking up for a split second, the Yamanaka Heiress saw that Sai was riding a giant bird made of ink, and the pale Root agent was still drawing more creatures to throw at her.

"Super Beast Imitation Drawing!"

Four tigers jumped from the scroll, and pounced at Ino, letting out loud roars.

" This is bad. I can't defeat him in direct combat," Ino forced herself to admit. Her hand drifted towards her ninja tool pouch, and grabbed something. "Time for a different approach then!"

Ino tossed something to the ground, which exploded on contact, followed by a burst of smoke, and a grey cloud covering the area, and most importantly, hiding her from Sai's eyes. Sai commanded his bird to vigorously flap its wings, producing a constant gust of wind. The wind quickly dispelled the cloud of smoke.

But when the smoke cleared out, Ino was nowhere to be seen, just Sai's ink tigers, confusedly looking around for their prey. The Root agent was also confused as to where Ino could have gone. That's it, until Sai, perceptive as he was, noticed what was finally wrong with the current situation. There were five ink tigers, and he had only drawn four.

"I admit, that wasn't a bad tactic, Ino," Sai said, as he began to pull five kunai. "But it ends here."

Sai tossed the five kunai at once at his ink tigers, all of them hitting the target with flawless accuracy. Four of the tigers dissolved into a puddle of ink, while the fifth one burst into smoke, revealing Ino, who was clutching the knife now stabbed into her gut, as she fell to the ground.

"Don't worry, Ino, I won't kill you," Sai softly said, as his bird descended. "But you need to surrender, otherwise I can't give you the medical help you need."

Ino, still panting and heaving, shot Sai a murderous glare, before it turned into a smirk, much to the black haired boy's confusion.

"Oh, it's YOU who'se going to be in need of medical attention!"

And Ino poofed away, leaving nothing but a burst of smoke.

"A Shadow Clone? Since when did she-?" Sai asked aloud, before realizing that something was above him. Much to his surprise, that something was Ino, who was using chakra control to stick herself to the ceiling.

Before Sai could react, Ino dropped from above. Sai was unable to move in time, and the Yamanaka heiress landed on his bird, but did so with such force, that the fabricated animal burst into multiple blots of ink, making the two ninjas fall to the ground.

Ino ignored the pain, got on her feet as fast as she could, and hobbled her way towards Sai, this was her only chance to do it.

"Mental Scourge Jutsu!"

At such close range, the jutsu didn't miss, and the pale skinned boy felt pretty to a short but intense headache. And he had seen that jutsu in action more times to know that the migraine could be the first of many if he wasn't careful.

"Alright then, let's see how well do you fight," Ino began, still panting and hurt, while she grabbed a couple kunai. "Now that you can't rely on those little scribbles of yours."

"Danzo-sama trains all his agents to be more than just one trick ponies," Sai stated, as he unsheathed his tanto. "I can still fight even if ninjutsu is no longer an option."

Ino frowned a little. Not because she knew he was speaking the truth, but because she also knew that not only was he better than her in close combat, but he made no signs of boasting. He wasn't underestimating her. Say what you want about Danzo, but the man knew how to train a ninja in order to be good at their job.

Sai dashed forward, his tanto in hand. His steps were fast and precise. Ino had to take a step back and raise a kunai to preemptively parry an incoming slash. However, before she could counterattack, Sai quickly attacked again, this time with a stab that Ino was barely able to deflect. Sai, however, managed to quickly strike Ino's wrists, knocking one of the kunai out of her hands.

"Shit!" Ino cursed, as she jumped backwards, in a vain attempt to put some distance from Sai.

"It seems that now you're realizing the mistake of engaging me in hand to hand combat," Sai calmly said, as he dashed forward once again.

As panic started to seep in, Ino's hand went to her ninja tool pouch, and grabbed another smoke bomb. She noticed it was the last one.

" I definitely need to carry more," Ino thought, as she tossed the small orb into her feet, producing a burst of smoke, followed by a cloud of blackness.

Just as expected, Sai broke his dash, and slipped into a defensive position. While the smokescreen was up, Sai would be blind while Ino could track him through her sensor abilities. A whirring sound warned him of an incoming attack, and raising his tanto, he expertly parried the four shuriken aimed at him.

" The shuriken came from there!" he thought, as he dashed towards the spot he thought Ino was. But much to his disappointment, Ino was no longer there. He could hear the faint sound of quick footsteps, but he couldn't pinpoint where they came from, other than telling him that Ino had changed her spot.

More shuriken, coming from a different spot this time. Once again, Sai prepared to block. But before he was about to do it, another whirring sound coming from behind alerted him of an attack coming from that direction. Sai quickly dropped into the floor and rolled, narrowly avoiding the steel stars.

"Two different directions, she must be using a clone," Sai deduced.

That moment, the smoke started to dispel, and the Root agent could see the shape of Ino. He didn't know if she was the real one or a clone, but he didn't care. Even if she was the clone, destroying it would make the fight easier. So wasting no time, Sai charged towards her, tanto in hand. He could see Ino grabbing more stuff from her ninja tool pouch -just how many weapons it could carry?-. He rolled into the ground just as Ino tossed him a handful of kunai, before striking her.

Sai's tanto slashed Ino's bare abdomen, resulting in a spray of blood, which confirmed that she had struck the real one instead of the clone. And indeed, he heard said clone poofing behind him. Ino stumbled backwards, and quickly started to heal her wound.

"Man, I'm going to be so pissed if this leaves a scar..." Ino grumbled, as she tried to heal her bleeding wound.

"Your attitude is rather casual for somebody who just lost a fight," Sai said, as he prepared to strike again.

"Oh, I didn't lose," Ino said, sounding incredibly sure of herself. "In fact, I just won, you just haven't seen it yet."

"You haven't lost that much blood to become delirious," Sai stated matter-of-factly. The smoke was now almost gone.

"You think so? In that case, take a look at where you're stepping," Ino said, as her eyes moved to Sai's feet.

Even if it was most likely a ruse to distract him, Sai allowed himself to take a quick look down. Ino, however, didn't attack. She didn't need to. Because much to the pale teen's horror, he was stepping onto several explosive tags in the ground. In fact, the entire floor was littered with explosive tags.

"Move one step, and you'll blow up," Ino told him while she continued healing herself. "And now you're going to tell me you have a way to counter this tactic, do you?"

That's what Sai wanted to say. But no matter what he thought, he couldn't find any solution to his problem. If he couldn't move, he couldn't defend from Ino's attacks. And given that the blonde removed his ability to use ninjutsu as well...

"So, while I was focused on finding you and blocking your ranged attacks, you were covering the floor in explosive tags," Sai guessed. "A very clever strategy."

"I may not be the strongest ninja out there. My taijutsu is so-so, and my ninjutsu is mostly suited for support rather than direct offense. However, if there's something I'm proud of being, that's being observant as hell," Ino told him. "When I use smoke bombs, I always notice that the opponent will either try to find me, or get ready for an ambush. But almost nobody takes into account that I might use the cover of the smoke to set up a trap. Now tell me, how do you plan to get out of this situation?"

"I'm afraid I have nothing," Sai admitted, dropping his tanto, and holding his hand in the air as a sign of defeat. "Rooted in a single place, I have no means to continue fighting."

"Rooted?" Ino repeated, as a small laugh escaped her mouth. "Was that a pun?"

"I found it fitting for my situation," Sai replied.

"You may not be as hopeless as I thought..." Ino said, her smile softening.

"What are you going to do with me?" Sai asked.

"I'm going to capture you. Then, I'll hand you to Hokage-sama, who will decide your fate," Ino stated, before a realization dawned upon her. "Wait, are you going to let me capture you? I thought you Root guys were ready to die before letting the enemy win."

"In the past, I would have moved and let the explosion kill me," Sai stated in a jarringly neutral tone. "But now... I don't want to. I don't want to die. Not because I'm afraid of dying but... but because I don't want to die this way. Not like this. Maybe Danzo-sama was right. I let you influence me in a much greater way than I had expected. In the end, I couldn't help but underestimate you from the very beginning. And now I pay the price."

"Don't give to despair, Sai. Life has many surprises in store for us. Some of them are good," Ino said, as she walked towards the brunet, and placed a hand on his forehead. "Sleep."

Sai dropped down instantly, with Ino quickly catching him before he could hit the floor, and carefully placed him down.

"Okay Sai, let's see what your mind hides. With some luck, Danzo might have said in your presence where did he plan to flee," Ino wondered aloud, as he placed both hands over Sai's head, and started to scry his mind. And as she had hoped, Sai's memories proved to be a treasure trove of information regarding Root and Danzo. She kept digging further and further, until she reached a certain point where she was forced to stop.

All color disappeared from her face upon hearing Danzo talk about the Operation: Rising Phoenix, and all what it entailed.

"No... no!" Ino said in horror, as she quickly got up. "This... this is bad! I have to tell Hokage-sama!"

Fortunately for her, her telepathy would allow her to contact Jiraiya immediately, and warn him about what was going on. She simply prayed it wasn't too late.

Author's Note: When I was planning this story, one of the things I wanted to do is not only stick to the six canonical couples we got at the end of the manga, but also trying to improve them and making them more believable. Sai and Ino proved to be by far the most difficult to approach. Even when I finished Part 1, I still wasn't sure what I could do with them. Fortunately, thanks to a suggestion from fellow Naruhina writer The Flare Blade (go to read his story "Because I love You: Chasing After You" if you want a good read), I was able to come up with an arc that's both relevant to the story as a whole, and impactful to their characters.

While Sai's development in canon was okay, it always bugged me that it was tied to Naruto. Naruto did become a very important person to Sai, but Sai was basically an afterthought to Naruto. I always thought that it would be much better if Sai's development was tied to that of his future wife. Plus, not everything has to revolve around Naruto, you know?

So yeah. This battle was meant to represent the crux of both their character arcs. Also, another opportunity to showcase how badass Ino can be, and that not every battle has to be won by the ninja with the most destructive jutsu.

Thanks to Ookami88 for betareading this chapter.

Like I said above, Danzo isn't going down without a fight. What is "Operation: Rising Phoenix", and how will it affect the heroes? Will Ino's warning reach them in time to stop it? Find out next chapter! In the meantime, don't forget to leave a review! reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Operation: Rising Phoenix

Author's Note: It's been a while since I did this, but I'd like to recomend a Naruto fanfic: "Why a Civilian Council is Inappropriate", by DigiXBot. I think the title is pretty self explanatory.

Many of you made guesses as of what Operation Rising Phoenix Would be. Many of you managed to get some things right and others wrong. Read the chapter and see what you managed to correctly guess. Enjoy:

Chapter 79:

Operation: Rising Phoenix

or

Cool Names to Disguise Uncool Actions

Even if Root put up a formidable resitsance, they were still unable to beat the assault led by the Hokage himself. The Root agents were strong opponents, and the Chakra Golems didn't make things any easier. But due the Konoha ninjas having both numbers and power on their side, they soon plowed through their ranks, and arrived at the lowest part of the level, where Danzo was gathering most of his troops.

"I can sense Danzo. He's at the other side of that door," Karin said, focusing her senses into the next door.

"I find it odd that he hadn't fled yet," Jiraiya pondered.

"In that case, it's obvious that he's preparing a trap, Hokage-sama," Shizune warned. "He probably knows that you're leading this attack by now, and maybe he wants to kill you and as many ninjas with you in one swift move."

"How much he's underestimating me is insulting. Still, better not let the guard down," Jiraiya said, as he nodded towards Karin. "How many people does he have with him?"

"Still quite a lot. I'm counting thirty eight, plus some golems," Karin replied, before frowning and crossing her arms. "Just how many people does he have working for him? With the amount of ninjas we fought against, you wouldn't think he'd still have this many."

"Danzo's days to run unchecked will come to an end before the day is over," Jiraiya stated. "His actions not only put one of my sons in constant danger, but he's the reason my other son is in a coma. Everybody, stand back! Shadow Clone Jutsu!"

Jiraiya created a single clone, before forming a Rasengan with one hand. The clone started to infuse the blue sphere with fire chakra, which started to expand and turn reddish yellow, almost if the Toad Sage was holding a little sun in his hand.

"Fire Release: Rasengan!"

Jiraiya slammed his fire attack into the door. The attack quickly expanded forward and exploded into a fiery inferno, which not only obliterated the door completely, but opened up a massive hole in the wall as well. Many Root ninjas who were near the wall were blown away.

As Karin had said, the room was filled with Root ninjas, a few Chakra Golems, and lastly, Danzo himself. Oddly enough, they didn't appear that they were doing anything, much less trying to escape. Jiraiya was about to order everybody to attack when Ino's voice echoed in his head.

" Everybody, stop! It's a trap!" Jiraiya heard Ino shouting inside his mind. Not only Jiraiya could hear her, but pretty much every ninja with him, as well as those who remained in the upper levels fighting Root ninja and ensuring that no reinforcements reached Danzo.

"Ino? What's going on?" Jiraiya asked.

...

Shisui and Shizune's apartment

Given that both Shisui and Shizune were taking part in the raid of Root's facilities, they had hired a team of Genin in order to watch over their kids. The mission was given to a Genin team that had graduated from the academy that very year. Given that it was such a simple task, their Jonin-sensei decided to let them on their own, and do more productive things with his time than watching over babies.

It would be a decision that would haunt him for the rest of his life.

Thankfully, both Shiro and Shizuka weren't making any ruckus. The two of them were playing with their toys in their playpen, while the Genin boredly watched TV. The monotony, however, came to an end when somebody knocked the door.

"I'll go," one of the Genin, a girl with brown hair and glasses, said as she got up and walked towards the door. "Who's-"

However, she didn't finish those words, as the door was kicked open, hurling her backwards. Two Root ninja broke into the house, the first one tossing several kunai at the brown haired girl, killing her almost instantly.

"Hey, what's going on-"

The only male of the group, a boy with brown hair, a red headband and a band-aid on his nose, was also silenced mid-sentence when a tanto slashed his throat.

"AAAAAAHHHH!" the remaining Genin, a girl with black hair tied in a ponytail, screamed loudly as she, overwhelmed by terror, jumped out of the window.

One of the Root agents was going to chase her, but he was stopped by his partner.

"Forget about her, there's no time. Let's grab the target," the Root ninja said.

His partner nodded, and the two men, after a quick search, took the two Uchiha babies, and ran away from there.

...

Rin's Apartment

Unlike most of her friends, Rin hadn't been among those called to form the large group that would raid Danzo's facilities. Jiraiya knew that Danzo had people shadowing her for obvious reasons, so he decided it was for the best to leave her out. Not only she wasn't part of the group, she wasn't even aware that such operation was taking place right now.

Again, that would be a decision Jiraiya would come to regret.

Rin had decided to use her spare time in order to do some laundry. Then, she'll head downtown and do some shopping. Not just groceries, but she also felt like indulging on a whim.

"It's been a while since the last time I had strawberry cake," Rin wondered aloud, as she folded a clean bedsheet. "I think I could make some, and bring it to Kakashi's team so we can eat it together."

When Rin turned around to grab another sheet, she found herself staring at a masked ninja. Before the girl could react, the masked ninja quickly waved his hand at her, spraying her with some sort of greenish powder.

"What... the...?" Rin slurred, as she quickly lost consciousness.

The Root ninja caught her before she could hit the ground, carried her over his shoulder, and left the scene the same way he had entered it, through an already open door.

...

Downtown Konoha

Given that team trainings were suspended until Hagane recovered, Hanabi Hyuga found herself with more spare time than usual. She often trained on her own with the Moon Acolytes in the use of the Tenseigan, but her progress had been slow at the very best.

She decided to use some of her spare time in paying a visit to her comatose teammate. On the way to the hospital, she was thinking how empty and... sterile his room looked, and thought that maybe a vase of flowers could make the place a little more livelier. Plus Hagane would appreciate the gesture once he woke up.

"Thank you, be sure to come again," the clerk, a middle aged woman with brown hair, told Hanabi. "And I sincerely hope your teammate wakes up soon."

"We all do so, Mrs. Yamanaka," Hanabi said as she exited the door. "We all do."

However, the moment the young Hyuga set a foot on the street, a dart hit her in the neck. Dropping the flowers, she immediately plucked it out of her neck, and after her battle instincts kicked in, activated her Tenseigan for potential enemies.

However, the poison the dart was coated with was fact acting, and the young Hyuga suddenly felt to the ground, motionless.

"Hanabi?" Mrs. Yamanaka, asked, as she left the counter and headed out of the shop. "Hanabi!?"

Suddenly, two masked ninja came out of nowhere, pushed Mrs. Yamanaka away, took Hanabi's unconscious body, and ran away, leaping from one roof to another.

"Those men! Somebody stop them!" Mrs. Yamanaka screamed.
"They kidnapped a girl!"

...

Konoha Hospital

Hagane's room looked as if a bomb had blown inside. Not just because an entire wall -the one that faced the street- was missing. The rest of the walls and floor were covered in dirt, crack and debris, the bed and the rest of the furniture were completely wrecked, and most importantly, the corpses of two Root ninjas laid there.

For these two ninjas, tasked with the kidnapping of Hagane, had the misfortune of running into Tsunade as they carried on with their mission. However, the fact that they decided to attack her was pure idiocy on their part, element of surprise or not. Needless to say, it had been a very short fight.

"What happened here?" A nurse asked, as she entered the room. Her eyes widened in horror when she saw its state. "Tsunade-sama!"

"It's okay," Tsunade said, turning around. She was holding Hagane's unconscious body in her arms. "I'm fine, and so is him. Those Root agents, not so much."

"What... what happened here?" the nurse asked.

"Apparently Danzo wanted to take my son as a souvenir from Konoha before leaving for good," Tsunade said. "And if I didnt' have to take care of my son, I'd give that one-eyed bastard a piece of my mind. With my fists. Guess that Jiraiya will have to do it for both."

...

Ino explained everybody what the Operation: Rising Phoenix entailed. While Danzo and his cronies escaped, half of his forces would remain in the lair in order to keep the raid division busy, while small commandos kidnapped certain individuals that would be necessary for a New Konoha: individuals with great power and potential, but young enough to be manipulated.

" Those targeted are Shiro and Shizuka Uchiha, Rin Nohara, Hanabi Hyuga, and Hagane Senju," Ino finished.

"NO!" Shisui shouted.

"Hokage-sama! We need to-" Shizune was going to say, but Jiraiya already knew what she wanted to tell him.

"Go! I'll send you reinforcements whenever I can!" Jiraiya told.

Shisui and Shizune nodded, and the two black haired ninjas quickly left the lair, undoing the path they walked to reach there.

"Wait a minute, if Danzo isn't here, who is this guy?" Shikamaru asked, drawing the attention to such fact. "An imposter? Somebody under a Transformation?"

" According to Sai's mind, it's a genjutsu," they heard Ino's voice say.

"Sharingan!" Sasuke's Bloodline Limit flared to life, but all it did was to feed his confusion. "My Sharingan doesn't notice anything!"

"I don't sense anything either! What's going on?" Karin asked.

"There's no genjutsu that can fool both the Sharingan and a sensor of my skill!"

"Actually, there is," Kurenai solemnly said, as she took a step forward, looking at the alleged Danzo in the eye. "There is a Bloodline Limit that makes genjutsu so real that your mind is unable to tell it apart from reality. Even if you're a sensor or possess a doujutsu. The bloodline of the Kurama Clan."

Suddenly, Danzo, his ninjas and chakra golems all vanished, being replaced by a single individual: somebody wearing dark brown robes, and their face obscured by an ANBU mask.

"Bravo, Kurenai-sensei. Took you long enough," the robbed figure, a woman, said in a cold but mocking tone.

"Yakumo? Is that you?" Kurenai asked. "Why are you working for Danzo?"

But the figure didn't say anything. Just raised a hand and made a hand seal, before vanishing as well as if she was never there. Several explosions rocked the place.

"Danzo was planning to bury us alive!" Jiraiya said in realization. "Everybody, out! Go, go, go!"

As the Konoha ninja present there fled the scene before the underground lair collapsed under their heads, they all realized how dangerous a foe Danzo was, and how far was he willing to go to see his goals completed.

...

The moment Hinata had heard what Ino said about Hanabi's kidnapping, she instantly shot into the sky, using the hole in the ceiling her previous attack had caused. She didn't even say anything to Naruto - though if he heard the same thing as she did, not only would he understand, but bolt to the hospital as well to check on Hagane.

Hinata frantically scanned the whole village from above, in a desperate attempt to find her little sister's chakra, but after a few minutes, she had to give up. Six Paths Chakra was incredibly potent, and through the Byakugan -or Tenseigan in her case- it shone with such intensity it was impossible to miss. Meaning that they had already taken her out of the village.

Hinata expanded her area of vision as much as she could, trying to catch a glimpse of Hanabi's chakra, but to no avail. However, even if she didn't see Hanabi, her sight caught something that merited her attention: masked ninjas moving towards the north. Not all of them walked the same routes, but it seems they had the same destination in mind.

"I don't have any other leads," Hinata said in resignation, as she focused her eyesight to the north. A feeling of hope swelled in her heart once she caught a glimpse of Hanabi's chakra. It was very weak -they had probably put chakra-dampening seals on her to prevent her escape-, but it was no mistake, that was Hanabi. "Hang on, Hanabi-chan!"

Her entire being filled with determination, Hinata shot forward, flying faster than any bird, faster than any previous time she had flown, pushing her chakra to its very limits. Such effort, however, paid off when Hinata caught the kidnappers -a group of four ninja-, one of them carrying Hanabi on his back, and the other three acting as escorts. The moment they saw Hinata zooming in, they instantly placed themselves in a defensive formation, with the man carrying Hanabi in the middle.

Hinata floated above them, her Tenseigan glinting with a dangerous light.

"I'll say this once," Hinata began, her tone cold as ice. "Leave my sister this instance, and I won't even try to capture you."

The reply to her demand came in the form of several kunai with explosive tags attached being tossed in her general direction. With a telekinetic blast, she repelled the kunai, which were flown away in different directions, before exploding a couple seconds later.

"I see you made your choice," Hinata's voice was unflinching. Her hand reached back, and pulled her collapsible chakra bow. "I'll make mine then. Lightning Release: Thunder Arrow!"

Hinata shot several arrows made of pure lightning in quick succession. The Root agents, however, were fast enough to jump in time and dodge the attack.

"Quickly, go to the meeting point!" a Root agent said, as he unsheathed two swords, and charged at Hinata. "We'll buy you some time!"

"Negative. If the hostage stays here, she'll be forced to hold back in order not to harm her," the Root agent carrying Hanabi replied. "We can use her as a human shield if needed."

"You bastards!" Hinata shouted. Her face turning red with anger.

"Very well then," another Root agent, this one wielding a kusarigama, agreed. "Though be careful. Danzo-sama won't appreciate if the girl is hurt."

"We also have an opportunity to catch another Tenseigan wielder, so let's make the most of this!" the third root agent said, as his hands flew through hand seals, before clapping his hands together. "Fire Release: Fox Fire!"

Several fireballs appeared around the Root agent in a circle. The masked ninja started to make several quick hand motions, launching the fireballs with each one. Hinata expertly dodged the incoming fiery missiles -the fact that he was floating made it even easier- but she realized of two things thanks to her Tenseigan: the first one was that the caster could control the fireballs, and those she dodged turned around and flew back at her. The second was the ninja wielding the two swords took advantage of her predicament in order to land a hit when she was wide open,.

Fortunately, the Hyuga Clan Head had a solution for both problems.

"Heavenly Spin!"

Still mid air, Hinata started to rotate, turning into a spinning sphere of chakra, which both successfully repelled the incoming fireballs, and blasted the attacking Root ninja away, his swords falling from his hands. Once she stopped spinning, she made a couple hand seals, and dived at the ninja who had used the fire jutsu.

"Lightning Release: Thunder Palm!"

Hinata was ready to strike her electricity-imbued palm into her enemy, but she was forced to abruptly stop when the man carrying Hanabi placed himself between the two of them, and hastily floated back.

"See? Told you this would give us an edge!" the man carrying Hanabi said.

As Hinata floated back, the ninja with the kusarigama tossed the iron weight of his weapon at her, which wrapped itself around her legs. Hinata was caught off guard when a sudden force pulled her down.

"I have her! Prepare the chakra suppression seals!" the Root ninja said, as he pulled Hinata down.

"That wasn't very intelligent on your part," Hinata hissed, making a single hand seal. Hinata's body started to crackle with electricity, electricity the chain transmitted, instantly shocking the ninja into unconsciousness.

"Two down, two more to go," Hinata said, as she imbued her hands with electricity again, and dived at the fire specialist.

Like it happened before, the man carrying Hanabi quickly jumped between the two of them, but this time Hinata was expecting it. Carefully measuring her movements, she dispelled the electricity of her hands as she wrapped one arm around Hanabi's waist, while pointing her other arm forward, releasing a powerful kinetic blast that both hurled the two Root ninja back, while propelling Hanabi and herself in the opposite direction.

"Good, I don't have to worry about you getting hurt anymore," Hinata said, as she gently placed Hanabi on the ground. She then turned at the two remaining Root ninja, who were getting back on her feet. Too bad for them, the fight was already over. She made several hand seals, in order to deliver the finishing blow. "Tenseigan Chakra Cloak! Truth Seeking Balls! Silver Wheel Reincarnation Explosion!"

Like she did not long ago, Hinata merged her two black orbs into a single energy sphere, which exploded into a silvery tornado that blew the two Root ninja away. Checking her surroundings to make sure there were no enemies around, Hinata quickly turned back to Hanabi, kneeled before her, and started to remove all the chakra dampening seals around her body and her eyes.

"Good, she doesn't appear to be hurt," Hinata said, as she checked her body. She noticed a small puncture in her neck. "Guess that's how they took her down. There's no way they could have defeated her in a straight combat. Anyway, I better take her back to Konoha. Sorry, Jiraiya-sama, I will rejoin the mission once my sister is safe and sound."

Hinata picked Hanabi bridal style, and flew back to the village.

...

Meanwhile, not far away from there, another group of four Root Ninjas were carrying the unconscious Rin towards their intended meeting point. Little did they know that a certain somebody was spying them. And while Danzo trained all his agents to learn to know when somebody was following or spying them, there was no way Danzo could have trained them to avoid this kind of enemy.

Because the spy was flying above them, but letting them some head start so they wouldn't see her if they looked up. She was looking at the marching group through binoculars she was holding on one hand. She used her other hand to tap an earpiece.

"Guys, target located," Fu said, her eyes fixed on the foursome. "Around three hundred meters from my position to the north."

"Good job, Fu-san," Gai's voice said from the other day. His voice sounded far more professional, and was devoid of the usual enthusiasm, but was just as energetic. "Kids, time to show these unyouthful jerks what we do with kidnappers."

"Yes sir!" other three voices choruses in unison.

"Do you guys want me to join you?" Fu asked.

"For the time being, no," Neji's voice replied, making Fu pout a little. "You're more useful watching from above. But feel free to lend us a hand if it appears that the enemy has the upper hand, or if we can't rescue Rin-san."

"Understood then. You guys want all the fun part to yourselves," Fu replied, as she went back to her binoculars. "I'll stick with the boring job."

Even if Fu hoped that the fight would be a tough one and the Close Combat Squad would be forced to call for help, it wouldn't be the case.

"Double Konoha Whirlwind!"

Gai and Lee, shining with the a faint green aura provided by the first Celestial Gate, appeared from behind the lush trees, delivering a flying roundhouse kick to a Root ninja each.

"Run!" the Root ninja carrying Rin urged. His partner nodded, and continued forward.

Unfortunately for them, Gai's team had already a plan for that.

"Manipulated Tools: Rain of Steel!"

Swords, spears and morning stars rained from above, abruptly cutting their escape, before Tenten landed in front of them, carrying two large battleaxes on both hands.

"Going somewhere?" she asked, as she took a battle stance.

The man carrying Rin took a step backwards, while the other one unsheathed a katana in order to fight Tenten. And as this happened, Neji landed besides the kidnapper, took Rin from his arms while pushing him away.

"Rin is safe! Finish them off!" Neji said, as he retreated with the still unconscious Rin in his arms.

"Very well then!" Tenten said, as she started to glow with the same aura as Gai and Lee. "Gate of Opening: Open! Raging Bladestorm!"

The two Root agents were unable to do anything to block, dodge or counter Tenten's devastating technique.

...

Not far away from there, Shisui and Shizune were leaping from one tree branch to another, in hopes of finding the ninjas who had kidnapped their children. Thankfully, Ino had already alerted the Hunter Division of the kidnappings, and decided that rescue the hostages was of higher priority than capturing Danzo and his cronies. Even then, the Uchiha couple just couldn't leave the rescue of their children to a third party.

"Danzo is so dead after this," Shisui seethed. "I don't care if Hokage-sama or anybody else thinks it's wrong or whatever. That man will die by my hand."

"Shisui," Shizune called him. "Right now, I hate Danzo as much as you do, but we should focus on getting our children first and foremost."

"They will be bringing them to him right now," Shisui reasoned. "So if we track Danzo, we'll track our children."

"Okay, makes sense..." Shizune admitted. "But do we know where is Danzo? Where are we going, by the way?"

"From what I heard the other Hunter Teams say," Shisui said, tapping his earpiece. "All the Root ninjas were heading north. So far, the only country in that direction is the Land of Sound, the former Land of the Rice Fields."

"I don't think I'm following. There's nothing of interest in that country, at least not after Orochimaru abandoned it!" Shizune replied.

After Orochimaru and his forces vacated his lair, it was deemed safe for the inhabitants of the Land of the Rice Fields to go back to their previous homes. To make sure such thing wouldn't happen again, Konoha would send teams every couple of weeks or so to check that everything was fine and the small country wasn't invaded again.

The fact that all the returning teams didn't report anything out of the ordinary meant that Orochimaru didn't return .

"Yes, but think about it. The first time we found Orochimaru's base was because his actions drew our attention. It's possible that he recovered his old base, but this time he decided to be more discreet about it," Shisui explained. "We do know Danzo and Orochimaru were close in the past, to the point that Danzo nominated Orochimaru to be the Fourth Hokage. And Orochimaru is part of the Akatsuki. It's obvious that he was the one Danzo has been selling the information to on the other jinchuriki.

"I don't think he made it his main base again. No, that one has to be somewhere else. But I'm sure he's still using it as an outpost and maybe meeting point."

Suddenly, both of their earpieces started to crack with some noise, before a voice spoke.

"Shizune? Shisui? Do any of you copy me?" a calm voice asked.

"Kakashi!" Shizune replied, recognizing his voice. "This is Shizune. Shisui is here with me as well. Any news?"

"Yeah. We've just intercepted a group of Root ninjas. After a quick fight, we defeated them. They were the ones carrying your children. Don't worry, we checked them, and they don't appear to be harmed."

Both Shisui and Shizune let out a huge sigh of relief.

"You have no idea how happy we are to hear those news, Kakashi," Shisui said, his voice recovering his usual warmth. "Remind me to buy you a drink when this is over."

"I'll be sure to check on that," Kakashi replied. "Anyway, Tamaki is going to shoot a fire jutsu into the sky. That's our position. Come here to pick your kids."

As soon as Kakashi said that, the two Uchiha saw a fireball shooting into the sky, before exploding in a shower of orange and yellow sparks. Wasting no time, the Uchiha couple headed to the direction of the improvised flare.

...

Konoha Hospital

When Naruto saw the massive hole in the hospital's front, just when Hagane's room was supposed to be, his heart sank. But upon entering the hospital and asked, he was very relieved to see that Tsunade had stopped the potential kidnapping of his adoptive brother. The blond wasted no time, and rushed to the room Tsunade had moved Hagane.

"It's a good thing that the two of you are safe," Naruto told Tsunade after greeting her.

"Yes. It's such luck I work here. It allows me to visit Hagane as much as I want. And the attack happened just when I was about to pay him a visit," Tsunade said. "Do you know something about Kaida? Was she kidnapped as well?"

Naruto shook his head. "I send a few clones to check on her. They found her in a clothing store, shopping. It seems that Danzo didn't target her for some reason."

Tsunade let out a sigh of relief. "It's good to hear that."

"Maybe because he ordered to kidnap Rin as well, who does have the Wood Release, and couldn't afford to spare people to kidnap the two of them," Naruto reasoned. "Though, speaking of Rin, I really hope that both she and the others can be rescued before they lose their tracks."

...

Forests to the North of Konoha

Danzo and eight of his ninja were resting in a small clearing they found in the forest. Well, to be fair, only Danzo was resting, sitting against a tree, while the rest of his men were watching for potential pursuers. Not that they minded, they literally lived for Danzo.

"Danzo-sama?" one of the ninjas, a woman wearing a wolf ANBU mask, walked to him. "I'm afraid I have bad news. The extraction teams failed their missions, and all the targets had been retrieved by enemy forces."

Danzo, as usual, didn't react. Or didn't make his reaction known. Either way, his body language didn't change.

"It's unfortunate, indeed, but even then, they fulfilled their purpose," Danzo cryptically said.

"I'm afraid I don't follow," the Root agent asked.

"Getting my hands on at least one of those Bloodlines would have been a major boon for my plans. However, that's not the only reason I ordered the extractions," Danzo began. "I knew that, if several high-profile Bloodline Limit carriers were kidnapped, Jiraiya would focus all his forces to their retrieval, freeing the rest of our men. Such as the ones carrying all our archives, scrolls containing secret jutsu, and the blueprints of the Uzumaki Chakra Golems."

"I see. Truly a genius strategy, sir," the female agent complimented him.

"Danzo-sama!" another of his agents shouted, jumping down from a nearby branch, landing in front of him. "We saw a flare not even a kilometer south of our position. Our pursuers are way closer than we had expected."

"In that case," Danzo said, as he picked his cane, and used it to help himself back to his feet. "They won't take long to resume the chase. We need to reach the Land of Sound before Jiraiya's forces close the gap."

"Yes, sir!"

And with that, Danzo and his men resumed their exodus.

...

To the south, Shisui and Shizune had finally met with Kakashi's team. On top of Kakashi and his students, there were more ninja present, such as Kiba's mother and sister, Tsume and Hana Inuzuka, Neji's father Hizashi Hyuga, and some other ninja they didn't recognize, though they could see all of them were suited for tracking.

"My babies!" Shizune said, as she rushed towards Hana and Tamaki, who were holding a baby each. Shizune scooped the two of them on one arm each. "Oh, I'm so glad you're okay!"

"Once again, thank you guys," Shisui softly said, as he joined his wife.

"Anyway, now that that's out of hair, shall we chase that one eyed bastard?" Tsume asked. "After pulling such a shitty stunt, I want to hack him to pieces and feed him to the clan's dogs."

"Mom!" Hana protested.

"You know I'm joking, Hana-chan," Tsume said with a dismissive hand wave. "We'd never feed our dogs something so disgusting. But yeah, harming children is a big no-no for our clan. If I get my hands on him, he won't come back in one piece."

"I agree with that sentiment. However." Shisui interjected. "I must ask you another favor, and make sure to take care of Shiro and Shizuka until this is over."

"Shisui-san? What do you mean...?" Hana asked.

"It isn't obvious? I'm going after Danzo," Shisui said, as his hands clenched into fists. "That bastard had caused enough harm to the Uchiha Clan, and this was the last straw. That man will die by my hand."

"I understand," Tsume said with a nod. "Had Danzo harm any of my kids, I would have felt the same. Don't worry, Uchiha, your pups will be fine under our care."

Shisui nodded back. "Thanks again, Tsume-san. I'll make sure to repay you for this," Shisui then turned at his wife. "You coming?"

"Do you really need to ask?" Shizune replied, as she returned her kids to Tsume and Hana. Even if it was rather odd seeing the rather mild and tame medic-nin so thirsty for blood, given the circumstances, it was understandable.

"Let the rest of us accompany you," Kakashi offered. "Chances are Danzo won't be alone. Plus you'll need us to follow his tracks."

"Very well then. Come on everybody, move!"

...

Almost a kilometer to the north, Danzo's group continued their journey towards the Land of Sound. They were mostly unperturbed, until Fuu, the Yamanaka redhead and the squad's sensor, perked up. Worried, he dashed closer to Danzo.

"Danzo-sama, a large group of ninja is coming close," the Yamanaka stated. Despite the urgency of the situation and the message, his voice was still clam. "I'm sensing some rather powerful chakra signatures among them."

Danzo took a couple seconds to process the information, and come up with a course of action.

"I see. Since all the targets had been recovered, they're focusing all their efforts in capturing me, while ignoring my other fleeing agents," the one eyed man deduced. "A sound strategy indeed."

"What should we do, Danzo-sama?" Fuu asked again.

"Diving our forces would be folly, since they'll chase whoever group I'm part of. It's very likely that they have a sensor in their group, or some specialized tracker," Danzo replied. "No, I'm afraid that the only possible solution is to delay them as much as we can in order to widen the gap. Listen everybody!"

The rest of the ninjas escorting Danzo immediately turned their attention to him.

"We're being chased by a large group of hunter-nin. It's more than likely that they'll catch on us before we can reach a safe haven. In order to do so, somebody needs to stay and delay them. Everybody except Fuu and Torune, stay here and prepare an ambush. Fuu, Torune, you shall continue with me."

"Yes, Danzo-sama!" all his ninjas chorused in unison.

...

To the south, the group of pursuers lead by Shisui and Shizune continued their chase of Danzo and their men. But mostly Danzo.

"Danzo left most of his men behind," Hizashi warned the others, his Byakugan active. "They're setting up several traps. They're planning to ambush us."

"A diversion to make sure we are unable to reach them," Kakashi quickly deduced.

"What should we do, sensei?" Tamaki asked. "Try to go around them?"

"That would make us waste time, and Danzo would gain a lead," Kakashi said, shaking his head.

"Then the other possible solution is to plow through the ambush, right?" Kiba asked. "But that's also going to delay us a lot."

"Not if we copy their strategy," Kakashi rebutted. "Danzo decided to leave some of his forces behind, so we'll do the same. Most of us will stay and take the ambush head on so the rest can continue the chase unimpeded."

Needless to say, it was obvious that those who would continue the chase would be Shisui and Shizune. The two of them quietly moved to the back of the group.

"Here they come! Get ready!" Hizashi warned. "Watch out for wires and explosive tags!"

And just like the former Branch House Hyuga warned, the hunting group was soon bombarded by a barrage of elemental jutsu, as well as a shower of kunai, shuriken, and other weapons. But they were prepared.

"Wind Release: Great Breakthrough!"

Pouring as much chakra as he could into the jutsu, Kakashi blew a powerful wind current from his mouth in order to push the incoming barrage back. Even if his attack alone was insufficient, he wasn't the only one to jump forward to take the brunt of the attack, as Hizashi and Tamaki soon followed.

"Heavenly Spin!"

"Death Steel Ring!"

The two ninja, leaving a reasonable distance from each other, started to quickly spin until they were turned into living tornadoes, deflecting most of the incoming attacks.

Following this, Shino extended his arms, and two swarm of angry beetles poured from under his sleeves, flying at the attacking Root ninja, while trying to push them to the sides.

"Shisui-san, Shizune-sensei, I created an opening. Better take it as long as I can keep it," Shino warned the couple.

"Very well then, thank you Shino-kun!" Shizune said, as she dashed past him.

"Stay safe until we return!" Shisui added.

"Shisui! Danzo may be old and retired from active duty, but he isn't a pushover!" Kakashi warned the Uchiha. "Remember that he's strong enough to be considered for the position of Hokage!"

"Don't worry, I know that!" Shisui shouted back, before he set his eyes forward. "I underestimated Danzo once. I won't make that mistake again."

...

North of Shisui's position, Danzo and his remaining two escorts continued their escape. Fuu was monitoring through his sensing abilities how the ambush was going. And while it worked as intended, it didn't throw all the pursuers off of their backs.

"Danzo-sama, the ambush has stopped most of the pursuers, but I'm afraid that two people are still chasing us," Fuu told his leader. "They're getting closer and closer with each passing moment. I doubt we'll reach the Land of Sound before they catch us."

"Just two?" Danzo asked. At the very least, they no longer had the advantage. "While fighting them might be tempting, we better not take any risks."

"Wait a minute, this chakra..." Fuu said, his eyes opening wide. "One of the two people chasing us is Shisui Uchiha!"

"Shisui Uchiha?" Danzo repeated. This changed everything. "Torune, how far are we from the Land of Sound?"

"Not much. The Valley of the End is just ahead," the masked Aburame replied.

"Very well then. That shall be our battlefield," Danzo decided.

"Danzo-sama? Are you planning to fight Shisui Uchiha?" Torune asked. While he was going to question his master's orders, he felt it was too risky to stop and fight when they were so close to their goal.

"Eight years ago, I had one of Shisui's eyes under my power, until we regretablely lost it to Akatsuki," Danzo began. "Shisui's eyes have the power to cast a genjutsu so powerful, it can control the mind of others. It's so powerful is impossible to resist, and the only known way to break it is to bring the victim to a state of near death. Now, another chance presents before us. It is imperative that we collect at least one of his Sharingan. With that power, rebuilding Root and setting Konoha straight would be a child's play."

"Very well then, Danzo-sama. What is the plan?" Fuu asked.

"We will meet them in the Valley of the End. Meanwhile, you two will keep them busy while I unseal my arm," Danzo instructed.

The two Root agents nodded.

"We won't fail you, Danzo-sama."

...

Shisui and Shizune arrived at the Valley of the End shortly after Danzo did. Oddly enough, the leader of Root and his two cronies weren't fleeing anymore. Instead, Danzo had removed his allegedly injured arm out of the cloth he used as a cast, while the other two watched. However, the moment the Uchiha couple arrived, the two underlings immediately went to face them.

"It seems that you guys finally stopped running," Shisui said, as he unsheathed his tanto. "Good, it would be kind of annoying if we had to chase you all the time."

"You will pay for you did, you monsters!" Shizune shouted.

Shisui then noticed something. "Uh... what is Danzo doing?"

And indeed, Danzo's right arm was covered in three larged golden bracers, secured with thick locks. Danzo was calmly undoing the first lock.

"I see... the bastard was hiding some sort of trump card, am I right?" Shisui asked. "And you're supposed to buy him time while he removes all those things."

"Danzo-sama won't have to sully his hands fighting the two of you if we're able to get your eyes ourselves," Torune stated.

"My eyes... so that's why you stopped. Makes sense. Oh well, you know what they say," Shisui said, as he adopted a fighting stance. "Never stop an enemy when they're making a mistake!"

And with that, the Uchiha vanished, reappearing behind Fuu, his tanto ready to strike his back.

"You're a Yamanaka, right? I don't want you messing with our minds! You go down first!" Shisui said as he attacked.

However, his tanto clashed against another one, as Torune had parried Shisui's strike just in the nick of time, allowing Fuu to move away from him. As Shisui vanished again, Shizune leaped at them, her hands forming a seal, and her cheeks puffed.

"Poison Mist!"

Shizune exhaled a massive cloud of purple gas, forcing the Root operatives, and even the nearby Danzo, to jump away from the incoming hazard. That moment, Shisui reappeared behind the fleeing Root agents, his hands weaving seals at an imperceptible speed.

"There's no way you can escape from this!" Shisui said, as he finished the seal sequence. "Fire Release: Great Fireball Jutsu!"

Shisui exhaled a massive fireball at the Root agents, sandwiching them between the flaming attack and his wife's poison mist. The two attacks soon collided, resulting in a massive explosion. The Uchiha then reappeared alongside Shizune.

"We had a good combo there," Shizune pointed out. "Do you think it was enough?"

When the smoke and steam raised by the explosion dispelled, a pair of charred logs were floating in the water.

"I'm afraid it isn't," Shisui said, as he tensed up.

"Fuu, Torune!" Danzo called, as he started to undo the second lock. "Stop fooling around. As long as you don't damage his eyes, everything is fine. Use your best jutsu. Especially you, Torune."

"As you order, Danzo-sama!" the two of them replied at the same time.

Emerging from underwater, the two Root ninjas charged at the Uchiha couple, with Torune oddly enough undressing as he ran. Fuu pulled out several kunai with explosive tags attached on them, jumped and tossed them at the Uchiha couple. Shizune's answered this by making a chain of hand seals.

"Water Release: Water Wall!"

The water beneath their feet started to shake, as a barrier of water emerged in front of the two, blocking the kunai, followed by a chain of explosions, which created yet another cloud of steam. And from said cloud of steam, Fuu appeared, tanto readied to skewer the Uchiha. Shisui's Sharingan started to spin, and as if everything moved in slow motion, expertly dodged the thrust, before slashing Fuu's own throat. However, rather than blood, water started to pour from the wound, before the alleged Fuu burst into water.

"A decoy!" Shisui realized too late.

A splash from the back alerted them from the ambush, and saw Torune, not wearing any clothes from the waist up, charging at them, whose entire skin had turned purple for no reason, both arms extended as if trying to grab them, rather than punching them. Acting purely on instinct, Shisui grabbed Shizune's hand, made a hand seal with the other, and Body Flickered several meters away to put some distance.

Which is what Fuu was expecting.

"Mental Scourge Jutsu!"

Shisui felt a short but very painful and throbbing migraine assaulting his brain. A feeling of uneasiness washed upon him.

"What... what the hell was that?" Shisui asked, feeling a bit dizzy.

"Damn, I know that jutsu. The Mental Scourge is a Yamanaka Clan jutsu that prevents the target from using ninjutsu," Shizune explained. "It doesn't last forever, but usually last long enough for the caster to finish the battle by then."

"And if I try to use ninjutsu..." Shisui began.

"You'll feel like your head will explode," Shizune finished.

"Fine. I see, no ninjutsu then. I'll have to get creative," Shisui stated.

"Then get those creative juices flowing, because they're coming!" Shizune warned, as Fuu and Torune were once again charging at them.

"Very well then. Given that ninjutsu is not an option, I'll take them head on, and try to create an opening for you to exploit," Shisui told the medic-nin.

"Got it!" Shizune nodded.

"Also, make sure the masked guy doesn't touch you," Shisui warned. "His skin is covered in million upon millions of diminute beetles. I don't know what they do, but better not to take any risks."

"The Sharingan is sure something, to see the secret of my trump card with a mere glance," Torune said. "Not that it will help you in the long run!"

Shisui dashed forwards towards the incoming ninjas. His tanto clashed against Fuu's, and while they were locked, Torune took advantage of the moment in order to punch Shisui. Shizune, however, intervened just in time by delivering a double kick into Torune's face, hurling him backwards.

"SHIZUNE, TAKE OFF YOUR SHOES, NOW!" Shisui yelled. "But try not to touch them!"

Not wasting any time to ask why, Shizune quickly kicked her shoes out of her feet, making sure not to touch them with any other part of her body.

" I thought we'd be safe if our skin remained untouched, but it seems they can propagate through inorganic matter as well," Shisui thought, as his Sharingan stared at the sinking sandals. If it wasn't for his Bloodline Limit, his wife would pretty much be dead now.

Fuu snapped him out of his brief thoughts when he attacked again

" They seem to be entirely focused on Shisui. Better for me then!" Shizune thought, as she pulled three senbon, and tossed them at Fuu, who was forced to disengage Shisui in order to deflect the attack. Shizune decided not to give them a moment to breathe, and his hands started to form hand seals. "Water Release: Water Dragon Jutsu!"

The water around them started to gather and formed a massive serpentine dragon. Letting out a distorted roar, the dragon lunged at the two Root ninjas, who once again where forced to jump back.

"With all these water around, somebody with a water affinity has the advantage," Torune mentioned. "We won't be able to touch Shisui as long as his wife is defending him."

"In hindsight, this was a poor choice for a battlefield," Fuu observed. "What shall we do? Should we try to take her out first?"

"No, even without ninjutsu, Shisui is still the more dangerous of the two. We should neutralize him before your jutsu wears off," Torune replied. "Then, there shouldn't be any problem taking care of Shizune."

"Shisui it is, then. But we'll have to make sure Shizune doesn't jump on us like she's been doing so far," Fuu replied.

"Leave that to me," Torune said, as he clapped his hands together. Upon separating then, a dark purple gaseous mass started to form, growing bigger by each second. "Make sure you don't touch this: Poison Cloud Jutsu!"

Torune blew the cloud forward, creating a smokescreen that quickly advanced towards the Uchiha couple, which were forced to take a few steps backwards.

"Shizune, I have a plan to take them out," Shisui said. "It's kind of risky, and we need to split up for it to work."

"Don't worry, whatever you have thought, I trust you," Shizune replied. "You're thinking in running around the cloud, right?"

"Jackpot. You go to the right, and I'll go to the left. Make sure to strike when the opportunity arrives," Shisui instructed.

"Understood."

The Uchiha couple took different directions, surrounding the expanding swarm of microscopic beetles from opposite sides. Even if they couldn't be seen, Fuu was able to sense their positions and from where they were coming.

"Torune, here they come!" Fuu warned.

The first one to appear was Shisui, holding several shuriken in both hands, which he tossed at Torune. The Aburame jumped backwards, as he skillfully deflected all the steel stars with several swipes of his tanto.

"And here's Shizune," Fuu said, just as the black haired medic-nin made her presence known.

Shizune rolled up her sleeve, revealing her wrist mounted senbon launcher, which fired multiple needles at the Yamanaka Root agent, who, like his partner before, also deflected with his tanto while jumping backwards. Both Fuu and Torune noticed that Shisui and Shizune were pushing them against each other, and thus made sure to keep their distance.

"So, this is your plan? Getting me to accidentally infect Fuu with my rinkaichu?" Torune asked. "Not bad, but it's not going to work. Our teamwork has been honed over years of training and doing missions together. I know how to fight without endangering him."

"Yeah, that was our plan," Shisui admitted. "And even if you caught up, it was too late."

Shisui then motioned both hands in opposite directions, much to Torune's confusion, upon he saw a faint light flicker around them.

"This is..." Torune said in realization. "Fuu, watch out!"

But like Shisui said, it was too late. The shuriken Shisui had tossed a moment ago had ninja wire attached to them. With that quick motion, Shisui maneuvered the shuriken to move around Fuu, tying the ninja wire against him.

"Damn!" Fuu cursed, as the ninja wire immobilized him.

"Shizune, now!" Shisui shouted.

The medic-nin already charged at the immobilized Yamanaka, and delivering a flying kick to the chest that sent him into the air, helped by Shisui pulling him as well. Torune was unable to move in time, and the orange haired man crashed into him. Even if they only touched for less than a second, it was already enough. Multiple purple spots appeared around Fuu, which started to grow as the beetles devoured his flesh and chakra, and used them to breed at an alarming rate.

"AAAAAAAARRGH!" Fuu screamed, as he futilely tried to wipe the tiny insects away from his body. With each passing second, the pain was becoming more and more unbearable.

"Fuu, hold on!" Torune said, as she rushed towards his fallen teammate.

However, before he could help him, Shizune landed in front of him, making a splash when her feet touched the water. Two kunai appeared in each of her hands, and started to deliver quick swipes at the Root agent, trying to keep him away from the agonizing Yamanaka.

"Get out of the way!" Torune desperately shouted, as he countered Shizune's attacks with blows of his own. Unfortunately, in his urge to help his partner, he had taken his eyes from Shisui, and that moment of distraction is all what the Uchiha needed to dash and plunge his tanto into the Aburame's back, piercing his heart. "Urk..."

Unlike Fuu, Torune's death was quick and painless. Wordlessly, Shisui walked towards the still agonizing Fuu, and quickly stabbed his tanto into the Yamanaka's chest, putting an end to his misery.

"Okay, done," Shizune said, panting a little. "Well done."

"Thanks. They thought they could beat me if they cut me off of my jutsu. But this is what happens when you underestimate the Uchiha clan," Shisui replied, as he turned his head towards the last remaining enemy. "Now, time to end Root forever."

Fortunately for Danzo, his minions had bought him enough time to undo all the locks protecting his right arm. Not to mention that they had wore Shisui and Shizune down a little, making the upcoming fight easier.

"Fuu and Torune were two of my best agents," Danzo replied, as the last bracer fell down, revealing a bandaged arm. "Finding suitable replacements is going to take quite some time and effort."

"Guess that you don't care about the lives that had been lost here, do you?" Shisui spat. "You only see them as tools you can replace."

"Ninjas are nothing but tools, Shisui. All of us," Danzo said, as he started to unwrap the bandages of his arm. "However, if I can take your eyes, their deaths won't be in vain."

Both Shisui and Shizune's eyes grew wide open after most of the bandages were removed, revealing Danzo's right arm. It was much paler than the rest of his skin, but the most horrifying part was the multiple Sharingan eyes on it. Danzo also removed the bandages covering his right eye, revealing yet another Sharingan.

"Now, let's begin."

Author's Notes: We're reaching the climax of the Root Arc, and boy, I'm really excited. Next chapter, Shisui & Shizune versus Danzo! Will the Uchiha pay Danzo back for stealing his eye shortly before the Uchiha Insurrection? Or will Danzo succeed where he failed a few years ago? Let's say that this is a fight I've been planning to write pretty much since the beginning of the story, and I'm so glad that we're so close to that part.

Now you had it. Operation: Rising Phoenix involved kidnapping several young individuals with powerful Bloodline Limits. While Danzo also used them as a distraction, he was hoping to get his hands on at least one of those kids. That's why, even if it might look dumb, Danzo decided to stay and fight Shisui when he heard he was only accompanied by Shizune. The man refuses to go away with his hands empty.

You know, I was originally planning to end the last chapter with the montage of the kids being kidnapped, but I decided against it since most readers would get mad at me making it appear as if the bad guys were going to get another win on Konoha again . By the way, the trio of Genin that were taking care of Shiro and Shizune are a reference to other anime, in both their appearance and the way they die. Let's see if you guys can guess which one ;)

Like many of you guessed (not that it wasn't obvious) Yakumo Kurama wasn't dead. Danzo's agents abducted her, and he turned her into one of his puppet agents. Thanks to reviewer AzureTemplar who suggested this idea after my first attempt at introducing Yakumo in the story failed.

Thanks to Ookamii88 for betareading the chapter.

Next chapter, Shisui and Shizune versus Danzo! Are you excited for this fight? Because I surely am! In the meantime, leave a review with your thoughts on this chapter and your predictions on the next! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

Revenge of the Uchiha

Author's Note: Gotta say, I was surprised how many viewers were claiming for Danzo's blood, mostly I wasn't even trying to make readers hate him (I wasn't trying to make them like him either), I was just trying to write him as faithful to canon as possible. Though guess that "faithful to canon" on this instance means that readers will be claiming for his blood.

Anyway, enjoy the chapter:

Chapter 80:

Revenge of the Uchiha

or

Control Zed

Valley of the End

Shisui and Shizune stared wide eyed at Danzo's right arm, its many Sharingan eyes wiggling and moving around, as if trying to scan the surroundings. Not that Danzo could see through them, since those eyes weren't connected to the brain via nerve cords.

"Just... what the...?" Shizune mumbled, as she tried to shake off the shock.

"You just weren't happy with letting me stop the Uchiha Insurrection," Shisui seethed, his hands clenching into fists. "You just had to desecrate their bodies for more power, didn't you?"

"I just let Konoha see the Uchiha for what they truly are, savages who let their emotions run wild and unchecked," Danzo replied, sounding as stoic as ever. "A ninja should never let their emotions get in the way, they're nothing but a distraction, an obstacle to overcome."

"For your apparent dislike of the Uchiha, you seem to like the Sharingan quite a lot," Shizune pointed out.

"It would be quite illogical to discard it," Danzo flatly replied. "The Sharingan is one of the most powerful Bloodline Limits in existence. If only there was a way to harvest such power without having to deal with the Uchiha and their many flaws... that's why I tried to take your children with me. Those kids are still young and malleable. They could be raised into the perfect ninjas, which would also serve as the foundation of a new and improved Uchiha Clan. A new generation of Sharingan-wielding ninjas that wouldn't be corrupted by emotions and would live and die for Konoha."

"You... you're sick!" Shizune shouted. "How can you talk in such way? Strip children of their humanity in order to turn them into living weapons! Treating ninjas as nothing but tools!"

"Ninjas are nothing but tools," Danzo insisted. "The moment we wear a forehead protector, we become the tools that will protect Konoha and slay its enemies, and sacrifice for Konoha if the need arises. A tool can't have room for emotions or loved ones. And the moment a tool can no longer be used, it must be discarded and replaced by something new. That's the way of the ninja."

"Your way, maybe," Shisui replied.

"One doesn't need to be a genius to see that you two are angry with me to the point of hatred," Danzo stated. "And that's why you're going to lose. You let your emotions guide your actions. You may think that they're a source of power, but the power they can grant is very finite. Nothing compared to what discipline and determination can bring."

"How can you say you protect Konoha, if you don't have loved ones? If you don't allow yourself to love? How can you be motivated to do what you do, if in the end all you're doing is protecting people that mean nothing to you at all?"

"That's an egotistical point of view," Danzo replied, shaking his head. "So, you only protect Konoha because it benefits a few people who are close to you? I don't need to have bonds to do what is right."

"And what about the information leak to the Akatsuki?" Shizune brought up, pointing an accusatory finger at him. "How can you claim that it was for the good of Konoha?"

"The Akatsuki are merely tools that can be used and manipulated for our sake. By hunting jinchuriki, they deprive the other villages of their power," Danzo explained.

"And how is letting the Akatsuki get their hands on them any better? They have six Tailed Beasts captured, for Kami's sake!" Shisui pointed out, though he left out one half of the Nine Tails. "Do you know how much harm can they do should they decide to unleash them?"

"Akatsuki might have the means to control the beasts, but so do we. Once Akatsuki captures all seven foreign jinchuriki, all we need to do is assault their base in Amegakure," Danzo said. Seeing Shisui and Shizune's confusion and shock, he decided to elaborate. "Jiraya's spies got multiple hints that lead to the leader of Akatsuki being in control of Amegakure, so that's where the captive Tailed Beasts must be held. All we need to do is destroy Ame, take the Tailed Beasts for ourselves... and then Konoha shall reign supreme over the elemental nations."

"You're sick," Shizune hissed. "No wonder you were always passed over for the title of Hokage."

"I will always do what's best for Konoha," Danzo defended. "No matter how other people see me or my ideas, I will always do what is right."

"Nothing you ever did could be considered as 'right' under any sane morality system," Shisui spat. "But trying to kidnap our children... you're not getting out of this alive."

"I see you're talking a lot, but so far, you didn't make any move," Danzo replied. "Or do you hope to take me down with your words alone?"

"No, I was merely stalling for time," Shisui replied. He let out a sigh of relief. As he shot Danzo a bright smile. "And... there. I'm no longer under the effect of that Yamanaka jutsu that stopped me from using my own. Thanks for patiently waiting until the effect wore off."

Danzo emoted for the first time that day, as a scowl developed in his face. "You cheeky bastard. You're a strong ninja, I'll give you that. But unfortunately, your eyes are the only part of you worth salvaging."

"Yes, I believe that time for words have passed," Shisui said, as his smile disappeared, replaced by a look of subdued anger, his Sharingan glinting with a red light. "Now it's time for you to suffer just retribution for all the Uchiha you indirectly killed, as well as kidnapping my children!"

All who met Shisui Uchiha would describe him as an anomaly. While most of the Uchiha clan members -back in the time when the clan boasted more than a hundred ninja- used to grow either prideful, violent or reserved, often believed due the Sharingan's influence. Shisui, however, was neither. He was a ball of sunshine, always smiling, cracking jokes, greeting politely everyone, even strangers, willing to support others when they were at their lowest, always willing to forgive and forget anybody who had wronged him.

People said he was the light that shone in a clan engulfed by darkness. One of the few Uchiha who rejected the hatred that cursed their clan, and embraced the Will of Fire that represented Konoha.

Today, however, Shisui wasn't like that. There wouldn't be any mercy nor forgiveness. Just this time, Shisui would embrace the darkness and the hatred that coursed through the veins of any Uchiha. He wasn't worried, for he trusted his wife would snap him to his senses if he delved too much into the darkness. Still, it would be better to end this as quickly as possible.

Reaching into his ninja tool pouch, Shisui grabbed a pair of smoke bombs and tossed them forward, creating a huge cloud of smoke, while Danzo made three hand seals. His Sharingan impaired, Shisui used the Body Flicker to appear behind him, and sank his tanto into his back, making sure to pierce his heart. Not finished, he pulled the tanto with one hand as he made hand seals with the other.

"Fire Release: Burning Edge!"

The blade of his tanto was covered in a cloak of flames. Spinning over his heels, Shisui delivered an horizontal slash at Danzo's neck, cleanly separating his head from his body, who fell forward with a thud.

"Nobody shall suffer for your machinations anymore, Danzo," Shisui told his enemy's corpse.

Shisui put off the fire of his blade, before sheathing it back, as he walked towards Shizune.

"Man, that was easier than I thought. His minions were a far greater challenge," Shisui said, sounding rather cheerful. "Guess his age wore him down far more than the Third..."

Suddenly, Shizune's expression was one of horror, much to the Uchiha's confusion.

"SHISUI, WATCH OUT!"

The Uchiha instinctively turned around, and his eyes caught sight of Danzo, his head still attached to his body, ready to thrust a kunai into him. Thankfully, he still had enough time to unsheath his tanto and parry the swipe before it could touch his skin.

Shizune rushed forward, making hand seals.

"Water Release: Water Gun!"

Shizune jumped into the air, her cheeks puffing, before expelling from her mouth multiple water bullets at the leader of Root, who disengaged Shisui and jumped backwards several times in order to dodge the attack. Shisui quickly rejoined his wife.

"Just... what the hell happened?" Shisui asked. "I swore I killed Danzo!"

"Maybe a clone? Or a genjutsu?" Shizune offered, being just as confused as her husband.

Shisui shook his head. "Clones immediately dispel or break down the moment they take fatal damage. And I doubt that Danzo can put me under a genjutsu. Besides, you saw me killing him as well, right?"

"Yes," Shizune replied. "You killed Danzo and then... his body disappeared and reappeared behind you, completely unharmed."

"Save the three of us the bother of a battle, and surrender already," Danzo offered. "Do it, and I promise the woman will live."

"You're far more senile than I thought if you think we're going to surrender!" Shizune shouted.

"Come Shizune-chan. Let's attack together. We need to find out whatever's that jutsu!" Shisui said, as he charged forwards.

"I'm right behind you!" Shizune said, running as well.

Danzo was as nonplussed as ever, though one could see a little of his annoyance. It made Shisui even angrier, the fact that the Root leader wasn't even taking this fight seriously. However, as they charged, Danzo brought his hands together and started to weave hand seals. Shisui immediately recognized those seals.

"Shizune-chan, scatter!" Shisui warned, as he rushed to the left.

Shizune nodded and headed into the opposite direction, just as Danzo was about to fire his jutsu.

"Wind Release: Vacuum Bullets!"

Danzo spat multiple air bullets in a wide range, trying to hit both Shisui and Shizune, though mostly the former. Thanks to his Sharingan, Shisui was able to pinpoint their trajectory and gracefully dodge all of them, while making several hand seals of his own.

"Fire Release: Phoenix Sage Fire Jutsu!"

Shisui expelled multiple fireballs at Danzo in return. Danzo, however, also had a Sharingan, which allowed him to easily dodge them. However, he was so focused on Shisui, he didn't notice Shizune getting close to him, preparing a jutsu of her own.

"Posion Mist!"

Once again, Shizune cast her signature jutsu, expelling a purple cloud of toxic gas that quickly engulfed Danzo. However, even if the Root leader held his breath in time, Shisui's fireballs ignited the poisonous cloud, resulting in a massive explosion. Shizune and Shisui quickly jumped back, landing near each other.

"Did that get him? Or did he escape again?" Shizune asked, frantically looking around.

"My Sharingan saw him being incinerated by the explosion," Shisui said, as his eyes wandered around, trying to look for Danzo. "I wouldn't count him out yet."

They both were warned by a loud whirring sound coming towards them. Turning towards the direction of the sound, they saw two shuriken flying at them. The shuriken were engulfed by several blades made of pure wind.

"Shit!" Shisui cursed, as he and Shizune jumped in opposite directions once again.

And once again, the attacks were aimed at Shisui. Unfortunately for the Uchiha, his Sharingan didn't catch them in time, and was unable to dodge it completely. Even if he dodged the shuriken themselves, their wind aura slashed his side, resulting in a stream of blood coming from it.

"ARGH!" Shisui shouted, as he took his hand to his wound.

"SHISUI!" Shizune screamed, rushing towards him.

"Wind Release: Vacuum Blade!"

Danzo, who was a few meters in the direction the shuriken came from, held another two shuriken in his hands. He infused them with wind chakra from his mouth, enveloping them in a razor wind aura, before tossing them again. Shizune's hands weaved seals as fast as her dexterity allowed her.

"Water Release: Water Wall!"

Using the water of the valley, a thick watery barrier emerged between the shuriken and herself. The wind-enhanced shuriken tried to force their way through the barrier, forcing Shizune to pour more chakra into her jutsu, until Danzo's attack was finally repelled.

"Phew..." Shizune sighed in relief. But her relief was short lived when, through the corner of her eye, saw Danzo rushing towards the now defenseless Shisui. "Oh shit! This was just a distraction!"

Danzo reached Shisui, and catching him by the neck in a very strong grip. The Uchiha coughed blood.

"Now, time to recover what should be mine," Danzo calmly said, as his other hand shot at Shisui's eye, his fingers curved as if they were claws.

However, before he could grab Shisui, Shizune appeared besides them, and grabbed Danzo's arm before he could gouge her husband's eye.

"You won't touch him!" Shizune yelled, before slapping an explosive seal on Danzo's back, and sending him flying with a well placed kick to the chest. While he was in the air, Shizune detonated the explosive tag, blowing Danzo's body to bits. With the Root leader out the way, for the time being, Shizune directed all her attention to her husband. "Shisui, are you okay?"

"I've been better," Shisui said, coughing more blood. "Thanks. That's the second time you saved my ass."

Shizune didn't say anything, pulled a kunai, and used it to cut Shisui's shirt, leaving him completely exposed from the waist up.

"Heh... not that I don't love it, but I'm afraid that this isn't the best moment to get intimate..." Shisui replied.

"Shut up, you dummy. I needed the clothes out of the way if I'm to treat your wounds," Shizune said, as she placed her hands on his slash wound, which started to glow with a green light.

Relief washed over Shisui's body as the healing chakra slowly but surely repaired the damage done to his body, as well as replenishing some of his energy and chakra. Then, Danzo reappeared a few meters in front of them as if he was a ghost, once again completely unharmed. He brought his hands together, making a hand seal.

"Release!"

Shisui's Sharingan noticed how Danzo's chakra changed. Did he thought that Shisui had put him under a genjutsu? Well, maybe he should have, given that ninjutsu wasn't giving them any results.

"Shizune-chan, hurry, I don't think he's going to stay there and let you heal me," Shisui urged his wife.

"Just a second!" Shizune told him, as he finished healing the injury.

But much to Shisui's confusion, Danzo did not attack. He just stayed there, slowly breathing in and out, as if trying to regain his energy.

"And... done!" Shizune said, removing her hands from her husband's exposed torso. "Just try to make sure you're not hit on that spot again."

Despite the medic-nin's warning, Shisui had the feeling that Danzo would focus on that area the most. Speaking of Danzo, Shisui noticed something about him. Or better said, his arm. Two of his Sharingan were closed. It was then when a realization dawned upon him with the power of an avalanche.

"Of course! How didn't I realize what he was using," Shisui said in realization. "All those Sharingan... it makes perfect sense now. Tell me Danzo, how do you know about Izanagi?"

"You kid have no idea of all the things I know about. Especially about your clan," Danzo replied. "And if you knew what I know, you'd surrender your eyes to me without further resistance."

"Izanagi?" Shizune asked.

"It's an Uchiha Forbidden Jutsu," Shisui began. "It's a bit hard to explain. Once activated, as long as it lasts, the caster pretty much becomes a genjutsu."

"Uh? How does that work?"

"Another way to explain it is a jutsu that allows the caster to manipulate reality, allowing him to decide what is real and what is not," Shisui explained. "If the user suffers a crippling or fatal injury, he can simply turn that injury into an illusion, negating it."

"Wow..." Shizune was amazed. How a jutsu so powerful could exist? "Please tell me there's a way to counter it. Because if Danzo can use that jutsu indefinitely..."

"Don't worry, he can't," Shisui said, much to Shizune's relief. "The jutsu lasts about a minute, give or take, and once the time runs out, the caster of the jutsu loses a Sharingan permanently."

"I see. That explains why some of Danzo's Sharingan are closed," Shizune observed.

"Yes, but he still has plenty to spare. Though, another of the jutsu's drawback is that consumes a lot of chakra. Danzo must have quite the impressive..." Shisui's words died in his mouth another realization hit him. "Wait, that hand seal... he wasn't trying to undo a genjutsu! He undid the Izanagi in order to conserve his chakra!"

"It also begets the question on how he's able to sustain those many Sharingan without Six Paths chakra," Shizune noted. "Kakashi is in the prime of his life, and just one leaves him pretty winded."

"It doesn't matter!" Shisui said, as he grabbed his tanto, charging forwards. "Quickly, before he reactivates his jutsu again!"

"Too slow," Danzo said, as he started to make hand seals, even if they weren't those of the Izanagi. "As for young Shizune's inquiry... I think this may hint her towards the answer. Wood Release: Nativity of a World of Trees!"

The valley started to rumble, and from the water below around them multiple trees started to emerge, forcing the Uchiha couple to abort their attack.

"The hell? He can use Wood Release too!?" Shisui asked in shock, looking around at the growing trees. "Just how many Bloodline limits did this guy steal and graft into himself?"

"Just those that matter," Danzo calmly replied.

"The Tailed Beasts," Shizune said in realization. "That's why he wants to get their hands on them. With Wood Release, he'll be able to put them under his control, like Hashirama did decades ago. And I believe the Sharingan serve a similar purpose."

"Very clever, Shizune. A mostly astute observation. Not that it changed anything," Danzo replied. "Now please die, both of you."

Danzo made another hand seal, and the trees and roots all shot towards the Uchiha couple. An attack from so many directions would be impossible to dodge. There was only one thing Shisui could do.

"Shizune!" Shisui shouted, pulling his wife towards him, and wrapping his arms around her in a protective manner, before the two of them were buried under an avalanche of green.

Even if Shisui and Shizune had no way of knowing it, this was the first time Danzo used Wood Release in actual combat. He obviously trained it in secret, but never used a jutsu of such magnitude. Orochimaru splicing his genes with those of the First Hokage gave him a physical boost, but was unable to control Wood Release properly.

That changed, however, when Sai brought Rin's severed finger. Analyzing the finger, the Root scientists found out that the way Rin's DNA was combined with that of Hashirama was way superior to anything Orochimaru attempted. And with sample of flesh, blood and bone tissue, his scientists were able to tweak Orochimaru's body modifications in order to made them more stable. This finally allowed Danzo to use and control Wood Release.

Indeed, sending Sai alongisde the group that went to aid the Kirigakure rebels was one of the best decisions he ever made.

"That should be it," Danzo said, allowing himself to breathe in relief. He calmly walked towards the spot where Shisui and Shizune had been. That jutsu had cost him some precious chakra, but thankfully it had been worth it. Plus it was better than sacrificing more Sharingan with Izanagi. Better finish the fight now before more of Shisui's allies could show up. Danzo knew he could beat the Uchiha, even with Tsunade's protégé supporting him, but his odds wouldn't be that good if more people joined the fray. He knew for sure none of his men would walk near the valley. "Hopefully, at least one of the eyes is still intact..."

As Danzo prepared to remove the vines, something burst from underground, much to the elder's surprise. Shisui and Shizune, wrapped around each other's arms and any worse for the wear, were inside what appeared to be a giant ghostly green ribcage. An equally large skeleton formed around the ribcage, before it generated skin and muscles, and finally, armor.

"What the...?" Danzo mumbled, as he was forced to jump backwards.

"You aren't the only one with a hidden surprise, you son of a bitch!" Shisui angrily shouted. A drill-like spear appeared on the construct's right arm, and thrust it at him. "Now die already!"

" Dammit, no time to reactivate the Izanagi!" Danzo distressingly thought. "This is my only chance to survive!"

Suddenly, a massive tree emerged from Danzo's chest, tearing his white shirt to pieces, and sucessfully stopping the incoming spear attack. Danzo detached himself from the tree, as he landed a few meters behind.

"Don't let him reactivate the jutsu!" Shizune urged him.

Shisui nodded, and made a hand seal. "Susanoo: Tsukumo!"

Shisui's construct fired a barrage of green glowing chakra stakes at Danzo, but sadly, it wasn't fast enough, and the Root leader quickly made the three hand seals in order to reactivate Izanagi. Many of the missiles pierced him, but Danzo simply disappeared, before reappearing completely unharmed.

"I didn't know you could use Susanoo," Danzo commented. "I knew Itachi and Sasuke could use it, but I didn't even cross my mind that you had access to it as well, despite having two Mangekyo Sharingan. Such an oversight almost costed me dearly."

"Yeah well, like I said, don't presume that you know everything about me," Shisui spat. "you're about to- ARGH!"

Shisui fell to one knee, and started to cough blood again. His Susanoo quickly disappeared, as the Uchiha reached for his eyes.

"Shisui!" Shizune shouted, kneeling besides him.

"I'm... I'm okay," Shisui weakly said. "I forgot how much chakra this shit consumes. I don't think I'll be able to do this again."

"I don't understand... Sasuke-kun doesn't have this problem when using his Susanoo..." Shizune pointed out.

"Sasuke has an Eternal Mangekyo Sharingan, which reduces the Susanoo's chakra cost to negligible levels. Plus he has a better hang of this power than I do. I only used it once before, and it was even before we started to date," Shisui explained.

"I see. Anyway, let's not despair," Shizune said, as she applied the Mystical Palm Jutsu to Shisui once again, while also helping him back on his feet. "I have faith that we can win this."

"You're grossly underestimating me, Shizune-san," Danzo replied. "I'm sure you think that, because you were trained by Tsunade, that alone gives you an edge over me. Her grandmother and Hashirama-sama's wife, Mito Uzumaki, was my Jonin-sensei."

"With all respect to Mito-sama, she did a piss poor job with you then," Shizui angrily spat.

"I'm afraid that yes, I quite never lived up to her expectations in certain areas. But that's irrelevant now," Danzo said, while making more hand seals. "Wood Release: Acid Spore Cannon!"

The water started to shake again, and a single, large green vine emerged from down below. Said vine was crowned by a large flower. The flower opened its petals, and fired a greenish yellow blob at the Uchiha couple.

"Jump!" Shizune shouted.

Both she and Shisui jumped in opposite directions. The missile crashed against the vines they were standing on until then, exploding into a yellow cloud. With a hissing sound, the concentrated corrosive spores quickly consumed them.

The flower continued firing its acid projectiles at Shisui, while ignoring Shizune. While this forced Shisui into the defensive, it gave Shizune a chance to counterattack. She quickly formed several hand seals.

"Water Release: Water Severing Wave!"

Shizune expelled from her mouth an extremely thin, extremely pressurized stream of water towards the vine, cleanly cutting it in half.

"Good job, Shizune-chan!"

"You have an awful habit of declaring victory way ahead of time," Danzo commented.

Danzo's statement was followed by three more flowers emerging from underwater, with two of them firing at Shisui, and the third one focusing on Shizune. The two of them dodges the acid projectiles while trying to get close to Danzo, but found it increasingly difficult to do so.

"Shit, this guy caught on, and is preventing Shizune-chan and I from fighting together!" Shisui thought, as he tried his best to dodge the corrosive missiles, which were fired at an increasingly faster pace. "However, I think I have an idea of what will be Danzo's next move..."

Shisui tried to shot a glance at the Root leader, but he was nowhere to be found. As he jumped back in order to dodge two acid shots, Danzo reappeared near Shisui, kunai in hand.

"End of the fight. Time to die," Danzo said, as he prepared to attack.

"I knew you'd use those attacks as a distraction!" Shisui triumphantly said, as he jumped back while making hand seals as fast as possible. "Fire Release: Meltdown!"

Shisui exhaled a massive fireball that quickly engulfed Danzo. Rather than shooting forward, the Fireball continued expanding in every direction, until it also engulfed the three acid spitting flowers, quickly reducing them to ashes. Danzo, however, reappeared a few meters from him, once again not worse for the wear. Shizune also took the chance to quickly regroup with her husband.

"Godammit, stop not-dying!" Shisui complained.

"... not-dying?" Shizune repeated, shooting her husband a confused glance.

"How do you call what he's doing?" Shisui replied.

"You're making this infuriatingly difficult," Danzo stated, even if his voice or body language didn't betray any sign of anger.

"Look who's talking," Shisui spat back.

Danzo and Shisui continued to trade glares. The Root leader was studying the young Uchiha, wondering what other nasty surprises he had hidden. He could also see that, despite being much younger, Shisui appeared to be far more exhausted than Danzo was. Then again, Shizune appeared to still have enough stamina to spare.

"It seems that using Susanoo drained quite a lot of his chakra. He might not be used to it. It's unlikely that he'll use it again," Danzo thought, before quickly reprimanding himself and pushing that thought out of his head. "No, I can't afford to think like that. I already underestimated Shisui once, and nearly costed me the fight. I need to fight thinking that he can unleash that jutsu at me at any moment. In that case..."

Danzo bit his thumb, and started to make hand seals. Of course, Shizune and Shisui immediately caught what he was going to do, but reacted a bit too late.

"You can feel proud of yourselves. Not many foes push me so much as to rely on this," Danzo replied, before slamming his hand into the ground. "Summoning Jutsu!"

In a burst of smoke, a large, orange elephant-like being appeared, creating small waves of all the water that it displaced upon appearing. Despite having a trunk and long fangs like an elephant, it also had orange fur, and its legs ended in long, sharp claws.

"What... what the hell is that?" Shisui asked.

"A Baku," Shizune replied, sounding rather worried. "It's a very powerful summon. It's said it can devour dreams and nightmares. We better watch out."

Danzo jumped onto the Baku's head, and without having to tell it anything, the beast charged forward.

"Oh shit, here he comes!" Shizune shouted.

Shisui started to make hand seals. "Don't worry, I'll stop it on its tracks! Fire Release: Great Fireball Jutsu!"

Once again, Shisui breathed a massive fireball at the incoming monster, leaving a trail of steam as it flew. The Uchiha was confident the Baku wouldn't be able to dodge it, given both its size and its current momentum. Of course, Danzo was about to prove why he was a contender for the title of Hokage.

As it rushed, the Baku took a deep breath, before releasing a stream of pressurized air from its trunk. Danzo followed, making the hand seals of another wind jutsu.

"Wind Release: Vacuum Great Sphere!"

Danzo exhaled from his mouth a rather large sphere of concentrated, pressurized air. His jutsu merged with his summon's attack, forming a massive gale that pushed the fireball back at Shisui, much to the Uchiha's distress.

"The hell? How can he use a wind jutsu to counter a fire based one!?" the indignant Uchiha protested.

"If it's more powerful than yours, it can do it! Now shut up and run!" Shizune urged her husband, as the two of them retreated towards the waterfall flanked by the giant statues of Hashirama and Madara.

As he gave chase a top of his beast, Danzo took a moment to check his right arm. He still had five Sharingan opened. While he felt they were enough to finish the fight, he decided it was best not to take any chances and finish the fight as quickly as possible. He could no longer be conservative with the chakra anymore. His hands started to form more hand seals, albeit this time not for a wind jutsu.

"Wood Release: Deep Forest Emergence!"

Once again, a multitude of wooden vines and roots emerged all around Shisui and Shizune, swiftly cutting their escape. However, this time Shisui wasn't going to let him trap them like that. He bit his thumb, before making five hand seals, and slammed his palm into the water's surface.

"Summoning jutsu!"

From a burst of smoke, a giant crow emerged, with Shisui and Shizune riding on its back. The crow quickly flapped his wings, raising some wind as it gained altitude. Danzo, however, was unfazed.

"You won't escape me, Uchiha," Danzo said, mostly to himself, before his eyes darted towards his minion. "Baku, stop them."

The orange furred beast opened its jaws, creating a powerful suction force between them, which started to suck all the air around it. Shisui's giant crow was stopped on his tracks, being caught inside a powerful wind current which pulled him towards the Baku. The bird flapped his wings as fast as he could, but to no avail.

"Shisui-san..." the crow managed to say. "I'm afraid... I can't..."

"Don't worry, Kurokaze-sama! I know how to get rid of this guy!" Shisui said, as his hands flew through more hand seals. "Hope you like spicy food! Fire Release-"

Danzo, however, made a single hand seal faster.

"Sealing Art: Self Cursing Seal!"

Suddenly, Shisui felt his whole body go completely rigid just as he was about to use his fire jutsu, as black marks started to spread around his body.

"Shisui?" Shizune asked, worried. Her worry multiplied tenfold as Shisui started to slip away, pulled by the wind. Fortunately, she was able to grab him in time. "SHISUI! Hold on!"

Shisui tried to break the cursed seal with the force of his chakra, but sadly he found out it wasn't enough.

"Damn, when did Danzo placed a seal...?" Shisui inwardly asked, as he mentally reviewed the battle so far. The answer came when he remembered that Danzo had briefly held him by his neck when he was trying to gouge his eyes out. "So he placed a seal when he was going to take my eyes just in case... bastard's quite the planner..."

"You have lost, Shizune. You can't protect your husband and fight me at the same time," Danzo calmly said. "As a show of respect to your teacher, I will spare your life. But only if you surrender now."

Of course, being Tsunade's first apprentice, the black haired medic-nin had also inherited some of her master's stubbornness, and giving up wasn't apt of her vocabulary, especially when the life of a loved one was on the line. "Surrender this! Posion Mist!"

Shizune exhaled a cloud of poisonous gas, which was quickly sucked by the Baku. The effect was immediate, and the beast started to cough and cry in pain the moment he inhaled the toxic fumes. The damage done was so bad, the summoning was undone, and the orange furred animal disappeared in a cloud of smoke, leaving Danzo alone once again.

Next, Shizune quickly made several hand seals, before placing her hand on Shisui's chest, sending a burst of chakra through her body.

"Sealing Art: Lesser Void Touch!"

The effect was immediate, and the black marks spread around Shisui's body started to vanish, and as they did, the Uchiha started to recover his mobility. Trembling a little at first, he managed to sit up with Shizune's help.

"Thanks," he said, rubbing his sore limbs. "I lost on how many times you saved my ass already."

"Well, you saved me back then with your Susanoo," Shizune replied, smiling earnestly at him.

"I doubt that makes us even," Shisui said, chuckling awkwardly, before his eyes focused on Danzo. "Since when are you this good at fuinjutsu?"

"The perks of living with Jiraiya-sama for the late part of my childhood," Shizune explained. "I might not be as talented as an Uzumaki, but I did pick up quite a few useful things."

"Useful indeed," Shisui agreed, before looking at the ground below. Danzo was still there, looking up at them. "And you got rid of that annoying animal as well. You're the best."

"Now, let's get rid of the summoner. Can you still fight?" Shizune asked.

Shisui looked at Danzo, or better said at his right arm, and saw how one of its Sharingan closed. The Uchiha cracked his neck, and smiled with determination. "You can bet I am. In fact, I think I have an idea of how we can beat him for good. Follow my lead, and attack with as much intensity as you can, okay?"

Shizune wanted to ask how that was going to help against Izanagi, but decided to trust her husband, She energetically nodded. "You got it!"

The Uchiha couple jumped from the giant bird's back, falling towards Danzo. Shizune's hands were enveloped by blue chakra, taking the shape of two large chakra blades, while Shisui made several hand seals.

"Fire Release: Phoenix Sage Fire Jutsu!"

Shisui rained fireballs upon Danzo, who dodged the attack in spite of Izanagi being active. Shizune landed besides him, creating a huge splash the moment her feet hit the water, and delivered a flurry of rapid-pace swipes with her Chakra Scalpels, which Danzo alternated between dodging and parrying.

A whirring sound alerted danzo of multiple shuriken flying his way. He jumped backwards while crouching, avoiding both of them and Shizune. However, as he did this, he didn't notice Shisui body flickering besides him, and plunging his tanto into his back. Danzo, however, disappeared before reappearing a few meters away from them.

"How much long are you planning to keep this charade up?" Danzo asked in a somewhat bored tone.

"Until you drop dead!" Shisui replied.

Shisu started to Body Flicker constantly around Danzo, generating multiple afterimages around him. Despite his Sharingan, Danzo was unable to follow Shisui's movements, as he futilely tried to see where the Uchiha was moving. A bead of sweat ran through his temple.

"Even the Sharingan has its limits, old man!" Shisui said as he struck.

His tanto, however, was parried by Danzo's kunai.

"It doesn't matter. As long as I can see you, you won't be able to surprise me," Danzo calmly replied.

"Posion Mist!"

Shizune jumped above the two men, and exhaled another cloud of poisonous gas. Shisui was able to disengage Danzo and Body Flicker away in time, but the Root leader was engulfed by the mist. Not that it mattered, as Danzo reappeared a few meters out of the cloud, none the worse for the wear. As Shisui and Shizune charged at him, he made several hand seals.

"Wood Release: Wood Dragon Jutsu!"

From the water emerged a serpentine dragon made of wood that lunged at the incoming Uchiha couple. It tried to devour the two of them, which were forced to jump in opposite directions to avoid the bite. Rather than Shisui, the dragon focused on Shizune this time around. However, the medic-nin knew what to do to counter it. Her hands flew through hand seals once more.

"Water Release: Water Severing Wave!"

Shizune expelled a thin stream of pressurized water, aimed at the dragon's neck, easily chopping its head off. However, much to her surprise, three other Wood Dragons emerged after the first one was destroyed, taking his place. Shizune was forced to jump back in order to avoid the incoming attack.

"Haven't you realized the difference in skill and power between you and me yet?" Danzo asked.

"Haven't you realized that you talk too much?" Shisui said, appearing behind Danzo. "Fire Release: Meltdown!"

Danzo was engulfed by a massive fireball, which also burned to ashes the wood dragons chasing Shizune, while also raising several clouds of steam from the nearby water.

"All you're going to accomplish by doing this is to exhaust your chakra pointlessly," Danzo replied, as he reappeared, once again completely unharmed.

"Trust me, our chakra isn't the only one that's getting depleted," Shisui replied. "Did you actually check how many Sharingan have left?"

"I know that I still have enough to..." but Danzo's words died on his mouth when he checked his right arm. Only two Sharingan remained, with one of them already closing off. The Root leader's eyes visibly widened. "What? No, this can't be right. How did this...?"

"I don't know if you're aware of the limitations, but Izanagi's duration isn't a constant," Shisui pointed out. "Its duration is proportional to the chakra you have, with one minute being its maximum time. By using Izanagi constantly, as well as other heavy chakra consuming jutsu like Wood Release, your chakra quickly plummeted, which in turn shortened the duration of the Izanagi.

"How did you know that? Nobody has used the Izanagi for as long as I did before!" Danzo replied.

"Easy. I've been keeping track of how long your eyes take to close. The first three were a minute each, so I thought that its duration was indeed constant. The fourth one, however, took fifty two seconds to close, and the fifth one only forty seven. From that point onwards, every eye took less and less time to close. That's why I realized that, if we pushed you constantly, we could reduce that time even further.

"Plus Shizune-chan and I are young and the prime of our lives, so we can afford going all out from time to time, but you?" Shisui asked. "How old are you, seventy? I mean, your Jonin-sensei was Tsunade-sama's grandma, for crying out loud! Even with Hashirama's cells boosting your power, your stamina can't be that great."

"You... you bastard!" Danzo shouted, showing emotion for the first time.

"There's a reason as for why Izanagi is a Forbidden Jutsu," Shisui said, shaking his head. "You probably thought that you could abuse it with enough Sharingan. But that's what you get when you think you're smarter than the clan who invented that jutsu, and whose eyes you stole and wear as if they were your own."

Shizune landed besides Shisui with a small splash.

"Good one, Shisui!" Shizune praised her husband. "Let's finish him off!"

"So, two eyes left. One in his arm, and the one in his face," Shisui observed. "Though he might not want to sacrifice the latter."

"Correction," Shizune said, smiling smugly. "One eye left."

Danzo saw how the last Sharingan in his arm closed. Not without a considerable amount of resignation, he made a hand seal.

"Cancel."

Shisui's Sharingan could see how Danzo's chakra shifted. It seems that he didn't want to use his remaining Sharingan left to fuel the Izanagi.

"Whose eye is that?" Shisui asked. "In order to be so protective of it."

"Fugaku Uchiha's," was Danzo's laconic answer. "He awakened the Mangekyo Sharingan during the Uchiha Insurrection."

"Yet you didn't use it against us," Shisui said. "Do you plan to use it now as a last resort?"

"I'm afraid I can't. Even with the regeneration provided by Hashirama's cells, my chakra levels are too low to use the Mangekyo Sharingan," Danzo explained.

"So, do you surrender then?" Shisui asked, as he menacingly walked towards Danzo, who made no effort to flee or even move. "Or do you plan to die fighting?"

"While my failure at acquiring your eyes is undeniable, I'm afraid that you won't claim my life today, Shisui Uchiha," Danzo confidently stated. "Or any other day for that matter."

That moment, Shizune noticed something above them, albeit not fast enough to prevent it in time.

"SHISUI, WATCH OUT!" she yelled as she jumped backwards.

Trusting his intuition, he followed his wife's example and jumped away from Danzo. That moment, several kunai with explosive tags attached rained from above, creating a chain of explosions between the Root leader and the Uchiha couple, raising some water and steam as well.

"I was afraid that you didn't get my message," Danzo said.

"What the...?" Shizune mumbled.

When their eyes refocused, they could see that Danzo was surrounded by Otogakure ninja, being led by no other than Kabuto Yakushi.

"Oh, we did. But we thought that, with the head start you had, our aid wouldn't be necessary," Kabuto replied, as he eyed Shisui and Shizune. "May I ask why did you let these two catch you?"

"No, you may not ask," Danzo firmly stated.

"I thought I had the right to know, given that you exposed our partnership to Konoha," Kabuto replied. "Orochimaru-sama won't be pleased with this development."

"Orochimaru still needs me, and you know that," Danzo replied, who was starting to sound impatient. "Now, can we leave already?"

"Very well then," Kabuto said with a shrug, as he took a step forward, looking ready to fight the Uchiha couple.

"So, you plan to keep us busy while your minions take Danzo away, right?" Shisui guessed, as he scowled at Kabuto. "Not going to happen. Shizune!"

"Yes!"

Shizune dashed at Kabuto, who was making hand seals, her chakra scalpels activated, while Shisui Body Flickered towards Danzo's position. However, neither of them were expecting what came next, once Kabuto finished weaving seals.

"Yin Release: Bringer of Darkness!"

The Oto ninjas threw more kunai with explosive tags attached at them, before the entire Valley of the End was engulfed by a cloak of absolute darkness. Choosing between trying to catch Danzo or avoiding the explosions, the Uchiha couple decided that their lives were more important. When the explosions happened, they managed to put enough distance to avoid the shockwave. Then, the aura of darkness vanished, revealing that Danzo, Kabuto and the Oto ninjas were longer there.

Realizing that Danzo had indeed escaped, Shisui stomped his foot in anger. "Dammit! Dammit all! We had him! We had him, and the bastard escaped from our grasp!"

"Shisui...?" Shizune asked. "Should we... go after them? They probably head to Orochimaru's old hideout in the Land of Sound."

Shisui just shook his head. "Forget it. We're in no shape to fight that many ninja. Danzo got away for good."

Shizune walked to her husband and placed a hand on his shoulder. "I'm... I'm sorry."

Shishui grabbed his wife's hand, and squeezed it a little. Looking into her eyes, he deactivated his Sharingan, and forced himself to smile. "It's okay, it's not your fault. Hell, if anything, I would have died a hundred times if it wasn't for you. Besides... at the very least our children are safe."

"Our children..." Shizune repeated. "Let's go back home. I want to hold them in my arms again."

"Me too," Shisui agreed, as the two of them headed south. "So, Danzo was working with Orochimaru all along. At this point, it's hardly surprising."

"Makes sense. Remember when Orochimaru invaded the village?" Shizune asked. "Danzo probably tipped Orochimaru about how to do it, where to attack, and what time would it be best."

"As if leaking information on the jinchuriki wasn't bad enough," Shisui said, shaking his head. "Hokage-sama is going to be almost as mad as I am when he hears the news."

...

Orochimaru's Land of Sound Lair, a couple hours later

The sun had set a few minutes ago, and the land was covered with the night's mantle of darkness. As Danzo expected, Konoha didn't send any teams to retrieve him. That doesn't mean that he and all the agents that successfully escaped could stay in that lair forever. They had to find a new hideout soon.

While Danzo and his men rested in the lair, guarded by Orochimaru's men, the Snake Sannin himself and his right hand man were discussing how the recent events had unfolded.

"It's a pity that Danzo failed to abduct not even one of all those targets," Orochimaru lamented, as he walked alongside Kabuto. "While there's little more I can learn from Jiraiya's brats, or any Uchiha, that Rin girl would have been something worth studying. I can't believe I had such a valuable specimen in my power for so long, but foolishly let her go. To think that Obito used Hashirama's cells to bring somebody back from the death..."

"Indeed. It seems that Obito can use Hashirama's cells in a way that we can't even imagine," the bespectacled man agreed. "Is there anything they can't do?"

"The fact that Obito could provide me with an almost unlimited amount of Hashirama's cells was one of the key factors that made me join Akatsuki," Orochimaru said. "However, I also knew that Obito had to be working with somebody else."

"Pain?" Kabuto asked.

Orochimaru shook his head. "Obito isn't somebody with a background in biology, medicine, or any kind of science, and neither is Pain. If that was the case, they wouldn't have recruited me for Akatsuki. Plus, I've been investigating him, and I found a gap in his past that I've been unable to fill. What did he do between his apparent death, and the Nine Tails' attack on Konoha?"

"The fact that Obito hides plenty of secrets is something obvious," Kabuto said. "What about Zetsu? Our analysis shows that he also has Hashirama's DNA."

"Yes, Zetsu. At first I thought he would be Obito's benefactor. Yet for some reason, Zetsu acts subservient to Obito, not the other way around," Orochimaru pointed out. "No, their dynamic makes no sense. That is, unless the two of them serve another."

"If that's the case, then who? If it's not Pain, nor that Toneri guy... who's left?" Kabuto asked. "The only one I can think of would be Madara Uchiha, but even if he miraculously survived his fight against Hashirama, there's no way he can still be alive."

"Maybe not, but just like how Obito resurrected his childhood crush, who says that he might not try to do the same with somebody else? Like Madara?" Orochimaru suggested.

"The implications of Madara coming back to life... are chilling, to say the least," Kabuto said, remaining stoic, but showing some fear.

"That's why we must investigate what's Obito planning to do next," Orochimaru said. Then, he raised his left hand, and removed the Akatsuki Ring from the little finger. "And in order to do so, I can no longer be part of the Akatsuki."

"I see," Kabuto said, then a realization hit him. "Wait, does that mean that we're going with the final phase of our plans?"

"Indeed. Kabuto, make sure to move all our forces to the designated base," Orochimaru instructed. "But make sure to relocate Danzo and his men somewhere else. While the old war hawk still has his uses, he's no longer as relevant as he thinks."

"Understood," Kabuto said with a head nod. Before leaving, another realization hit him. "Orochimaru-sama... does this mean that we aren't going to help Akatsuki with the remaining jinchuriki?"

"Regrettably not," the Sannin replied, shaking his head in disappointment. "What a pity, I would have loved a rematch against sensei that and that idiot Jiraiya... if they only knew the power I possess now..."

"I'm sure you will have another chance in the future," Kabuto reassured him, before both men left.

Little did the Sannin and his lackey knew that his conversation had been heard by a certain somebody, who didn't take Orochimaru's plans very kindly.

"So, that's what you plan do to, you bastard?" the unseen person hissed, speaking to no one in particular. "This betrayal won't remain unanswered, I swear that on my life."

And the mysterious individual disappeared as well.

Author's Note: And sadly, Danzo slipped away. Sorry for those who wanted to see him dead (I also wanted to kill him then and there), but sadly, I need him alive for a future plotline. Don't worry, you won't have to suffer him much. Still, I hope that you enjoyed the battle. I know some people weren't looking to it due to Izanagi abuse, but I tried my best to make the fight both original and enjoyable. At the very least, I hope that the reviewers who were afraid that either Shisui or Shizune were going to bite the dust can now breathe in relief.

Given that Danzo helped Orochimaru with his invasion of Konoha (which ended up in failure anyway) I thought it would be fitting that Orochimaru would return the favor. And speaking of him, the Snake Sannin will move to the final part of his plans. What plans are those? You'll have to wait and see, but you can see they involve finding out the truth about Obito. Of course, said plans aren't going to go as smoothly as he expects given that somebody got wind of his betrayal of Akatsuki.

Thanks to OOkami88 for betareading the chapter.

And with this chapter, the Root arc comes to an end! Next chapter will show you what's coming next, though you should have a pretty good idea by now. Anyway, make sure to share your thoughts on this chapter, the whole arc, and what's to come in a review! Reviews make me really, really, really happy!

A Problem Uprooted

Author's Note: I'm glad to see that the Root Arc was better received (not without reason) than the previous jinchuriki arcs. I was kind of worried that my writing skills were getting dull. Let's hope the next arc, which this chapter will showcase, will be even better received. Enjoy:

Chapter 81:

A Problem Uprooted

or

A Solution for Today, a Problem for Tomorrow

Akatsuki Lair, Unknown Location

After a rather long trip in order to escape from the Land of Lightning, Kisame and Deidara managed to reach their destination. For the most part, their prey, Killer B, had remained unconscious. The two Akatsuki members, however, made sure to check him frequently in order to ascertain that he was still alive.

And now, it was finally time for the organization to claim its seventh Tailed Beasts. On top of Kisame and Deidara, six shadowy astral projections were present in the underground cavern. The one member missing, though, soon became evident.

"Where is Orochimaru?" Deidara asked.

"I was going to ask that as well," Pain interceded. "I've been unable to contact him for the past few hours. Such thing would only be possible if he either died, or took off his ring."

"Toneri," Konan spoke, grabbing the Otsutsuki's attention. "Do you know anything about this?"

The Tensiegan wielder merely shook his head. "After capturing the Four Tails and helping to seal it, Orochimaru and I went our separate ways until the time to be recalled came. I'm afraid I have no idea of his whereabouts."

"Orochimaru wouldn't dare betray us!" the Black half of Zetsu shouted, sounding beyond enraged.

"I wouldn't put past that snake to do so," Obito replied, sounding only mildly disappointed. "He was a formidable asset, one that served us well, but keeping him under control was becoming increasingly difficult."

"So, what are we going to do? Hunt him down?" Kisame asked, sounding almost eager to volunteer for the job.

"For the time being, our mission comes first," Pain declared. "Once we seal this Tailed Beast, only the ones from Konoha remain. We can't allow Orochimaru to distract us from our goal when it's so close to completion."

"Yes. Orochimaru shall be punished as he deserves once we are done with the Tailed Beasts," Konan agreed.

"Now, let's not waste anymore time," Pain continued, as he made several hand seals, before slamming his hand into the ground. "Summoning Jutsu: Demonic Statue of the Outer Path!"

As usual, the gigantic statue slowly emerged from underground, its head and hands sticking above the ground, with the rest of its body still hidden. All Akatsuki took their place at the top of each finger.

"Without Orochimaru, the extraction process is going to be even longer," Zetsu's white half complained.

"All the more reasons to work harder than usual. Now let's begin."

...

Kumogakure, Raikage's Citadel

